UF officials: MBA grad data wrong

■ DATA AFFECTED RANKING.

By JOEY FLECHAS
Alligator Staff Writer

The UF business college reported inaccurate data about 2009 graduates of its masters of business administration program to U.S. News and World Report, according to a university internal investigation.

Last August, an anonymous caller to the university's ethics hotline alleged that officials from the Warrington College of Business Administration manipulated data on job placement of program graduates in order to boost the program's ranking. The call was followed by the submission of documents supporting the allegations.

An investigation headed by Associate Provost for Academic Affairs Angel Kwolek-Folland followed.

UF Academics According to the investigation report, completed in September, college officials "appear to have used a looser interpretation of the data than would a reasonable person"

UF STUDENT GOVERNMENT

SG voting moving to electronic stations

By ALEXANDER KLAUSNER
Alligator Staff Writer

Election reform has turned a Student Government platform point into a reality.

The Senate unanimously voted Tuesday night to approve a bill that will do away with paper ballots and move to a computer-based voting system.

Students would still have to go to an on-campus polling location, but instead of receiving a paper ballot, they would swipe their Gator 1 cards and be ushered to a secure booth with a computer to cast votes.

The system is expected to be ready by the fall SG election.

The legislation, written by Senate President Micah Lewis, was widely supported and endorsed. Minority leader Gillian Leytham was the one to motion for unanimous approval.

The system has been tried once before in 2005, Lewis said. However, poorly trained poll workers caused problems with the election, prompting a return to paper and pens.

This time, he said, SG intends to ensure the poll workers know the system, and the technology has improved drastically since.

Treasurer T.J. Villamil said SG expects to save $25,000 by implementing the new system. He will propose today to decrease the election budget from $50,000 to $25,000.

Unite Party Senator Severin Walstad, who worked closely with Lewis on the financial aspects of the bill, said he estimates the savings to be $32,000 as opposed to $25,000.

However, Walstad said, first-year software upgrades would cost between $16,000 and $22,000.

The bill comes after a Spring 2011 election that was marred by controversy. Three students, including two ex-senators, came forward claiming to have voted twice. Instead of voting for a candidate, they wrote in the name of a historical figure.

Lewis said he wouldn't condone the action, but he said it did alert him to weaknesses in the system.

Students will now be able to cast votes at any polling location on campus.

Under previous rules, any kind of electronic voting was illegal. The new rules will still disallow online voting, a system used for SG elections at Santa Fe College.

Lewis said an interview last week he didn't push for online voting because he was aiming to ensure the integrity of the voting process. He said he didn't want a system candidates could exploit by rewarding favorable votes or through pressuring peers into voting their way.

Wash. troopers escort geese family off freeway

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle-bound commuters got some unexpected company when a Canada goose and her goslings decided to walk across a section of highway that links the city to its suburbs.

State troopers in three cruisers escorted the flock to an off-ramp after motorists became concerned about the geese's safety during the Wednesday morning rush hour.

Washington State Patrol spokeswoman trooper Julie Startup says it took troopers about 20 minutes "to get the little guys cleared."

In Tuesday's edition of The Alligator, an article about new hires at the Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences incorrectly listed the college as the Institute of Agriculture and Life Science.

The same article also reported that John Hayes would take over as the interim research dean at IFAS less than a week after a new chairwoman for the plant pathology department was selected. He was named to the position less than a week after the chairwoman was named.

Local springs can't avoid stroke of the budget pen

By EMILY MORROW
Alligator Writer

More than 700 springs are sprinkled across Florida's landscape, providing an ecosystem for gators and fish, an escape for visitors and about 90 percent of north Florida's water supply.

But like many things across the state, they too face the budget ax. On June 1, the Florida Department of Environmental Protection announced the end of all funding for the Florida Springs Initiative and the Springs Basin Working Groups, organizations dedicated to restoring and protecting Florida's springs.

"It's just a real hard blow," said Bob Knight, coordinator of the Wakulla Springs working group. "We're seeing the springs degrading, and then we hear the state no longer values them enough to fund their restoration."

The Florida Springs Initiative was started in 2001 by the DEP. Its purpose was to identify problems the springs were having through scientific research, educate the public about these issues and work on projects to protect and restore the springs.

Last year the Initiative received $514,000 in state funding.

The DEP also directed $276,000 toward four Springs Basin Working Groups. The groups were charged with creating restoration plans for the four springs — Ichetucknee, Silver, Rainbow and Wakulla.

Peter Colverson, coordinator of the working groups for Rainbow Springs and Silver Springs, said his plans included six categories of necessary improvements: water quality, quantity of spring flow, recreation, land use and development, biodiversity, and education and outreach.

Max Reed / Alligator Staff

About 20 Florida red-bellied turtles line a fallen log on the Ichetucknee River. Two state agencies will no longer receive funding to preserve freshwater springs.

The groups were two weeks away from presenting these plans to the DEP when the funding cut was announced.

The funds were not intended to cover implementation of the plans, only to maintain the working groups as representative agencies.

Colverson said these groups were the motivating forces that would have worked to garner public support and guide the springs' restorations.

"It's sort of like taking the engine out of a car," he said.

This foreseeable stall in progress was what led Knight to found the Howard T. Odum Florida Springs Institute, a private, non-profit organization seeking to pick up the slack from other agencies' losses of state funding.

"We spent a lot of money understanding the problems in the springs, but we haven't done a lot to fix it," Knight said. "The need hasn't gone away, just the state's support."

Christie Goss, a spokeswoman for the DEP, wrote in an email that the DEP is looking for ways to continue the work of the springs groups.

"DEP's commitment to restoring these springs has not diminished, but it does mean we will have to explore other avenues to fulfill this commitment," she wrote.

UF thespians to perform in Greece in coming weeks

By LISA GALLO
Alligator Contributing Writer

The UF School of Theatre and Dance is leaving the local scene and going international.

Two amphitheatres in Greece offered to host the theater program's productions of Sophocles' "Oedipus the King" and Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

Judith Williams, the founder of the International Production Program and director of "Romeo and Juliet," said the plays were chosen because the directors have a lot of passion for the pieces.

Each play has two separate casts that rehearse simultaneously, said Russell Schultz, the assistant director for "Oedipus the King." One cast will perform in Gainesville and the other will perform in Greece.

"When Oedipus yells that he is going to blind his eyes, my voice will echo through those hills just like it did thousands of years ago."

Wayne Willinger
actor playing Oedipus

The group is set to leave for Greece Saturday and stay for about two weeks.

The UF theater students have performed in about 10 different countries including England, Scotland and Russia. Last year, the students performed "A Streetcar Named Desire" in Germany and the Czech Republic.

To Wayne Willinger, who will play Oedipus, the experience of performing Sophocles' masterpiece in its home country will be the best part.

"When Oedipus says 'I was at the great park of Delphi,' I will be really pointing to Delphi," Willinger said. "When Oedipus yells that he is going to blind his eyes, my voice will echo through those hills just like it did thousands of years ago."

UF alum featured on travel show

■ PROGRAM AIRS SATURDAYS AT 9 P.M.

By MARIA CASTILLO
Alligator Contributing Writer

Shane Reynolds might hail from the Swamp, but that didn't exactly get him ready to face some real-life reptiles in the Everglades.

Reynolds, a UF alumnus, said he is terrified of snakes and alligators. But that's not stopping him from staring them down on national television.

He is the star of "Shane Untamed," an adventure show airing Saturdays at 9 p.m. on Nat Geo Wild. His audience members will know him as Shane O, a nickname his mother gave him growing up. Reynolds will be a one-man band, in charge of every element that makes his show, from shooting to editing.

While studying at UF, he traveled and always had dreams of one day having his own TV show.

"I think it's something that everyone hopes to do at some point, just to travel," he said. "The fact that I get to document it for the world to see is a dream come true."

Reynolds

The travel show will stand out from others since it is not guided by a wildlife expert, Reynolds said. He is an everyday person in situations that would normally call for an expert.

Nat Geo Wild is trying to attract a younger audience, an age demographic from 18 to 25, with this show, said Janet Han Vissering, senior vice president of development for the network.

She said that Reynolds has a contemporary appeal and will help attract that age group.

"He puts across a very vulnerable side, but it could be incredibly funny too," she said.

In some of the clips from his show found on National Geographic's website, Reynolds can be found kayaking in Alaska looking for whales and hiking through a jungle in Guyana in search of 1,500-pound bears. He wants to prove that fear shouldn't stop anyone from adventure.

"I'm hoping that people will learn that traveling to the unknown and remote places are not as dangerous as they think," he said.

Complaint came from anonymous caller using standards used by professionals in the MBA career services field.

UF's MBA program ranked 39th in the U.S. News and World Report ranking based on 2009 data. Data on job placement figures highly in the publication's methodology.

Data the college reported about the 2010 graduating class led the school to slide to 47th place.

Officials from the college have denied claims that they intentionally manipulated the data.

The allegations state that Craig Petrus, director of graduate business career services, was pressured by Selcuk Erencuc, the associate dean for graduate programs, to manipulate the data in order to maintain a higher ranking.

The complaint alleged that Petrus spoke of the pressure to colleagues during a July 2009 staff luncheon at a local restaurant. Two staffers supported the claim.

According to the investigation, Petrus could not recall the luncheon, and both he and Erencuc denied any pressure. Erencuc attributed the change from 2009 to 2010 to a slumping economy.

UF Academics

According to the ranking of the 2009 class in U.S. News and World Report, the MBA program's 2009 graduating class had 53 percent job placement at graduation and about 79 percent placement three months after graduation.

The complaint alleged that the accurate numbers paint a different picture, with 37 percent of the students having jobs at graduation and 53 percent having jobs three months after graduation.

The investigation found no evidence of collusion to create a more positive set of data.

"Whether this was the result of poor judgment or inexperience, the end result is an inaccurate portrait of the employment profile" of the 2009 graduates of the MBA program, according to the investigation.

In an October memorandum sent in response to the investigation, College of Business Administration Dean John Kraft said the 2009 set of data accurately portrayed graduate placement and the college adhered to appropriate reporting standards.

He said there was unrest in the office of career services after Petrus was selected for his position last summer, and he attributed the allegations to this negativity.

UF robotic lawn mower takes top prize at competition

Machine has sonar, compass and wheelchair wheels

By CLARE LENNON
Alligator Writer

What could be considered as nothing more than a rudimentary Saturday chore served as a pinnacle of glory for a group of UF engineering students last week as their autonomous robot, InstiGator, won first place in the basic division at the ION Robotic Lawn Mower Competition.

The robot, which cuts grass without any human direction, mowed 76 percent of the grass in a roughly 20-square-foot rectangle without hitting a trashcan that was randomly placed in the grass. The second-place team only cut 51 percent of the grass.

Eric Schwartz, a UF engineering professor and project adviser, said the team's experience made the difference this year as the team members were able to anticipate what might go wrong and try to prevent them.

"Some of them we figured out the night before," Schwartz said.

The team, however, did encounter some last-minute difficulties as the motor blew up a few days before the competition.

Instead of folding up shop, the team found a wheelchair at Goodwill, bought it and replaced the motor.

This year's team included senior computer engineering major Camilo Buscaron, senior computer engineering major Colin Watson, senior electrical engineering major Mike Franks and mechanical engineering graduate student Andres Vargas.

Schwartz said the team built everything on InstiGator except for the lawn mower engine, batteries and the motor and wheels taken from a wheelchair.

The robot has sonar, a compass and a lever to adjust the height according to the grass.

Next year, the team plans to move up to the advanced division.

Instead of mowing around a static trashcan, advanced-team robots have to mow around a picket fence, a flowerbed and a moving mechanical dog.

Hey You!

Guess what? Your future is being discussed today

UF's Board of Trustees will meet today for the first of two days of meetings at Emerson Alumni Hall to do one thing.

They are going to talk about you.

Your tuition. Your classes. Your university.

And as we wonder how the university will grapple with the governor's budget vetoes, Bernie Machen's strategic discussion Friday morning should give us some more specifics.

Trustees often find it puzzling that few students take an active interest in these meetings. This is the place where university regulations, tuition hikes and changes to academic programs are discussed. Some trustees have openly spoken about their desire to engage more students directly, outside of the Student Body President Ben Meyers, who gets to sit on the board.

These meetings are free and open to the public.

Even if attending the meetings is out of the question (classes, work and hangovers can obviously get in the way), reaching out to your state-appointed leaders is a good way to make your voice heard. Even giving Meyers your thoughts wouldn't be a bad idea.

The whole reason why UF exists is because of its mission to educate. So you, the students, the professors and the administrators, are the stakeholders.

So from 12:30 p.m. to about 5 p.m. today and starting at 9:30 a.m. Friday, see if you can stop by to witness the discussion about the future of your university.

The meeting agenda is online at trustees.ufl.edu.

Big Deal?

About 40 years ago, a herd of reporters gathered in a Democratic politician's office for a casual, off-the-record Q&A session. However, the only "Q" the reporters were concerned with that day was the war in Vietnam and why the United States was still involved. They kept pressing the politician for a definitive answer, something they had tried to do repeatedly in the past to little avail. The members of the press would finally get their answer when the politician whipped out his whoopee stick, pointed to it and proclaimed "This is why we're in the Vietnam!"

For President Lyndon Baines Johnson, the man who stood before the shocked/disturbed/amused reporters, his johnson (which he christened as "Jumbo") was more than just another appendage. It was a symbol of power that he wielded quite frequently. He would often show it to fellow politicians and congress-sional aides to show them that he was in charge.

Now, we have a congressman who has been thrown into the blender of media scrutiny over photos he sent via Twitter that focused on his personal stimulus package (for those morally opposed to penile puns, sorry we're not sorry.)

You would figure we Americans would have learned by now how to deal with politician's tricky dicks, but since it's on the Internet and the man's last name is manna from the irony gods, everyone just cannot help but feel the need to unload.

The jokes have been fun, but we have more important things to worry about, such as the debt ceiling, a handful of wars and an economy that just refuses to get healthy.

But like most of y'all, we can't wait until the story breaks when Sen. Bigtits is caught trading arms with Terry Jones and Ambassador Threeway.

Column

If at first you don't secede, get historical

He felt adrenaline coursing through his veins as he charged toward the mass of men in red, his tattered uniform fluttered behind him as thunderous orchestra of death played on.

He saw a spark, felt a jolt in his chest and smelled smoldering skin. It forced him to his knees. He realized a warm liquid was spewing from his chest. The young man thought of his mother. "Revolution!" he shouted. The last sight he saw was the flag he fought and died for.

Today, the idea of secession is considered radical and forbidden. People either raise eyebrows or sneer, but we ought not to be so closed-minded.

In fact, secession should not be taboo because it is extremely American. After all, those "radical" founders seceded from England, and those radical confederates attempted to secede from the Union. The thought of independence seems to be passed down from our parents.

The legality of secession is cryptic. Although secession is not explicitly mentioned in the U.S. Constitution, the founders did address the issue. Some colonies expressed the right to secede from the Union in their ratification of the Constitution. In his "Farewell Address," George Washington asked the new country to sustain cordial relations to maintain the Constitution, implying secession was a very real threat. At one point, Thomas Jefferson even said that if any state wanted to separate, it could separate and indeed should separate.

The principle of secession was supposed to offset an encroaching unitary government. If the government walked all over the states or failed to live up to its end of the bargain, then the state, in theory, had the right to retract its full sovereignty. Unfortunately, in a recent Rasmussen Poll, only 21 percent of those polled believe states have the right to secede. I guess the other 79 percent think Lincoln settled the issue once and for all, but I vehemently disagree. In fact, moving the political discussion to this topic would be beneficial to our country's health.

The views expressed here are not necessarily those of the Alligator.

Chris Ceresa
letters@alligator.org

There are scores of reasons why a state may secede from the Union: distinct culture, irreconcilable politics or a runaway central government. For states in our union, the best reason would be the latter.

Federalism, the fine balance between states' rights and the power of Washington, is dead. The U.S. Supreme Court has used the Commerce Clause and the doctrine of incorporation to rubber stamp almost anything Washington wishes to impose on the states. The organs of government have not met their constitutional mandates.

Washington ought to realize that it came into being when states banded together. It is the states that created Washington, not the other way around. Washington is there to serve the states and the people. Secession is deathly consequential, and it should not be on the table because of heat-of-the-moment politics.

Instead, it should be examined when the alternative, continuing membership in the Union is unsustainable. For instance, a health care law that puts a state on the path to bankruptcy may be an appropriate pretext.

Our politicians can cheer for Tibet and Taiwan, but why not Texas?

To the mavericks, I say secession may be an option. In the future, secession may become more attractive as the reach of government dramatically mushrooms.

In regards of keeping to the Constitution, the United States has gone astray. The government has turned into what it sought not to become. Washington has become an unbeatable player instead of a referee. The Republic needs to be restored. The question now becomes whether one's loyalties are with values or with a flag.

As politicians open their mouths, Orwell backflips in his grave

In 1946, George Orwell said that political language "is designed to make lies sound truthful and murder respectable, and to give an appearance of solidity to pure wind."

Although he declared this decades ago, Orwell might still be on to something. To be sure, I will examine his thesis to see if it holds true today, using evidence straight from the mouths of today's most prominent politicians.

Exhibit A — President Barack Obama on Osama bin Laden: "The United States has conducted an operation that killed Osama bin Laden, the leader of al-Qaida."

I wonder how Orwell himself would have perceived President Obama's late-night address and the crowds celebrating outside the White House that were gravely similar to the deranged foreigners cheering the 9/11 attacks.

Regardless, my own reasoning along with the government's — and specifically Obama's — words have led me to hold the killing of bin Laden in the highest regard. Right or wrong, this sole constituent deems this murder respectable.

Exhibit B — Mitt Romney on the economy: "Government under President Obama has grown to consume almost 40 percent of our economy. We are only inches away from ceasing to be a free market economy."

Romney's statement is doubly impressive, combining attempts to elicit fear in his supporters through the portrayal of a socialist Obama regime and to overwhelm them with deceptive statistics.

Government spending as a percentage of GDP is indeed close to Romney's figure, sitting just below 38 percent according to PolitiFact. But in the past fifteen years, also according to PolitiFact, government spending as a percentage of GDP has always been within 7.6 percent of the current level.

In addition, the recession has played a pivotal role in the slight increase of that figure in recent years.

Romney's caveat of our looming descent into a communist market is a bit off base. In reality, the U.S. ranked ninth on the economic freedom index of 179 countries according to the Heritage Foundation. His dishonest fear-mongering leads me to classify his quote as pure wind.

Exhibit C — Sarah Palin on Paul Revere: "He who warned the British that they weren't gonna be takin' away our arms by ringing those bells, and makin' sure as he's riding his horse through town to send those warning shots and bells that we were going to be sure and we were going to be free, and we were going to be armed."

Palin's yarn is intrinsically more challenging to assess due to its incoherence. It seems the former governor was describing Revere's legendary 1775 ride as a warning to the British against taking American arms, using those shots and bells as cautionary tools.

Although I appreciate Gov. Palin's storytelling ability and believe her when she says, "I know my American history," her story paints an inaccurate representation of Revere's ride. Due to this lack of sense and distortion of history, I will again accept Orwell's thesis and classify Palin's quote as a pure wind lie.

Conclusion — After careful examination of the evidence and thoughtful deliberation, one can reach the sobering conclusion that contemporary politicians are much like their predecessors: imperfect, mendacious and human.

Toward the end of his life, Socrates reflected that he "was really too honest a man to be a politician." So who is left to fill those shoes?

Going up in smoke: the dangers of getting hooked on hookah

That smell like a concoction of incense, fruits and cigars wafted to my nose as I entered Hideaway Head Shop, a Dinkytown hookah store. About a dozen eager college-aged customers hungrily stared with anticipation as a salesman reached behind the counter to reveal an assortment of brightly colored hookah pipes.

Hookah — a tobacco-smoking device which originated in India 400 years ago — is a hip new trend among college students, popular because of the perception that it's a safer, less addictive alternative to smoking cigarettes. But emerging research is beginning to disprove this.

Recent studies by the American Lung Association, the World Health Organization and international researchers show that hookah may pose the same — even some unique — health risks as cigarette smoking.

Lolla Mohammed Nur

In a typical one-hour session of hookah smoking, the user is exposed to at least 100 times the volume of smoke inhaled from one cigarette, according to a 2007 WHO advisory note. One session produces as much tar as 20 low-tar cigarettes. The smoke is also dangerous because it contains high levels of toxic compounds like carbon monoxide, heavy metals and carcinogens.

Despite the risks, hookah is an increasingly mainstream leisure activity. Since 2000, an estimated 300 hookah bars have opened in the U.S., and the phenomenon is catching on.

A clinical study of hookah smokers found high nicotine levels in smokers' blood and saliva, debunking the myth that hookah cannot be addictive. For example, a 2006 study examining the emerging trend in tobacco use among teens found that out of 411 college freshmen, those teens who had ever smoked hookah were about eight times more likely to experiment with cigarettes. This is dangerous because tobacco use is the leading preventable cause of premature death in the U.S. and is responsible for 435,000 deaths annually.

It's true that research about hookah's risks is still emerging, but that's all the more reason to remain cautious.

Surf club taking Gainesville one wave at a time

By DIANA LOPEZ
avenue contributing writer

Despite many raised eyebrows, UF officially has a new surf club in the making.

UF junior Sophia Akhiyat and some fellow classmates have created something of their own with Sisters of the Sea, a girl-powered surf club teaching other ladies how to surf, skateboard and wakeboard.

A St. Augustine native, Akhiyat usually traveled home on the weekends to keep in touch with her surfing roots. With every trip she began to give friends complementary lessons.

"My friends always asked if they could come along and if I could teach them," said Akhiyat. "The number got overwhelming at one point.

Akhiyat decided to take her passion a step further, creating Sisters of the Sea to help other female students become rising stars in a field where men receive most of the attention.

According to Akhiyat, president of Sisters of the Sea, they begin by teaching members the basics.

"We first teach skateboarding, which creates the foundation necessary for surfing," she said. "The same movements are applied in both sports and skateboarding is much more accessible for our land-locked group."

According to Akhiyat, not many existing clubs specifically focus on teaching female members how to surf. Akhiyat wanted to create an organization where she could teach girls how to surf in her own way.

"Any girls are welcome, it doesn't matter if you've never stepped on a board before, we'll teach you. This is definitely an experience worth going through."

FERNANDA PONCE
vice president of Sisters of the Sea

"I've experienced that guys just move and work differently, so it's kind of difficult teaching the mechanisms [to girls]," Akhiyat said.

Whether it is a battle of the sexes or a battle of the boards, these girls mean business and they're set on redefining stereotypes that are associated with being a female surfer.

"Although we are built differently, we have the same capability to shred on water and cement," Akhiyat said. "Gender is arbitrary."

Fernanda Ponce, a UF senior and vice president of Sisters of the Sea, said she hopes the club will help others let go of any predispositions.

"We don't need guys to be better surfers," Ponce said.

With upcoming wakeboarding trips to Lake Wauburg and weekend surf lessons in St. Augustine, Sisters of the Sea also strives to arrange many volunteer opportunities for its members. They hope to participate in Surfers for Autism this year.

Sisters of the Sea will be holding indo boarding practices later on in the year, where the girls will teach others how to improve their balance on a board.

The club is still in its infancy, encouraging others to join and enjoy what the club has to offer. Sisters of the Sea will begin to meet every other week in front of the pond at the Reitz Union.

"Any girls are welcome, it doesn't matter if you've never stepped on a board before, we'll teach you," Ponce said. "This is definitely an experience worth going through."

Indie coffeehouses take many forms

By KATHLEEN BOYLE
avenue writer

Since the national onslaught of mega-chain coffee stores, Americans have reached their caffeine-hype crest. We now find our tech-savvy, social networking selves wired in more ways than one as we buzz through multi-tasking days. The taste for the bitter roast of coffee beans is one that is usually and conveniently acquired amidst the juggling acts that characterize college years. Fortunately for students, Gainesville is home to a plethora of independent coffee houses that satiate the craving for a swift wake-me-up. Here's our guideline.

Coffee Culture (2020 NW 13th St.)

Located in the shell of a former Dairy Queen, Coffee Culture has been serving Gainesvillians for the past eight years. This July, the café will expand beyond its original location and open a second store in the recently closed Starbucks located in the Plaza Royale shopping center at 3822 Newberry Rd. The original location will also be establishing an in-house bakery, providing customers with a variety of food choices including vegan-friendly options.

Recommended As: A place to study. There are a number of individual tables provided that allow for one to spread out reading and writing materials. Also provided are printing and scanning services, as well as public computers with Internet access.

The 8th Avenue Bike & Coffee House (235 NW Eighth Ave.)

An interesting concept, The 8th Avenue Bike and Coffee Shop is exactly what its name suggests. The coffee counter is small, but provides an adequate beverage and food menu for any coffee connoisseur. Directly across from the café section is a bike service and retail store. Whether one is looking for a new set of wheels or in need of a tune-up, this spot offers friendly, quality assistance for cyclists.

Recommended As: A place to refuel. This is the perfect spot for bikers to grab a bite and caffeine perk while having their spokes checked out before a long ride.

The Bull (18 SW First Ave.)

The newest coffee house addition to Gainesville, The Bull opened its doors this past New Years Eve. Providing refinement but lacking in pretension, this coffee house transitions into a beer and wine bar every night around 9 p.m. Exposed brick and hardwood floors create a fresh, cool atmosphere that simultaneously romances contemporary and vintage aesthetics, while rotating artwork subtly brightens the café's walls.

Recommended As: A date spot. Upon entering The Bull, customers are instantly soothed by the seemingly effortless ambience established by the interior's high ceilings, flattering light and stoic music.

Cast, music entertain in "Suds"

By AMANDA HILL
avenue contributing writer

The Hippodrome State Theatre's latest production will make you want to shout. It may also incite a sudden urge to do "The Loco-Motion" and leave you singing "Do Wah Diddy Diddy."

"Suds — The Rockin' '60s Musical Soap Opera," is now showing eight times per week through June 26. Directed by Lauren Caldwell, the play centers around Cindy (Wendi Stoltzfus), a teenage Wash-O-Rama employee who has a laundry list of reasons why she should make this birthday her last.

Through a series of letters delivered by the postman (Billy Sharpe), Cindy is informed of a plethora of terrible occurrences that make her depressed.

Devastated by the news, Cindy decides to take matters into her own hands with a pair of pedal pushers, tying one leg around her neck and the other to a washing machine agitator.

Enter Marge (Kelly Atkins) and Dee Dee (Lia Sumerano), a pair of bickering guardian angels who arrive just in time to prevent Cindy from committing suicide by washing machine. The two are faced with restoring Cindy's will to live, working in song and dance numbers the whole way.

Death, taxes and heartbreak may seem like no laughing matter, but "Suds" does not fall short of laugh-out-loud moments. Everything about this production is fun, from the retro turquoise and salmon-colored set, to the puffy skirts and Aqua-Net-induced hairdos.

Although the cast does not fail to entertain, the star of "Suds" is the music. It's no coincidence that it takes place in a laundry mat, as the pop music is light-hearted and squeaky clean. The musical features hits from the 1960s, including "Secret Agent Man" and "You Can't Hurry Love."

Tickets for "Suds" can be purchased at thehipp.org or by calling 352-375-4477. Regular tickets cost $25, senior tickets are $20 and student tickets are $12 with proper identification.

Apple moves to forefront of cloud industry for digital music

By THOMAS NASSIFF
avenue editor

The future of digital music is slowly taking form, and with it an unlikely group seems to be finding major advantages.

Apple announced Monday at its annual Worldwide Developers Conference one of its most anticipated new products — the iCloud.

Apple is marketing the new product as "iTunes in the Cloud," and while the technology may be over the heads of many, it's really not that complicated.

The free iCloud program on its own is fairly underwhelming, but iTunes Match is what should interest us.

"Here's how it works: iTunes determines which songs in your collection are available in the iTunes Store," reads the advertisement for iTunes Match. "Any music with a match is automatically added to your iCloud library for you to listen to anytime, on any device."

So yes, poor college student: that means you are granted amnesty for all your pirated songs. Apple is the first to monetize the pirating market, charging $25 a year for iTunes Match — a small price to pay for up to 25,000 songs in your iCloud.

The major advantage aside from legalizing your mostly illegal music collection is saving space. Once my 11,000-song library is matched into the iCloud, I can instantly stream any song from there on my iPhone without using any of its limited 16 GB of storage space.

To say that iTunes Match dominates Amazon and Google's cloud services would be an understatement. And by gaining the army of music pirates on his side, Apple CEO Steve Jobs has once again made his company the frontrunner in digital music.

Morningbell set to play Common Grounds for last time

By KELLY RICHARD
avenue writer

Tunes like “Marching Off to War” and “Helter Skelter” will escape from the confines of Common Grounds and into the humid summer night one final time this Friday.

Gainesville crowd-pleaser Morningbell will take the stage for the last time at the venue after returning home from a west coast tour. The Shitty Beatles and Devon Stuart’s new band, Snakehealers, will also be playing.

The show provided a good opportunity for both The Shitty Beatles and Morningbell to each play a set.

“We knew we just had to do both,” Eric Atria, bassist for the two bands, said.

Morningbell will be firing on all cylinders to send Common Grounds off right. Atria said the band always sounds tighter after a tour since they’ve been playing so consistently.

Over the years, they’ve played at Common Grounds around 30 times. Seven or eight of those shows have sold out the venue, which has a capacity of 350-400.

“That’s our home base,” Atria said.

Many great memories for the band have occurred within Common Grounds as the group established a solid relationship with the venue. Atria’s favorite show he played there was a sold-out homecoming show after a tour.

Recent UF graduate Tyler Francischine is planning on making the three-hour drive back to Gainesville to attend the concert.

“Morningbell is my favorite Gainesville band, and I’ve seen them at Common Grounds at least a dozen times over the past four years,” Francischine said. “I want to be a part of their last show there.”

She lived about four blocks from the venue her senior year and said she always expected it to be there, especially since it has been a great way for UF students to see a variety of artists.

UF senior and The Boswellians singer Amy Lobasso is also planning on attending the farewell show. The bands are her friends, and she enjoys supporting local music.

Lobasso, who frequents Common Grounds, said she thinks a lot of people will also come out in support since it is The Shitty Beatles and Morningbell’s final time playing there.

“It’s going to be a sad moment, this occasion,” she said.

While the show may be bittersweet, Morningbell and The Shitty Beatles will be sure to “come together” to celebrate their great times at Common Grounds.

Wine and Cheese Gallery tasting blends grapes, styles

By BENJAMIN BRASCH
avenue contributing writer

To integrate two of the same things but with different colors has brought about such changed beauty in history, and the same can be said about blended wines.

The Wine and Cheese Gallery, 113 N. Main St., will host the “Blending Red Grapes (it’s not just for Meritage) Tasting,” covering the world of blended wines on Friday from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

The educational tasting featuring six different blended wines will cost $20 per person unless you bring in a LivingSocial.com coupon, which allows two people to attend the tasting for the price of one.

“The purpose of the tasting is to show different styles of blended reds from all over the world,” said Bunky Mastin, co-owner of the Wine and Cheese Gallery.

Mastin, eating a vegetarian sandwich with a Chardonnay because of the “light taste and light flavor,” said the tastings have been a major component of the gallery’s success since the creation of the business in 1973. The gallery has hosted a variety of tastings, including one that highlighted California winemakers and the truest test of wine knowledge — a blind tasting.

The blended wine tasting will feature all sorts of grapes from the last five years, according to the Wine and Cheese Gallery website.

The tasting will run for two hours, but happy hour goes until 8 p.m. All the wines featured during the tasting will be on sale after learning how to drink them, what to look for and what to pair them with.

The Wonder Years craft timeless record with "Suburbia"

The Wonder Years know something that a lot of bands seem to miss out on.

The record lasts forever. Above anything else a band does in its career, the albums it releases are what will be left behind to define its legacy.

With the release of their third full-length, "Suburbia I've Given You All And Now I'm Nothing," it's obvious The Wonder Years know the record lasts forever. And they made it count.

Comprised of vocalist Daniel "Soupy" Campbell, bassist Joshua Martin, guitarists Matthew Brasch and Casey Cavaliere, drummer Michael Kennedy and guitarist/keyboardist Nicholas Steinborn, the band's follow-up to the adored "The Upsides" is a joint release on Hopeless and No Sleep Records due out on June 14.

"Suburbia I've Given You All And Now I'm Nothing" is as timeless as records come. Its 13 tracks are undoubtedly the Philadelphia-based group's best musicianship, matched pound-for-pound by a great lyrical output from Campbell.

Influenced by Allen Ginsberg's

"America" (1956), the concept of "Suburbia" is outlined by the interlude-interlude-closer trio of songs that make up the album's title. "Suburbia," "I've Given You All" and "And Now I'm Nothing" provide the framework for the record, with the other 10 songs falling into place chronologically according to when Campbell wrote them throughout 2010.

Opener "Came Out Swinging" starts the record off with an electric 30-second introduction that builds upon itself, similar to "You Know How I Do" from Taking Back Sunday's "Tell All Your Friends." First a steady guitar riff overrides some feedback, then a 50-year-old clip of Ginsberg reading "My mind is made up, there's going to be trouble," from "America" comes in before Kennedy bursts in with a drum fill.

It all stops for a split-second before the whole band gets into gear and Campbell belts out, "Moved all my shit into my parent's basement / And out of our old apartment / I know things changed but I'm not sure when / I guess you'd call this a regression / I left a 'real' job and a girlfriend / I convinced myself that I'm brave enough for all of this / I spent this whole year in airports and the floor feels like home."

The former is the more impressive number, with the catchiest chorus on the record. References to "The Upsides" start to pop up as well, and although "Suburbia" can be enjoyed by a first-time listener, long-time fans will be more pleased with the album.

"Suburbia" and "I've Given You All" serve as the "setting" for the record, and the first interlude is fittingly a song about the band's hometown. The first two interludes connect to "And Now I'm Nothing" in several ways. These three tracks are the only ones on the album written in 6/8 time and the finale takes some lyrics from the songs that precede it.

"My Life As A Pigeon" and "Summers in PA" are two essential cuts from the record, with the latter being most noteworthy for its bridge, featuring guest vocals from Dan

Before the first interlude, listeners get two more blistering tracks with "Woke Up Older" and "Local Man Ruins Everything."

"My Life As A Pigeon" and "Summers in PA" are two essential cuts from the record, with the latter being most noteworthy for its bridge, featuring guest vocals from Dan

O'Connor and Alan Day of Four Year Strong.

The intensity seems to be taken down a notch with the anti-blind religion, half-tempo jammer "I Won't Say The Lord's Prayer," but the scathing lyrical content might actually make the track the most intense one on the album.

"Coffee Eyes" and "Don't Let Me Cave In" sandwich the second interlude, two equally impressive numbers that show off The Wonder Years' versatility a bit. Martin's bass and Kennedy's drums are highlighted in the build-up of "Coffee Eyes," while the guitars take more of the focus in "Don't Let Me Cave In."

The most important characteristic of the new sound on "Suburbia" is the nearly perfect production. Campbell's vocals have almost no editing on them, making for a rawer sound comparable to his voice at live shows. That raw sound complements musicianship that is simultaneously more blunt and intricate than we have grown accustomed to with the band.

Recording with Steve Evetts was the most important part of the making of this album, as Evetts made all the right calls behind the boards. It's the production of "Suburbia" that gives it the boost up in lasting value so many albums in the genre lack these days.

Closer "And Now I'm Nothing" is the best song The Wonder Years have written. From several instantly accessible lines to the epic minute-and-48-second outro, this song is everything The Wonder Years know how to do, executed as best as they possibly can. It's almost paralleled by the emotional "Hoodie Weather," which features brilliant one-liners like, "Growing up means watching my heroes turn human in front of me."

When a teenager picks up a 10-year-old copy of "Suburbia I've Given You All And Now I'm Nothing" in a decade (or more likely just wishes for it before technology swoops it into his iPod UberNano), it might be "that" record for him. "That" record, the one that makes you fall in love with an entire genre. The one that makes a kid pick up a guitar or a microphone.

No one knows what the pop punk scene will be like in a decade, but I can say one thing with confidence – "Suburbia I've Given You All And Now I'm Nothing," The Wonder Years' best record to date, will still matter then.

Season, career ends for heralded seniors

By BRYAN HOLT
Alligator Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY — The two scenes couldn't have looked more different.

In front of the ASA Hall of Fame Stadium pitching circle, Arizona State players jubilantly mobbed freshman phenom and first-team All-American Dallas Escobedo in celebration of a national championship.

A handful of paces away, Kelsey Bruder walked away from a game, season and college career-ending strikeout. First, she walked into the arms of UF coach Tim Walton. Then she was swarmed by a contingent of Gators players gazing through teary eyes, watered with disbelief at witnessing another triumphant Pac-10 team.

For five seniors — who went 238-33 during their Florida careers — this was the end.

"Obviously, losing again here is heartbreaking," Bruder said. "But I'm definitely proud of what we've achieved over the last four years and this team, in particular."

Before the seniors arrived, the Gators had never made a Women's College World Series appearance. They've been to Oklahoma City four straight times but have yet to win the Southeastern Conference's first softball national title.

The seniors are 0-4 in two appearances in the best-of-three WCWS finals.

Walton said he hopes this group isn't remembered simply as a team that didn't win a national championship.

Four of the seniors (Bruder, Stephanie Brombacher, Megan Bush and Aja Paculba) have been named All-Americans during their time at

Pryor, Panda & other musings from a Mouth From the South

Joe Schad's wet dream has become Ohio State's nightmare.

It seems every day brings a new set of rampant allegations. At this point, all that's missing are rumors of eight balls and hookers.

The question was when, not if, Terrelle Pryor would leave school. After brazenly breaking multiple NCAA rules, the shamed quarterback exited as loudly as he entered. "All eyes on me."

As I've stated before, the NCAA has a deep hand these sagas, but this particular situation is getting ugly, quick. Which stain lasts longer, tattoo ink or the removal of championships, records and accolades?

It may take so long for the dust to settle in Columbus that the Joads could be stuck there forever while Urban is tending to greener pastures.

Lastly, the lost irony of the whole OSU Cover-up Gate is ole' scallywag Bobby Petrino must be fuming that the even older shyster Jim Tressell was allowed to saddle up the boys for one last rodeo to finally trump an SEC school.

Before the season, God must have wagered heavy money on the No. 1 Gators baseball team getting back to the College World Series, because damn, Florida has received some downright fortunate draws.

No doubt, the Gators have a great team, but Florida rolled through the SEC Tournament after avoiding South Carolina and playing Vandy just once. Then, the NCAA elected to put UF's latest whipping boy in the Gainesville Regional. While Florida was dismantling Miami

Thompson healthy, set to boost Gators' run to CWS

By JESSE SIMONTON
Alligator Staff Writer
jsimonton@alligator.org

For the past six months, Tyler Thompson has coped with more injuries than a Spanish bullfighter.

But finally, as the No. 1 Gators are just two wins away from a second straight College World Series appearance, the junior outfielder is completely healthy.

"It's nice to be back," Thompson said. "I've just had some bad luck this year."

During Florida's 2011 campaign, Thompson has been plagued by a torn hamstring, a hand infection, a groin injury and back spasms. After starting 39 games as a sophomore, Florida's junior has struggled to stay on the field this season.

Yet just like a year ago, Thompson has gotten hot — but mainly healthy — at the right time.

"I'm coming off a [string] of minor injuries, and I'm trying to get into a flow, just get my timing back," he said. "Sitting on the bench and not seeing live pitching is tough."

During UF's NCAA Tournament run in 2010, Thompson was a force. The free-swinging lefty knocked four homers — three in a single regional contest — and led the team with a .529 average as Florida sprinted to the CWS.

After sitting out most of UF's dominating season this year, Thompson has had a renaissance postseason again. Fortunately for the No. 2 national seed, his resurgence has coincided with injuries to stalwarts Brian Johnson and Austin Maddox.

The platoon outfielder said he didn't feel totally healthy until just two weeks ago, but the junior has returned to the diamond as a valuable commodity in Johnson and Maddox's absence.

GATORS ATTEMPT TO QUALIFY FOR U.S. OPEN

■ Senior Andres Echavarria is a first alternate at next week's U.S. Open at Congressional after losing in a playoff at the sectional in Vero Beach, Fla. Sophomore Phillip Choi missed the cutoff by one shot in Rockville, Md. Senior All-American Bank Vongvanij failed to qualify, finishing T-10th in Summit, N.J. Also playing in Rockville, former Gator Bubba Dickerson qualified for his first major since 2001.

Florida. The All-Americans and Tiffany DeFelice built a winning tradition and national respect.

"Arguably one of the best [senior classes] in NCAA history if you go down and look at all the awards they've won," UF's head coach said. "The only thing they didn't win was the big one, so of course that's what everybody talks about."

But positives are momentarily hard to recognize when another team is hoisting the bigger trophy.

The most visually devastated was Paculba, who started all 271 games in her UF career. Bush and Brombacher embraced the second baseman as tears flowed down her face. The mothers of Bush and Paculba looked on in the stands with their arms around one another.

"No one wants to end their career on a loss," Brombacher said. "It's tough to swallow, but I'm so proud of my teammates."

The senior rightly specifically referred to freshman counterpart Hannah Rogers, who became a breakout star in 2011 and a second-team All-American due in large part to Brombacher's midseason bicep injury.

Rogers is part of an underclassmen core that will try to take Gators softball to the only level it has yet to reach.

In addition to Rogers, Florida returns Michelle Moultrie, Cheyenne Coyle, Brittany Schutte and Kasey Fagan, while also tutoring the nation's No. 1 recruiting class.

"This program is going to do big things," said Brombacher, who will stay in Gainesville next year and work with the team.

"We've been [to the finals] twice now, and the next time, we're going to get it."

But Tuesday night was mainly about reflection, not the future. Bruder, the unofficial team spokesman all season, put her last night in a Gators uniform into perspective.

"They've probably been the best four years of my life," the left fielder said. "I don't think I've seen a team work harder, fight harder, have more passion for the game than us. ... I just feel lucky to be a part of this team. It was a great experience." WCWS All-Tournament Team: Bruder, Coyle, Schutte and Moultrie were all named to the 2011 All-Tournament Team. Moultrie was also named co-WCWS Most Outstanding Player, along with Escobedo.

WCWS WOES

Trouble in the finals: The Gators have played four games in the best-of-three national championship final of the Women's College World Series. They have lost all four contests by a total score of 32-8 and been out-hit by a combined 35-18. UF's other appearance in WCWS finals was in 2009. Florida strolled to a 63-3 record and the nation's No. 1 ranking but was promptly swept by Washington.

Early problems: Florida rode early offense to its four wins at the WCWS, outscoring opponents 29-3 in the first three innings of four victories. But in three games against the Sun Devils, the Gators were outscored 19-1 in the first three frames. ASU jumped on UF in the second inning each game of the final series, scoring six in Game 1 and three in Game 2 — enough offense to win both games.

Senior struggles: The senior combo of Megan Bush, Aja Paculba, Kelsey Bruder and Tiffany DeFelice disappeared in the championship series, hitting a combined .166 (4 for 24) with only two RBIs. As a group, the four hit .332 with 238 RBIs on the year.

Not closing: In both finals appearances, the Gators have allowed more runs in two games than they had in each entire WCWS leading up to that point. Florida had given up 13 runs entering the final, but Arizona State scored 18 in just two games. In the 2009 championship against Washington, the Huskies scored 11 times on a UF team that had allowed just five runs before the championship series.

— again — Mississippi State was upsetting Georgia Tech. Coach Kevin O'Sullivan couldn't have scripted a better first three acts. The only potential drama this weekend will be what happens if UF and MSU split the first two Super Regional games and Sully has to decide whether to pitch Brian Johnson or Alex Panteliodis.

My take: Panda, by a dozen bamboo sticks. While Johnson has been a horse all season, Panteliodis is actually hitting his stride. The lefty has allowed just a single run in 12 postseason innings. Before toeing the company line and saying he'll do whatever is best for the team, the junior admitted Wednesday he's much more suited to start and pitch on a set routine. Thing is, Sully recognizes this too. If Panda doesn't start, then the Gators effectively eliminate one of their hottest arms from the equation, barring injury or marathon contest. O'Sullivan knows his players much better than me, but I'd keep Johnson in the 'pen this weekend.

There's a battle going on right now, and I'm not talking about the struggle of 10,000 comedians fighting over 100,000 Weiner jokes.

Media mouthpieces from all sides are lining up to either demonize or defend LeBron James.

It's sad really. A former alligatorSports alum (Gregg Doyel) asks one question too many and boom! A riot across the blogosphere nearly breaks out.

I did love the King's response in Game 4 though, you know, publicly ceding his throne with a single fourth quarter shot. I'm all for team basketball, but neither Magic Johnson nor Bill Russell ever turned into Christian Bale from "The Prestige." Dude better cut the disappearing act tonight or else his shrinkage will elicit more water-cooler jeering than Costanza's.

Kelsey Bruder just inserted another conjunction after sort-of, but not really, complementing Arizona State, followed immediately by a thrashing of the umpires.

I watched Game 1 and understand the senior's post-game frustration. Home plate ump Chris Drumm shrunk on the game's biggest stage similarly to, well, LeBron on Tuesday night.

But — a word that can often times be used as a tricky juxtaposition — Arizona State knocked the snot out of Florida. The Gators were nothing more than a doormat the Sun Devils wiped their feet on toward a second national title in four seasons. After losing 14-4 — FOURTEEN to FOUR — Monday, Bruder had the audacity to question the umpiring multiple times while imploring the media to not twist her words. This is like being misquoted in an autobiography. Sometimes, I just don't get it.

UF plays Mississippi State at noon Friday

In four postseason starts — three during Florida's weekend sweep of the Gainesville Regional — Thompson is hitting .438 with a pair of doubles and four RBIs. Thompson, along with Daniel Pigott and Vickash Ramjit, is wreaking havoc at the bottom of the lineup.

"It just gives us more depth," catcher Mike Zunino said. "The bottom of the order has been doing great since the SEC Tournament, and they've picked up some slack for some guys that hadn't been swinging too good at the top of the order."

"My dad said, 'Your swing looks good, but try and stay healthy.'"

Tyler Thompson
UF outfielder

Although Thompson didn't start his first game until March 8 and later went a month between starts, the streaky hitter said he is finally ready to make an impact.

"I'm doing what I can," Thompson said. "My dad [former major leaguer Robby Thompson] said, 'Your swing looks good, but try and stay healthy.'"

Florida hosts Mississippi State on Friday at noon in Game 1 of the Gainesville Super Regional.

Johnson and Maddox update:

Zunino said Johnson participated in the team workout on Monday and looked good.

The sophomore left-hander is listed as one of two possible starting options for Sunday's "if necessary" Game 3 against the Bulldogs.

"To see him back on the field definitely helps," Zunino said. "It made everyone else relax."

Maddox, who strained his foot attempting to catch a foul popup in Friday's blowout over Manhattan, is still listed as day-to-day. Zunino was non-committal when asked if Maddox practiced Monday.
