Bed Tax

TDC wants another penny added

BY DEBORAH BUCKHALTER
dbuckhalter@jcfloridan.com

Jackson County Commissioners may be asked to add another penny to the existing bed tax, which, if approved, would bring the total to a nickel on every dollar visitors spend to rent a room at local motels.

Tourist Development Council Executive Director Christy Andreasen is expected to make the request at a future commission meeting.

With approval from the TDC board to pursue the notion, Andreasen had been on the county's agenda to ask the board to adopt the necessary ordinance at the board's end-of-March commission meeting, but she cancelled that, saying she needed more time to research exactly how the county could use the extra penny.

MARK SKINNER/FLORIDAN

Lodging places in Jackson County may be collecting a fifth-cent bed tax from customers if Jackson County Commissioners approve the increase being suggested by the Tourist Development Council.

Remembering the visit

Locals recall trip made to area by first lady Barbara Bush

BY DEBORAH BUCKHALTER

The Tuesday death of former first lady Barbara Bush at age 92 touched off expressions of sympathy and feelings of loss among admirers around the world, and a flood of memories for people in Jackson County who met her when she came here in 1990.

By then already having anchored herself as a champion in the mission of ensuring early literacy for all, Bush was on a campaign swing through this area for a Republican candidate in a U.S. House race, but she also used the opportunity to visit the local school promoting the cause of literacy. It was a ritual she performed all over the country during her husband's tenure in the White House.

Melody Pender remembers it well.

Now a guidance counselor at Graceville Elementary School, Pender was at Golson in her second year of teaching at the time.

"Mrs. (Virginia) Braxton (the principal at the time) told me on a Friday that I was going to have a classroom visitor the next week, and I was like, okay, that's great," Pender recalled. "But I was floored when she told me who it was. Needless to say, we got busy getting the classroom in tip-top shape."

Cowboy Poetry and More

Cowboy poets in spotlight at Greenwood library

BY DEBORAH BUCKHALTER
dbuckhalter@jcfloridan.com

Next Thursday, April 26, the Greenwood branch of the Jackson County library system is hosting its first big public event since the branch was established in Greenwood City Hall six months ago.

Cowboy Poetry and More begins at 2 p.m. that day and is an hour-long celebration of poetry in general with a special emphasis on cowboy poetry. April is National Poetry Month and April 15-22 is Cowboy Poetry Week, so organizers hope the local event will tie all that together nicely.

Greenwood library branch manager Ann Bryan says the library will be set up with décor fit for a cowboy, including a saddle and lariat borrowed from the iconic Pender general store across the street. An artificial campfire will be the centerpiece, with the crowd sitting around it to hear poetry read and to hear cowboy songs from former Malone principal Marvin Lassiter and his wife Ezelle.

Graham Air Base to close in December

Graham Air Base will close permanently when the local contract school ceases operation for the Christmas holidays in December, according to a release from Dudley Sharp, secretary of the Air Force. School officials were advised Thursday that under a new consolidated pilot training program Graham will be "phased out" along with five other primary training schools.

Dawson admits slaying woman, son

Sie Dawson, 49-year-old Negro sawmill worker, confessed Wednesday to the April 13 slaying of Mrs. Maggie Mae Clayton, 36, mother of five, and her youngest son, Roger Glenn, 2, according to Gadsden County Sheriff Otho Edwards. The confession came one week after the mother and her son were killed in a heavily wooded area south of Chattahoochee.

Charges filed against husband in Graceville case

Charges of unlawful handling of firearms, and drunkenness were lodged against a Geneva, Alabama, man yesterday after he threatened his wife who was staying with her parents in Graceville, authorities say.

William Tate, 31, ripped a two-foot hole in the screen of the house where Mrs. Mary Helen Tate was staying after she left her husband.

Mr. Tate was carrying a double-barreled shotgun with which he had threatened to kill his wife, Thomas said. Tate was arrested outside the home. — JACKSON COUNTY FLORIDIAN, FRIDAY, APRIL 22, 1930

Today in History

Today is Saturday, April 21, the 111th day of 2018. There are 254 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On April 21, 1918, Manfred von Richthofen, 25, the German ace known as the "Red Baron" who was believed to have downed 80 enemy aircraft during World War I, was himself shot down and killed while in action over France.

- On this date: In 1509, England's King Henry VII died; he was succeeded by his 17-year-old son, Henry VIII. In 1649, the Maryland Toleration Act, providing for freedom of worship for all Christians, was passed by the Maryland assembly. In 1789, John Adams was sworn in as the first vice president of the United States. In 1836, an army of Texans led by Sam Houston defeated the Mexicans at San Jacinto, assuring Texas independence. In 1910, author Samuel Langhorne Clemens, better known as Mark Twain, died in Redding, Connecticut, at age 74.

Thought for Today

"Get your facts first, and then you can distort them as much as you please." — Mark Twain (1835-1910)

- In 1930, fire broke out inside the overcrowded Ohio Penitentiary in Columbus, killing 332 inmates. In 1942, the first edition of "The Stranger" (L'Etranger), Albert Camus' (al-BEHR' kah-MOOZ') highly influential absurdist novel, was published in Nazi-occupied Paris by Gallimard. In 1955, the Jerome Lawrence-Robert Lee play "Inherit the Wind," inspired by the Scopes trial of 1925, opened at the National Theatre in New York. In 1962, the Century 21 Exposition, also known as the Seattle World's Fair, began a six-month run. In 1977, the musical play "Annie," based on the "Little Orphan Annie" comic strip, opened on Broadway, beginning a run of 2,377 performances. In 1986, a rediscovered vault in Chicago's Lexington Hotel that was linked to Al Capone was opened during a widely watched live TV special hosted by Geraldo Rivera; aside from a few bottles and a sign, the vault turned out to be empty. In 1998, astronomers announced in Washington that they had discovered possible signs of a new family of planets orbiting a star 220 light-years away, the clearest evidence to date of worlds forming beyond our solar system. Ten years ago: President George W. Bush opened a two-day summit in New Orleans with Mexican President Felipe Calderon and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper. Robert Cheruyot of Kenya won the Boston Marathon in 2:07:46 to become the fourth man to win the race four times;

Dire Tune of Ethiopia won the women's race in 2:25:25. 1970s soul singer Al Wilson died in Fontana, California, at age 68. Five years ago: On the first Sunday since the deadly Boston Marathon bombing, churches paused to mourn the dead and console the survivors while in West, Texas, residents prayed for comfort four days after a fertilizer plant explosion killed 15 people. In Britain, the London Marathon sent out a powerful message of solidarity with Boston and its victims as runners crossed the line in front of Buckingham Palace with black ribbons on their chests (Tsegaye Kebede of Ethiopia won the men's race). Joe Scarborough, a 50-year-old self-employed electrical contractor, rolled the first 900 series in Professional Bowlers Association history — three straight perfect games. One year ago: A San Francisco power outage blamed on the massive failure of a circuit breaker that sparked a fire at a power substation stranded people in elevators and left tens of thousands in the dark.

MURPH'S POSITIVE REFLECTIONS

Get rid of doubt, uncertainty and hopelessness

Doubt, uncertainty and hopelessness are some of the most depressing words in the English language.

Many of us go about our daily routines with these three words imbedded deep in our minds. Doubt and uncertainty are next-door neighbors; and hopelessness lives a couple blocks over in the same neighborhood. Life doesn't have to be that way.

When we carry an attitude filled with doubtfulness and uncertainty, there is often skepticism and a lack of conviction in our lives. As a baby, everything needed for our survival is provided by those we depend on. Though we have no idea what "trusting in others" means, that's the position we are in when we enter this world.

Thomas Vincent Murphy

When children are raised in homes where carrying out a promise by their parents or guardians seldom comes to fruition, it's easy for them to consider promises they hear in later years simply as hollow words.

It is interesting how habits — good or bad — can be handed down in a family from one decade to another. There are times we might doubt the integrity of a person who continuously lies and misleads us, which is understandable, but when it comes to facts we want to know the truth about or need to confirm, there are ways to find some truthfulness.

Knowledge is a great cure for doubt, uncertainty and hopelessness.

In order to turn "maybe, perhaps, and I'm not sure" into "yes, no, and factual information," we must do our own research in order to receive more surety. With today's technology and the access to a computer, cell phone and a public library, in most areas, many of our doubts and uncertainties can become realities — if we take time to look at solid information presented to us.

Of course, we must still make decisions on if we believe what we see, hear and visualize, but at least a chance of making a choice is available.

When we are doubtful and uncertain about things in life, hope is definitely far from us; and without hope, joy and contentment are extremely hard to obtain. Even a spark of hope can start us on the way to rebuild our lives. Without hope ourselves, we won't have the energy or desire to give someone else a lift.

During the time we are out and about each day, we have no idea who is suffering physically, spiritually or financially. No matter how bad off we feel we are, there's always someone else who is having as tough a time or worse than we are.

Arbor Outlook

Dwindling wealth, middle classes and Marvin Gaye

"Are things really gettin' better, like the newspapers say?"

What else is new my friend, besides what I read?"

— "What's Happening Brother?" as performed by Marvin Gaye

Margaret McDowell
Arbor Outlook

Unemployment has declined steadily since late 2009. Wage growth appears to finally be waking from its decades-long slumber, albeit very slowly for lower-income folks. And some industrial and blue-collar companies are so desperate for employees that they are offering sign-on bonuses to new workers.

The Federal Reserve is no longer artificially stimulating the economy. Their plan to progressively raise interest rates up to four times this year speaks to their confidence in an economy finally rebounding from the Great Recession.

On the surface, things seem to be getting better. In the soft underbelly of our economy, well, not so much. Here's what we mean.

A recent survey found that a record 30% of American households, or almost a third of the population, enjoy no non-home wealth. That means that if you take away the little equity they carry in their homes, they owe more than they own.

Margaret McDowell

The number of households in this situation has been on a steady rise since the late 1960's, with the exception of the late 1990's, when the tech bubble temporarily inflated the net worth of households. What this means is that millions are one catastrophic illness, one serious accident or a few missed paydays from financial ruin. Forget affording college for kids or putting money away. This is why the housing bubble was so intertwined with the Great Recession; the stock market decline was accompanied by a strong real estate decline. A home equity loan may be a last resort for many in this 30% group, and if home values suddenly decline significantly, that option is lost.

Many factors are to blame for America's relatively-new "permanent underclass." Economists often cite stagnating wages for the inflation-adjusted drop in living standards for lower-income Americans. Some cite the lack of participation in the stock market, with household stock ownership being around 10% lower than it was 20 years ago. You can't benefit from a rising stock market if you don't have the discretionary income to invest.

Those arguments have merit and are a part of the equation. But if I had to offer a primary reason why many Americans can't get ahead it would be the cost of healthcare.

In 1960, health care costs were only 5% of GDP. Two years ago, health care costs were almost 18% of our GDP. In 2016, health care costs per person in the U.S. were $10,348; in 1960, they were a paltry $146 per capita. On average, healthcare costs have risen faster than both wages and inflation for decades on end. If we solve this conundrum, our middle class may flourish again.

Done with Miami traffic, man now travels with dolphins

The Associated Press

MIAMI — Parker Lake got sick of the rat race. Sick of working in a cubicle. Sick of commuting on Miami's mean streets. Sick of being overweight from sitting at a desk or in traffic jams.

So Lake quit his unfulfilling job, sold his car and moved to a house on the Little River. Road warrior no more, he paddles to two new jobs on a stand-up paddleboard. The rude drivers who used to accompany him on his travels have been replaced by manatees, dolphins, pelicans and spotted eagle rays.

Lake decided to stop despairing and daydreaming and go outside himself, as well as the confinements of office and automobile. He's lost 45 pounds. He's gained peace of mind.

"I thought to myself, 'I'm spinning my wheels in more ways than one. I'm not happy with the commute, I'm not happy being a salesman,'" he said. "Now I find myself fulfilled. The difference in pay is not insignificant but I figure I'm paying to be happy."

On Thursday, Lake paddled three miles home from his part-time job as a tour guide at the iPaddle

ASSOCIATED PRESS PHOTOS

Parker Lake works at iPaddleMiami in Pelican Harbor Marina to which he commutes to work every day on his paddleboard along Biscayne Bay out of Little River from his home in El Portal.

Miami watersports rental center at Pelican Harbor Marina on the 79th Street Causeway. He paused at Bird Key, where a great blue heron launched from the trees. As the wind turned brisk and churned the Intracoastal's waters, Lake balanced on his 12-1/2-foot bamboo Riviera Ron House board and gazed at the downtown Miami skyline. Then he headed up the river, which gets progressively grittier the farther west you go. He passed yachts parked behind luxurious homes, then helped construction workers fetch a fishing pole that had dropped in the water. He stroked onward past a flock of orange-beaked ibises, empty warehouses, run-down apartment buildings, a homeless man living under a bridge, walls covered with graffiti, trash floating on the surface.

Paddling to and from work, he can see and hear the cars on surrounding roads and bridges.

"I'm not part of that anymore and I feel great," he said. "Drivers look at me with a look of longing, and I know what they're thinking: 'He's probably on vacation. I need a vacation!'"

Lake's other job is as a security guard at the Eden Roc hotel in Miami Beach. That's a 12-mile, two-hour paddle from where he lives on Northeast 85th Street. He carries his work clothes and shoes in a dry bag backpack. He once paddled over a hammerhead shark on his route.

"This is a mode of transportation that I think more people will be choosing in the future," he said. "Some people bike to work. I think everybody stuck in gridlock every day should consider an alternative. When I was cubicle and Fiat-bound, my exercise consisted of walking into offices selling web technology. I got fat. Physically and mentally, I'm in a better place. Going to work is not a chore. You've seized the day by the time you get to your job."

Lake, 44, is a Los Angeles native who earned an economics degree from the University of Southern California, where he was on the rowing team. He worked in China as an investigator for Pinkerton's and in London in the financial printing business before moving to Miami five years ago to sell computer systems at UDT, a technology company in Doral.

"In California, the drivers are more polite than they are in Miami," he said. "They use their turn indicator, they let people change lanes or cross the street. Self-awareness is the biggest difference between drivers here and there. Here, people are rude, they cut you off, they flip each other off, there's lots of micro aggression wherever you go. In California you do not upset drivers because road rage never ends well.

Lake is adding mileage to his commutes whenever possible to prepare for Crossing For A Cure, a June 17 fundraising trek from the Bahamas to Dania Beach. It's a 61-mile paddle that will take 8-10 hours. Paddleboarders are raising money for cystic fibrosis research.

"There's a degree of discomfort in this journey but it will be over in about eight hours," Lake said. "Kids with cystic fibrosis live with pain all the time."

"It's no small feat going that distance," said iPaddle owner Manuel Castillo, who is helping Lake train for the event. "It's a physical game. It's the culmination of decisions leading to the lifestyle Parker chose to adopt."

In exchanging car for board, Lake also wanted to set an example for his two daughters.

"If I transform what I do, that's what I will be to my daughters," he said. "I'd encourage everyone in Miami to get on a paddleboard. Or a kayak. A lot of people ride jet skis, but dolphins shy away from jet skis. Try paddling."

Marianna man seriously injured in Friday crash

William James Smith, 79, of Marianna, was seriously injured in a crash this week, according to the Florida Highway Patrol.

Officials say the incident happened just after 11 a.m. Friday, April 20, at the intersection of State Road 69 and Messer Road, in northeast Jackson County.

Smith, FHP reports, was driving a 2001 Cadillac DeVille, eastbound on Messer Road, while a 2005 Mack semi driven by David Antonio Meola, 45, of Sneads, was northbound on SR 69.

According to FHP's incident report, Smith failed to stop and the stop sign at the intersection, which caused the front left of the Cadillac to collide with the left rear tires on the trailer being pulled by the semi.

Smith sustained "serious injuries" in the crash and was taken to Southeast Alabama Medical Center for treatment, officials say. Meola was uninjured.

FHP reports that both drivers were wearing seat belts at the time of the crash and that alcohol was not a factor. Charges are pending.

SCHOOL WALKOUTS

Students look to turn outrage to action

The Associated Press

Once again, they filed out of class. In a new wave of school walkouts, they raised their voices against gun violence. But this time, they were looking to turn outrage into action.

Many of the students who joined demonstrations across the country Friday turned their attention to upcoming elections as they pressed for tougher gun laws and politicians who will enact them. Scores of rallies turned into voter registration drives. Students took the stage to issue an ultimatum to their lawmakers.

"We're not scared. We want to show that we're not scared. We want to stop mass shootings and we want gun control," said Binayak Pandey, 16, who rallied with dozens of students outside Georgia's Capitol in Atlanta. "The people who can give us that will stay in office, and the people who can't give us that will be out of office."

All told, tens of thousands of students left class Friday for protests that spread from coast to coast. They filed out at 10 a.m. to gather for a moment of silence honoring the victims of gun violence. Some headed to nearby rallies. Others stayed at school to discuss gun control and register their peers to vote.

Organizers said an estimated 150,000 students protested Friday at more than 2,700 walkouts, including at least one in each state, as they sought to sustain a wave of youth activism that drove a larger round of walkouts on March 14. Activists behind that earlier protest estimated it drew nearly 1 million students.

Friday's action was planned by a Connecticut teenager, Lane Murdock, after a gunman stormed Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, on Feb. 14, leaving 17 people dead. It was meant to coincide with the 19th anniversary of the Columbine High School shooting in Littleton, Colorado.

elections reflects a shift after activists gained little immediate traction in Washington. And prospects for their influence remain uncertain. Congress has shown little inclination to tighten gun laws, and President Donald Trump backed away from his initial support for raising the minimum age to buy some guns.

Among those who helped orchestrate the walkout — and the voter registration push — was the progressive group Indivisible, which formed after the 2016 election to oppose Trump's policies.

In cities across the country, it was common to see crowds of students clad in orange — the color used by hunters to signal "don't shoot" — rallying outside their schools or at public parks.

Several hundred gathered at

New York City's Washington Square Park, chanting "The NRA has got to go!" and "Enough is enough." A large group in Washington marched from the White House to the Capitol building to rally for gun control.

Nate Fenerty was among hundreds of students who left class to rally in Richmond, Virginia. He registered to vote for the first time at tables set up by students at the protest and said he wants Congress to approve mandatory background checks for gun buyers.

"How many more times are we going to stand in memoriam for another school shooting before our policymakers to actually do something?" said Fenerty, who carried a sign saying "Am I Next?"

Student David Hogg, a Parkland survivor who has emerged as a leading activist, took to social media nearly every day this week urging students to register. On Thursday he made the motivation clear on Twitter: "The only way to make politicians listen to us is by voting in ones that will," he said.

Hogg was among about 50 students who walked out of Stoneman Douglas on Friday after administrators threatened protesters with unexcused absences. Craig Smith and Terry McGary, both 17-year-old juniors, said they walked out because they want to show respect for the Columbine victims.

"It was a guilt trip to make us not walk out," McGary said about the threat.

The walkouts drew counter-protesters in some areas, including about 30 at a rally outside

New Hampshire's statehouse. In Kansas, about 200 gun-rights supporters held their own demonstration outside the statehouse. Many carried signs and flags, and some brought holstered handguns.

Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, a Republican candidate for governor, addressed the crowd and later criticized the walkout movement.

"Instead of walking out of class, why don't you stay in class and spend that half hour studying the Second Amendment? You might learn something," Kobach said later.

Some students in Colorado participated in the walkouts but not at Columbine, which has closed on April 20 ever since the 1999 shooting that left 15 people dead.

One shot, wounded at Marion County school

The Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE — Panic and fear gripped another Florida school Friday when a gunman who carried a shotgun in a guitar case opened fire, wounding one student before he was taken into custody on a day planned for a national classroom walkout to protest gun violence, authorities said.

It happened Friday morning at Forest High School, which was put on lockdown, the Marion County Sheriff's Office reported. The wounded student, a 17-year-old boy, was taken to a local hospital for treatment of a non-life threatening injury to his ankle.

Some students and teachers piled desks and filing cabinets against classroom doors as a makeshift barricade.

Police initially said the 19-year-old suspect is also a student at the school, but later said he was a former student not currently enrolled. No charges were immediately announced.

The Ocala shooting comes just over two months after a gunman killed 17 people and wounded 17 others at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Nikolas Cruz, 19, faces the death penalty if convicted in that Valentine's Day shooting.

The shooting also coincided with a nationwide student walkout to protest gun violence on the anniversary of the 1999 massacre at Colorado's Columbine High School. The Ocala school had planned its version of a walkout, students said. Chris Oliver told the

The boy told Oliver the shooter was standing in a hallway and fired at a closed classroom door. The shooter then dropped what authorities said was a shotgun, ran and tried to hide, the boy told his father.

Craig Ham, deputy superintendent of Ocala schools operations, said the gunman carried the shotgun in a guitar case into the school by blending in with students. Ham told reporters the shooter fired at the bottom of a classroom door, which was locked, and pellets struck the victim in the ankle.

Jake Mailhiot's psychology class had just begun Friday morning when school officials announced a "code red" alert over the intercom.

"You could hear in their voice that this wasn't a drill," the 16-year-old junior said.

Students and teachers had been prepared for such alerts and leapt into action to barricade the classroom's one door and block the door's window.

"Our teachers started pushing file cabinets and desks toward the door, and a few friends and I joined in," Mailhiot said. "We also started tying together some jackets to hang out the window, in case we needed another way out."

In a photograph Mailhiot shared on social media, the classroom door is invisible behind a tall pile of furniture.

Mailhiot said about 15 people in the classroom waited over 30 minutes to be evacuated by Ocala police. They were instructed to leave the room with their hands up, he said.

The school had planned to participate around 11 a.m. in a walkout commemorating the Columbine shooting. Mailhiot said he had hesitated to participate in the walkout because he was worried the large crowd outside the school would present a large target for anyone waiting to cause a disturbance.

"I worried if something was to happen, that's where it would happen," Mailhiot said.

In April of 2007
we lost our much loved Poppy.
Following is a paper submitted as a school project by Zane Chason
(a grandson).
It is a beautiful tribute.

MY POPPY AND HIS COMMUNITY

Last April, I lost someone very important to me. Most people knew him as Ducky Johnson, local businessman and community leader, I simply knew him as my "Poppy." Having been married to my "Mumzy" for the past 43 years, he raised his family of four children here in Grand Ridge. He was a strong and hard working man who contributed time, money, and his compassion for others into this community.

At the age of 18, my poppy started his own business and called it "Ducky Johnson House Movers." He had been moving houses with his own father since around the age of 6. This housemoving company grew through the years and served as a sponsor for many athletic teams and educational organizations here at Grand Ridge School.

My poppy also served as the Mayor of Grand Ridge for several years. He was in fact the very first mayor to fund and help build recreational facilities in this town, including the first ever town ball park, named "Johnson Park." During his terms as Mayor, the town of Grand Ridge took on a new and livelier appearance. Kids and adults alike were out enjoying the new recreational areas. His actual house moving crews would come out and assist in the clean up of the streets after a hard rain or bad storm.

After the death of my Uncle Blondie in 1999, my Poppy's memorial to him was a store named "Blondie's Food and Fuel," located here in Grand Ridge. Everyone from Santa to the Easter Bunny have visited this store to the delight of the small kids. "Blondie's" has also served as a sponsor of various groups and causes in the community. My Poppy was often the quiet force behind a helping hand for many families in need in this community. He never expected praise for his actions, but as his grandson, I am very proud of all that he has done for others.

As you can see, my Poppy accomplished a lot during his 60 years here with us. He was a successful businessman, a community leader, and a loving and generous family man. Although to me, his most important accomplishment was being a man that I looked up to and am still proud to call my Poppy. I miss him dearly.

Defense: Schedules show Cosby wasn't around for assault

The Associated Press

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — Jurors got a look Friday at Bill Cosby's travel records as his lawyers made the case that he never visited his suburban Philadelphia mansion in the month he is accused of drugging and molesting a woman there.

Cosby's lawyers say the alleged assault on Andrea Constand could not have happened in January 2004, when she says the comedian knocked her out with pills and violated her. The date is important because Cosby was not charged until December 2015, just before the 12-year statute of limitations was set to expire.

The defense produced logs for Cosby's private jet flights as well as several days' worth of schedules listing his whereabouts and media appearances. The schedules do not indicate what Cosby was doing during his personal time.

Debbie Meister, his personal assistant, testified that the flights on Cosby's Gulfstream IV — dubbed "Camille" after his wife of more than 50 years — coincided with comedy performances and other events on Cosby's schedule.

None of the records showed him flying into or out of Philadelphia-area airports from December 2003 to February 2004.

Cosby spokesman Andrew Wyatt said outside court that the records "connect the dots" that the comedian wasn't around Philadelphia at that time.

Cosby, 80, is charged with three counts of aggravated indecent assault. He says his sexual encounter with Constand was consensual.

Sequestered jurors got an early start to the week-end as Day 10 of the trial drew to a close shortly after lunch. Testimony will resume Monday. The jury is expected to get the case next week.

Earlier Friday, Cosby's lawyers told the judge they want jurors to hear from Constand's confidante before deliberations get underway, but said she's been unreachable.

This Aug. 11, 2017, file photo shows a sign at a Wells Fargo bank location in Philadelphia. The New York Times and other news outlets are reporting Thursday that federal regulators plan to fine Wells Fargo as much as $1 billion as early as Friday for abuses tied to its auto lending and mortgage businesses.

Wells Fargo fined $1B for misconduct

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wells Fargo will pay $1 billion to federal regulators to settle charges tied to misconduct at its mortgage and auto lending business, the latest punishment levied against the banking giant for widespread customer abuses.

In a settlement announced Friday, Wells will pay $500 million to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, its main national bank regulator, as well as a net $500 million to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. The fine is the largest ever imposed by the CFPB and its first since the Trump administration took control of the bureau in late November.

Starting in September 2016, Wells has admitted to a number of abusive practices across multiple parts of its business that duped consumers out of millions of dollars.

Regulators, in turn, have fined Wells several times and put unprecedented restrictions on its ability to do business, including forcing the bank to replace directors on its board. Even President Trump, whose administration has been keenly focused on paring back financial regulations, has called out Wells for its "bad acts."

In Friday's announcement, the CFPB and the OCC penalized Wells for improperly charging fees to borrowers who wanted to lock in an interest rate on a pending mortgage loan and for sticking auto loan customers with insurance policies they didn't want or need.

The bank admitted that tens of thousands of customers who could not afford the combined auto loan and extra insurance payment fell behind on their payments and had their cars repossessed.

Ex-FBI deputy director 'disappointed' in Comey comments

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Andrew McCabe, the former FBI deputy director, is

McCabe

"very upset and disappointed" by comments made by his former boss James Comey that contradict his account of a disclosure to the news media, McCabe's lawyer said Friday.

"Andy has at all times attempted to, and believes he's been successful in, playing it straight with Jim," Bromwich told reporters as he again attacked an internal investigation process that led to McCabe's firing from the FBI last month and a criminal referral to federal prosecutors.

The disagreement stems from conflicting recollections about a conversation the two men had following an October 2016 Wall Street Journal story about an FBI investigation into the Clinton Foundation.

McCabe says he told Comey after the article was published that he had authorized FBI officials to share information with the reporter — specifically, details of a heated phone conversation with a senior Justice Department official — in order to push back against a story he felt was going to be unfair to the bureau.

Comey, however, has said McCabe did not acknowledge having done so and left the impression that he didn't know who had shared that information with the journalist.

The Justice Department's inspector general concluded that McCabe misled officials under oath about authorizing the disclosure. Attorney General Jeff Sessions fired him last month, and the inspector general's office in recent weeks referred the matter to the U.S. attorney's office in Washington for a possible criminal investigation.

Bromwich said Friday that the threshold for criminal referrals is very low, and that he did not expect the case to result in prosecution. He said the investigation that led to McCabe's firing was "unprecedented" in its speed and accelerated so that he could be terminated without being allowed to retire with full pension benefits.

Free Manuel Duran

Journalist Manuel Duran was arrested for doing his job: For exercising his First Amendment rights. He now he faces deportation from the United States. The 42-year-old Salvadoran immigrant was live-streaming demonstrators in Memphis protesting immigration detention and enforcement policies on Tuesday when he was wrongfully detained.

Duran's status as an undocumented immigrant complicated his release from Shelby County jail, but prosecutors eventually dropped the charges.

Unfortunately, Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents were waiting in court to seize him.

He will likely be booted out of what has become his home unless ICE releases him. The federal agency should free him because Duran should never have been arrested.

It is a difficult case, exposing a broken immigration system that makes it hard for undocumented residents who want to contribute to their communities but cannot earn their legal status.

There are 11 million people in this nation who are living in the shadows because of their legal status.

Not Duran. He has been a voice for his community and has documented the good and the bad.

He started in Memphis in 2008 on La Voz 1240 radio, where he was co-anchor of a morning radio show and a newscaster on "Minuto 60."

He was news director and co-anchor at Ambiente 1030 radio station until 2017. Now, he owns Memphis Noticias, a local news source for the Latino community.

He also has been at risk for deportation for some time.

There should be a solution to fix the system and allow immigrants like Duran a path to experience and enjoy the American Dream and contribute to the nation's success.

Congress has failed numerous times over the years to do so. This year, shamefully, Congress abandoned an effort to provide a permanent solution to recipients of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, a program that President Trump ended. Without a solution, 800,000 people — including 9,300 Tennesseans — who are working or going to school will be at risk of being deported.

Regarding Duran, the Constitution does not distinguish between citizens and non-citizens when it comes to exercising First Amendment freedoms.

He was exercising the right of freedom of the press to hold government accountable, and he was wrongfully punished for it.

Journalists like Duran should not be arrested for doing their jobs. ICE should free him so he can continue fearlessly reporting on his community.

The Tennessean, Nashville, Tennessee

We used to care about one another

Once upon a time, we cared about the welfare of our fellow Americans. Farmers in the Midwest devastated by tornadoes, trailer parks washed away in a Florida hurricane, our country's ranking on various international comparisons — we all rooted for our fellow Americans. Like all countries, we would squabble, but we were family. We were all Americans.

Not anymore! Now, no one cares about anything but getting rich, the better to separate oneself from the lives and concerns of poorer Americans.

Businessmen, Wall Street bankers, ethnic activists, Democrats and Republicans (including the president, apparently) — all of them have a stronger fellow feeling toward Saudi princes and German bankers than toward Iowa farmers. Being "inclusive" to "Dreamers" necessarily means being exclusionary toward our own working class.

So what if wages have flatlined — or declined! — for several decades? The smart set aren't wage-slaves.

Everybody's looking out for No. 1.

It wasn't always this way. Politicians, liberal activists and journalists used to care about even non-fashionable Americans.

One doesn't have to go back to the Garfield administration to find a time when everyone wanted to protect the nation from dysfunctional immigration — the crime, the drugs, the poverty, the wage-depressing effect, the burden on our social services. Positions that are today considered hateful used to be called "common sense."

A 1995 news article in The New York Times calmly described preparations the Immigration and Naturalization Service was making in case a "vast flood of illegal immigrants" surged across the Mexican border, "inundating entire communities as it washes north into the American heartland." Under the Clinton administration, the illegals would face either "immediate voluntary deportation" or "emergency detention."

No indignant denunciations followed.

More hate speech from the Times:

"Fighting illegal immigration is a difficult and important job. But Congress should do it in a way that will deter illegal entry at the border." — New York Times editorial, Sept. 29, 1997

"(The I.N.S.) is extremely troubled, but has improved under the leadership of Doris Meissner. Since her appointment in 1993, ... (t)he border is tighter, and the I.N.S. is deporting record numbers of criminal aliens." — New York Times editorial, Aug. 10, 1997

Just a few years ago, Charles Lane, an editorial writer at The Washington Post, called for "prompt exclusion of unaccompanied Central American minors" during the border surge under Obama. "Only by showing people there is nothing to be gained by paying traffickers for the traumatic voyage through Mexico will the chaos cease."

The great civil rights icon Barbara Jordan produced a report on immigration more than two decades ago, calling on the government to end chain migration and put a dead stop to illegal immigration, for the benefit of all Americans.

"Credibility in immigration policy can be summed up in one sentence: Those who should get in, get in; those who should be kept out, are kept out; and those who should not be here will be required to leave."

She added: "Deportation is crucial."

Very recently, a presidential candidate who seemed to actually care about America's working class denounced illegal immigration as "a Koch brothers' idea. That was Bernie Sanders.

He explained: "Open borders? No, that's a Koch brothers' proposal. ... That's a right-wing proposal, which says essentially there is no United States. ... It would make everybody in America poorer — you're doing away with the concept of a nation-state. ... You have an obligation in my view to do everything we can to help poor people.

"What right-wing people in this country would love is an open-border policy. Bring in all kinds of people, work for $2 or $3 an hour — that would be great for them. I don't believe in that. I think we have to raise wages in this country; I think we have to do everything we can to create millions of jobs." — Bernie Sanders in interview with Ezra Klein of Vox on July 28, 2015

Forget hypocrisy — I don't care about that right now. It's the cruelty that interests me.

Have well-heeled Americans really decided to abandon their fellow citizens? These merchants of compassion have none to spare for our own people? I'm not a steelworker, a waitress or a black teenager looking for an entry-level job, either. But I still care about other Americans.

The West still stands for something exceptional

BY HUGH HEWITT

Last Monday "the lede" was a trade war with China. Then the Justice Department seized Trump attorney Michael Cohen's files, then Mark Zuckerberg came to town, then House Speaker Paul Ryan announced his retirement, then CIA Director Mike Pompeo had his (very successful) hearings to become secretary of state, then former FBI Director James Comey began his book PR blitz and the Justice Department's inspector general tore into former Comey deputy Andrew McCabe.

Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein told key staffers he expected to be fired, and the buzz was that if the deputy AG went, then Attorney General Jeff Sessions might be going, too.

And then the United States, Britain and France called out Russia in the U.N. Security Council — and smashed three of Bashar Assad's WMD sites to smithereens with a display of military prowess and precision that reminded the world that America and its allies are not to be ignored when "red lines" are in play.

Jammed together into six days, it all makes the first few chapters of Genesis look like slow pacing.

The danger is what my friend Bill Bennett used to warn about: the problem of scale. Americans are losing the ability to be other than breathless and, along the way, the ability to distinguish between orders of magnitude.

Thus all stories get thrown in a hopper and some editor, producer or host has to try and make a show rundown or a front-page layout. It is easiest just to concentrate on the president and ignore everything else, or to jam him into every story, or to abandon scale and simply make every story feel big. The casualty of that is the ability to detect genuine significance.

Not this weekend. One very big thing stands out: The West still stands for something exceptional.

The United Nations' Security Council meeting Friday was extraordinary. On many levels, not the least of which were humor (Ambassador Nikki Haley telling her Russian counterpart that she was in awe of his ability to say what he said with a straight face) and absurdity (Bolivia's ambassador lecturing the French on their revolution of 1789 and the Brits on the Magna Carta). Most striking, though, was the tone of outrage from the Western ambassadors — an outrage long missing from Western rhetoric and finally delivered first with words and then with missiles and bombs. The United States has its scandals and its loud, confusing, divisive and great-for-ratings president, but far more important than he, or his successors, the United States has its principles. Central among them is commitment to the rule of law and to the restraining of tyrants and barbarians.

We cannot always accomplish the restraining successfully, but we can and often have, in the past two-plus decades — in Kosovo, Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya and now Syria — tried to encourage genuine progress, best understood as the ongoing, incremental expansion of liberty and literacy in a growing number of stable regimes in or aligned with the West. We have sometimes failed, but it is important that we tried and keep trying.

We tried again this weekend, and the president's choice, developed with a national security team second to none in two decades, chose a path between the twin dangers of too little and too much. The president thanked our allies and our military when the strikes were, at least for a time, over. We should thank him and his national security team of Vice President Mike Pence, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Joseph Dunford, CIA Director and Secretary of State-designate Pompeo and new national security adviser John Bolton, Director of National Intelligence Daniel Coats and Chief of Staff John Kelly as well as their teams of professionals. However they got there and whatever process they used, they got to the right place, along with our allies.

The West will not allow use of weapons of mass destruction to go unpunished. That was the lesson a year ago, the same lesson of 2003 and 2001, a lesson that was not absorbed last year and thus was repeated with twice the ferocity. We mean it. Really. Anywhere and always, at least as long as the West stays true to its principles.

That's the big story. That's the lede. Don't bury it.

Poetry

Although the focus will be on cowboy poetry, visitors are invited to be part of the presentation by sharing their original poetry on any subject, or the work of a favorite poet from any era on any theme.

Among the known presenters will be Greenwood Mayor Phyllis Bowman, who will read the obituary of her great-grandfather, who rode for the Pony Express as a 16-year-old and later in life was murdered in a saloon in 1884. Bowman will tell stories about him and her great-grandmother as the owners of a stage coach station in Nevada.

Some members of the Hooks and Needles sewing club, recently established by the Greenwood library branch, are expected to read some of their favorite poems.

Guests are invited, but not required, to dress in cowboy-style attire. A cowboy trail mix snack and coffee will be available free of charge.

Bryan said she hopes this will become an annual event at the branch and that, next year, she hopes to have some part of the event outdoors will fire-cooked beans and stew on the menu. She's also hoping many Jackson County livestock-raising families will come out to enjoy the gathering.

Tax

Andreasen knows advertising would be allowed, but thinks there may be other options as well, possibly for more grants for tourist-drawing community events. She says she hopes to have it on the agenda for the board's first meeting this month.

It wouldn't be the first time the county has increased the tax.

Enacted in 1999 at two cents on the dollar, the county doubled it in 2004 and set aside the last two pennies in a lockbox that was initially set aside to someday help pay for the construction of a convention center.

The first two pennies were always earmarked to help support community events that had the potential to bring tourists here for overnight stays, to promote the county through various advertising op-

Golson Elementary students prepare to sing the preamble to the U.S. Constitution for first lady Barbara Bush in 1990.

Bush

As it happened, Pender was in the middle of teaching a unit via the "Writing to Read" program that Braxton wanted to highlight. And the program lab was right next to her classroom. When the Bush team had looked that over during a preview visit to the school late in the week, prior to the first lady's visit, they also peeked into Pender's room. There was a picture of President George H. W. Bush on her wall. That fact had sealed the decision on where first lady Bush would do her reading.

The day she arrived, Golson students, faculty, staff and local community dignitaries lined up along the walkways and the lawn of the school to cheer her onto campus. The first lady and principal Braxton sported remarkably similar hairdos, clothing and accessories that day, as revealed in some photos taken by local photographer John Brewer.

Janie Nolen, a second-grade teacher at Golson at the time, vividly recalls the day.

"She loved those children, you could tell. She was such a gracious lady," Nolen said. "I was jealous (of Pender and her lucky first-graders), and we were all in awe over it."

One person on campus that day remembered that the Secret Service team was apparently trying to escort her into the building a little faster than she wanted. She was pausing along the way to speak with some of the kids as she went in. When the Secret Service guys tried a little too hard to move things along, she gave them a look that seemed to transmit a message: Back off.

When she got to Pender's room, she sat down in a regular classroom chair and read "Imogene's Antlers" by David Small, a book about a little girl who woke up one morning to discover she'd grown antlers on her head.

Pender said Bush had the children in the palm of her hand. "She was very personable; the children loved her. She was like a grandmother to them," Pender said.

The students had written a book in their "Writing to Read" program — they presented Mrs. Bush with the original. They also sang to her the Preamble to the U.S. Constitution, "Schoolhouse Rock"-style. Karen Smith, a longtime and now-retired music teacher at Golson, tuned up her guitar and accompanied the youngsters.

Bush, in turned, signed a copy of the book she'd read and turned that over to the school. She also shared from her own volume for children, "Millie's Book."

"It was really neat; the kids got an experience that not many have the opportunity for," Pender said. "It was an exciting, heartwarming visit for all of us."

News of the first lady's death set off a morning of reminiscing among staff at the school, her sincerity recalled and her memory living on as inspiration for the educators who share and do their part to fulfill their shared vision of literacy for all.

The Bush funeral was to be broadcast live today, Saturday, April 21, at 11 a.m., CDT on C-SPAN.

Audit clears Facebook despite Cambridge Analytica leaks

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — An audit of Facebook's privacy practices for the Federal Trade Commission found no problems even though the company knew at the time that a data-mining firm improperly obtained private data from millions of users — raising questions about the usefulness of such audits.

Facebook agreed to outside audits every two years as part of a 2011 settlement with the FTC over its privacy practices. It is not clear from the report whether the company informed PricewaterhouseCoopers, which performed the audit, of the Cambridge Analytica data grab that would put Facebook in the cross-hairs of Congress.

The heavily redacted audit by PricewaterhouseCoopers is available on the FTC's website. It covers February 12, 2015 to February 11, 2017. PwC declined to comment, but Facebook said Friday that keeping data secure is a priority.

"We remain strongly committed to protecting people's information," said Rob Sherman, Facebook's deputy chief privacy officer, in a statement. "We appreciate the opportunity to answer questions the FTC may have."

The fact that PwC found no issues raised red flags for privacy advocates.

"The FTC failed to protect the public," said Jeffrey Chester, executive director of the nonprofit digital rights group Center for Digital Democracy. "Instead of conducting its own review to enforce one of its most important decisions—the consent decree—it looked the other way, which allowed Facebook to engage in serious misconduct."

Chester said the audit shows that the "FTC cannot be relied on to really protect consumers."

The 2011 consent decree bound Facebook to a 20-year privacy commitment. Any violations of that pact could cost the company a ton of money. In his congressional testimony last week, Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg appeared uninformed about key details of the agreement, saying he did not remember if it carried a financial penalty.

Any violations of the 2011 agreement could subject Facebook to fines of $41,484 per violation per user per day. To put that in context, Facebook could theoretically owe $8 billion for one single day violation affecting all of its American users, or about half of the profit that the company booked for all of last year.

The agreement requires that Facebook users give

"affirmative express consent" any time that data they haven't made public is shared with a third party. Cambridge Analytica accessed information from so many users (the firm puts the number at 30 million, although Facebook has said 87 million) because it was able to access the data of people's friends, and not just people who explicitly permitted access when they took a personality quiz. While Facebook did have controls in place that allowed people to restrict such access, they are found buried in the site's settings and are difficult to find.

Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto, a Democrat from Nevada, said during last week's hearing that in her view, "these requirements were not met," because user consent shouldn't have been buried in privacy settings. PwC disagreed.

In this March 29 file photo, the logo for Facebook appears on screens at the Nasdaq MarketSite in New York's Times Square. An audit of Facebook's privacy practices for the Federal Trade Commission found no problems even though Facebook knew at the time that a data-mining firm improperly obtained private data from millions of users.

"In our opinion, Facebook's privacy controls were operating with sufficient effectiveness to provide reasonable assurance to protect the privacy of covered information and that the controls have so operated throughout the Reporting Period, in all material respects for the two years ended February 11, 2017," the report states. Facebook is also under a separate investigation by the FTC because of the Cambridge Analytica scandal. The agency is looking at whether Facebook has engaged in "unfair acts" that cause "substantial injury" to consumers.

HUBBLE'S 28 YEARS

NASA, ESA, STSC VIA AP

NASA is marking the 28th anniversary of the Hubble Space Telescope's launch with a peek into a wild stellar nursery. Scientists released the picture Thursday in advance of next week's milestone. The photo shows the Lagoon Nebula, about 4,000 light-years away from the Earth, with the star Herschel 36 at center. The young star, 200,000 times brighter than our Sun, is blasting powerful ultraviolet radiation and hurricane-like stellar winds, carving out structures in the surrounding gas and dust.

Exhibit focuses on homes that adapt and change with us

The Associated Press

Most housing is designed for nuclear families, but most U.S. households don't meet that description.

That's why flexible floor plans — and innovations including moveable walls, smart technology, multifunctional furniture and space-saving features — are the future, according to a new exhibit, "Making Room: Housing for a Changing America," at the National Building Museum in Washington, D.C.

The museum's curator, Chrysanthe Broikos, says only about 20 percent of households today are nuclear families, so housing and zoning rules need to adapt to keep pace with demographic changes. In addition to interiors, the exhibit highlights a number of studies on housing, and information about what's going on around the country in new development and zoning.

"We're trying to say 'Hey, what are the other 80 percent of households doing?'" Broikos says.

The exhibit features an "Open House" designed by Italian architect Pierluigi Colombo, co-founder of the design firm Clei, to show how a flexible space can adapt to accommodate three different living arrangements. Initially set up to house four imaginary roommates (two singles and a couple), the space was then transformed to house an imaginary multigenerational family. At the end of May, the space will be reconfigured again to house an imaginary retired couple, and will include a rental apartment. The show, which opened Nov. 18, runs through Sept. 16.

Although the Open House is only 1,000 square feet, it feels much larger — and allows for flexibility — because all the beds fold up to become walls, sofas or tables, and it features acoustically sound motorized moving wall systems made by the Wisconsin-based Hufcor company, long known for making the bigger moving walls used in gyms and ballrooms.

"A floor plan should not just be a picture in time. It should be adaptable," says Lisa Blecker, marketing director at Resource Furniture, whose multifunctional furnishings are featured in the exhibit.

"The big takeaway is that if you're planning to renovate or reconfigure your home, it's essential to think about the long term and opportunities for flexibility in years to come," she says. "The makeup of a household is fluid and, more than ever, home layouts, wall configurations and furnishings need to keep up with those changes."

The beauty of the home set up in the exhibit is that it can accommodate multiple household configurations without moving bathrooms or the kitchen.

"And the kitchen has been carefully designed to work well for children, millennials, older people and someone in a wheelchair," Blecker says.

The kitchen in the exhibit features adjustable-height counters for wheelchair accessibility. Pull-down cabinet fittings, which allow high shelves to be pulled down to almost counter height, save people from having to stand on stools to reach upper shelves.

Bathrooms are compliant with the Americans with Disabilities Act, and sinks are mounted separately from the vanity so a wheelchair can be accommodated without redoing the plumbing.

"We will always need single-family homes and apartments that are designed to accommodate a nuclear family," says Sarah Watson, deputy director of the Citizens Housing & Planning Council, which helped organize the exhibit. "But today, the majority of our households are comprised of singles living alone, multi-generational families, and adults sharing their homes with roommates. Our population is also aging rapidly and will need new housing options that can support aging-in-place with diminished physical or cognitive abilities."

Dan Soliman, director of the AARP Foundation, a major funder of the exhibit, says that one-fifth of U.S. adults will be 65 or older by 2030, "and a recent AARP study found that almost 90 percent of people want to continue living in their own home for as long as possible." "We need more designs like this one to meet the needs of individuals and families through all stages of their life," he says.

Steps to landing the right house in a tough market for homebuyers

BY SARAH SKIDMORE SELL
AP Personal Finance Writer

It's tough out there for would-be homeowners.

They're facing rising mortgage rates, higher home prices and a shortage of available houses in many markets. Plus, recent changes to the tax law do them no favors.

So what can a potential homebuyer do?

Get perspective

Higher mortgage rates may feel like salt in the wound for those shopping in tight markets.

Rates have been rising since late last year. The average rate on a 30-year, fixed-rate mortgage hit a high of 4.45 percent last month. That's its highest since 2014, but still well below where it's been historically.

"The fours are not a terrible place to be," said Skylar Olsen, director of economic research at Zillow.

So what does this cost the homebuyer?

If the median home price in the US is $225,264, then over the life of a 30-year loan at 4.5 percent you'd pay $148,506 in interest. At 5 percent, it rises to $168,057 in interest. That's a difference of $19,551.

But for perspective, consider the $229,849 someone would pay over the life of the loan if the rate was 6.5 percent, where it was hovering the summer of 2007 before the recession hit. That's more than $81,000 over the first example.

These all assume a 20 percent down payment. What can you do to cope?

Your credit will largely determine the rate you get, so keep that clean. Lock in your rate when you are ready. Rates vary day to day and timing it well is more luck than skill, Olsen said.

Hunt hard

It's not a market for the faint of heart.

The median home price right now is up 7.6 percent from last year and up 15 percent compared to the year before that, according to Zillow. And compared to three years ago? Up nearly 22 percent.

These price hikes, more than higher rates, make the costs prohibitive for some buyers.

And inventory is tight because homes are selling so quickly.

"If you are struggling with the fact there aren't a lot of options, you have to be looking every day," she said. And move fast if you do find something you like.

Be prepared

It's even more important in a challenging real estate market to make sure you have the basics covered:

check your credit, know what you can afford and come to the hunt preapproved for a mortgage.

Homes in many markets are receiving multiple offers, so be ready to compete. Consider ways to sweeten your deal: a bigger down payment, more earnest money or a shorter closing time may give you an edge.

You also may also want to consider an escalation clause, which allows a buyer to say they will pay a certain amount over any higher offer up to a ceiling. And cash is still king. An all-cash offer means there are no appraisals or mortgages to the deal (or possibly derail) the deal.

If you can, consider asking for help. Olsen said that in pre-recession days, about 18 percent of buyers accepted a gift from family or friends. Now it's about a quarter.

Help along the way

If you're a novice, consider attending a first-time homebuyer class or meeting with a HUD housing counselor, who can provide free or low-cost advice. They can walk you through the process and help you assess what you can afford.

They can also alert potential homebuyers to assistance programs in their area, said Karen Hoskins of nonprofit NeighborWorks America. There are a variety of programs that help people with down payments, closing costs or other services.

Finally, a good real estate agent can help buyers craft a deal and assist with their knowledge of the market. For example, Olsen notes that on the West Coast it's more common to price a home low with the assumption offers will come in over asking, whereas on the East Coast it's more acceptable to make an offer below asking.

The tax man

What about taxes? It's true, tax laws are not as generous as they once were for homeowners, but the changes don't affect everyone equally.

Homeowners can deduct interest paid on the first $750,000 of a loan for a newly purchased first or second home. That is down from the prior limit of $1 million.

And homeowners have also lost the unlimited federal deduction for state and local income and sales tax. Taxpayers will now be allowed to deduct only up to $10,000 in combined property and state and local income taxes, so that hurts people in areas with heavy tax burdens.

Stay focused

Homeownership isn't for everyone but if you decide to stay in the hunt, keep saving as it's an appreciating market in many areas.

And try not to get lost in the mania. The usual rules still apply: don't buy more house than you can afford and think about the practicality of it as a place to live, not an investment.

"We have already seen the hard lessons people have learned when they assume everything is moving up and there will be no pitfalls or crashes," said Bruce McClary of the National Foundation for Credit Counseling.

"There is an investment value in homeownership but time is a big factor. It's slow and steady because there are peaks and valleys. It can be a roller coaster at times."

As housing inventory shrinks, people look to living in RVs

BY AREENA ARORA
Idaho Press-Tribune

NAMPA, Idaho — Dan Bell and his wife, Sherry Bell, traveled across the country in their RV for “many, many” years, he said. When his wife died, Bell decided that’s how he wanted to spend the rest of his life — in an RV, though not travelling this time.

Bell has built his “man cave” in his RV, where he lives with his Yorkshire terrier, Jolie. He watches television, cooks every day and has a small work station where he helps his fellow seniors navigate retirement paperwork or understand bank documents.

Bell isn’t alone. Over 100 seniors have made Leah’s Landing RV Park, a retirement community, their home, choosing to live on wheels rather than a traditional house.

“People call it a little city of refuge here,” said Kerri Snow, Leah’s Landing co-owner and manager.

The RV park offers yearly leases. Most parks in the area offer monthly payment options — a growing demand across the Treasure Valley among people who cite affordability and lack of housing options as their reasons for living on wheels.

At Leah’s Landing RV Park, rent is $385 a month if you sign up for a yearly lease, according to its website. While Ambassador’s RV Resort in Caldwell does not offer yearly leases, monthly rent is similar at $390 a month, according to its website.

Demand for housing in both Ada and Canyon counties is outpacing inventory and pushing up home prices, according to data from the Intermountain Multiple Listing Service, shared by Boise Regional Realtors.

Over the past year, median home prices rose almost $50,000 in Ada County and $30,000 in Canyon County. In the first quarter of 2018, single-family houses sold at a median price of $297,000 in Ada and $201,000 in Canyon, according to Intermountain MLS. That includes both new and existing inventory.

“Housing is so expensive. This is how you get around that,” Dave Martell, manager at Mason Creek RV Park in Nampa said.

The Idaho Press-Tribune spoke with representatives from at least three other RV parks in Canyon County, who said they have people on waiting lists to lease space long term.

Kana Smith, an office worker at Boise Riverside Park, said their waiting list for long-term space has close to 40 people on it. Snow’s park also has a waiting list, she said.

In this April 4 photo, RVs fill up spaces at Leah’s Landing in Nampa, Idaho. All the spaces in the park are currently rented out.

Ambassador RV Resort has a total of 188 spots, only about 50 of which are reserved for day-to-day or short-term travelers. The long-term spots are almost always full, co-owner and property manager Daniel Freedman said.

Ambassador’s RV’s most long-term resident has lived at the park for more than eight years, Freedman said, paying month to month. The park has been open for more than a decade.

Connie and Bill East-erbrook have spent 25 of their 35 years of marriage on wheels throughout Idaho and Oregon.

When it came time to find a permanent house, they still chose to live in an RV.

Another couple, Ray and Lillie Johnson, have a unique story.

The couple was engaged to be married in the late 1930s — the dates are a blur for Ray, he said. Shortly after, Ray was drafted to fight in World War II. He spent 18 months in Europe and during that time never wrote to Lillie.

“I was a boy fighting a war,” Ray said. “I didn’t care about letters.”

Lillie and Ray eventually married other people and lost touch. When Ray’s wife of more than 60 years died five years ago, he remembered “this girl” he was engaged to long ago, he said.

Ray didn’t know how to get in touch with Lillie. The only thing he remembered was a jewelry shop where her brother worked, and he made some calls.

This April 4 photo shows a tiny home sitting on lot at Leah’s Landing RV park in Nampa.

“Eighteen days later,” Ray said, “we were married.”

Since their marriage about five years ago, the two have chosen to live in an RV.

The demographics of those living in RV parks includes people “all across the board,” said Martell with Mason Creek RV.

When people apply to live at the Boise Riverside Park, they’re asked on the application why they’re moving to the park, Smith said.

“We see a variety of different situations,” she said.

Some are in a transitional phase, while others just enjoy the RV lifestyle, she added.

“Quite a number of people here have just made the choice to live in RVs,” Smith said.

A similar trend is true for residents at Leah’s Landing. People move to the park for multiple reasons, Snow said.

“Some who’ve just lost their homes, some have kids who don’t care about them,” Snow said. “Most of them are just looking for more affordable housing.”

Living in an RV park also gives its residents freedom to move around.

During harsh winter months, many regulars at Ambassador’s travel to southern Arizona and Utah, Freedman said.

The popularity of RV living isn’t new, according to Keri Smith-Sigman, Caldwell’s economic development specialist. Smith-Sigman said she’s been noticing this trend since the early 2000s.

Freedman, too, said he’s seen the trend for almost a decade now.

Downsizing and minimizing clutter as a way of life also contributes to people choosing to live in RVs, he said.

Seasonal RV-ing

Camping season from around the end of April to October is the busiest for daily or short-term guests, Freedman said. Seasonal RVing is still popular, even as long-term occupancy increases, he said.

“For the last couple years, we’ve had to put out a ‘no vacancy’ sign quite a bit during camping season,” he said, “which isn’t a bad thing for us.”

The National Association of RV Parks and Campgrounds encourages seasonal and camping-related uses of RVs over living longer term, according to Jeff Sims, senior director of state relations and programs advocacy.

“We don’t encourage living in RVs permanently,” Sims said.

Living long-term can create licensing issues for park owners, he added.

Nationally, a higher percentage of people still use RVs for seasonal camping, even as long-term living may see an increase, he said.

Fighting stereotypes with amenities

Providing amenities such as swimming pools and club houses is no longer just reserved for apartment complexes, Freedman said. Offering these amenities in RV parks is likely a response to the increased demand for long-term RV housing, he said.

“I think it’s a response to our customers,” he said.

The park offers a hot tub, swimming pool, showers, laundry and exercise rooms, recreation hall and Wi-Fi, along with other amenities. Leah’s Landing also offers similar services.

“There is a stigma from people on the outside looking in,” Freedman said. “But when you have a nicer environment to live in, some of that stigma goes away.”

At Snow’s park, elderly residents often celebrate birthdays and host family reunions in the park’s community hall.

“There is no stigma of rundown and trashy living here,” Snow said. “We’re a little community that just likes to all be together.”

House where Rosa Parks sought refuge set to be displayed

The Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The house where Rosa Parks sought refuge after she fled the South will be displayed in Rhode Island for at least a month after all because several groups have provided money.

The future of the rebuilt house from Detroit was uncertain after it was taken on a trans-Atlantic journey and Brown University reneged on plans to exhibit it.

A nonprofit arts organization, WaterFire Providence, said Thursday that it will put the house on display within two weeks.

WaterFire is receiving money from the Nash Family Foundation, one of the original exhibit sponsors, NAACP Providence, and others.

Brown still will pay for the dismantling and transportation after the exhibit ends, according to WaterFire. The exhibit will run through at least June 3.

Volunteers partially assembled the house, and it was displayed for a weekend in Providence.

Mendoza said he jumped for joy when he learned funding came through for a longer exhibit.

“I had really feared that it would be shipped back to Berlin,” he said. “I feared that the importance of this house would not be recognized.”

When Brown’s exhibit was canceled, the house was mostly reconstructed, but the roof wasn’t finished, Mendoza said. Mendoza, who has returned to Berlin, said he’d like to finish it at some point. He said the house can be seen as a snapshot of civil rights in America — “unfinished business.”

Parks’ niece, Rhea McCauley, said the house is now more of a community project, the way it should be.

“It’s much better,” she said. “It’s the way, I believe, Rosa would’ve wanted it.”

Jim Vincent, NAACP Providence branch president, said the exhibit can help teach people about civil disobedience, why it was needed at the time and its effect.

“It’s timely, especially now at this point in our history here in America, that we tell these stories of civil rights heroines like Rosa Parks,” he said.

WaterFire hopes to extend the exhibit at its arts center in Providence if additional funding becomes available.

Judge: Release more video outside school during shooting

CORAL SPRINGS — A Florida judge has authorized the release of more surveillance video showing events outside Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School during the Valentine's Day massacre that killed 17 people.

The Sun Sentinel reports that Broward Circuit Judge Jeffrey Levenson ruled in favor of a request Wednesday from news outlets including The Associated Press. The Broward School Board has two weeks to review the video and appeal the decision.

Levenson ordered some video released last month. It focused on the actions of former Deputy Scot Peterson, who was armed and assigned to the school but never went inside during the shooting.

Attorneys for the school district argued that the release of additional video would weaken school security. Prosecutors say the video shouldn't be released because it's part of an active criminal case.

Mom-daughter real estate duo threaten to kill Florida deputy DESTIN — A mother and daughter real estate team ended up in a heap of trouble following a night out drinking together at a Florida bar.

The Northwest Daily News reports that as an Okaloosa County Sheriff's deputy was taking 47-year-old Tracy Bari and her 24-year-old daughter Julia Bari to jail, they threatened to "murder" him and his family for arresting them. The incident occurred April 13 at the Red Door Saloon in Destin on the Gulf Coast.

Employees told investigators the women became impatient while waiting for drinks. They started yelling at employees and punched and kicked a worker who escorted them outside.

An arrest report says Tracy Bari kicked a deputy in the leg.

Investigators look for suspect who painted tortoise

MONTVERDE — Authorities in Florida are trying to determine who is responsible for spray-painting a tortoise and putting concrete on its legs.

The Orlando Sentinel reported Thursday that two people spotted the gopher tortoise in the middle of a road south of Montverde.

Along with being completely covered in red spray paint, the animal's limbs were covered in concrete. The people who found the tortoise took it to an animal rehabilitation facility.

A commission Facebook post says it's illegal and harmful to the health of a gopher tortoise to apply man-made substances to any part of its body or shell.

The gopher tortoise is listed as threatened in Florida. The tortoise and its burrow are protected under state law.

From wire reports

Authorities say motive in deputy killings may never be known

The Associated Press

TRENTON — Investigators in Florida say they may never know why a man — a recluse from a rural farm community who rarely ventured into town — killed two sheriff's deputies while they sat in a Chinese restaurant.

John Hubert Highnote, 58, of Bell casually walked into the restaurant, went up to the Gilchrest County deputies and fired at them. He then went into his car and killed himself.

"It's inexplicable," State Attorney Bill Cervone said. "People will want to know why, and we may never have an answer for them."

Highnote came from a small town just up the road from the Ace China restaurant in Trenton, about 35 miles (56 kilometers) west of Gainesville. He lived alone in a small, brick house shaded under a canopy of trees.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Police look up as a helicopter flies overhead outside of Ace China after a shooting in Trenton on Thursday. Someone fired through the window of a north Florida restaurant, killing two deputies who were getting food, officials said.

A neighbor who has lived across the street for five years said that Highnote never once introduced himself, and he was rarely seen in town. The only time she ever saw him was when he would drive his truck into the garage.

"I'd see him pull in, shut the garage and go in. No lights on or nothing," the neighbor, who spoke on condition of anonymity because of the nature of the crime. She characterized him as a recluse.

Gilchrest County Sheriff Bobby Schultz blamed the deaths of Sgt. Noel Ramirez, 30, and Deputy Taylor Lindsey, 25, on hatred toward law enforcement.

"What do you expect happens when you demonize law enforcement to the extent it's been demonized? Every type of hate, every type of put-down you can think of,"

Schultz said at a news conference. "The only thing these men were guilty of is wanting to protect you and me. They just wanted to get something to eat, and they just wanted to do their job," he said.

President Donald Trump called the slain deputies "HEROES" in a tweet sharing his condolences with their friends, families and colleagues.

Court records show Highnote had one traffic ticket from 2012, but no other criminal or civil court record. Property records show he bought his house in 2010.

Schultz said state law enforcement officials are investigating.

"Sgt. Ramirez and Deputy Lindsey were the best of the best," Schultz said. "They were men of integrity, men of loyalty. They were God-fearing, and they loved what they did, and we are very proud of them."

Schultz said he rushed to the scene, and then had the difficult task of calling the families of Ramirez, who is survived by his wife and two young children, and Lindsey, who joined the sheriff's office in 2013.

Woman suspected in Minnesota, Florida deaths caught in Texas

The Associated Press

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas — A tip-off in a Texas resort town led to the arrest of a woman who investigators believe killed her husband in Minnesota then fled to Florida, where she fatally shot her doppelganger with the intention of assuming her identity, police said Friday.

Two federal deputy marshals arrested Lois Riess, 56, about 8:30 p.m. Thursday at a restaurant's in South Padre Island, Texas, the U.S. Marshals Service said in a statement. South Padre Island is a beach resort community 27 miles from the crossing into Mexico.

Lois Riess, of Blooming Prairie, Minn., was arrested by federal deputy marshals Thursday in Texas. Investigators believe she killed her husband in Minnesota then fled to Florida where she used the same gun to slay her doppelganger with the intention of assuming her identity.

City spokeswoman Angelique Soto said Friday that a witness called authorities saying a woman matching Riess' description was at the restaurant. Her identity was confirmed by officers and the car she was using was towed and impounded "for forensic processing," Soto said.

Riess had checked into a local motel and was sitting at a nearby restaurant's bar with others, though authorities don't know if Riess had met the individuals in South Padre or elsewhere, South Padre Island Police Chief Randy Smith said Friday.

Riess was first approached by undercover officers and did not resist arrest when she was taken into custody, Smith said, adding that she did not have a weapon on her.

"I think she's kind of built up a resilience, where she thought she may not get caught. So she seemed to have let her guard down a bit," he said.

Riess had been on the run since at least late March when her husband, 54-year-old David Riess, was found fatally shot at their home in Blooming Prairie, Minnesota. She became the subject of a nationwide hunt.

She had been seen on March 23 at a convenience store and casino in northern Iowa. Authorities released video showing Riess approaching the store cashier, buying a sandwich and asking for directions south of the state. The store is next to a casino where authorities say Riess spent the day gambling before stopping at the gas station.

It was also on March 23 that David Riess' business partner called authorities to ask them to check on him. The partner said no one at work had seen David Riess in more than two weeks. Authorities found David Riess' body inside his home with multiple gunshots.

They were not able to determine how long he had been dead and could not find his wife. They learned Lois Riess may have been at the casino in Iowa, but she wasn't there when they went looking for her.

From there, investigators believed she went to Florida where she killed 59-year-old Pamela Hutchinson of Bradenton, Florida.

Authorities were called to Fort Myers Beach on April 9 and found Hutchinson dead, with gunshot wounds. Investigators believe Riess used the same gun to kill her husband and Hutchinson, and that she killed the woman to assume her identity.

Surveillance video showed Riess smiling and talking with Hutchinson on April 5 at a brewery in Fort Myers Beach. Authorities say she may have targeted Hutchinson because the two women looked alike.

Hutchinson had moved to Florida last year from Virginia Beach, Virginia.

Riess is being held in the South Padre Island jail. Soto, the city spokeswoman, said it is unclear to whom she will be extradited and on which charges.

"Right now it's still in the air. We are waiting to confirm whether she will go to Florida or Minnesota," Soto said.

The police chief said Friday that local authorities had not yet questioned Smith because they were waiting for other law enforcement agencies to arrive in South Padre.

Minnesota court records show that Riess was suspended as guardian for her disabled 61-year-old sister after a report that she had been transferring funds from a guardianship account to her own account, then withdrawing funds at a casino.

A 2015 affidavit said thousands of dollars had been spent at Diamond Jo Casino in northern Iowa, not far from Riess' Blooming Prairie home. Riess was never charged with a crime, but was ordered to pay her sister more than $100,000.

WASHINGTON — A medicine made from the marijuana plant moved one step closer to U.S. approval Thursday after federal health advisers endorsed it for the treatment of severe seizures in children with epilepsy.

If the Food and Drug Administration follows the group's recommendation, GW Pharmaceuticals' syrup would become the first drug derived from the cannabis plant to win federal approval in the U.S.

The 13-member FDA panel voted unanimously in favor of the experimental medication made from a chemical found in cannabis — one that does not get users high. The panelists backed the drug based on three studies showing that it significantly reduced seizures in children with two rare forms of childhood epilepsy.

"This is clearly a breakthrough drug for an awful disease," said panel member Dr. John Mendelson, of the Friends Research Institute in Baltimore, Maryland.

The drug carries a potential risk of liver damage, but panelists said doctors could monitor patients for any signs. More common side effects included diarrhea, vomiting, fatigue and sleep problems.

FDA regulators are due to make their decision by late June. Approval would technically limit the drug, called Epidiolex, to patients with hard-to-treat forms of epilepsy. But doctors would have the option to prescribe it for other uses and it could spur new pharmaceutical research and interest into other cannabis-based products.

More than two dozen states allow marijuana use for a variety of ailments, but the FDA has not approved it for any medical use. The FDA has approved synthetic versions of another cannabis ingredient for other medical purposes.

Several patients and parents at Thursday's meeting spoke about the benefits of Epidiolex. Sam Vogelstein, 16, said he experienced daily seizures — at times more than 100 per day — before enrolling in a study of the drug.

"I just went to South Africa for two weeks without my parents on a school trip," said Vogelstein, who lives in Berkeley, California. "I would not have been able to do that if I had not tried this medication."

It's not yet clear why the medicine reduces seizures.

Epidiolex is essentially a pharmaceutical-grade version of cannabidiol, or CBD oil, which some parents have used for years to treat children with epilepsy. CBD is one of more than 100 chemicals found in the cannabis plant and it doesn't contain THC, the ingredient that gives marijuana its mind-altering effect.

CBD oil is currently sold online and in specialty shops across the country, though its legal status remains murky. Most producers say their oil is made from hemp, a form of cannabis that contains little THC and can be legally farmed in a number of states for clothing, food and other uses.

It's unclear how FDA approval of a CBD drug would affect products already on the market. Executives for the British drug-maker GW Pharmaceuticals say their goal is to provide a more standardized, research-backed version.

"We're not looking to impact the availability of other products on the market," GW executive Steve Schultz said before the meeting. "Our goal is to provide an additional option for patients and physicians who desire a purified version of CBD for treatment of seizures."

The company declined to comment on the price of the drug before the approval decision. Wall Street analysts estimate it could cost more than $25,000 per year.

UN health agency: Dengue vaccine shouldn't be used widely

The Associated Press

LONDON — The World Health Organization says the first-ever vaccine for dengue needs to be dealt with in "a much safer way," meaning that the shot should mostly be given to people who have previously been infected with the disease.

In November, the vaccine's manufacturer, Sanofi Pasteur, said people who had never been sickened by dengue before were at risk of developing a more serious disease after getting the shot.

After a two-day meeting this week, WHO's independent vaccines group said it now had proof the vaccine should only be used "exclusively or almost exclusively in people who have already been infected with dengue."

The U.N. health agency said a test should be developed so doctors would be able to quickly tell if people had previously been sickened by dengue — but the group acknowledged doing that so isn't straightforward.

"We see significant obstacles in using the vaccine this way, but we are confident this also spurs the development of a rapid diagnostic test," said Dr. Joachim Hombach, executive secretary of WHO's expert group, during a news conference Thursday.

Sanofi said last year that doctors should consider whether people might have been previously infected with dengue before deciding whether they should risk getting immunized. The company said it expected to take a 100 million euro ($118 million) loss based on that news. People who catch dengue more than once can be at risk of a hemorrhagic version of the disease. The mosquito-spread virus is found in tropical and sub-tropical climates across Latin and South America, Asia, Africa and elsewhere. It causes a flu-like disease that can cause joint pain, nausea, vomiting and a rash. In severe cases, dengue can result in breathing problems, hemorrhaging and organ failure.

About half the world's population is at risk of dengue; WHO estimates that about 96 million people are sickened by the viral infection every year.

Following Sanofi's announcement last year, the Philippines halted its dengue immunization program, the world's first national vaccination program for dengue. The government also demanded a refund of more than 3 billion pesos ($59 million) from Sanofi and is considering further legal action.

In February, the Philippines said the vaccine was potentially linked to the deaths of three people: all of them died of dengue despite having received the vaccine.

The country imposed a symbolic fine of $2,000 on Sanofi and suspended the vaccine's approval, charging that the drugmaker broke rules on how the shot was registered and marketed.

More than 730,000 children aged 9 and above in the Philippines have received at least one dose of the dengue vaccine, usually delivered in three doses.

There is no specific treatment for dengue and there are no other licensed vaccines on the market.

Quick and easy strawberries

BY LEE REICH
The Associated Press

Given how quickly strawberries begin to bear fruit and how easily they are grown, it's a wonder that strawberry beds aren't as common in backyards as lawns are in front yards.

The most compelling reason to grow strawberries is, of course, flavor.

Variety selection and premature harvest make grocers' berries large and firm, but usually not much else. In your backyard, though, you can grow the most flavorful varieties, and wait to pick them until they're sweet and oozing strawberry-ness. At that point, perishability doesn't matter because the berries need not travel further than arm's length to your mouth or a basket.

Kinds of strawberries

Depending on how soon you want to start eating strawberries, choose between "everbearers" and "junebearers."

Everbearers offer the quickest crops, less than three months after planting, and bear all season long. Tristar is among the best of these types. Some of the older types bear in spring and fall only.

Junebearers come in greater variety and yield more, but wait to bear their first crop until the year after planting. Once started, they bear once per season, in spring or early summer. Planting two or more different junebearing varieties can extend the harvest.

Growing strawberries

Spring is a good time to plant strawberries, although they can also be planted in late summer or fall — if you can get plants then.

Your new plants may look forlorn, but don't worry. They soon grow new roots and leaves. In fact, you can shear their roots back to 3 or 4 inches long with a scissors so you can more easily fan them out in the planting hole. Adjust the planting depth carefully, leaving only the top half-inch of the crown exposed so that it neither dries out from exposure nor suffocates from burial.

Ever wonder how such a luscious fruit came to be called "strawberry"? The name might reflect the plants' habit of strewing about with runners, which are horizontal stems punctuated along their length by daughter plants. The daughter plants eventually root and make their own runners.

The name "strawberry" might also come from a centuries-old favorite mulch for strawberries: straw. No matter how the strawberry got its name, the plants love to be mulched. Mulch keeps the soil moist, suppresses weeds and keeps the fruit cleaner. Give strawberries a year-round, organic mulch.

Adopt a planting system

Spacing for strawberry plants depends on your method of growing them.

With the "hill system," you plant them close together — 9 inches apart in a double row, with 9 inches between rows — and avoid future crowding by pinching off all runners. More plants are needed to get started, but initial yields are highest. This system is especially suited to those junebearing varieties that naturally develop fewer runners, and to everbearers.

With the "matted row system," you set plants at wide spacing — 24 inches apart in single rows, with 4 feet between rows — and allow plants to make runners like crazy. Fewer plants are needed to get started, but the first crop is smaller than with the hill system.

Never allow the mat of mother and daughter plants to spread wider than 18 inches, and periodically thin out crowded plants.

No matter which system you adopt, pinch off all flowers that appear during the month after planting in order to coax plants to put their energy into growing strong roots. One advantage of everbearers is that they continue to flower after that month of pinching, which means you get to pick fruits later this season from this spring's planting.

Spring is busy time for bees and their keepers

BY DEAN FOSDICK
The Associated Press

Spring is the busiest time of year for bees and their beekeepers. Queens begin laying their eggs, scouts head out of the hive to find food to replenish diminished stocks, and the rest of the workers shoulder the load in raising more brood.

For beekeepers, late summer and autumn are the primary harvest periods for honey, while winter provides a pause for equipment cleaning and repair. Spring is all about honeybee regeneration, said Jeffrey Harris, a research professor with the Mississippi State University Extension Service.

"Bees are seasonal animals that depend upon flowers," Harris said. "You can't grow brood without pollen, and there's only a discreet amount of time available for blooming."

Beekeeping seasons vary in length according to climate, of course. That ranges from about 10 weeks in Alaska to 11 months or more along the Gulf of Mexico.

"The seasons are shorter in Alaska but you can make more honey per colony," Harris said. "Things bloom hard and daylight runs about 20 hours per day. Down here (Mississippi), it's greatly different. We have a little winter lasting about two weeks."

Overwintering honeybee colonies in hives is tricky but not unworkable. The key to high wintering success is ensuring that the bees are healthy at the beginning of the cold season and have enough nutrition to carry them over.

Beekeepers face colony mortality because of disease-carrying mites, moisture building up in the hives and extreme cold. Few plants will bloom outdoors in single-digit temperatures, and their absence triggers starvation.

"If bees are to starve, it's generally in February and March," Hollis said. "We don't start to see much flowering down here until March."

"Beekeepers need to provide artificial syrup and candy (pollen patties) to sustain and help them with the ups and downs of weather in the early spring."

The four types of bees most commonly seen in North America are wild bees, bumblebees, Mason bees and honeybees.

Honeybees are among the first of the bee species to become active each year, said Andony Melathopoulos, a bee specialist with Oregon State University Extension.

"Unlike all the other bees in the U.S., they winter as a colony so they can jump into action as soon as it gets warm" — approximately 55 degrees Fahrenheit, he said. "In the middle of the winter, all the rest of the bees are in some form of dormancy, either in the ground or in hollow stems."

Gardeners can make their properties more hospitable by choosing plants attractive to bees, massing them in broad strips or swaths, and selecting those that flower successively, starting in early spring, Melathopoulos said.

"People should be aware that many plants with gorgeous blooms don't always attract pollinators," he said. "A hybrid tea rose has really no benefit to pollinators. So look out for plants that pollinators visit when strolling around your neighborhood."

"The best policy is to plant a variety of bee-attractive flowers, ones with different shapes and colors, that bloom at different times of the year," Melathopoulos said.

Pirates beat Chipley

From staff reports

A visit by the Chipley Tigers to Sneads resulted in a fierce battle for the Pirates on Thursday night.

While Chipley scored most of their runs in two innings, the Pirate steadily racked up runs throughout the game to win, 10-9.

Chipley was up first and, while they got as far as third, they weren't able to bring in any runs. The three outs went to Trenton Barbee, who had a pair of strikeouts and Joseph Lollie, who caught a fly ball to left field.

Sneads was up to bat. Garrett Danford was walked to start things off and he was followed by Jalen Jenner, who hit a single and made it to first on a Chipley error.

While Jenner was at bat, Danford stole second and then he took advantage of the Chipley error to head to third.

Marianna shuts out Blountstown

From staff reports

Marianna beat Blountstown, 10-0, late in a road game Tuesday night.

After four scoreless innings, Marianna was able to make it 1-0, when Tristan Bozeman scored on a wild pitch in the fifth.

Bozeman hit a single to get going and stole second, before moving into scoring position on a ground out hit by Nevin Van Huss.

The Bulldogs kept things moving in the sixth, when they scored four more runs.

Riley Torbett got going with a walk. From there, he stole second and moved to third on an error. Hunter Mitchell hit a single to join him on the bases and Brolin VanHuss hit a double to bring them both in.

Marquis Kelley came in as courtesy runner for VanHuss and Tristan Bozeman was walked.

Riley Torbett hit the innings second double and brought in Kelley and Bozeman to make it 5-0.

Marianna started the seventh with doubles hit by Loren Waldron and Cameron Gray and a walk by Caleb Torbett.

Hunter Mitchell then got up and hit a grand slam to make it 9-0.

Pender Johnson was walked to first and he came home on a single hit by Riley Torbett to make it 10-0.

The Tigers weren't able to recover in the bottom of the seventh and Marianna took the win.

The Bulldogs are 16-8 overall and 5-1 in district play.

Their next game will be another matchup against Blountstown, at 6 p.m. Tuesday, April 24, in Marianna.

Bulldogs

Aisley Patterson-Rhodes was out number two and a grounder by Brock was handled by Georgia Scott and Faria for number three.

The third inning brought a sense of déjà vu for Sneads.

Hannah Stephens hit a grounder, but Deana Holland and Anni Beebe handled it for out number one. Perkins flied out to Bess and Edenfield was struck out by Temples.

Marianna was back at bat for what would prove to be a productive inning for the Lady Bulldogs.

Holland and Temples were both walked and they were able to combine stolen bases, a single by Bess, and an error on a hit by Harris, to score two runs. Bess used a stolen base and a defensive error to score as well. It was now 4-1.

The game headed into the fourth.

Sneads was up, but Baxter was picked off stealing second and McIntosh was struck out. Faria and Clark were hit by pitches and Garrett was walked to load the bases for Sneads, but Georgia Scott was struck out to end the at bat.

Marianna looked like it was trying to keep its scoring streak alive, but Sneads sat them down in three. Holland and Temples grounded out to Baxter, Perkins and Faria for the first two outs and Bess was truck out by Baxter for number three.

Stephens was up first for Sneads in the fifth. She was walked and headed to second on a sacrifice bunt by Perkins. A ground out hit by Edenfield got her to third, but she was left stranded when Baxter grounded out to Bess.

Goodson was first at bat for Marianna and she got a single, but Harris was struck out by Baxter with Jeter and Beebe flying out to end the inning.

The game headed into the sixth, but it wasn't productive for either team. Ground outs, strikeouts and a fielder's choice kept both at bats short and the score still 4-1, Marianna.

With the game heading into the seventh, it was Sneads' last chance to pull out a win.

Scott and Stephens were the first two up and the first two out, but Perkins hit a single and Edenfield hit her second home run of the night to make it 4-3, Marianna. Baxter was the next at bat for Sneads, but she hit a line drive to Bess to end the game.

The Lady pirates are now 9-1 in district and 17-7 for the season. Their first district tournament game will be in Holmes County, Tuesday at 4 p.m.

Marianna is 6-0 in district and 22-3 overall.

Marianna will play Gadsden in Rickards, Tuesday at 4 p.m.

Hornets

Cottondale was back up. Burkette was walked and Grissett was hit by a pitch, but Burkett was picked off while stealing.

Grissett was able to steal and go to third on a ground out hit by Foran before coming home on a single hit by Nix.

Braxton was walked and Davis hit a single to load the bases. Ball hit another single and brought in Nix and Braxton to make it 5-2.

Liberty scored a run in the third, but a pop fly, ground ball and strikeout retired their side before they could make any more progress. Cottondale was able to get as far as third base, but a pair of fly balls and a ground out wrapped the inning before anyone could score.

In the top of the fourth, Cottondale was able to shut down Liberty with a ground out and a four-man double play with Ball, Burkett, Nix and Mason Jones.

Cottondale scored three more runs in bottom of the fourth to make it 8-3. Ball scored on a sacrifice fly hit by Jones with Burkett and Grissett coming home on a ground ball hit by Foran.

In the fifth, Cottondale shut down Liberty in four, before scoring four more runs.

A triple by Livingston brought in Nix, Davis and Ball to make it 11-3. Livingston came home on a passed ball to make it 12-3.

The sixth was three up and three down for Liberty and Cottondale wasn't able to get past first.

Jude Hase was on the mound for Cottondale for the seventh. He had two quick strikeouts, but he tagged number three with ball and the runner was able to get home to make it 12-4.

Cottondale got the next out for the win.

Dylan Driggers hit a fly ball to left field and Danford headed home to make it 1-0. Josh Baxley came up to bat next. While he was swinging, Jenner did some stealing and, when Baxley hit a line drive, Jenner headed home to make it 2-0.

In the second, Chipley got going in the big way.

A series of walks, a pair of singles and a fielder's choice combined to let the Tigers score five runs before Sneads could shut them down.

In the bottom of the second, Sneads didn't have much luck. Lollie flied out, Russell Allen grounded out and Driggers struck out.

If Chipley had any momentum left from the second, Sneads arrested it in the third with a double play and a Tiger getting caught stealing.

Sneads began to battle back in the bottom of the third.

Baxley got to first on a single and a Chipley error and Jay Hayes followed him with a walk.

While Michael Weeks was hitting, Baxley stole third and, when Weeks connected for a single, Baxley came home to make it 5-3 Chipley.

A defensive error got Hayes and Weeks moving and a wild pitch brought Hayes to make it 5-4 Chipley.

With Sneads breathing down their necks, Chipley started swinging.

Danford got a Chipley grounder for out number one and Colton Mercer caught a fly ball for out number two.

The Tigers had a two-out rally. A pair of walks, a double and an error scored three runs for the Tigers, before Danford caught a fly ball for out number three.

Chipley was up 8-4, but they Pirates kept coming.

Kenner hit a single and made it to first on an error. He then stole second and went to third when Driggers hit a single.

Kenner hit home and Driggers was kept moving by Baxley hitting another single. Jay Hayes hit a fly ball and Driggers headed to third and Mercer hit a ground out that brought him home.

It was 8-6, Chipley.

The fifth inning was short and too the point for Chipley. Hayes was now on the mound for the Pirates and he struck out two batters. Out number three went to Baxley at second base.

Sneads kept adding points though. Russell Allen was hit by a pitch to get Sneads moving and a defensive error by Chipley got Danford to first to keep things going. Kenner grounded out, but he kept Allen and Danford going around the bases. Driggers hit a single and Allen and Danford came home to tie things up, 8-8.

Chipley was swinging in the sixth, but Kenner caught two fly balls and Lollie got one to wrap up the top of the sixth.

Hayes was first up for Sneads. He got hit by a pitch, stole second, went to third on a wild pitch and then headed home to make it 9-8, Sneads.

Lollie hit a single and headed to second on another defensive error by Chipley, before Allen hit a single to send him to third. He came home when the Chipley catcher lost control of the ball to make it 10-8, Sneads.

After a back-and-fourth game, it looked like things might seesaw back in Chipley's favor in the fifth, after a walk, wild pitch and a double brought in a run to make it 9-10. However, with the tying run on the bases and one out, Sneads closed them down.

Danford handled a ground out for out number two and Kenner caught a fly ball to center field to end the game.

The Pirates are 9-1 in district play and 20-3 for the season.

Their next game will be in Godby on Tuesday. Game time will be 5:30 p.m.

Their last game of the season will be Thursday, April 26, at 5:30 p.m. It will be Pirates vs. Night and they will be playing Port St. Joe.

Jimmie Johnson (center) poses with his wife Chandra and daughter Genevieve (right) in Victory Lane after his win in a NASCAR Sprint Cup Series auto race at Texas Motor Speedway in Fort Worth, Texas, on Nov. 4, 2012.

Jimmie Johnson maps out bucket list for potential sponsors as he plans his future

The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Jimmie Johnson's alarm clock beeps at 4:30 a.m. His wife and two daughters are still sleeping. So are his fellow NASCAR drivers.

Johnson quietly slips out for a workout, the first of two on a typical day. Two hours later, he's in his kitchen, whipping up breakfast that will be ready when his girls get up for school.

"No chance my competition is getting up this early to put the work in," Johnson said in a text message to The Associated Press that showed the alarm set on his phone. "I will have 35 (cycling) miles in and my kids fed before the first one wakes up."

Johnson likes it that way, too.

Despite a bland reputation he acquired from a workmanlike approach to winning five straight NASCAR titles — and perhaps his affinity for vanilla ice cream — Johnson's commitment to excellence in everything he does makes him not just one of the greatest drivers ever but also one of the most well-rounded and interesting athletes in the world.

Now, the man who paid Snoop Dogg to play at the Las Vegas victory party for his record-tying seventh title has a chance to show the world what is important to him — beyond, of course, winning. Lowe's is leaving the sport after 18 years as the only Cup Series sponsor Johnson has ever had, and his rights are for sale for the first time.

Eighty-three victories in that Lowe's-branded No. 48 Chevrolet.

All those titles.

A unique sportsman for Hendrick Motorsports to sell.

And Johnson believes he is more than just a driver looking for a new paint scheme that can be auctioned off to the highest bidder.

Three weeks after the AP asked for a deeper look into Johnson's sponsorship search, the working father, exercise fiend and leader of Hendrick Motorsports found a spot on his busy schedule. He settled on meeting at SOCO Gallery, his wife's high-end contemporary art space and bookshop located in the trendy Myers Park section of Charlotte.

Arriving just after dropping his youngest daughter off at school, he pulled books off the shelves and pointed to photos he likes, then turned his attention to the art on display. Chandra Johnson booked it well before the artist's popularity soared, and the exhibit was sold out before a single piece was hung at SOCO.

Jimmie Johnson is well-versed in both the artist, a painter named Shara Hughes, and who bought the pieces.

"Only two went to Charlotte collections," he lamented.

Behind the gallery, there is a cross-fit studio with an outdoor exercise space that includes about a half-dozen massive tires hanging from a rope.

"Chani's aesthetic nightmare," Johnson said with a laugh. "She's worked so hard to create this amazing unique space to Charlotte. And now she has to look at that in the backyard."

That Johnson notices such things is part of his evolution from blue-collar kid racing dirt bikes on family outings in his native California to future Hall of Famer. Chandra's influence over their nearly two decades together is also obvious. A former model who was raised in Oklahoma, she was living in New York when they met and they've been together just about his entire time in the top racing circuit in the nation.

At 42, Johnson is still a top driver and adamant that retirement is nowhere on his radar. Yet the statistics and history of NASCAR are clear: The twilight of his career has arrived.

Johnson bought a coffee from the independent nook at the front of the gallery and settled at a small bistro table he'd arranged to be marked as "Reserved."

He pondered the question: What are you selling?

"I think for this seller's market, clearly someone has a golden opportunity to close out with me," Johnson said.

But who?

And, when?

Johnson doesn't have answers as much as a grand plan that could include everything from driving Le Mans and the Rolex 24 at Daytona to triathlons and competitive mountain biking — anything that allows the son of two working parents to chase his desire to win and avoid retirement.

"I know I can't turn off the competition," he said. "I don't think I've ever been more motivated; I don't think I've ever wanted anything more. I want to race and I want to win and I want to do that for a very long time. Me being selfish about what I want to do, the next sponsor transitions with me."

Johnson has matured from the rookie who once led a stair-diving competition at Tony Stewart's birthday party into the most accomplished driver of his generation, matching Hall of Famers Richard Petty and Dale Earnhardt with seven titles. But he runs triathlons, takes team members mountain biking in the woods and will do anything to get a workout in — especially if it's outside.

He is also mired in the longest losing streak of his Cup career: 31 races stretching back almost a year. He turns 43 in September and has two years remaining on his Hendrick contract; there might be another short NASCAR contract after that.

"I've got a handful of years in Cup," he said, leaving himself wiggle room regarding just how many. "If we can find the right sponsor to transition from full-time NASCAR ...

"I mean, I can't stop racing. I'm always going to be racing something," he said. "I'm going to step down from the NASCAR merry-go-round at some point, but I've got a bucket list."

Johnson got to thinking after a chance encounter in January with two-time Formula One champion Fernando Alonso, who is on a quest to race in the top events around the world. Alonso entered the Indianapolis 500 last year, led laps, but failed to finish after his engine blew.

Would Johnson consider running Indy, the race he most admired as a child? He noted Formula One, which recently added plastic halos over the open cockpits in an effort to protect drivers from potentially deadly debris, as an incentive should Indy adopt them.

"I like those halos in Formula One," he said. "Those could get me a little closer to that race."

Johnson has in fact been barred from racing in the Indy 500 by his wife, who thinks the open-wheel racing is too dangerous.

His eldest daughter, 7-year-old Evie, has shown an interest in racing, and Johnson talked to fellow driver Kyle Larson about what she should try. (Johnson wants her in something with a roll cage.) Four-year-old Lydia, with her pink and purple flower-pocked helmet for motorbikes, is a still a wild card.

"Daddy, can you let Danica win today?" she asked him in front of Patrick while on the starting grid of the Daytona 500, which he has won twice.

"I laughed and said to her, 'Daddy wants to win this race, too,'" Johnson said.

The Johnsons' circle of friends includes world-class athletes, artists and celebrities. They ski in Aspen; he even got Dale Earnhardt Jr. to try it. They spend weekends in New York City or Nantucket, where Johnson found himself at Roger Penske's summer home watching the billionaire throw his grandchildren in a pool.

He and Chani have a dream list of European vacations. They appreciate fashion and photography and craft cocktails. They went to Burning Man last year with a group of friends, but you don't see it: They're not the Kardashians.

They also feel a pull toward their community. The Jimmie Johnson Foundation has raised almost $11 million that has been donated to K-12 schools in Charlotte and their respective hometowns in California and Oklahoma.

His impact stretches across the NASCAR garage as scores of drivers and team members go with him on cycling trips, and he has even hired a trainer for some in the industry who needed to lose weight.

As adamant as he is about health and fitness and helping others, Johnson remains firmly committed to himself and pursuit of a record eighth championship.

But he knows what he is up against.

There has been a total rebuild at Hendrick Motorsports after the retirements of Jeff Gordon and Earnhardt, and the firing of Kasey Kahne. Johnson is surrounded by three newcomers and the organization is restructuring operations.

It is a rebuilding period for a storied franchise and it comes at the same time that Chevrolet is rolling out a new Camaro. The car seems to be struggling, but Johnson has backed the work by Chevy and says each of his young teammates — 22-year-old Chase Elliott, 24-year-old Alex Bowman and 20-year-old rookie William Byron — bring valuable feedback to the organization.

All of this has given Johnson a chance to take on a bigger role. Always considered to be the protege of four-time champion Gordon, the team finally belongs solely to Johnson.

"I am enjoying the leadership role I have inside the team," he said. "That's one thing I worked really hard on over the offseason."

Of course, it's easy to lead when he is winning. It's a different story when crew chief Chad Knaus is breathing down his neck and the last checkered flag has been in the rearview mirror for almost a year.

Johnson sought help from former NFL player Leonard Wheeler, who is now a performance coach.

"I'm one that clams up and gets quiet when things get tough, and Chad can make things tough," Johnson said. "I found that the team doesn't need me to be quiet and the team suffers from it, so I've made some huge strides in growth in that department."

A swimmer, diver and water polo player in high school, Johnson realized he did best in a locker-room environment, which doesn't exist in racing. He's learned to recognize what triggers Knaus and come to understand how to confront each issue.

At the end of last season, he said, he was so shut down that he and Knaus were not discussing problems. Crew members began whispering about friction and "it was just toxic," Johnson said.

"I know I am going to flourish and do a better job and be who I need to be in that type of (locker-room) environment, so I am going to create it," Johnson said.

When Johnson first got into NASCAR, he simply showed up at the track and did what Knaus told him. Now he spends hours reading notes, asking Bowman about the simulator, reviewing previous races on YouTube, working on hand-eye coordination drills and jumping in a kart to stay sharp.

After avoiding the gym early in his career, he rises early, gets in two full workouts doesn't stop until he falls into bed 16 hours later. On this day, roughly 12 hours after he first sat down with the AP, he sent that text photo showing the alarm set on his phone for 4:30 a.m. the next day.

A week later, he headed to Bristol Motor Speedway in the hills of Tennessee, riding his bike 100 miles through the mountains to get there.

The next day he slept in.

Until 7 a.m.

"My battery was dead," he texted.

NBA

The Indiana Pacers' Bojan Bogdanovic shoots over the Cleveland Cavaliers' Kyle Korver during the first half of Game 3 of a first-round NBA basketball playoff series in Indianapolis on Friday.

Pacers erase 17-point deficit to take 2-1 lead over Cavaliers

The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Bojan Bogdanovic scored 30 points, leading the Indiana Pacers back from a 17-point halftime deficit for a 92-90 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers on Friday night for a 2-1 lead in their first-round series.

Cleveland was 39-0 during the regular season when leading after three quarters and kept that perfect mark intact with a Game 2 win.

The incredible second-half charge came exactly one year after Indiana blew a 26-point halftime lead in a historic playoff collapse against the Cavs.

This time, the Pacers delivered a devastating blow to the three-time defending Eastern Conference champs — on a night LeBron James joined Michael Jordan as the only players in playoff history to record 100 double-doubles. James finished with 28 points and 12 rebounds, but it wasn't enough to prevent Cleveland from losing its first game this season after leading following the third quarter.

The biggest reason for the collapse: Bogdanovic.

After charging back with striking distance, he completed a four-point play to finally give the Pacers an 81-77 lead with 6:10 left. Bogdanovic followed that with another to make it as seven-point game.

Then James answered with the next seven to tie it. Bogdanovic came right back with a layup and another 3 before Thaddeus Young scored to give the Pacers a 91-84 cushion with 53 seconds left.

James knocked down a 3 to cut the deficit to four, and the Cavs got another 3 from Kevin Love with 7 seconds left to make it 91-90.

Darren Collison made 1 of 2 free throws with 5 seconds left, giving Cleveland one more chance. But J.R. Smith's long desperation heave came up short.

TIP-INS

Cavaliers: Have lost five of seven this season to the Pacers and are 0-3 in Indianapolis. ... Cleveland is now 37-7 in the playoffs against the Eastern Conference since 2015. ... Love finished with 19 points and six rebounds despite playing with an injured left thumb. ... James has 12 straight double-doubles against the Pacers. He also played in his 221st career playoff game to move past Kobe Bryant for No. 6 on the career list.

Pacers: Have won only two of their last seven playoff games against the Cavs. ... Indiana was 11-2 in games decided by three or fewer points this season — the best winning percentage by a team since the 1979-80 Philadelphia 76ers. ... The Pacers have rallied from deficits of 15 or more points nine times this season. ... Victor Oladipo had 18 points, six rebounds and seven assists. ... Thaddeus Young scored 12 points.

NBA mourns death of Popovich's wife

The Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — LeBron James fought back tears. Former President Bill Clinton offered condolences. Craig Sager's daughter tweeted that she was "just sick" over the news.

Such is the regard that so many, from so many walks of life, have for San Antonio Spurs coach Gregg Popovich, whose 67-year-old wife, Erin, died Wednesday after a long battle with a respiratory problem.

Spurs star Manu Ginobili says the team is "devastated, we are all hurting." But the players will "go out there and compete" and respect Popovich's philosophy of playing with "fire" and "determination."

Added San Antonio's Tony Parker: "It puts everything in perspective. It's way bigger than basketball." The Spurs trail the Golden State Warriors 3-0 in the first round after losing in San Antonio 110-97 on Thursday night. The 69-year-old coach ran practice Wednesday but was not on the sideline for the game. Assistant Ettore Messina coached the team.

Clinton reached out on Twitter to the coach and his daughters: "I join the NBA family and countless fans across the country who are thinking of you, Jill, and Micky tonight as you mourn the loss of your Erin."

The Spurs asked the media to respect the family's privacy. General manager RC Buford said at Thursday's shootaround he spoke to Popovich, who is "overwhelmed by the support" but "wants our focus to be about the game."

NASCAR THIS WEEK

Keep up to speed with NASCAR's Monster Energy Cup, Xfinity and Camping World Truck series

Weather puts chill on spring race lineup

Richmond Raceway, the ¾-mile track on the old fairgrounds, will be the site of what might be the most important race in a long, long time for NASCAR.

Coming off of what was likely the worst-attended race in the modern history of the sport, Richmond becomes a test of wills for Virginia race fans who have already been through eight inches of snow in Martinsville and then sleet, freezing rain and a flooded campground last week in Bristol (technically on Tennessee side of town) and now will be asked to come out yet again for what is the third NASCAR event in four weeks for basically the same race fans.

This has become a problem, in part because NASCAR has farmed out most of the summer races to other climes, thus needing the Southern fans to endure chilly racing as winter grudgingly gives way to spring.

There's a history of snow in the early scheduled races. Atlanta and Rockingham used to run spring races in Lambeau Field weather. And for a while, the fans came anyway.

But not now. Not last week. The stands in Bristol weren't just empty. They were vacant. If NASCAR wanted to release the actual attendance, it could've counted by hand. Shoot, they could've just announced the fans by name.

For years and years, NASCAR boasted what it called "Bill France weather," and it was truly a remarkable run of luck. Big Bill would often deliver the prayer before each race, thanking the good Lord for great weather then finishing the prayer by saying "Sincerely, Bill France."

Grandson Brian has no such pull with the man upstairs or the weather. Saturday evening should have decent weather, a good chance for fans to dress in their sponsor-wear and maybe even leave their gloves at home.

NASCAR is praying they show up at all.

2018 SEASON CATCH-UP

8 RACES IN, HERE'S WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW

Bowman

Wallace

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

By Chris Wilbers
 Richmond Times-Dispatch

The trends you need to know as the Monster Energy Cup Series visits Richmond Raceway this weekend:

Respect your elders: The rivalry fans were hoping to see develop between NASCAR's old guard and the young guns hasn't materialized. Aside from Austin Dillon, 27, and his one lap led in the Daytona 500 — albeit the final one — the veterans have put a paddlin' on the youngsters.

At 42, Kevin Harvick has three times as many wins this season as all drivers age 31 and under. The biggest surprise has been Chase Elliott, who was expected to be the face of the youth movement. Instead, he's nearly half Harvick's age (22) and doesn't have half of Harvick's series points (290-136).

Will Kyle make it three in a row? Kyle Busch — whose comments at the grizzled age of 32 started the "experience vs. youth" rivalry — has left everyone in his dust the past two months. His finishes in the past six races: second at Las Vegas and Phoenix; third at Fontana; second at Martinsville; and wins at Texas and Bristol. Now he goes to Richmond, where he leads all active drivers with four victories, and all in the spring. Expect another strong showing — and likely some unhappy youngsters and their fans — when this weekend is over.

'Bubba' steals the show: Though Dillon and the No. 3 won NASCAR's biggest race, Darrell Wallace Jr. has turned the most heads in his rookie season. Despite driving for an underfunded Richard Petty Motorsports team, Wallace wheeled the famed No. 43 to a second-place finish at Daytona, the best finish by an African-American driver since Danville native Wendell Scott's 1963 win at Speedway Park in Jacksonville, Fla. On Monday at Bristol, Bubba bulldozed his way to the front, leading six laps before fading to 16th.

More impressive than the results, though, is the way "Bubba" has handled the spotlight. His emotional reaction in the Daytona media center won over new fans, as did his Twitter video Monday at Bristol sharing the disappointment of his late fade. In a sport that demanded an infusion of personality and candor with the retirement of Dale Earnhardt Jr., Wallace could fill those shoes nicely.

Botwie bummer: With respect to Don McLean, Chevy's levee has been bone dry since Daytona. (Not sure who Don McLean is? Ask your grandparents. ... or someone who has won a Cup race this year.)

The manufacturer has no drivers in the top five in points, and the behemoth known as Hendrick Motorsports has one in a playoff position: I'll give you four guesses that it's Alex Bowman. The switch from the SS body style to the Camaro has brought some expected growing pains, but Jimmie Johnson and Bowman finished in the top five Monday at Bristol, perhaps a sign their fortunes are changing.

Wrench in the works: The other big rivalry that's been building is every driver against the Paoli pit guns that NASCAR has been distributing to teams as a cost-cutting measure.

As far as we know, the tools aren't part of some government conspiracy to win Johnson an eighth Cup championship. But Denny Hamlin became the latest to join the fray Monday, when he suffered a loose wheel at Bristol and went two laps down.

After the race, Hamlin told NBC Sports: "It's going to cost somebody a race or the championship by the end of the year," and he generously offered to have Joe Gibbs Racing build pit guns for every team, a proposition Gibbs didn't seem nearly as eager to implement. Kevin Harvick, Martin Truex Jr. and Daniel Suarez also have aired their grievances, though it appears Festus is far from finished.

Pirates slide by Blue Devils

From staff reports

The Sneads Pirates beat the Holmes County Blue Devils in a tight 5-3 home game Tuesday night.

After a scoreless first, the second resulted in a 1-1 tie, with Colton Mercer scoring the run for Sneads.

The third and the fourth brought no runs for anyone, but in the fifth, the Blue Devils scored a run to take the lead. However, it was not to be.

In the bottom of the fifth, Sneads went a pillaging and scored four runs to take a 5-2 lead.

Justin Tye scored the first run for Sneads and a double by Dillon Driggers brought in Garrett Danford, Josh Baxley and Jalen Kenner.

The sixth brought another scoreless inning, but Holmes County tried to get something going in the seventh. They were able to get one run in to make it 5-3 and had the tying runner on second with two out, but Danford was able to get a strikeout to cut the rally short.

Sneads is now 9-1 in district and 19-3 for the season.

Red Snapper get extended season

From staff reports

Red Snapper will have a 40-day recreational season instead of the original 24-day season originally considered.

The proposed 2018 season will run from June 11 to July 21. Those dates have not yet been approved though. When they are, they will apply in both federal and state waters. It will include people who are fishing from private boats, but charter fisherman will be limited to state waters.

"With other Gulf states setting longer seasons than what Florida had initially proposed, it was important for us to find a fair resolution that would provide equal access to red snapper in Florida, said Fish and Wildlife Commission Chairman Bo Rivard.

"FWC worked collaboratively with NOAA Fisheries to come up with a season that would provide access to all of those that choose Florida as their fishing destination."

Evan Rachel Wood and James Marsden in "Westworld"

Strange new frontiers: Sentient hosts stake their claim over 'Westworld'

By K.A. Taylor
TV Media

The concept of androids has permeated social consciousness since the 1800s, but it wasn't until 1984's sci-fi hit "The Terminator" graced the screen that people genuinely feared the prospect of "the singularity," and a world where humans would become ruled by machines.

While most films and novels have suggested that the robot rebellion will be brought in with a bang, "Westworld" proved that a whimper was equally, if not more, effective. This soft realization leads to some formidable action, however, with the hosts ready to venture out and discover the many layers of the park when season 2 begins Sunday, April 22, on HBO.

The premise of "Westworld" is somewhat familiar, due to the popularity of the android sentience trope in science fiction. The series origins stem from the 1973 Michael Crichton film of the same name, upon which it is loosely based.

Season 1 introduced viewers to Westworld, a theme park in the not-too-distant future that allows society's wealthiest to indulge in the ultimate immersive experience. Though other locations are alluded to, the bulk of the show's first season takes place in Sweetwater, a frontier town complete with saloons, gunslingers and an eerily recognizable piano score. Given the choice of black or white hat, humans can either experience a kinder, gentler version of the Wild West, or delve deeper into a gritty world of vengeance and violence, allowing themselves to express all manner of taboo, morally questionable acts.

Thandie Newton as seen in "Westworld"

This experience is only a success due to the plethora of android hosts that populate the parks. The freshman season introduced us to the saloon's madam, Maeve Millay (Thandie Newton, "ER"), whose recurring dreams about a daughter from a past storyline (pre-madam) gradually led to her becoming self-aware. Teddy Flood (James Marsden, "X-Men," 2000) isn't quite that cognizant, with the heroic gunslinger propelled more by love than self-realization to assist another host on her quest. That host is the enigmatic Dolores Abernathy (Evan Rachel Wood, "True Blood"). No host still operating has endured the life Dolores has, seen what she's seen, or would be a more likely candidate for becoming fully sentient.

In fact, the rebellion so impeccably orchestrated in promotional material for season 2 of "Westworld" seems largely to fall within the hands of Dolores and Maeve, both of whom are now ready to help their kind rise above and usurp the technological throne from their creators. Although season 1 gave us the first step in this direction, season 2 promises even bolder and more confident hosts, no longer willing to play nice and be trampled upon by the guiltless whims of humanity. Each of the main androids is forging his or her own path along the outskirts of the frontier, venturing into the park's other "worlds" in search of greater freedom and a deeper truth.

As season 1 established, leaving the park entirely won't be easy. It will, in fact, require the help of humans. Dolores and the hosts must therefore decide: stake their claim over the park itself, or find a way to move beyond its borders, to map out a life for all of their kind in a brave new world.

Although "Westworld" isn't the first big series about androids to captivate audiences around the globe, no other series has managed — so far — to explore the prospect of the singularity in such a thoughtful and layered way. In drawing out the self-awareness of Dolores and her fellow hosts, series creators Lisa Joy and Jonathan Nolan were able to humanize these androids, giving them a softer voice. Viewers understand and support their motivations, because they're able to see themselves in the struggles and hardships endured by the hosts at the hands of their own decadent, careless species.

Newton opened up about this in a recent interview with Entertainment Tonight. When presented with the script for season 2, Newton admits that she was "completely shell-shocked" by the direction in which Joy and Nolan were taking the series. "It was absolutely not what I thought was going to happen," she said.

Newton was quite tight-lipped regarding what would or would not be occurring during the second season, whether on the macro level regarding the entire world of the series, or at a micro level when discussing her character Maeve and her own motivations: "As far as I know — because I really don't know — as far as Maeve knows, she has a degree of command over what she's doing."

She admits that, whether being instructed to or otherwise, holding back information is essential to the viewer experience, though, because "it's delayed gratification" that allows us to "enjoy discovering" what will happen next with the series.

If the first season of "Westworld" left audiences with one primary lesson, it's this: truth is entirely abstract. Hosts we believed to be self-motivated were long manipulated, those we thought to be human only acting so. A creator's relationship with creation is seldom one-dimensional. Everything that Dolores, Maeve and the other self-aware hosts believe they know about humanity will be tested as they try to forge their own paths in what may simply be yet another maze they're being coaxed to run by their master's hand.

Discover the new worlds that await the beloved hosts of "Westworld" when season 2 premieres Sunday, April 22, on HBO.

Secrets revealed: 'Food: Fact or Fiction?' hunts for culinary truths

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Who knew that the foods that we eat could hold so many secrets? For two seasons now, "Food: Fact or Fiction?" has peeled back the curtain and examined many of the myths, mysteries and idioms that surround our foods, and with the third season in full swing, the Cooking Channel series isn't showing any signs of running out of tasty facts to uncover.

Hosted by actor Michael McKean ("Better Call Saul"), the series is a charming and entertaining romp through the culinary world. In this week's new episode, airing Sunday, April 22, the host is serving up history for some deep-fried favorites. First, he checks out tasty tempura and explores why it's tied to the Easter holiday in some cultures. Later, he grabs a fried egg sandwich and learns just how the dish spawned a revolution in breakfast. Plus, he tries to figure out what exactly hushpuppies are so hush-hush about anyway.

Earlier this season, the host brought in actor Joe Mantegna ("Criminal Minds") to take apart the culinary traditions that are part of any authentic Italian wedding, found out what makes humble pie so modest, and tracked down where the expression "bun in the oven" first came from. Plus, he finally decided to answer the age-old question of just why so many things taste like chicken and found out that there's a very good scientific reason behind that fascinating food fact.

Michael McKean hosts "Food: Fact or Fiction?"

In next week's new episode, airing Sunday, April 29, viewers might need a map as McKean goes cross-country to check out the stories behind some iconic regional dishes. In Boston, he'll expose the half-baked lie behind the Boston cream pie. Then, he's off to Cincinnati for the best Greek chili that he can find, and finally ends the road trip in Philadelphia, where the city's signature cheesesteak faces a cheesy challenge.

Does an apple a day really keep the doctor away? Did spicy Pad Thai save an entire nation? Can the shape of a piece of chocolate transform its taste? Whether it's a fact or a fib, McKean hunts the truth in "Food: Fact or Fiction?," airing Sundays on Cooking Channel.

hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: Who is the voice of Gossip Girl in the show?

A: As a primer for the unfamiliar, the premise of the smash-hit teen series "Gossip Girl," which ran from 2007 to 2012 on CW, was based around posts by a fictional blogger named Gossip Girl. Her posts ostensibly revealed the secrets of a generation of rich New York teens — secrets that formed the actual plot of the series, since those teens made up the show's main cast. Gossip Girl herself was a voice only (well, the big reveal at the end of the show's sixth and final season expands on that, but I won't give away the details).

It was, however, a famous voice — Kristen Bell's.

Bell's own CW show, "Veronica Mars," ended the year "Gossip Girl" debuted, so she was already a well-known actress, particularly among the network's audience. Despite that, it's not surprising that you didn't know it was her, since she was never credited in the role.

Perhaps the network was banking on word-of-mouth to reveal it and generate a bit of extra buzz for the show, or perhaps it assumed everyone would recognize her voice. Indeed, she's since become known for it, as the biggest role of her career — by a longshot — was also a voice-only gig: Anna in Disney's mega-super-hit 2013 cartoon "Frozen."

There's more of Gossip Girl than Anna in Bell's other most famous role, as star of the NBC hit "The Good Place." She plays a selfish young woman who tries to redeem herself in the afterlife, and it's far funnier than it sounds.

Q: Any info on when Tom Hardy's "Taboo" is coming back?

A: I have it, but you might not want to hear it. The show works on British time, which runs at about half American time, so as things stand, we're looking at early 2019 for the season 2 premiere.

In an interview with Den of Geek in May of last year, creator and writer Steven Knight said he was "trying to write it as quickly as [he] can."

With that in mind, he predicted that filming would begin early this year, which in turn led to predictions that the new season would air towards the end of 2018.

However, there are no reports of filming having begun (and there would be — this is a very high-profile series), which means the end-of-this-year prediction is pretty well shot. That makes it more like early next year, if everything else goes well.

Of course, that might have been the plan all along. The late-2018 number was just a hope/prediction, but if it airs in early 2019, it would fall in line with the first season, which aired in January and February 2017.

That is, season 2 would air exactly a year later than North American fans would have expected it to.

Q: Are they making any more "Paranormal Activity" movies?

A: Sadly for fans (but perhaps happily for those who've had their wits scared out of them by previous editions), the answer is currently no.

When you say "they" here, you're really referring to director-writer-producer Oren Peli, who created the hugely popular horror film series back in 2007 and had a hand in all six installments.

I say "currently" because there's always a possibility of more on the horizon — the series is designed in such a way that (spoiler alert, of sorts) even if all of the characters die at the end of a film, a sequel is still possible.

However, we are now in the midst of the longest "Paranormal Activity" drought since Peli started making sequels — we haven't had a new one since 2015's "Paranormal Activity: Ghost Dimension" — which suggests he might finally have squeezed the premise dry.

But oh, did he get a lot out of that premise.

Very roughly, the films are about a demon stalking various members of an extended family. They consist mostly of what is supposed to be "found footage" — mostly home video and surveillance tape recorded by the characters.

Because of the way they were shot, and because each film centers around different characters (and thus there are no stars, per se), the films were incredibly cheap to make. But they were also incredibly popular. The first film earned a stunning $193 million worldwide, on a budget of — get ready for it — $15,000. That's a 12,867 percent return on Peli's initial investment.

It's no wonder he became a sort of horror-movie It boy in subsequent years, which might be why he's moved away from the "Paranormal" franchise. Lately, he's been more preoccupied with his other hit franchise, "Insidious."
