Wilson's St. Lucie Tribune is a gem in typographical neatness.

The home of The St. Augustine Record had a narrow escape from fire Friday.

Tomorrow will be Marianna Day, and will be observed by the several U. D. C. chapters of the State.

Most of us still live despite the prognostications of the Duxbury, Mass., end-of-time predictors.

The Tribune says Tampa people have spent $1,000,000 for automobiles. Prosperous people down there.

A notable gathering in Florida next month will be the annual reunion of the Confederate Veterans at Live Oak, Oct. 20th and 21st.

With the death of Governor Johnson of Minnesota the Democratic party is again face to face with Bryanism, remarks The Wall Street Journal.

Lakeland now has two large wholesale institutions, which is additional evidence of the growth and prosperity of that city and surrounding country.

It's a strange thing, but the man who never can hold down his own job is always morally certain that he could make a howling success of the other fellow's.

The Brooksville Southern Argus hands this bit of information to the politicians: "The Southern Argus dances at the fiddling of no political boss. We cut the pigeon wing only to our own music."

Governor Johnson's untimely death cut short a career which promised to have a broader field of activity in the near future. He was of a class of politicians all too small in this country and his loss is a national, no less than a State, bereavement.

The selection of Editor E. S. Matthews of The Starke Telegraph as chairman of the editorial department of the Campaign for Education in Florida is a high compliment to that gentleman. His ability along this line will be of valuable assistance to the movement.

Philip A. Patchin, a Washington newspaper man, has been appointed chief of the division of information of the State Department. This division was recently established to keep diplomatic officers informed of the progress of commercial, political and diplomatic events of this country and abroad.

Henry M. Lewis, secretary-treasurer of the National Trust Co. of Washington, D. C., has been arrested upon complaint of postoffice inspectors, charged with using the U. S. mails to defraud. His company has been doing an extensive business, guaranteeing bonds and stocks. It claims to have a paid up capital of $1,000,000, but this is denied by the postoffice authorities, who assert that the capitalization consists of stock of different companies having insufficient guarantees behind them. Lewis pleaded guilty, and was released under $10,000 bail.

GAINESVILLE PROGRESSING.

Cricket Prewitt pays Gainesville the following compliment in the current issue of his Waldo News: "The editor of The News spent a couple of days in Gainesville last week, and although we visit there quite often, we were surprised at the rapidity with which our county seat is assuming real city proportions. Work on the Federal building, which will be occupied by the United States land office, the United States Court and the postoffice, is progressing at a very rapid rate, while material is being placed and the excavations have been made for handsome new buildings upon the grounds of the State University. Alterations of an extensive nature are being made on buildings in the business district and the building mania seems to prevail pretty much all over the city. In all Gainesville is a good town, is a credit to the State in which it is so fortunate as to be located, and every resident of Alachua county should—and doubtless does—feel proud of the thrifty spirit of its people and its prosperous condition."

WHAT IT COST LAMAR.

Ex-Congressman W. B. Lamar, writing to The Tallahassee True Democrat, says: "I was sorry to miss the United States Senate, of course, but I am enjoying private life. Do as you please, say what you please, travel as you please and no one to say nay. Public life is fine, in a way. But it is an exacting life, for you have the people always to please. And it is an expensive life. Five years of it in Washington City cost my wife and me over $70,000. And my salary and mileage for that time was somewhat over $30,000. We both appreciate highly the honor we had, but it cost us nearly $40,000 more than we received."

And yet in the face of this men clamor for the privilege of representing the people at Washington. But then, probably, most men would not spend as much money—or have it to spend—as did the Ex-Congressman from the Third.—Madison Enterprise-Recorder.

THE TRIBUNE MIXED.

Jesse Burtz' directory count gives Gainesville a population of 5,127. Nearly half are colored. In fact, Jesse is quite an artist in "black and white."—Tampa Tribune.

The writer of the above evidently meant Orlando instead of Gainesville, since Mr. Burtz has not compiled a directory for this city in over a year, but is at present engaged in this line of work for the South Florida city.

In the directory compiled by Mr. Burtz here in 1899, the population of Gainesville was shown to be a little more than 4,000. The directory of 1905 gave the population as 5,254, and the directory of 1907-8 places the population at 7,335. These latter figures were made over a year ago—and Gainesville is still growing.

The season of long indoor evenings is at hand. The evening meal is now taken by lamplight instead of by daylight, the shades are drawn down, and, far more than in the summer-time, the privacy and oneness of the family life are realized. With the world and its cares shut out, and love and peace reigning within, the sacredness and superiority of home life are seen to best advantage. The easy chair, suggestive of comfort, the cheery lamp and genial warmth; the family newspaper; the interesting magazine; the wholesome, yet entertaining book; the pleasant conversation, these and many other things combine to form a scene for which men may look in vain for a parallel. Whether the home evenings are as universal as in former days is questionable, for the numerous social attractions of the present age make inroads upon the family circle that tend to weaken home ties. Yet in spite of this there are many thousands of homes in our land where almost every evening the members meet together as a wellnigh unbroken band.

You must have good health. You can't have good health if your liver is not doing its duty—slow but sure poisoning is going on all the time under such circumstances.
