Man allegedly robs gold store, limps from scene

He was arrested on felony robbery and weapons charges

MICHAEL SCOTT DAVIDSON

Alligator Contributing Writer

A man who allegedly stole gold and cash and fled with a gun Wednesday is now in custody.

Kouvaris Lamar Roberts was arrested on felony charges of robbery with a weapon and possession of a weapon by a convicted felon.

Gainesville Police and the University Police Department responded to calls at 2:13 p.m. about a man carrying a handgun who was limping westbound down an Archer Road sidewalk.

A UF Alert was sent out via text message and email at 2:29 p.m. A second message at 2:44 p.m. said police found the man and took him into custody.

Police believe the man robbed Gold Buyers of Gainesville at 2320

SW Archer Road, according to GPD officer Ben Tobias.

Police described the man as 5-foot-10, 160 pounds and in his 20s.

He fled the scene, struck by gunfire at least once.

An eyewitness employee at a neighboring Jiffy Lube said he only heard and saw one shot being fired outside of the shop.

The employee, who asked to remain anonymous, said he saw a man slip on a dark ski mask before he entered Gold Buyers of Gainesville around 2 p.m.

About five minutes later, the alleged robber and a man from the store came outside.

Then, the man fired a round at the suspect.

"[The suspect] grabbed his ass," said the Jiffy Lube employee. "Then he ran off."

Bus routes to change for Summer B schedule

► BUS SERVICE WILL BE REDUCED FROM JUNE 23 TO JULY 1 AND LATER GATOR ROUTES WILL RESUME JULY 5.

CHRIS ALCANTARA

Alligator Writer

Bus service will be reduced during the weeklong break between Summer A and Summer B.

The Gainesville Regional Transit System announced Monday its plan to reduce service from June 23 to July 1.

According to a press release from RTS, service on routes 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 20, 23, 34, 35 and 43 will be reduced.

RTS spokesman Chip Skinner said there will be fewer buses running on those routes.

"With students leaving town, we noticed a reduced demand," he said.

The remaining city routes — 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 15, 24, 25, 36 and 75 — will follow the regular summer 2012 weekday schedule.

RTS will resume its normal summer service on July 2.

Weekend routes will remain unchanged, with the exception of route 126, which will not be in service.

No buses will be running through the UF campus during the break.

The Later Gator nighttime routes will resume on July 5, according to the release.

Routes 22, 27, 28, 29, 46, 62 and 76 will not be in service until the beginning of the Fall semester on Aug. 19.

STUDENT LIFE

UF Senator to begin 150-mile trek to Tallahassee Monday

SAMANTHA SHAVELL

Alligator Staff Writer

UF student Rob Wheeler Jr. starts a three-day, 150-mile trek from Gainesville to Tallahassee Monday.

The 20-year-old political science and history junior will walk from Gainesville to High Springs on Monday.

The next day, he will cycle from High Springs to Lamont, and Wednesday he will walk from Lamont to Tallahassee.

It adds up to about 150 miles.

The trek is Wheeler's way of giving back to his church, St. Peter's Anglican Church in Tallahassee, and raising money for the construction of its new building.

During high school, Wheeler was a devout Christian. But once he started college, things changed and he lost focus.

By spring 2012, Wheeler was regularly blacking out from drinking, yelling at his girlfriend and fighting with his family.

"I turned my back on everyone," he said.

His mom, Kim Wheeler, said she noticed her son was not as kind and considerate as he had been.

He became a member of Theta Chi Fraternity, held leadership positions in Student Government and Gator Growl and joined Florida Blue Key. He is currently a District B senator.

"The biggest change in Rob is that he is much happier and seems to be less burdened."

Kim Wheeler
 Mother

"I was so caught up in myself," he said.

It was after a blacked-out night when he argued with his girlfriend again that he realized he needed to change.

When he came home for Spring Break, he went back to church.

His mom said she saw him change back to the way had used to be.

"The biggest change in Rob is that he is much happier and seems to be less burdened," she said.

But Rob Wheeler Jr. still felt like he owed

Ohio candy thief targets mostly peanut butter cups

LORAIN, Ohio — Police in northern Ohio are trying to identify a candy thief who stole hundreds of dollars in peanut butter cups from a gas station store.

Employees reported that a young man usually comes in after midnight, snatches Reese's peanut butter cups and exits the store before they can call police. The workers say the candy stolen over the past few months was worth $400 to $600.

The Morning Journal reports the latest theft happened early Tuesday morning. A police report indicates the man stole peanut butter cups and went for a saltier snack, grabbing a bag of chips. He was dressed in black clothing, with a hooded sweatshirt over his head.

A clerk says he tried to stop the thief, who spun him around and fled on foot.

Woman drives car onto golf course, into sand trap

UXBRIDGE, Mass. — A woman told police she drove her car into a sand trap on a Massachusetts golf course because her GPS sent her the wrong way.

Police said she was drunk. Patricia Maione was held on $10,000 bail after pleading not guilty Tuesday to charges including driving with a suspended license and fourth offense drunken driving.

Authorities say the 47-year-old woman's car got stuck at the Whitinsville Golf Club in Northbridge on Monday. She told police her GPS told her to turn left, which she said led her through a cornfield and onto the golf course.

The Telegram & Gazette reports that police say they found a cup filled with alcohol in her car.

Golfers were on the course at the time, but no one was hurt.

Gelato for dogs as Italy heats up

ROME — Leave it to Italians to come up with just the thing to survive the dog days of summer: canine gelato.

This Italian ice cream for dogs contains no milk, eggs or sugar, which are harmful to canines. With temperatures in Rome topping 36 degrees Celsius (97 degrees Fahrenheit) this week, dogs are lapping up the icy treat at a pet supply store on the outskirts of the capital.

Dog owner Anna Bordoni couldn't resist a taste from her mutt Elsa's cup and declared it "fantastic."

Rome veterinarian Marialivia Palmieri says water remains the best cool-down treat for dogs. But she said the special canine gelato does dogs no harm — and can be gratifying for pet and owner.

Flavors come in vanilla, rice and yogurt and a serving costs 2 euro ($2.50).

Judge orders $1 million dinosaur fossil be returned

► THE FOSSIL IS BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN ILLEGALLY IMPORTED TO GAINESVILLE.

CHRIS ALCANTARA

Alligator Writer

Wanted: an 8-foot-tall, 24-foot-long Tyrannosaurus bataar dinosaur fossil worth about $1 million.

On Tuesday, a New York federal judge requested the Department of Homeland Security to seize the remains of a 70-million-year-old dinosaur artifact in New York City believed to have been stolen from Mongolia.

The fossil was illegally imported from Great Britain to Gainesville in March 2010 by an unidentified buyer.

Beverly Sensbach, assistant director of the Florida Museum of Natural History, said the museum didn't promote the fossil while it was in the city.

"We have personally never seen it," she said.

According to a civil complaint, documents given to officials contained false information about the artifact, which incorrectly said it was from Great Britain and was worth $15,000.

On May 20, the fossil was sold to an anonymous buyer for $1,052,500.

Heritage Auctions, the Dallas-based auction company overseeing the sale, halted the sale on May 21 pending an investigation into the fossil's origins.

The artifact is currently located in an art storage facility in New York City.

"We have cooperated in the investigation process for paleontologists to expeditiously examine the skeleton, and we will continue to cooperate with authorities," said Jeff Halperin, co-founder of Heritage Auctions, in a statement.

Well, it's the end of Summer A, which means the Alligator will be on break next week. However, we have a lot to cover this week, so sit tight, relax and prepare for our document-withholding-amnesty-granting-substance-banning-cancer-curing-animal-crashing-studio-bashing edition of...

Darts & Laurels

After a congressional oversight committee requested documents from the Obama administration surrounding the failed gun enforcement operation known as "Fast and Furious," the administration responded by using executive privilege to withhold these materials. For this, we throw an are-you-telling-me-that-politicians-are-hypocrites DART at President Barack Obama for not only invoking executive privilege, but for doing so after arguing against its use by President George W. Bush in 2007.

However, we will be giving a finally-a-change-in-immigration-policy-that-makes-sense LAUREL to the Obama administration for giving undocumented students brought to the U.S. before the age of 16 the ability to obtain a work permit and protection from deportation for two years.

Regardless of your views on immigration policy, children should not be held responsible for the actions of their parents.

It has been argued, but not proven, that the brutal cannibalistic attack that occurred in Miami in May was caused by so-called "bath salts," a product used as a synthetic drug. This leads us to our expanding-the-black-market-and-giving-criminals-more-money DART at the Miami-Dade County Commission, which started the process to ban the product.

Good job. No one ever smokes marijuana anymore because it's illegal, right?

Next, we give an opening-the-door-to-new-discoveries LAUREL to UF researchers, who found that a genetically modified version of the bacterium lactobacillus acidophilus, naturally produced in the human gut and found in certain yogurts and cheese, reduces inflammation or growths that can result in colon cancer in mice. That's pretty cool, huh?

For causing mischief on Interstate 275 in St. Petersburg, Fla., we throw an I'm-going-down-and-I'm-taking-everyone-else-with-me DART at an alligator that authorities are blaming for two car crashes on the highway. Although the gator survived the first collision, it wasn't so lucky the second time.

Fortunately, there were no human injuries.

Finally, we throw a yes-there-were-only-two-laurels-this-week-but-we-can't-NOT-address-this DART at New Line Cinema and Warner Bros., whose lack of enthusiasm for the "Dumb and Dumber" sequel caused Jim Carrey to back out of the project.

This is ridiculous.

Have a fun and safe break, and be sure to check back Summer B.

President Obama displays incompetence

Well, I'm just going to come right out and say it. President Obama is arguably the worst president in American history. Never have the American people been sold such a bill of goods as they have with this man.

Yes, I consider myself to be politically conservative, and no, I did not vote for Obama. I'm sure this surprises no one.

Full disclosure is important. But if you think I'm harsh in my dislike of the man's conduct in his duties as the commander in chief, you can't imagine how much more upset I would be with him had I actually voted for him.

Maybe I can put that into better perspective.

In 2004, fewer than 60 days after returning home from a tough tour in Iraq, I was absolutely furious with the Bush administration. So this lifelong Republican marched down to the polling place and cast my vote for John Kerry.

I did not vote for him because I was suddenly a born-again Democrat, but rather because I believed then, as I do now, that when leadership failure occurs, it is the people's obligation to hold elected officials to the highest standards. Sometimes the firing is far more important than the hiring.

If I was one who viewed Obama as an inspiring leader, a unifying force or even the man of destiny that the president obviously feels he is, I would still be extremely puzzled about what's going on in his mind.

Where are the successes?

Right now, the prevailing narrative coming from White House officials is essentially, "We just need more time. Everything was worse than we thought." During his latest speech in Cleveland, the president explained that recessions like the current one historically take more than a decade to sort out.

I'd like to know who put that on the teleprompter. Apparently the president has such a low opinion of the American public that his best argument, his most inspiring pep talk to the voters, essentially amounts to, "Don't expect much."

opinions@alligator.org

I do not hate Obama. On the whole, he seems like a very charming and personable fellow. However, he is absolutely falling down on the job, and our country is suffering for it. Therefore, I hold him responsible.

Conversely, I hold no great love for his opponent, Mitt Romney. In many ways, he seems very similar to Obama; only he does seem to know how to operate a calculator, balance a budget and manage something other than a celebrity fundraiser.

Speaking of fundraisers, the president has done more than 140 of them; twice as many as the next most prolific presidential fundraiser, George W. Bush. If each gala runs at about two hours in length, that equals seven full work-weeks. This is disgraceful, even if you don't consider the expense to the taxpayer for his travel and security details.

The only thing I would say to this very charming and personable fellow in the White House is that yes, President Obama, America is watching you.

Everything he does seems to be painted as "historic," and for good reason. No president has ever proven to be this historically disengaged, so historically absent or so historically incompetent to meet the challenges of his office.

I'm therefore predicting a historically bad night for him in November because Americans understand, this time now more than ever, that the firing is more important than the hiring.

I know I'm hoping for some real change.

Letter to the Editor

What happened to free speech and common courtesy?

I've been a student senator since the last election in spring, and one thing has been made abundantly clear in my short time in the Senate: The Unite Party doesn't like being told that they're wrong or that they're corrupt and incompetent, or even that you want to amend one of their bills to be grammatically correct.

It's partisanship on a level of its own.

And that's fine. No one likes hearing bad things about themselves. I'm just as likely to get upset by an insult as the next guy. But while I disagree with what they might have to say, I don't cut off their ability to say it.

Beyond being a First Amendment right granted by the Constitution, it's common courtesy.

For those of you not familiar with the way Senate works, we run our meetings using Robert's Rules of Order. When debating a bill, any side can make the motion to "call the previous question," which essentially cuts off all debate and moves directly into voting on a bill.

It's the Unite Party's favorite motion and probably the only one most of their senators know (I've yet to hear most of them speak, so I can't be sure).

Now, even within Robert's Rules of Order, calling the previous question is regarded as a highly disrespectful motion, especially if someone else still wants to speak.

But Unite Party Sen. Andrew Schein takes disrespect to a completely new level when he stands up (generally during debate time) and calls the previous question only to then vote in favor of the bill. It's a disgusting maneuver and shows how little respect he has for the 49 percent of students who voted against his party in the last election.

To further demonstrate the point, after bill presentation, questions and three full rounds of pro-con debate (the maximum allowed without a motion to extend) you've exhausted a maximum of 28 minutes. If his party wants to vote in favor or against a bill, we can't stop them, but I would hope that he would at least have the respect to allow the representatives of the Student Body to speak on behalf of their constituents.

The Unite Party's actions thus far into the summer session have been the exact opposite of their promises to increase communication and transparency.

I just wish they'd have the decency to stop being so intellectually dishonest about their views and actually say they don't care about what anyone has to say.

Max Stein
Students Party Senator

United States still sees effects of down economy

Recent economic growth numbers are begging the question: are we getting out of the recession any time soon?

The daunting question looms like a dark cloud over the heads of lawmakers and business owners who don't know what to expect from a lethargic economy.

This uncertainty is stifling action in the private sector.

A disappointing May jobs report pushed the unemployment rate back to 8.2 percent, and there is already extra doubt about the modest growth estimates for the second quarter.

Historically, economic growth has been fastest after a downturn.

In 1934, following the Great Depression, the U.S. economy grew an unprecedented 10.9 percent.

However, since 2009, the average annual growth rate has been 2.4 percent, while the long-term trend in the U.S. has been 3.1 percent since 1948.

So why do we still see sluggish growth?

Among the many factors that influence the health of the economy, one reality is that the economy reacts to perception.

If you don't believe you'll have a job tomorrow, you're unlikely to buy a new house today. You will probably save your money instead.

Likewise, a business apprehensive about prospective income is unlikely to spend money on new hires.

Even with the Federal Reserve driving interest rates near zero, employers are reluctant to take risks with a lack of confidence in the recovery.

Over the last several years, a wave of new policies and political events has given rise to uncertainty in the political and economic climate.

The health care overhaul will implement sweeping changes for employers beginning in 2013.

Recently, I was able to attend a presentation by Gary Ellis, the chief financial officer of Medtronic.

He explained how the type of system adopted by the U.S. was less of a concern to them than figuring out the details of the bill.

"We operate in all health care systems of the world and turn a profit," he said. "We're more concerned about figuring out exactly what is in this bill."

Derek Olson
UWire

The effect this bill will have remains hazy even for those closely watching it.

Last year, the Bush-era tax cuts were extended, but only until Jan. 1, 2013. Without knowing whether the tax cut will be extended again, business owners are wary of commitments.

The effect of a tax cut to stimulate hiring in the economy is diminished by its short-term nature.

Last summer, Republicans and Democrats clashed over the debt ceiling until the 11th hour.

This event was toxic for the markets, amplified fear over the ability to contain public debt and led to a credit downgrade for the government.

Worst of all, a sequel may be right around the corner as the debt nears its ceiling again.

The press' favorite two words in 2010 were "double dip," which has not helped quell the uncertainty.

With incessant questioning of the U.S.'s potential to relapse into recession to the current debt debacle of Europe, the financial press has been filled with fear.

Lawmakers can help ameliorate this uncertainty. First, they must provide the business community with lasting solutions, not temporary fixes.

They need to be efficient in making decisions and avoid drawn-out political battles.

This is especially important for debate on the debt ceiling, as strong creditworthiness is crucial for the nation's economy.

Second, President Barack Obama's administration needs to work on the clarity of the health care overhaul and finish crafting the language of the recent reforms such as the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform bill.

Businesses need to know what they are up against.

Lastly, lawmakers should remember that real solutions often require politically tough decisions, and if the economy is doing well, the people will trust those tough decisions.

In lab, Anna Melnichuk is a 29-year-old graduate student working toward a master's degree both in physical chemistry and electrical engineering. On the social networking and shopping website, Etsy, she is Silvertree999, armed with handmade jewelry and nature photographs taken with her mother's 35mm Minolta, a retro film camera.

These personas are seemingly unrelated, but Melnichuk disagrees.

"Science and art really go hand in hand," she said. "You have to be a creative person to do well in science."

Melnichuk, who spent her teenage years in Brooklyn, N.Y., painted throughout high school. She was accepted to the School of Visual Arts, Savannah College of Art and Design and other well-known art schools, as well as waitlisted at Carnegie Mellon for physics.

She kept her name on the waitlist thinking she wouldn't get in.

"I wouldn't have to make a decision, upset parents, et cetera," she said, "and then I got in, and there was nothing I could say after that."

Thus, her 11 years and counting of schooling began. Melnichuk attended the University of Hawaii after graduating from Carnegie Mellon with a Bachelor of Arts in chemistry. She received her master's in chemistry at Hawaii and came to UF in 2006.

In Gainesville she's developed a creative outlet taking photographs of flowers and sunsets at Paynes Prairie. Jewelry making started for Melnichuk as an accident after her bracelet broke.

At the bead store she had a thought; "Oh, there's a lot of stuff here, this is kind of fun." So, she started buying, making things and taking classes.

To Melnichuk, her art is a stress relief from her work with UF's Quantum Theory Project. Because of this, jewelry making and photography indirectly supplement her work in the same way that a hot shower or a few hours at the gym seem to generate the best ideas.

"If you think of something else, if you read a book that's not related to your work at all, at some point, just doing that clears your mind," she said.

She put her work on Etsy in February and has had one sale so far from a very supportive aunt.

"Someone ordered this pendant, this pricey piece, and I didn't think it would be the first thing to sell," she said, laughing.

Melnichuk hopes to sell most of her jewelry stock by the time she leaves Gainesville next year. Even with her stack of chemistry degrees, she acknowledges art as an important part of her life.

"I always tell my students not to think of science as this dry thing," she said. "If you're going to be good, you have to be creative. Otherwise, you really are a drone."

To Kathryn Wilson, The Gator Nation knows no bounds.

Wilson uses Etsy to display and sell her products online, her shop is called GatorMade.

"I love being creative, and I'm a lifelong Gator, and it just kicked me right in the pants that I need to start doing stuff I enjoy."

Kathryn Wilson
Etsy vendor

Her creations embody a home football game — bags, flip-flops and jewelry all orange and blue — and also bring The Swamp spirit abroad in the form of pillows, scarves and signs.

"It's amazing," Wilson, a 1971 graduate of UF, said. "I didn't even realize how global it could be until I put this stuff on Etsy."

Wilson's creativity and love for the Gators became intertwined when she came to UF on a fine arts scholarship. In her time, she attended countless home football and basketball games, she said, and eventually graduated with a degree in interior design.

After years of being an interior designer, and later a financial assistant, Wilson decided it was time to turn back to the things she loved most — crafting and UF.

"I love being creative, and I'm a lifelong Gator," she said. "It just kicked me right in the pants that I need to start doing stuff I enjoy."

After making enough products to expand, Wilson asked her son to make a website. Instead, he introduced her to Etsy.

He told her it was easy to set up and use Wilson said.

He was right, and she has been using it to spread orange and blue all over the world.

"I've sent things to Kentucky, to California, to Japan," Wilson said.

One of her products, a sign that says how many miles a particular place is from The Swamp, made it more than 7,000 miles to Germany.

"Social media is a wonderful thing when you can just talk to someone in Germany, and it's not going to cost you anything," Wilson said.

If Mabelin Castellanos was to read her name on a page, certain letters would pop from the black and white of ink and paper. She would see the a's in red, the e's in green, the i's in yellow and the o's in white.

Castellanos has grapheme-color synesthesia. The part of her brain that processes words and numbers overlaps with the part of the brain that sees colors.

The condition is common among artists, Castellanos said, which would explain the large collection of mixed media art and household knickknacks in her Etsy collection, TelaArtes.

"It's a need I have," she said. "It balances my mind."

Castellanos is a scientist. After emigrating from Cuba in 1994, Castellanos came to work for UF's department of physiological sciences at a time when the university was the only school in Florida with a medical college.

Castellanos believes art and science balance each other.

Much of her work is quilt art. She creates a graphic tablet on the computer to print onto fabric, then sews on top of it with different colors and patterns. The scenes are inspired by everyday life.

"That's just what I love, people and ambiance," she said.

For a while, Castellanos was part of the Artisans' Guild Gallery, a co-op for Gainesville artists, she also put up tables and stands at art shows and farmers markets all around Florida. Those became too time-consuming, so she joined Etsy in February.

Since then, she's sold two key chains and a quilt art piece.

"The money is not really an issue," she said, "but you like to show what you do in a way."

She also enjoys browsing. "Etsy's great because you can see what other artists are doing," she said. "It's even better as a buyer."

With her synesthesia and science-heavy job, Castellanos doesn't see art creation as a choice, but as a necessity. However, it is a welcome necessity.

"I have a need to see color and put it together," she said. "I really enjoy doing it."

Otter and Trout Trading Co. offers holistic practices to Gainesville

► THE STORE IS GETTING ENERGY EFFICIENT WINDOWS.

SAMANTHA SOLUM

Avenue Writer

What began as a passion for Native American customs expanded into a boutique in 2008, and now the expansion continues in order to serve the community of Gainesville.

Otter and Trout Trading Co., located at 625 W University Ave., recently added another room to its store to make space for the growing collection of herbs, books, gems and unusual gifts, but the renovations aren't over.

Eric Dreaming Trout and Kimberli White Otter have teamed up with Trimark Properties to add energy efficient windows and paneling as well as an entire new look for the store, all while keeping its doors open.

Otter said their main concern is networking with the community to create wellness on a global scale, but closing during construction would hinder these efforts.

"We want whatever the Gainesville people want," Trout said.

Every Monday through Saturday, customers eagerly wait outside the door until it opens at 11 a.m. and continue to come and browse or seek holistic advice until the store closes at 7 p.m.

Although the store is on University Avenue, its main customer base isn't necessarily UF students.

Otter said they get all different walks of life visiting the store and most of them discover it through word-of-mouth or from curiosity of the trinkets they spot through the window.

"I think we stay busy because people are realizing the importance of getting in touch with their ancient roots," Otter said. "More people are interested in trying herbal remedies, opposed to chemical and pharmaceutical treatments."

Otter gained her knowledge of herbs through a near-death experience from a car accident in 1996.

"I came back with some gifts I couldn't really explain," she said. "I didn't know how I knew what I knew but it just became intuitive to me."

She met Trout in 1997, and they combined interests to create a business selling their herbal concoctions out of a tent at Native American powwows.

Trout noticed how many people turned to Otter with their ailments, and he encouraged her to open their own store.

Otter was already working as a certified masseuse in Gainesville and when the space became available, they decided it was where they were going to stay.

Now in the store's fifth year of being open, the pair plan on continuing to grow, improve and contribute a portion of all profits to the vision of global healing.

Their goals for the future are to provide a self-sustaining, multicultural, interspiritual center for alternative healing situated on ample property with lush foliage, live oaks and running water, medicinal and meditation gardens, healing, drum circles, workshops and nature walks.

The pair believe if they continue to serve the Gainesville community, then the customer support will help make this vision a reality.

Otter and Trout Trading Co. has been open since 2008. Since opening the store it has expanded into a room next door and is now undergoing an eco friendly facelift.

Two Gainesville residents host Free Community Meditation Group

NATALIE TEER
Avenue Writer

In a room with only the noise of a buzzing tattoo gun, conversations formulate out of thin air.

For Keri Johnson, a 27-year-old UF student studying religion and nature, and 36-year-old tattoo artist "Sleepy Dave" Kotinsley, a discussion that started about a thesis paper grew into a community meditation group.

Kotinsley, who has been regularly meditating for a year and a half, mentioned that he had an instructor, but he lived out of town. Johnson has been teaching yoga and meditating on her own for about eight years. The two discussed the importance of a community coming together for these types of practices.

"The sessions last an hour, but it isn't an hour of seated meditation. It starts with 15 minutes of breathing work and stretching, a half hour of seated practice and then we take a couple minutes at the end to check in, talk about the experience and see what worked and what didn't."

Keri Johnson
UF student

Through this need grew their Free Community Meditation Group. The first session was June 1, and there are sessions every Friday. The group is led by either Kotinsley or Johnson at 8:45 a.m. at Sanctuary Yoga, located in the Seigle building, 408 W University Ave., No. 112.

"The sessions last an hour, but it isn't an hour of seated meditation," Johnson said. "It starts with 15 minutes of breathing work and stretching, a half hour of seated practice and then we take a couple minutes at the end to check in, talk about the experience and see what worked and what didn't."

Johnson and Kotinsley want to focus on and make it known that this is a non-denominational meditation group.

David Carr / Alligator Staff

Keri Johnson, 27, has been practicing yoga and meditation since 2004. She and Dave Kotinsley, 36, work together to provide Gainesville with free meditation sessions.

"So it's all religious affiliations and no religious affiliations," Johnson said. "We welcome anyone of all levels of meditation. It's really a community-oriented class, where we are learning from each other."

The first session the duo hosted had 15 people — a number that they deem a very positive response. The studio can fit about 40 people. Johnson and Kotinsley switch off hosting the group, but the schedule isn't set in stone.

Hosting the meditation provides them with an outlet to share experiences.

"It's easy to meditate on your own at home," Kotinsley said. "It's the human and community aspect that is very important, and it's been great for me personally as well."

Kotinsley said there is no end date planned for the future.

"We want to build something, hopefully something that the community wants to support for years to come," he said.

CONSERVE IT, PRESERVE IT

Poe Springs may stop flowing this summer.

Here's how you can help!

Run your clothes washer and dishwasher only when they are full. You can save 1000 gallons a month.

Fix leaky toilets. A bad flapper can waste 200 gallons a day.

Go low-flow. Keep showers under five minutes and install low-flow shower heads. Low-flow shower heads (1.5 gallons/minute) help save water without diminishing the quality of your shower.

Florida coping with abrupt end to College World Series run

Last week, Brian Johnson was not thinking about life after Omaha.

"You avoid it by you want to win a national championship," he said last Tuesday. "The whole team has worked so hard, and you've got goals to accomplish before you have the next one."

Now, Johnson and eight of his teammates will likely move on to professional baseball. They leave Florida with three straight College World Series appearances, but no national championship.

"It hasn't sunk in yet," Preston Tucker said.

Six days ago, the top-ranked Gators had just arrived in Omaha with the ultimate prize in sight. As the No. 1 overall seed in the NCAA Tournament, Florida had won five straight games to sweep both the NCAA Regional and the Super Regional.

However, the Gators' demise in Omaha was surprisingly quick.

Florida opened the College World Series against two-time defending national champion South Carolina on Saturday with Johnson on the mound. Johnson had a 2.40 ERA in two of the Gators' three wins in four tries against the Gamecocks this season.

But shutting down South Carolina for a third time proved too tall of an order for Johnson, who lasted just four-plus innings and surrendered five earned runs in a 7-3 defeat.

The Gamecocks' offensive outburst occurred right after a mound visit from O'Sullivan. South Carolina had loaded the bases with no outs, but O'Sullivan decided to leave Johnson in the game.

"We had a two-run lead," O'Sullivan said. "Once again, you've just got to tip your cap. I thought they had some really good at-bats that inning, obviously."

Facing elimination against Kent State, Florida sent ace Hudson Randall to the mound Monday. However, weather finally got the best of the Gators after a rain-plagued Super Regional victory against N.C. State.

On-field temperatures rose to 104 degrees according to ESPN and forced UF coach Kevin O'Sullivan and forced UF coach Kevin O'Sullivan to pull an overheated Randall, and errors took care of the rest. Randall and Jonathon Crawford, who pitched three innings of relief, gave up four combined unearned runs due to fielding miscues.

"We made a couple errors in the first and second, and they capitalized," O'Sullivan said. "That was the difference in the ball game."

Errors, heat and a historic post-season winning streak aside, the common thread in both Florida losses came down to untimely hitting. The Gators stranded 21 runners on

THE RALLY

Bigger disappointment: Baseball, softball or 'John Carter?'

Joe: Rewind to January 1, 2012. The ball has dropped in New York City, and I'm drinking champagne out of a plastic wine glass. A fortune teller — decked out in purple robes with a crystal ball — saunters over and tells me the Gators will win three national championships in the first six months of the year and that John Carter would be the box-office bust of 2012. First, as the world's biggest Andrew Stanton fanboy, I would weep bitterly. Right after that, I would have traveled to Las Vegas and bet every dime in my pocket that Kevin O'Sullivan's squad would win the 2012 College World Series. Fast-forward six months, and I'm glad my little anecdote is just a hypothetical. In easily the most disappointing development in UF sports this season, the top-ranked Gators baseball team was two-and-out in Omaha. Florida was the second team eliminated from the CWS this year despite losing just two starters and boasting an over-achieving freshman class. After three straight fruitless trips to Omaha, the biggest championship window in UF baseball history slammed shut with a resounding thud Monday.

Corey: Alright, the baseball team flat out sucked in the CWS this year, but to say it was the most disappointing result this season — queue Chris Carter — "C'mon, man!" I know it's hard to remember that one weekend back in May, but it took four games for the fifth-seeded Gators softball team to be eliminated from the postseason. Not only did they fail to advance to the Women's College World Series for the first time in five years, but they couldn't even win their NCAA Regional, a feat not seen in Gainesville since Chris Leak

Barbiasz one of several Gators competing in U.S. Olympic trials

KATIE AGOSTIN

When junior Dwight Barbiasz first started competing in the high jump in 2008, he had to spend that summer watching the Olympics from home. This year Barbiasz wants in.

"I saw all the commercials leading up to the 2008 Olympics, but I was a senior in high school then," Barbiasz said. "I would say, 'I'm going to make it to the next one,' and that's what I've been trying to do since then."

Over the next 11 days, Barbiasz and 14 current and former Gators will be competing at the Olympic Trials for a spot on Team USA for the 2012 Olympic Games. This is the largest championship track meet in the world, with more than 1,000 athletes competing for 102 spots.

Despite the large number of competitors, Barbiasz, who is coming off a win at the Southeastern Conference in triple jump and a record breaking performance at the NCAA Outdoor Championships, is staying relaxed.

Barbiasz ranks fourth in the United States in high jump

"I don't really get too nervous, but that definitely helps boost my confidence going into the trials," Barbiasz said. "I definitely feel like I can jump even higher, so I'm hoping to get that Olympic 'A' Standard this weekend so hopefully I can make the team with that."

Over the last two months, Barbiasz has improved his mark from 2.05m/6-8.75 at Drake Relays to 2.28m/7-5.75 at the NCAA Outdoor Championships. After his performance in Des Moines, Iowa, his jump ranks him fourth in the country, and about two inches short of having the top mark.

"I think I'll surprise some people because I'm kind of an underdog going into it from being injured a lot all year. But I had some good attempts at nationals this year, so I think I can get that mark and maybe even higher than that. If I do that, then I think I'll have a good chance at making the team."

Out of the group of current and former Gators competing, there are six athletes whose marks rank in the top-five in their event — Will Claye (triple jump and long jump), Marquis Dendy (long jump), Tony McQuay (400 meters), Christian Taylor (triple jump), Omar Craddock (triple jump) and Barbiasz (high jump).

Barbiasz

"I'm just excited to go out there, compete and potentially have the chance to make the team and represent the United States," Barbiasz said. "That's been my ultimate goal since I started track. I'm just trying to make that dream come true."

was walking around campus. In the regional, consisting entirely of Sunshine State foes — teams Florida has dominated over the past decade — Tim Walton's squad became the first Top-10 national seed eliminated from the tournament. To say the baseball team was the biggest disappointment this season, we would have to overlook the softball team. And even Disney has to recognize John Carter bombed.

Joe: Everybody knew John Carter would be a bust just like they knew that even at full strength, this season's Gators softball squad was not competing for a national championship. Granted, Florida fell to Arizona State in the WCWS finals in 2011, but that was a different team. Only five players from the Gators' starting lineup against the Sun Devils last June returned this year. And in the NCAA Regional, the five returners were hampered. Cheyenne Coyle had already left the team, and Brittany Schutte had just returned to the lineup after recovering from a broken jaw. The baseball team was deep and reasonably healthy after five months of play. Sloppiness in the field and untimely hitting sunk the baseball team. Inexperience and a lack of depth hurt the softball team. Each squad's demise was disappointing, but the men got their butts kicked in embarrassing fashion.

Corey: So losing in an NCAA Regional that you hosted isn't embarrassing? And oh yeah, they were the No. 5 national seed — that number is less than the amount of UF Alerts I got yesterday, but I digress. The rosters between this year's and last year's softball teams may be different, but the numbers aren't. Both owned 21-7 SEC records, with last year's squad putting up a slightly higher overall winning percentage heading into the postseason, 84 percent compared to 81 percent. Hitting was down this season, but defense improved, offering the same fielding percentage as last year (.974) and showing significant improvement in opponent's batting average (.208 to .196) and team ERA (2.16 to 1.44). Now let's look at the baseball team. Sure they were the top-ranked team in the NCAA Tournament, and should still be competing, but who did they lose to? Kent State would be a fluke if you consider a team that knocked out three Top-15 squads on its way to the CWS a joke. Either way, it happens in baseball, especially in a one-game situation. South Carolina was the eighth national seed, working off of a 21-game win streak in the tournament and two straight national championships. At least O'Sullivan took his team to the CWS to lose to quality opponents. The softball team, however, lost their first game of the postseason to Florida Gulf Coast, found a way to make it to the regional final and then put up a goose egg against USF. Great things weren't expected of John Carter, but neither was losing $200 million.

Joe: I think this debate boils down to the big picture. Softball returns the majority of its roster next season, and each player will have gained valuable experience and learned from this season's early playoff exit. Baseball will contend for a fourth straight trip to Omaha next season, but the road will be much tougher. The Gators had nine players drafted, including All-Americans Mike Zunino, Preston Tucker and Brian Johnson. The national championship window for Florida baseball has closed for the time being barring an Oh-Fours-type run. The softball team has a deep pitching staff with Hannah Rogers, Lauren Haeger and Alyssa Bache. They will be just fine moving forward. In fact, coach Tim Walton's squad should generate quite a bit of preseason buzz next season. Also, John Carter wasn't that bad — a quality Redbox rental.

Corey: Softball's lone senior departure this season is Michelle Moultrie, who led the team in a modest eight categories — batting average (.386), total bases (116) and on-base percentage (.489) to name a few. That in itself is a big hit for the team. But just before the NCAA Regional, three players were suspended because of an alleged altercation and ultimately "they won't play there anymore." Kasey Fagan and Cheyenne Coyle, both two-year starters, brought a lot of experience to the team. And 2011 Gatorade Florida Softball Player of the Year, Sami Fagan, will not have the chance to follow up a solid season, in which she was second on the team with a .378 hitting clip. That's four bats gone from next year's lineup. Pitching might be alright in the future, but a lot of talent will be missed regardless. In other words, the sequel gives us nothing to look forward to, much to the dismay of John Carter fans.

Preston Tucker runs into the wall as he chases a fly ball hit by Kent State's David Lyon in the sixth inning of Florida's 5-4 loss Monday. The play resulted in a triple for Lyons. The Gators' loss to the Golden Flashes eliminated UF from the College World Series after just two games.

base in Omaha, and they tallied just two runs in four bases-loaded opportunities.

"We've had plenty of opportunities and the other team has played better, it's as simple as that," O'Sullivan said. "I'm not going to point fingers at one thing or the other as why we lost."

Moving on to next season, a depleted Florida roster will look to some of this season's key underclassmen for leadership and production.

Rising sophomores Casey Turgeon, Justin Shafer and Josh Tobias were all key cogs in the Gators' lineup down the stretch this season. Taylor Gushue will attempt to fill the spikes of catcher Mike Zunino behind the plate.

Upcoming juniors Jonathon Crawford and Karsten Whitson will top a formidable starting rotation assuming Crawford builds on his late-season progress and Whitson pitches like he did during his freshman campaign in 2011.

UF also anticipates the return of senior center fielder Tyler Thompson to the lineup in 2013. Thompson, who was batting .319 through 16 games this season, received a medical redshirt after suffering an ACL tear in his right knee against Vanderbilt on March 16.

Regardless of what Florida accomplishes moving forward, the Gators' crop of upperclassmen notched three consecutive College World Series appearances in arguably the most successful run in UF baseball history. Their feat will be inscribed on the right-field wall next season at McKethan Stadium.

UF Baseball

"They've set a standard that following teams will have to live up to," O'Sullivan said.

The last three years mark the best results achieved by any Florida baseball team. Despite their recent run, the Gators have yet to win a national title.

"It's going to take a while to hit me," Zunino said. "I'm sure it hit the other people. But it's disappointing at the time. I'm sure it will hit harder later."
