Hurricane leaves a housing dilemma

BY DEBORAH BUCKHALTER
dbuckhalter@jcfloridan.com

Jackson County NAACP President Ronstance Pittman is working with residents of two housing areas in which management has said they must leave, on short notice, so that repairs can be made.

Orchard Pointe, just outside the Marianna limits, and Pebble Hill Estates, both notified residents they must go. Pittman said it may be too late for her to do much for Orchard Pointe those apartment-dwellers were ordered out roughly two weeks ago and have scattered to the wind, as far as she knows. The city, she said, is also During Hurricane Michael, Ronald Petroziello and his family sat on the floor of their emptied den and prayed for the storm to pass.

Now, a month after the storm, the family is still praying in their gutted house, but this time their prayers are for relief.

Ronald and his wife, Diana, moved to Marianna, Florida, from Pennsylvania in hopes of enjoying their older years in the warmer weather. When they decided to rent their home, they had no idea a hurricane would take everything they had spent a lifetime building together, and leave the family

MARIANNA — In September, Main Street Marianna had set spending priorities for the coming year in the town's Community Development Area. Those recommendations were approved by the CRA board, which is made up of the Marianna City Commission board. But Hurricane Michael's arrival on Oct. 10 changed everything.

With many downtown buildings devastated by the storm, Main Street met Wednesday to re-prioritize CRA spending so that more money will be available to help some of those

MURPH'S POSITIVE REFLECTIONS

On taking a stand and trusting in God

The more some of us try to understand what's going on in our country these days, the more complicated it seems to become.

There are so many promises being made by our politicians that it's become too hard to keep up with them. People — not just politicians — from various walks of life seem to have mastered the act of lying. Who can we really trust?

On July 30, 1956, the 84th Congress passed a law that was approved by President Dwight Eisenhower that stated "In God We Trust" must appear on American currency. The uneasy atmosphere many of us are feeling in our country and the continuous drop in our morals are proving those words to be hollow.

Thomas Vincent Murphy

It doesn't take a genius to realize that unless we make major changes in the direction we are heading things will only get worse. It seems that power, greed, disrespect, prejudice and hatred are beginning to become a normal part of our existence in what is considered by many as the greatest country in the world.

There doesn't seem to be many answers to how to correct the direction we seem to be going into, but in this writer's opinion, the best possible answer is written right on our money. It's time for us citizens who have become confused by the continuous rhetoric of our politicians to stand up and be counted.

When we have become disappointed by the situations in some of our churches where money is spoken of more than "the Word," we should find another church! If we are tired of the greedy, money hungry corporations trying to maneuver us and take our hard earned money, it's time to take a stand. This is no time for complacency; we need to make a serious effort to stop the bleeding. If we truly believe what's written on our currency — "In God we trust" — it's time to act like it.

Some of us who simply go with the flow need to wake up and pay attention to what is happening in our world. There are quite a few people who call themselves Christians who don't act as though they believe in what's written in "the Word." If they did, they would spend more time helping and encouraging those in need instead of worrying about their future. "In God we trust."

Would you retire at 40 if you could?

"You know I work all day..."

to get you money...

To buy you things."

"A Hard Day's Night"

as performed by The Beatles

Margaret McDowell

Would you have retired at age 40 if you could have? "FIRE," an acronym for "Financial Independence, Retire Early," is a movement that crunches numbers for workers engaged in what is termed radical saving. The theory is that you work for about 20 years, bank and invest 50% of your paycheck, and by age 35 or 40 you enjoy the financial security to say "Adios!" forever to the working world.

I admire anyone with the discipline to save a significant amount of each paycheck, regardless of the investor's ultimate financial goal. And as we all know, the sooner we save and put our money to work, the more we benefit from compounding.

There are, of course, a couple of potential hurdles for young workers following the FIRE philosophy. The major one is the possibility that another large market downturn akin to the Great Recession can derail their investment plan. Or, annual returns simply might not match their expectations. Also, if you stop paying into Social Security at age 40, your annual benefit will suffer significantly when you reach your official retirement age. And you'll need to carefully guard against trivial consumption, because you'll likely be spending down your assets over the remainder of your life.

The flip side is that many people enjoy working and don't know what they'd do without the challenges and socialization offered by the workplace. Therefore, their saving and investing schedule is quite different than the millennial who desires to retire at 40. Obviously this is not true for everyone; I know folks who count down the days to retirement and never look back. But for many others, those years in the work force serve an important function in their lives, and their participation fulfills the desire to be productive. Some of us would be lost without a structured, daily work schedule; some people meet their eventual partner at work; others form lasting friendships.

So for some, work is a means to an earlier retirement; for others, it can provide a comfortable retirement and a valued social outlet and stimulation. Loneliness, especially among older Americans, is now a recognized health issue. Staying active through work, volunteering or social gatherings is an important part of a healthy lifestyle.

Whether you're retiring early or working past age 70, it makes sense to develop and implement a plan for saving and investing, one that can translate to comfortable retirement years, however long they may be.

FEMA offers housing assistance tips

Special to the Floridan

FEMA is working closely with the State of Florida to help survivors recover from Hurricane Michael. Renters and homeowners must register with FEMA to be considered for disaster housing assistance, which may be provided if you have no other housing options and your permanent dwelling is uninhabitable. FEMA temporary housing assistance is a grant and does not have to be repaid. What type of housing assistance best fits your situation?

Rental Assistance

Rental Assistance provides temporary financial help for adequate rental housing during ongoing repairs to your damaged dwelling, or if you need to find permanent housing in another location. Since rental resources and housing may be limited in some areas, you may have to look outside your immediate community.

Transitional Sheltering Assistance

On a case-by-case basis, FEMA may pay for lodging at participating hotels while survivors find long-term housing or finish repairs to their damaged residence. You must be a disaster assistance applicant in Bay, Gulf or Jackson counties without a place to live to be considered for TSA.

Direct Housing

Direct Temporary Housing provides manufactured housing, including recreational vehicles (RVs) and mobile homes.

Because of extensive damage to local housing and the number of people affected, Direct Temporary Housing has been approved for Bay, Calhoun, Gadsden, Gulf and Jackson counties.

Due to limited housing options in some counties, it is not guaranteed you will be provided Direct Housing in or near your neighborhood.

The state of Florida and FEMA have approved Direct Temporary Housing in the following ways:

» RVs may be used when there is a housing need of six months or less. RVs may be placed in commercial parks or on approved private sites.

» Manufactured Housing Units (MHUs) may be used as a longer-term solution for both homeowners and renters when repairs take longer to complete.

» Multi-Family Lease and Repair involves FEMA repairing and making improvements in existing multifamily housing, working with owners to make more short-term lodging available for survivors. Apply with FEMA to be considered for Rental Assistance, Transitional Sheltering Assistance or Direct Housing Assistance.

» You may apply online at DisasterAssistance.gov or by calling the disaster assistance helpline at 800621-3362 (voice, 711 or VRS) or 800-462-7585 for TTY users.

» When registering for disaster assistance, you will be asked to provide information about the damage to your dwelling. A scheduled FEMA inspection will verify if your home is unsafe, uninhabitable or inaccessible.

» FEMA cannot duplicate assistance received from your insurance company.

» Additional phone interviews may be needed to determine if you qualify for housing assistance. Those approved for housing assistance must demonstrate an ongoing effort to find long-term housing and that they remain eligible.

Businesses, farmers, ranchers can seek disaster help

People, including farmers and ranchers, whose homes were damaged or destroyed may qualify for help from FEMA. To find out who might be eligible, visit DisasterAssistance.gov or call 800-621-3362.

Disaster assistance may be available through other federal agencies to businesses for damaged business property or economic losses as a direct result of a presidentially declared disaster. Farmers and ranchers in Jackson, Bay, Calhoun, Franklin, Gadsden, Gulf, Holmes, Leon, Liberty, Taylor, Wakulla, and Washington counties may be eligible.

The USDA Farm Service Agency make low-interest disaster loans to provide working capital and to repair or replace damaged property not covered by insurance. For more information and county

A Pentagon program involving insects

Imagine if vast fields of corn or soybeans, the bounty of United States agriculture, faced sudden death, withering because of disease, pests, weather or a deliberate assault on the food supply by another country. Now imagine that a fleet of insects could save the plants by infecting them with a virus, changing their genetic makeup to improve their resiliency, all in one growing season. This is not entirely a fantasy but the goal of an unusual Pentagon research effort—still in the laboratory—that could one day have enormous humanitarian benefits.

Five European researchers have posed a question that deserves an answer: Is this technology capable of being used for destructive purposes? Could the insects be turned into germ carriers that might just as easily destroy a food supply? The researchers' concern, expressed in Science magazine, is that the insects could become "a new class of biological weapon" and violate an international treaty against them.

The object of their concern is a $45 million research effort called "Insect Allies," run by the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, or DARPA, announced in November 2016 and expected to take four years. The end goal will be to conduct large, contained greenhouse demonstrations in which maize and tomato plants are infected by viruses transported by insects such as leafhoppers, whiteflies and aphids.

The hope is that viruses could be precisely tailored using sophisticated tools to deliver a specific result in the plant, far more quickly than, say, attempting to stimulate changes across generations of plant growth. DARPA has been home for decades to such blue-sky research missions, with long odds but high reward. "Insect Allies" might wind up in the agency's dustbin but, if it works, could be of significant benefit to mankind.

Without question, the European skeptics are right to raise questions about this dual-use research, meaning the program could be adapted, in theory, for malign intent. But much research in biology is dual-use by its very nature. Research facilities that produce lifesaving drugs and therapies can be used to create harmful agents and weapons. In the United States, a good amount of attention has been focused in recent years on oversight, including rules for government-funded work. (And there are legitimate concerns, such as earlier this year when researchers in Canada assembled bits of genetic material to resurrect a cousin of the virus that causes smallpox. It should not have been attempted.) Globally, the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention of 1975 prohibits the research, development or deployment of germ weapons or their delivery systems, though it has rather weak enforcement mechanisms.

The skeptics say on their website that they worry the DARPA program could be "easily weaponized." That seems a stretch. No one can ever be sure that bad actors won't attempt something foolish, but fear should not paralyze a research program of such large potential. The best antidote to these concerns is rigorous oversight, transparency and regulation, which DARPA argues it has put in place. The right course is to proceed, with caution and care.

Scaramucci says Trump lies for a purpose

Former White House communications director-for-a-few-days Anthony Scaramucci is very upset that CNN ran a headline Wednesday quoting him calling President Donald Trump a "liar." So when he was on Bloomberg TV the next day, he decided to clarify.

"Yes, the president is speaking mistruths," Scaramucci said Thursday after accusing the network of pursuing "clickbait." "Yes, the president is lying. He's doing it intentionally to incite certain people, which would include left-leaning journalists and most of the left-leaning politicians."

Scaramucci added: "He's an intentional liar; it's very different from just being a liar liar."

O... kay?

Points for honesty. This is a former White House communications director admitting that his ex-boss, the president of the United States, is in fact a prolific liar and someone who wields lies for political gain. That's no small thing.

But Scaramucci is also drawing a weird distinction. A lie is, definitionally, an intentional act. Saying someone is an "intentional liar" is redundant. If you don't know what you are saying is false, it's not actually a lie.

This is why much of the me-

dia, including The Washington Post, continues to decline to label Trump's false statements as "lies." It's generally impossible to prove Trump knew better when he said the many false things he's said. Perhaps he is simply living in an elaborately constructed fantasy or doesn't grasp basic facts (which I've argued might be worse than being a liar!) -- and you don't write what you can't prove.

Scaramucci's main point, then, seems to be that Trump's lies are deliberate — as part of a strategy. He's basically arguing that Trump lies for a purpose — to goad his opponents into overreacting — and that this is somehow better than other kinds of lying. It's not like Trump has little or no control over his lying. It's that he's doing it proactively.

All of this seems quite likely. Trump, whatever you think of him, is a savvy media operator. He will often say controversial things in just such a way as to allow himself plausible deniability, inviting tough coverage while giving himself an out. He has built a hugely loyal base, and a big part of that has been stoking feuds with the already much-hated media, often by saying so many false things that reporters are forced to cover them endlessly. Trump has seized upon the media's obsession with facts (which it is their job to pursue, first and foremost) to prop up an extremely convincing boogeyman.

But it's also quite a commentary on our political day and age when one of the president's former aides and biggest promoters feels the need to argue that the president's lies are actually smart lies. Scaramucci says Trump's base is in on the joke and views the media as an overzealous "hall monitor."

That might well be the case, but I don't think it's nearly as much of a mystery to the press as Scaramucci suggests. And if the president truly views lying as such a weapon, and so much of the country views it simply as the price of "owning the libs," that's a pretty sad state of affairs.

Democrats gave Trump an opening on immigration

BY RAMESH PONNURU

President Donald Trump certainly knows how to direct attention where he wants it. When he raised the idea of issuing an executive order to end birthright citizenship for the children of illegal immigrants, it became a top news story. Because of these remarks, and other provocative comments from members of his party about immigration, the change in Republican attitudes on the issue since George W. Bush's pro-immigration presidency is obvious to all.

But there has been a major, if lower-profile, shift on the Democratic side as well. You can see it in the polls. In 2005, an NBC/Wall Street Journal poll found Democrats evenly divided about immigration, with 45 percent saying it strengthened the country and 44 percent saying it weakened it. By 2017, a huge 81 percent majority said it strengthened the country and only 16 percent dissented.

As is often the case, the evolution of Democratic attitudes can also be seen by tracking Hillary Clinton's comments over the years. When she first ran for president, from 2006 through 2008, she was careful to take a moderate tack. She opposed giving driver's licenses to illegal immigrants, came out for "tougher employer sanctions" to deter the hiring of illegal immigrants, and toggled between calling them "illegal" and "undocumented" immigrants.

During her second run, under pressure from Bernie Sanders, she came out for driver's licenses and apologized for using the term "illegal immigrants." Talk of employer sanctions fell away. (Sanders himself, by the way, has also "evolved" on immigration.)

Both conviction and strategy propelled the Democratic change. As conservative Democrats have become conservative Republicans, there were fewer and fewer voters and politicians inside their coalition inclined toward restraint.

Many Democrats became convinced, as well, that a strong pro-immigration stand could help them win elections because it would appeal to Hispanics, a growing share of the electorate. The white working-class voters whom that stand might alienate were, in contrast, a shrinking share.

At the same time, support for immigration became more and more associated with cherished values such as tolerance, openness and opposition to racism; support for restrictions on it, with intolerance, closed-mindedness and bigotry. The familiar dynamic of polarization also took hold: The issue became a mark of distinction between the parties, and a desire to crack down on illegal immigration and cut legal immigration became something Democrats linked with their partisan enemies.

One way of reading the data is that Democrats have led public opinion toward greater support for immigration. Independents and Republicans, too, became more likely to regard it as a net plus for the country between 2005 and 2017. Their shift was, however, much smaller than the Democratic one.

Democrats may, however, have moved too far for their own good. The public still shows some ambivalence. Only a minority of Americans wants an increase in immigration levels.

While most Americans favor granting legal status to illegal immigrants who have put down roots and behaved well here, some members of that majority doubtless fear that a continuing refusal to enforce the law means that one amnesty will be followed by more. Americans are also open to combining an amnesty with some of the changes that Trump wants, such as ending the visa lottery designed to increase diversity.

Democrats also seem to be failing to make the favorable trade between the white working class and Hispanics that they had expected. For some voters, the new rhetoric, which emphasizes the harshness of deportation and downplays the necessity of enforcement, signals indifference to the rule of law and to their opinions. The abandonment of the old, more balanced approach has lent credibility to Trump's claim that Democrats favor "open borders."

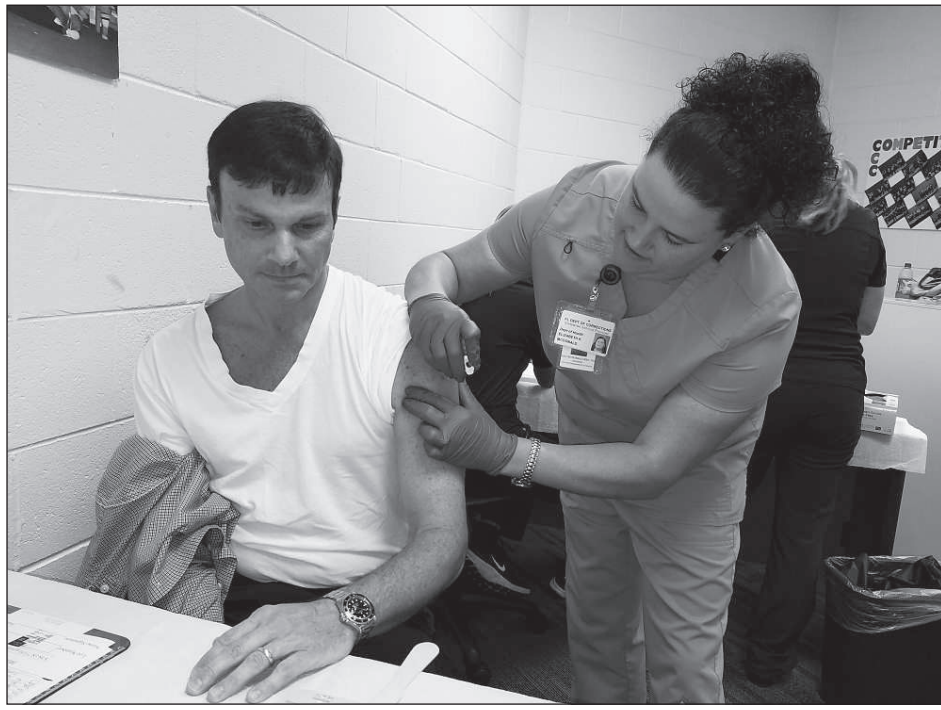

The president has used the opening Democrats have given him to push for policies that are also out of step with public opinion. Most Americans do not approve of his job performance on immigration. Even more disliked the separation of families at the border. Support for birthright citizenship seems to have risen in recent years.

The debate earlier this year over extending legal status to people who came here illegally as minors showed the costs of this polarization. Trump demanded that a wish list of restrictionist policies, including a cut in legal immigration, be included in any deal. Influential Democrats balked at coupling an amnesty with any enforcement measures.

The public seems to want immigration policies that are hard-headed without being hard-hearted. Neither of our political parties, at the moment, seems interested in offering them.

ty Board of County Commissioners.

MARIANNA — The weather wasn't always agreeable, the ballot was long and, for some, the wait in line was even longer, but Jackson County came to vote.

Nearly a quarter of the 16,085 votes cast in Tuesday's midterms were cast on Election Day. With only three polling places open (a change made in the wake of Hurricane Michael), some showing up to the busiest of those locations, the county elections office in Marianna, were met with wait times of up to two hours. Those who were in line at 7 p.m., when the polls closed, were allowed to stay in line and eventually cast their vote.

Once the final ballots were in and counted, three local races were decided, bringing a new face to the Jackson County School Board and returning two familiar ones to the Jackson Coun-

Diane Long, by a razor-thin margin, beat out incumbent Terry Nichols for the District 1 school board seat. Long received 1,185 votes to Nichols' 1,150.

Heading back to county commission are Republican incumbents Clint Pate (District 2) and Eric Hill (District 4).

With 52.75 percent of the vote, Pate beat challenger Edward Crutchfield, 1,805 to 1,617.

Hill took 51.54 percent or 1,937 votes to best two opponents — Democrat Terry Charles (1,360) and NPA John Bryan (461) — to reclaim the District 4 seat.

Greyhound racing to phase out by 2021

The Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE — Florida voters decided to phase out greyhound racing in the state by 2021, meaning thousands of dogs will soon need new homes.

The state voted 69 to 31 percent Tuesday to pass Amendment 13, which bans the sport beginning on Jan. 1, 2021. It is an overwhelming defeat for an industry already in decline, with 50 tracks closing nationally over the past 30 years because of shrinking crowds and accusations that dogs are mistreated.

Advocates for the ban say many of Florida's 8,000 racing dogs will now likely be adopted, as usually happens when they leave the sport, though some may be transferred to other states where the sport will remain legal.

Florida's 11 dog tracks constitute almost two-thirds of those remaining nationally. When they close, the sport may be too small to survive long term. Two tracks remain in West Virginia and one each in

Alabama, Arkansas and Iowa. In Texas, three tracks rotate an annual meet.

Carey Theil, executive director of Grey2K USA, one of the groups pushing for a nationwide ban, called the margin "astounding" and said it was one of the largest ever nationally for any animal rights measure. Amendment 13 even got majorities in 10 of the 11 counties where racing is held — in five of those, support exceeded 70 percent.

"It's a powerful endorsement of our humane values, and a repudiation of an industry that is cruel and inhumane," Theil said Wednesday. He said the state should provide resources for any workers who lose jobs because of the ban, including retraining.

Jim Gartland, executive director of the National Greyhound Association, said he was surprised by the amendment's passage — it needed 60 percent, under Florida law. He said hundreds of greyhound breeders and their employees nationally will be hurt by the Florida decision, and accused the amendment's backers of "lying" and giving "misleading facts and figures" when they said dogs are abused. State records show that, on average, two of the state's racing dogs die of injury or illness weekly.

"It makes no sense that people who make their livelihoods from dogs would abuse them," Gartland said. Abused dogs are slow dogs, he said, and trainers make their living by producing winners. He said it is unclear how many Florida tracks will keep live racing through 2020 and how many will drop the sport sooner.

Jack Cory, spokesman for the Florida Greyhound Association, said tracks and trainers will go to the Legislature and, if necessary, to the courts to be compensated for the revenue they will lose.

Backers spent more than $3 million getting the measure adopted — 10 times the amount spent by racing supporters. Almost half the backers' funding came from a $1.5 million donation by the Doris Day Animal League, a national group founded by the 96-year-old actress.

The anti-racing movement had support from across the political spectrum, from animal rights groups like People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals to Republican Gov. Rick Scott.

Engagement

Merrifield, Purvis

Fred Merrifield and Denise Merrifield, of Marianna, Fla. are pleased to announce the engagement and upcoming marriage of their daughter, Mallory Merrifield to Brandon Purvis, son of Gary Wayne and Monica Purvis of Blountstown, Fla.

The bride-elect is the maternal granddaughter of Eugene and Sue Barnes of Marianna, Fla. She is the paternal granddaughter of the late Evelyn Merrifield of Marianna, Fla. and the late Eugene Merrifield of Paxton, Fla.

The future groom is the maternal grandson of William and Janice Malone of Blountstown, Fla. and the late Hewston Wilson of Atmore, Ala. He is the paternal grandson of Gary Purvis and the late Susan Purvis of Atmore, Ala.

Mallory is a 2014 graduate of Marianna High School, received her AA Degree from Chipola College. She will graduate from Wallace Community College with an Associate Degree in Nursing in December, 2018.

Brandon is a 2013 graduate of Blountstown High School, received his AA Degree from Chipola College and graduated from Florida State University with a Bachelor's Degree in Civil Engineering. He is employed with Dewberry Engineers of Blountstown, Fla.

The wedding will take place at The Barn, 14441 NW County Road 12, Bristol, FL 32321 on December 8th, 2018 at 3:00 p.m. (CST). Family and friends are welcome to share this special time with them.

the U.S. Post Office, and right now that shadow falls upon a gutted second story of the Edward Jones building, that top floor essentially swept down and reduced to a tumble of bricks that the hurricane left piled haphazardly around the sidewalk skirting the structure.

Al Blanton and his wife were there soon after, digging through the rubble. Wearing heavy work gloves to protect their hands, they picked up as many bricks as they could on their own. They're sending a contractor to get the rest.

The ones they gathered are stored now in a barn on the family's farm outside town. They'll be used in the rebuild the downtown building, Blanton said. It would be unthinkable not to use them, he said. The brick building and its wooden predecessor have been in his family since 1879.

He and his family have deep roots in Jackson County and its history, so there is a great sentimental force at work as well as business considerations in the decision to rebuild the second floor and, if necessary, the first, if conditions prove it's too damaged to salvage. It was a group decision, he said, with all parties deeply committed to it. That includes his 88-year-dad, James C. Blanton.

His maternal great-grandfather, Alexander Merritt, established the old Merritt's Mill, for which Merritt's Mill Pond is named. He had the original wooden building constructed where the Edward Jones building now sits. It was a general mercantile store for many years, and the family put it right back up after the original burned.

Although Blanton grew up in Jacksonville, Jackson County has always been his home away from home. That's true even now, he says. He lives in New Orleans, but is here many, many weekends and holidays to gather with relatives on that old family farm. As a boy, he'd come here in the summer, on holidays and on many other occasions, to visit his elders the other youngsters in the family as parents of the clan brought everyone together. He's one of five siblings who still come here often to congregate and keep their bonds strong.

There's a bittersweet note in their preparations to bring his great-grandfather's building back to useful life.

Blanton's mother, Catherine Hamilton Blanton, died two weeks ago. Seriously ill and in hospice care by the time Hurricane Michael wreaked its devastation, she never knew that the building had been damaged. But her children believe that she'd be overjoyed to know that they are working together to reestablish the building in a community she loved so dearly.

"Her heart was here," Blanton said of his mother's long affection for Jackson County. Her father, Dr. Alfred Hamilton, had grown up here and she and her husband James had made sure their children had ties here. After they raised those children, they spent even more significant amounts of time here as a couple. They were such frequent part-time residents here that James became one of the first members of the Main Street Marianna board when it was established in the early 1990s. In fact, James allowed Main Street to use the Edward Jones building as the organization's meeting place in its early years.

And Al followed in his dad's footsteps as a current member of that board. He was at a recent meeting of the group and helped make a decision that evening that could help the family put the final touches on its project to bring the Edward Jones building back to a state of glory. And it's likely to remain known as the Edward Jones building – that tenant is already sending its desired specs for the interior of the building.

See more on that Main Street Marianna meeting in an accompanying story in this edition.

Hurricane Michael Recovery

Storm-related town hall meeting held

BY DEBORAH BUCKHALTER
dbuckhalter@jcfloridan.com

Representatives of state and federal agencies involved in helping the local community recover from Hurricane Michael gathered to share information with the public at a town hall meeting at Marianna High School Thursday.

The gathering included FEMA, U.S. Corps of Engineers, the Florida Department of Financial Services, the state's Department of Children and Families, and its Department of Health.

The emergency response team members spoke generally of the help each of their agencies could provide, but their overall shared message was this: Local individuals, families and businesses can and should visit the Disaster Recovery Center set up now at the Jackson County agriculture complex on Penn Avenue in Marianna to get help signing up for the assistance they need. Mobile DRCs are also being set up in various communities over time, for the convenience of those who live in different areas of the community. One is currently operating in Grand Ridge, for instance, in the community center next to city hall.

The DRCs are staffed with representatives of all the responding state and federal agencies, and they can provide answers to questions, contact numbers, specific resource information related to individual circumstances, and assistance with the forms citizens need to fill out to apply for assistance. The DRCs have been set up as "one stop shopping" points where people can find out about a multitude of agencies and services.

In addition to the agency forum held in the MHS auditorium Thursday, the Jackson County Health Department set up a "mobile" clinic station inside the school near the auditorium where people could get their flu shots free of charge while they were there for the meeting. Many, including health department director Sandon Speedling, took advantage of the opportunity.

As the meeting drew to a close Thursday, Jackson County Interim Administrator Wilanne Daniels asked for the public's continued patience as debris removal efforts continue and as the county and other agencies try to help in other ways.

She also said more town hall style meetings like Thursday will be scheduled at other locations in the county in the near future.

State Crime Briefs

Principal accused of taking $900 from disabled 9-year-old

LAND O'LAKES — A Florida elementary school principal is accused of stealing $900 from a mentally disabled 9-year-old.

The Tampa Bay Times reports 50-year-old Edward John Abernathy was arrested Thursday and charged with grand theft. A Pasco County Sheriff's Office release says deputies were told the child brought $2,100 of his parents' money to Connerton Elementary School in Land O'Lakes in October.

It says teachers told deputies they found the cash, counted it and locked it in the principal's office. It says an investigation showed Abernathy only gave the student's mother $1,200 when she went to pick up the cash, pocketing the rest.

Pasco County schools Superintendent Kurt Browning says Abernathy will be placed on paid administrative leave.

Man accused in hospital room killing too ill to stand trial

MIAMI — A psychiatric patient accused of killing his roommate at a Miami Beach hospital has been ordered too mentally unstable to stand trial.

A Miami issued the ruling on Tuesday, meaning 25-year-old Andre Brown will be sent to a state psychiatric hospital to rehabilitate. He's accused of beating and strangling 55-year-old Alejandro Ortega in May 2016 inside a room at Mount Sinai Medical Center.

Brown's attorney Stacy Marczak tells the Miami Herald that they're "looking forward to competency being regained and getting this case to trial."

Guards charged with smuggling phones, cigarettes

BARTOW — Authorities say three Florida prison guards have been accused of smuggling cellphones, cigarettes and cash to inmates.

Polk County Sheriff Grady Judd announced the arrests Thursday of 33-year-old Jules Loya, 23-year-old Nathan Lucy and 25-year-old Victor Medina.

Officials say the sheriff's office began investigating the Avon Park Correctional Institution guards in September after Department of Corrections investigators learned that guards may have been bringing contraband into the facility.

Authorities say undercover detectives posed as family members of inmates and paid the corrections officers to take items into the prison.

'Miami Vice' boat owner pleads guilty in passenger death

MIAMI — The owner of a Florida charter boat named "Miami Vice" has pleaded guilty in a death that occurred during one of the yacht's trips.

Court records say Laurent Marc-Antoine Jean Maubert-Cayla pleaded guilty in Miami federal court this week to misconduct or neglect of a ship officer that resulted in the death of an individual. His sentencing is scheduled for Jan. 10.

Court records say Maubert-Cayla chartered the motor yacht to seven passengers in April. Officials say the boat, captained by Mauricio Alvarez, stopped in Biscayne Bay, between Miami and Miami Beach, and some of the passengers went swimming. The complaint says Alvarez engaged the engines at some point, and one of the swimmers was killed by the propeller. Alvarez didn't have a U.S. captain's license.

Alvarez has also pleaded guilty in the case.

Reality star charged in confrontation with ex's girlfriend

TAMPA — A woman who appeared on the reality show "Big Brother" is accused of ramming the car of another woman who was in a relationship with her ex-boyfriend.

The News & Observer of Raleigh, North Carolina, obtained a Tampa, Florida police report that says 36-year-old Christmas Abbott confronted Samantha Jane Morse at a gym in August and drove her SUV into Morse's sedan twice.

The report says Abbott told an officer she "lost it" because Morse was cheating with her child's father. Abbott was eight months pregnant with the child of Morse's boyfriend, Benjamin Bunn.

Abbott was taken to a Tampa jail but wasn't processed because of her pregnancy. She was booked Nov. 6 and released on her own recognition.

Women accused of stealing Vietnam vet's service dog

KISSIMMEE — Two Florida women are accused of stealing a service dog from a 67-year-old Vietnam veteran.

Osceola County Sheriff's officials say in a news release that the victim was at Old Town near Orlando on Oct. 28 with his two Pomeranian service dogs when a woman started an altercation with him. A few minutes later, the man realized the dog, Kira, was gone.

Surveillance video shows another woman behind him unleashing the dog. Officials say they were able to follow a tip from a concerned citizen. On Wednesday, investigators obtained search warrants and arrested Jennifer Gotschall and Monique Cosser. They face grand theft charges.

Police: Burglary suspect took break for coffee and a smoke

A cigarette butt left at the scene of a burglary led investigators to a suspect in the case, a career criminal who was in jail in another matter at the time he was identified as a suspect in the burglary, according to a news release from the Walton County Sheriff's Office.

Authorities say the burglary was reported on March 17 by personnel from Regional Utilities. The victims said they'd found items from some personal sheds on the property scattered around those structures and also discovered that some things had been stolen from inside the sheds. The stolen items included several fishing rods and reels worth hundreds of dollars each, along with a $400 wakeboard, a pair of sunglasses worth $250, and a battery charger.

Investigators working the case discovered that the thief had apparently made himself a pot of coffee in one of the buildings and that he'd smoked a cigarette and stashed the butt of it against a window screen after he was done.

The cigarette butt and some cups were collected from the scene. Lab results on one of the items returned a DNA profile suggesting that it was "700 billion times more likely to occur if the sample originated from James Dexter Jackson than from an unrelated individual."

Jackson

Already incarcerated in Santa Rosa County on an unrelated charge, Jackson now faces additional charges of grand theft and burglary, officials say.

Trump blames mental illness in California bar massacre

The Associated Press

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — As investigators worked to figure out why an ex-Marine slaughtered 12 people at a country music bar, President Donald Trump on Friday blamed mental illness, describing the gunman as "a very sick puppy" who had "a lot of problems."

Investigators have not commented on a motive for the rampage or whether mental illness played a role.

But neighbors reported hearing frequent loud fights between Ian David Long and his mother, one of them so extreme they called police in April, and authorities at the time worried that the 28-year-old Afghanistan war veteran might have post-traumatic stress disorder. However, a mental health specialist concluded there were no grounds to have him involuntarily committed for psychiatric evaluation.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

People gather to pray for the victims of the mass shooting during a candlelight vigil in Thousand Oaks, Calif., on Thursday. A gunman opened fire Wednesday evening inside a country music bar, killing multiple people.

On Wednesday night, the former machine gunner, dressed all in black with his hood pulled up, opened fire with a handgun at the Borderline Bar & Grill during college night, then apparently killed himself as scores of police officers closed in.

The dead included sheriff's Sgt. Ron Helus, a 29-year veteran nearing retirement who responded to reports of shots fired and was gunned down as he entered the bar. He and other first responders "ran toward danger," Sheriff Geoff Dean said at a vigil Thursday, calling Helus a hero.

The dead also included a man who had survived last year's massacre in Las Vegas, Telemachus Orfanos, 27.

"I don't want prayers. I don't want thoughts," said his mother, Susan Schmidt-Orfanos. "I want those bastards in Congress — they need to pass gun control so no one else has a child that doesn't come home."

Dani Merrill, who escaped from the Borderline bar when the shooting began, had also attended the 2017 Las Vegas country music festival where a gunman in a high-rise hotel opened fire and killed 58 people. She was appalled that such bloodshed had come to her community.

"I'm super upset that it happened in our home, and I feel awful for the families that have to go through this," Merrill said at the vigil.

At the White House, Trump touted his efforts to fund work on PTSD among veterans. He declined to engage on questions on whether the nation needs stricter gun control laws.

Julie Hanson, who lives next door to the ranch-style home that Long shared with his mother, described him as "odd" and "disrespectful" well before he left home a decade ago, got married and enlisted in the Marines. She could often hear him yelling and cursing, but several months ago unusually loud banging and shouting prompted her husband to call authorities.

"I was concerned because I knew he had been in the military," Tom Hanson said.

About 18 months ago, Don and Effie MacLeod heard "an awful argument" and what he believes was a gunshot from the Longs' property. Don MacLeod said he did not call police but avoided speaking with Ian Long.

"I told my wife, 'Just be polite to him. If he talks, just acknowledge him, don't go into conversation with him,'" Don MacLeod said.

Thousand Oaks is a city of about 130,000 people about 40 miles from Los Angeles. It is annually listed as one of the safest cities in America.

"Hope has sustained communities, very much like Thousand Oaks, through the exact same triages of mass shootings," said Andy Fox, the city's outgoing mayor. "Tonight Thousand Oaks takes its place with those cities, who in order to move forward will rely on hope. ... We are Thousand Oaks strong."

It was the nation's deadliest such attack since 17 students and teachers were killed at a Parkland, Florida, high school nine months ago. It also came less than two weeks after a gunman massacred 11 people at a synagogue in Pittsburgh.

Democratic Gov.-elect Gavin Newsom, in his first public appearance since winning office on Tuesday, lamented the violence that has returned to California.

"It's a gun culture," he said. "You can't go to a bar or nightclub? You can't go to church or synagogue? It's insane is the only way to describe it. The normalization, that's the only way I can describe it. It's become normalized."

Ollie S. Barfoot

Ollie S. Barfoot, 86, passed away peacefully on Monday, November 5, 2018 in Dothan, Alabama. She was a lifelong resident of Jackson County Florida.

She was a faithful member of First United Methodist Church of Sneads. In past years, she served as a Sunday School Teacher and Communion Steward. After many years of dedicated service as a Seamstress at Florida State Hospital, Ollie retired and enjoyed spending time with her family. Ollie was an amazingly strong and resilient lady filled with love for everyone she met. She was a joy to spend time with and was loved by many. Ollie loved to play the board game "Sorry", but mostly enjoyed winning. She was known as the "poet laureate" at church and as a "mother to many". Ollie loved to cook and was known for her legendary teacakes. She loved her family most of all and enjoyed taking care of them in any way she could. Ollie was a loving wife, mother, grandmother, sister, aunt and friend who will be remembered with great affection.

Ollie is survived by two daughters, Kathy Dunaway and her husband Russell of Marianna, FL and Janice Brown and her husband Kenny of Sneads, FL; two sons, Elvin Barfoot and his wife Marcia of Grand Ridge, FL and John Barfoot of Sneads, FL; twelve grandchildren, Tanya Lawrence (John), Heath Barfoot (Kelly), Brigitte Rehberg (Tim), Johnny Barfoot, Randa Freeman, Rhett Wright, Chris Brown (Tammy), Jerrod Brown (Amy), Jennifer Brown, Lee Dunaway (Emily), Will Dunaway (Phyllis), and Ashley Johnson (Steve); nine great grandchildren, Maddie Barfoot, Eli Barfoot, Kyle Lawrence, Jacob Brown, Emily Brown, Tayler Johnson, Julian Dunaway, Vivian Dunaway, and Jameson Johnson; one great-great grandchild, Brayleigh White, as well as, one very special care giver and friend Vickie Gray.

She was preceded in death by her loving husband, Pete Barfoot; her parents, Hollie Edward and Lillie Ann Simpson; four sisters, Stella Wilson, Annie Laura McDaniel, Rosa Lee McDaniel and twin sister Dollie Rivers.

Visitation with family and friends will be held at Sneads First United Methodist Church on Thursday, November 8, 2018 at 10:00 AM CST and a Celebration of Life Service will follow at 11:00 AM CST with Dr. Ernie Gray, Rev. John Lawrence and Rev. Heath Barfoot officiating and McAlpin Funeral Home directing. Interment will follow at Pope Cemetery.

Flowers are welcomed; however, in lieu of flowers contributions may be made to the Sneads First United Methodist Church Sound System Fund.

searching for them without much success, to return water deposits to those who are owed them.

In a letter dated Tuesday, Oct. 16, Orchard Pointe management asked residents to move during the week of that letter, and in it provided some information about various agencies that might be able to help them find other lodgings temporarily. It did not explicitly say whether they'd be able to return to their old units when the work was done. It promised, however, a pro-rated rental bill and that security deposits would be returned.

As for Pebble Hill Estates, the company agreed in its letter to residents to give the households $150 for storage of their belongings. It indicated repairs would be done in about two weeks. The letter did not explicitly promise that residents could return to their dwellings once those were done.

Pittman said a meeting was held this week in which it was agreed that management would give those residents two extra days to get out. They first received letters dated Nov. 1, ordering them to be out by 8 a.m. this Thursday, Nov. 8. But Pittman said the company extended the deadline to Saturday. And one resident forced out said she believes that, after some notice from law enforcement authorities that proper eviction rules must be followed, some residents were given two extra weeks.

Pittman could not confirm that, but did say she'd asked Jackson County Sheriff Lou Roberts to issue a public statement regarding the eviction notice, which he did.

In it, Roberts emphasized that there is no provision in law for skirting proper eviction procedures in the case of an emergency like Hurricane Michael. He referred landlords to Florida Statute Chapter 83, which lays out regulations related to the landlord-tenant relationship.

Pittman said she understands the dilemma facing renters and their landlords in this situation, where a weather event has occurred that potentially puts residents at risk.

But, she said, neither entity has done enough to help residents find other places to stay while the work is done.

Simply giving them a list of agencies was not enough, she said. Both should be proactively working to find them some alternatives, such as spots in properties the companies own elsewhere, and actively helping them pursue choices.

There are about 45 units at Orchard Pointe and about 30 at Pebble Hill Estates, with an unknown number of children in those dwelling places.

Attempts were made by the Floridan to reach management of both housing providers to get their side of the story, but phone calls were not returned.

Agnes Whiddon Barbee

Agnes Whiddon Barbee of Grand Ridge, Florida, beautifully and peacefully passed away on November 5th, 2018 at the age of 96.

Preceding her passing were James Monroe Barbee, her husband of 63 years, her mother and father Nora and Chester Whiddon, and her five brothers and sisters, Hazel, Junior, Billy, Jimmie and Glen. Throughout her life, Agnes excelled as a mother and as a wife, working at a shipyard during the war marking steel panels destined for the sides of battleships, rolling cigars at a factory in Greensboro and becoming a life-long Cosmetologist with her own custom-built beauty shop.

She is survived by her son Jimmy, her beloved Yorkie Bella Rose, and by her many nieces, nephews and cousins.

A celebration of a life well lived will be held Saturday, November 17th at Marianna Chapel at 1pm Central, with burial at Cypress Cemetery.

Pedestrian seriously hurt in train encounter

From staff reports

A Marianna man is receiving treatment for the serious injuries he apparently suffered when he came in contact with a passing train Thursday afternoon near Orange Street, according to a press release issued Friday morning by the Marianna Police Department.

Authorities identified the injured man as Gregory Brooks. As of shortly after 11 a.m. Friday he was still under the care of medical teams at Tallahassee Memorial Hospital. Officers were called to the scene around 2:28 p.m. Thursday and found Brooks underneath the then-stopped train.

Marianna Fire and Rescue and Jackson County Fire and Rescue arrived on scene within minutes and began rendering aid to the man. They were able to remove him from underneath the train, officials say. He was then taken to TMH by helicopter. This incident is an active investigation and details will be released at a later time, officials said.

Recovery

businesses recover.

The spending plan adopted in September had set aside $30,000 for grants to businesses wanting to improve their exteriors by adding or replacing awnings or by other means. They set a cap of $5,000 per business at that time, with a 50-50 match required. That is typical in the annual spending plan that Main Street usually recommends to the CRA board.

But Wednesday, the board decided to recommend that hundreds of thousands go into that funding category, instead, and to reset the individual cap to $10,000. The board also decided to set a 75-25 match requirement, meaning the organization would reimburse 75 percent of what the approved entities spend on qualifying expenses, instead of reimbursing them at 50 percent of their costs, as is more typically done.

An estimated $270,000 may now be placed in the funding category, but the number was not nailed down to an exact figure Wednesday.

The board will be publicizing the money's availability through various means in the next several days. Potential applicants are urged to make their applications as soon as possible so the board knows the level of need and can make concrete the total of funds to be dedicated for the category.

Among the September recommendations that will be left intact is a $44,000 commitment to paint the iconic Russ House as it is obligated to do that in a partnership with Jackson County as co-managers of that facility. It serves as the community's welcome center.

Things that will likely be put on hold include a new incentive program meant to encourage new business openings, a sidewalk repair plan in the CRA, the purchase of some more new street sign poles within it, and another phase in an ongoing utilities relocation project.

The reallocation plan is expected to go before the CRA/Marianna City Commission board in early December.

CRA funds are derived from taxes. The CRA was established in the early 1990s. A baseline property value of each parcel within its borders was established at that time. When property values increase and generate more tax money than established in the baseline, the extra dollars go into the CRA fund for use within its defined area for improvements that benefit the community within it.

With its borders, of a roughly rectangular shape, it runs from the Russ House south to the Partenza business on U.S. 90 and includes Jackson Street and areas east of there to the Chipola River, then north to Broad Street, taking in Rivertown Community Church, and going east from Broad to Caledonia, then north to Clinton Street, then west to Wynn Street, and on to Sylvia and surrounding streets, then back to the Russ House.

In advocating for the change in spending priorities, which was approved unanimously by the board, Main Street board member Paul Donofro said the Marianna business community is now "at a crossroads" and that putting more money into the grants for businesses could be the difference-maker as companies decide whether to call it quits or forge ahead and reopen. Donofro, whose comments were met with nods of the head from those assembled, said he feared that, without such help on the table, downtown Marianna could "revert to the status of the 1990s - a dead downtown."

Main Street Marianna Executive Director Charlotte Brunner echoed such thoughts. "Main Street has been in the community for 26 years. It brought life back into downtown. Now we're in a heartbreaking situation. But we're a small but strong community."

"We need to do all we can to help."

Brunner said CRA funds can only be used for the exterior - and that includes roofs.

Some were not certain that roof improvements were actually eligible, and there was a call to double-check on that.

In the night's discussion, business owners were encouraged to keep their receipts for exterior improvements made as the days and weeks go forward, in case those are eligible for a share of the CRA money.

Brunner also encouraged those attending to spread the word to their business friends located within the CRA borders. Main Street expects the CRA to act on the recommended spending plan changes on Dec. 4, and encourages businesses in the designated area to keep watching Main Street Marianna online for more information as deadlines and other specifics are shared.

with a molding house under a lease that does not cover the extensive damage.

While neighbors evacuated, the Petroziello family decided to stay put. Ronald considered his experiences with floods and blizzards back home, and thought he had already experienced the worst of what Mother Nature habitually flaunts at the most inconvenient times.

It didn't take long for Ronald to realize he had made a mistake.

"I wouldn't wish this experience on my worst enemy. It sounded like a big freight train or a jet engine coming through with winds that shook our house. You just feel hopeless," he said.

The family had no choice but to duck and cover in a family dog pile of sorts. Diana had no recollection of the mammoth tree that once towered over the residence being uprooted and slammed into the side of the home, claiming the sheer sound of the wind masked the crackling sound trees make when they give way and break.

Today, a month after the storm, the family is still surviving though they have been stripped of their livelihood.

Dinner is now cooked on the grill outside or eaten cold. Showering is more like an ice bath and only done when absolutely necessary. The still, soft silence of the night is now drowned out by the hum of a generator that is constantly running and costs the family $250 a week to maintain.

It is far from the Florida move of luxury the Petroziellos envisioned.

Though the family is making progress to the home on their own, Ronald said he feels abandoned by FEMA and his insurance.

"We made it out alive and the rest we can make good again in time," he said. "But, the trouble is we're not getting any help. FEMA won't help us, I mean no help because we only have a little bit of renters insurance — they won't help us. I've never heard of such a thing. People don't help people here. Other than the churches that come around, they're a blessing."

Numbers released by FEMA indicate many are being helped, although it may be difficult to reach all residents affected. According to FEMA, 10,535 residents have registered for federal assistance and $9,941,407 in individual aid has been approved. FEMA said more than 2,000 residents have visited the agency's disaster recovery center in Marianna.

Just down the street, businesses are suffering losses as well.

Most stores and restaurants have power and are slowly inching their way back to life, but Chevron owner Mohammed Shahjahn feels there is no hope in sight.

The storm nearly destroyed the entire structure that now looks like a scene from a post-apocalyptic movie. However, the convenience shop of the gas station still remains, and is currently Shahjahn's only source of income for the foreseeable future.

All four of the gas pumps at the station are out of service, and he said insurance payouts are diminishing Shahjahn's chances of ever recovering in the same way surrounding businesses will.

"We are still struggling because this is the busiest choice for gas in Marianna. They advertise us on the

The store owner said his insurance payout has not come through, so the site is not able to transfer gas or sell it. Most of the store fell victim to Michael and was blown away, and without money from the insurance coverage, Shahjahn said the status of the station cannot change.

"I don't even have enough from my own pocket to get things up and running again while I wait for the check. All I can do is take it day by day and hope someone comes to help us," Shahjahn said. "But we are a month since the storm, and no one has helped us."

The single red rose in a vase is there in honor of the lives and service soldiers missing in action, and of their loved ones who keep the faith as they still wait for answers. The red ribbon tied around the vase shows the continued determination to account for the missing. A lemon slice at each bread plate is to remind all of the bitter fate of those captured and missing in a foreign land. A pinch of salt recalls the tears endured by those missing and by their families who seek answers. The Bible represents the strength gained through faith to sustain the lost soldiers of America. # Lady Bulldogs ready to get back on court

Marianna girls basketball coach Charles Brown works with the Lady Bulldogs on Wednesday night.

MARK SKINNER/FLORIDAN

From staff reports

The Marianna Lady Bulldogs basketball team will be starting its season Monday with a game against Bethlehem at 7 p.m.

The Bulldogs varsity squad had a 15-6 season last year and this year's team is looking very competitive to Coach Charles Brown, he said.

The team will have seven seniors with playing experience from last year — the largest group of seniors he has had on the team, Brown said.

While most of the team is made up of returning players, the younger players are very athletic and are playing well, he added.

"To me, we have great chemistry. They are working hard together," Brown said. "They are competing for positions."

"Right now that's the biggest things," he added. "No one is complacent with their spot; no one is feeling that they are guaranteed a spot. They are fighting for playing time, and they are fighting to win."

The team will be fielding a varsity and a JV squad. He expects the varsity to have 14 members with the JV having 12 or 13.

Monday's game is part of the Bulldog Tipoff tournament.

Sneads will also be playing Monday with a game against Rutherford at 5:30 p.m.

On Thursday, Sneads plays Bethlehem at 5:30 p.m. and Marianna plays Rutherford at 7 p.m.

Cottondale girls basketball coach Shan Pittman talks to the Lady Hornets' seniors on Wednesday.

Cottondale opens new year at home versus Wewa

From staff reports

The Cottondale Lady Hornets basketball team will kick off its season Tuesday with a home game against Wewa.

This year's team is expected to have a shallow bench, but it will be dominated by very experienced players, according to Head Coach Shan Pittman.

While attrition and displacement caused by Hurricane Michael are keeping the roster light, the team didn't lose any players to graduation and all four juniors returned to play their senior years, said Pittman.

These veteran seniors have been playing since middle school and were part of the Hornets' much-improved 2016-17 team, Pittman added.

This is the first time in many years that Pittman has had so many of her experienced core players return, she said.

"They have a positive outlook, but I can tell they are nervous about the low numbers."

This year the Hornets will only be fielding a varsity squad.

Tuesday's game against Wewa is part of a two-day preseason classic at Cottondale High School.

After the CHS-Wewa game, Graceville will play Altha at 6 p.m.

Day Two will be Thursday, when Chipleys will play Wewa at 4:30 p.m. and Cottondale will play Altha at 6 p.m.

Colts' revamped line studies hard for test against Jaguars

BY MICHAEL MAROT
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indianapolis Colts spent their offseason cramming for Sunday's test.

They understood that to ascend in the AFC South, they needed a bigger, stronger offensive line, better coaching and different study habits. So far, they've aced it.

Now they face their biggest challenge: Jacksonville's daunting defense.

"We don't need any incentive. It's the NFL, we go out there, it's our job to protect the quarterback," longtime left tackle Anthony Castonzo said. "The past is the past, we're going to try the best we can."

Just about anything would be an upgrade over what's happened lately against the Jaguars.

When these teams previously met, late last season, the Jaguars finished with four sacks — a significant improvement over the 10 sacks Indy allowed six weeks earlier last season.

Those 14 sacks accounted for more than one-fourth of Indy's season total, showing general manager Chris Ballard where the Colts needed to focus their attention to get back into the division race.

Ballard found two starters in the draft, left guard Quenton Nelson in the first round and right tackle Braden Smith in the second. He added right guard Matt Sluason in free agency. Center Ryan Kelly returned to form following an injury-filled 2017 season, and even after Sluason went down with a back injury the Colts have managed to find solid replacements.

As a result, Andrew Luck has been sacked just 10 times all season, none in his past 154 attempts — the longest stretch of his pro career.

Despite being ranked No. 1 against the pass and No. 2 in total defense, only seven teams have fewer sacks than the Jags (19) and only three teams have produced fewer turnovers (seven).

It explains why the Jags (3-5) have lost four straight and, like the Colts, are 2½ games behind division leader Houston.

Coach Doug Marrone doesn't expect this week's challenge to get any easier, especially against an opponent hoping to ace its biggest test of the season.

Carolina Panthers cornerback Donte Jackson (26) intercepts a pass intended for Tampa Bay Buccaneers wide receiver DeSean Jackson (11) during the game in Charlotte, N.C., last Sunday.

Frustrated WR Jackson not giving up on Bucs playoff hopes

BY FRED GOODALL
The Associated Press

TAMPA — DeSean Jackson's frustration grows by the loss.

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers have dropped five of six games following a 2-0 start, and the veteran receiver doesn't want anyone to buy the notion that all it'll take to make him happy is to catch more passes Sunday against the Washington Redskins.

The Bucs (3-5) haven't made the playoffs since 2007, and the only way to change that trend is to start winning.

Jackson, who signed with Tampa Bay as a free agent in 2017 after spending the previous three seasons with the Redskins, thinks he can make a difference. He fielded questions this week for the first time since he reportedly asked to be traded last month.

"Whatever them conversations were, they were between us," Jackson, when asked if he approached general manager Jason Licht before the Oct. 30 NFL trade deadline.

The 11th-year pro has rebounded from a subpar debut with Tampa Bay a year ago to average 22.4 yards per reception in 2018.

Through eight games, Jackson has 28 catches for 626 yards and four touchdowns, including a 60-yard scoring reception against Cincinnati that gave him the most TDs of 60-plus yards (24) in NFL history.

"It's just knowing what's in this locker room, knowing the players we have all across the board. ... That's been more of the frustration for me," Jackson said. "It's not individual. It's more (about) accomplishing what we all want to accomplish."

The NFC East-leading Redskins (5-3) are coming off a lopsided loss to Atlanta that snapped a three-game winning streak.

Packers hope to bounce back against Dolphins' pick-happy D

BY GENARO C. ARMAS
The Associated Press

GREEN BAY, Wis. — One team is starting a backup at quarterback but still above .500. The other boasts one of the NFL's best quarterbacks, yet has a losing record.

It's a topsy-turvy matchup when the Miami Dolphins visit the Green Bay Packers on Sunday.

Brock Osweiler will make a fifth straight start at quarterback for the Dolphins with Ryan Tannehill nursing a shoulder injury. Two-time NFL MVP Aaron Rodgers seems to be getting healthier after hurting his left knee in the Packers' season opener against the Chicago Bears.

Advantage Packers on offense, at least on paper.

Yet for whatever reasons, what should be a prolific unit isn't clicking consistently for the Packers (3-4-1), especially in the fourth quarters of their last two losses.

"Yeah, it's definitely frustrating, especially when you've got the talent we do," receiver Davante Adams said. "We just need a little bit of flow and consistency, and I think that's what's going to get this offense moving in the right direction."

It's little consolation that the losses have come against two of the league's best teams, the Rams and Patriots. Miscues on special teams, offense and defense have caught up to the Packers to contribute to the stinging defeats.

Green Bay may need a "run the table" type of streak to get into the post-season. That phrase uttered by Rodgers turned into a catchword in 2016 when the Packers won eight straight games to go from 4-6 to the NFC title game.

"We're focused on winning No. 4. That's all we're talking about right now," coach Mike McCarthy said. "We improved as a football team the last two weeks, but you have to play your best football coming down the stretch, and that's clearly been evident the last two weeks."

The Dolphins (5-4) relied on a resilient defense to beat the struggling New York Jets 13-6. Miami had four interceptions and four sacks while holding the Jets to 2 of 15 on third and fourth downs.

It's a nice cushion with Osweiler making another start. The Dolphins are 2-2 with Osweiler behind center, averaging 22 points a game.

"Any time you play a quarterback that's as special as Aaron is, you want to limit the amount of possessions that he's able to have," Osweiler said.

"We know offensively this week it's very important for us to sustain drives, get first downs and try to be in control of that clock."

Savoy helps No. 17 Florida State beat Florida

BY BOB FERRANTE
The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE — Florida State reached the Elite Eight in March with a tenacious defense. The Seminoles opened the season with more of the same, frustrating their in-state rival from the opening tip.

P.J. Savoy scored 20 points with five 3-pointers, Trent Forrest added 13 points and five assists, and No. 17 Florida State opened with an 81-60 win over Florida on Tuesday night.

Terance Mann had nine points and a team-high nine rebounds for the Seminoles, who won their fifth straight game against Florida. They led 31-20 at the half and never looked back, leading by as many as 35 points and using an aggressive defense to stifle the Gators.

"It starts with the Seminole defense," Florida coach Mike White said. "These guys are tough and long. Unbelievably long, of course, with (7-foot-4 Christ) Koumadje on the court. And disciplined. It's no wonder that they had the year that they had last year."

Florida State dominated by making 23 of 48 shots from the floor and 11 of 23 3-pointers. But the Seminoles also had nine steals and held Florida to just 19 of 53 from the floor.

Florida State's P.J. Savoy works against the defense of Florida's Kevaughn Allen during the college basketball game in Tallahassee on Tuesday. Florida State won 81-60.

It was just one game in what is a long season, but it was an impressive debut for a Florida State squad that is deep but was without star forward Phil Cofer.

"We're just starting to figure out who we are," Florida State coach Leonard Hamilton said. "We played a good basketball game tonight against a good basketball team. But we still have a long way to go. We don't want to get too far ahead of ourselves."

Florida State nearly secured the most lopsided victory in a rivalry that dates to 1951. The largest prior rout for the Seminoles was an 88-63 win in December 1969.

Deaundrae Ballard scored 13 points off the bench and freshman Andrew Nembhard had 12 points for Florida. The Gators also made just 6 of 24 3-pointers.

Florida had won 27 straight season openers but was outmatched from the start. Florida State led by as many as 35 points, 74-39, after Koumadje's jumper with 5:31 left.

"A little bit shell-shocked," White said. "I did not see that coming. I don't think I've taken a bigger butt-whipping than that. I certainly hope we're not that bad. Just not a very good performance by us, starting with me."

Poll implications

The Seminoles' opening night was impressive, especially considering they were without their top forward. Florida State could move up a few spots depending on how the first week of the season shakes out.

Protecting home court

Florida State has won 32 of its last 34 home games. The Seminoles have been tough to beat at the Donald L. Tucker Center, with one of their two losses in 2017-18 coming to No. 1 Virginia on Feb. 7.

Learning on the job

Nembhard, a heralded freshman, played 34 minutes and scored 12 points on 4-of-8 shooting for the Gators. He made a pair of 3-pointers but also had four turnovers and four assists. Known for his passing, Nembhard instead was part of a Gators team that had more turnovers (16) than assists (nine).

"We just put a lot of pressure on the ball, gave him a lot of problems," Mann said. "Kind of took him out of the stuff that they run."

Big picture

Florida: The Gators never found an offensive rhythm early, committing eight turnovers and scoring just 20 first-half points on 6 of 25 shooting (24 percent). Hudson (eight points) and Nembhard (six points) provided the majority of the early scoring. Florida senior guard KeVaughn Allen, who was 0 for 4 and didn't score a point in 23 minutes, had one of his worst career nights.

Florida State: The Seminoles played four guards most of the night as they began the season without Cofer, who led the team in scoring at 12.8 points per game but is out indefinitely with a foot injury. Every other scholarship player scored as Florida State emptied the bench in the rout.

Sources: Notre Dame QB Wimbush to start for ailing Book

Notre Dame quarterback Brandon Wimbush looks to throw against Vanderbilt during the first half of a college football game in South Bend, Ind., on Sept. 15.

BY RALPH D. RUSSO
The Associated Press

No. 3 Notre Dame will start quarterback Brandon Wimbush against Florida State on Saturday for Ian Book, who is nursing an undisclosed injury, two people familiar with the decision told The Associated Press.

Book is not expected to play after taking a hard hit to the back and ribs last week against Northwestern, according to the people who spoke Thursday on condition of anonymity because no official announcement was made.

Book replaced Wimbush as the starter in the fourth game of the season for the Fighting Irish (9-0, No. 3 CFP). He is completing 74.5 percent of his passes, tops in the FBS, for 1,824 yards, with 15 touchdowns and four interceptions. With Book starting, the Fighting Irish have averaged 38 points per game. They averaged 23.3 in Wimbush's three starts.

Wimbush, a senior, was the starter last season for the Irish, but his inconsistent and inaccurate passing led to coach Brian Kelly making the switch to Book. Wimbush has completed 50.8 percent for his career, with 17 touchdowns and 10 interceptions. He has been an effective runner, with 1,044 yards and 16 touchdowns.

Notre Dame goes into its final home game of the season looking to stay undefeated and in position to reach the College Football Playoff. The Seminoles (4-5) have struggled to defend the pass this season, allowing 23 touchdown throws and 282 yards per game, but they have been stingy against the run (2.84 yards per carry).

"We watched film on them throughout the entire year," Florida State coach Willie Taggart said. "We've seen Wimbush play and know what to expect out of him, too. The offense hasn't changed much from that standpoint."

Florida State has its own uncertainty at quarterback after James Blackman filled in for Deondre Francois last week. Taggart has been noncommittal about his starter, but Francois has said he expects to start.

The Irish finish the season with games against No. 13 Syracuse (7-2) at Yankee Stadium in New York and at Southern California (5-4).

No. 5 Georgia carries on its tradition as Running Back U

BY PAUL NEWBERRY
The Associated Press

ATHENS, Ga. — When Elijah Holyfield was pondering where he wanted to go to college, he certainly took an interest in history.

Specifically, Georgia's long lineage of great running backs.

"It was a very big deal to me. I've watched Georgia football for a long time and I've really loved all the Georgia backs," said Holyfield, son of former heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield. "It had a lot to do with my decision."

From Herschel Walker through the 1-2 punch of Nick Chubb and Sony Michel, the No. 5 Bulldogs might as well be known as Running Back U.

They're living up to reputation again with the current backfield duo of Holyfield and D'Andre Swift.

In last week's pulverizing 34-17 victory over Kentucky, which locked up Georgia's spot in the Southeastern Conference championship game, Swift rushed for 156 yards and two touchdowns, Holyfield tacked on a career-best 115 yards and a score, and the Bulldogs finished with a season-high 331 yards on the ground against one of the nation's top-ranked defenses.

Georgia (8-1, 6-1, No. 5 CFP) leads the SEC in rushing (233.8 yards per game), carrying on a tradition that goes back as far as 1942 Heisman Trophy winner Frank Sinkwich but really picked up steam with the arrival of Herschel Walker.

Walker, who capped his brilliant career by capturing the Heisman in 1982, is still recognized as the greatest back in school history. But he's had plenty of challengers over past 3½ decades.

Since Walker left school a year early to play in the ill-fated United States Football League, seven Georgia running backs have been picked in the first round of the NFL draft — an esteemed list that doesn't even include Terrell Davis, who was only a sixth-rounder but went on to a Hall of Fame career with the Denver Broncos.

More recently, Georgia's pipeline has grown to include Todd Gurley, Sony Michel and Nick Chubb — who actually were on the same team in 2014 and are all now thriving in the NFL. Gurley stars for the Los Angeles Rams, earning All-Pro honors in 2017 and leading the league in rushing this season. Michel is starting for the New England Patriots as a rookie, while Chubb is getting significant playing time with the Cleveland Browns.

Coach Kirby Smart certainly relies on that heritage when he's trying to persuade a high school running back to sign with the Bulldogs.

"I think it helps tremendously to have the guys, the history of Robert Edwards, Garrison Hearst, Terrell Davis, I mean Herschel, just back after back after back after back," Smart said. "Now it's probably more prominent than it's ever been because of the stage that Todd is on and what he's been able to do, and Nick and Sony's exposure last year through the national championship game.

What does the coach tell prospective backs who are considering Georgia?

"If you're a premier back in the country and you say, 'I want to go somewhere that I can learn to play in a pro style, catch the ball in the backfield, and I also want to be able to protect so that I can increase my value, and I also want to have durability where I'm not going to be beat up when I come out of there, there's nowhere better to go," Smart replied.

Georgia running back Elijah Holyfield (13) breaks through the Middle Tennessee defense for a big gain during the game in Athens, Ga., on Sept. 15.

Indeed, Georgia has relied on an abundance of talented running backs the last few seasons.

Previous coach Mark Richt was able to land Gurley and Keith Marshall in the same recruiting class — they were dubbed "Gurshall" in a nod to Walker — though Marshall never realized his full potential because of injuries. Richt pulled off another double-coup when he landed Chubb and Michel.

Holyfield, a junior, signed with the Bulldogs even though he knew he'd spend at least one season playing behind Chubb and Michel (and it wound up being two when both stayed through their full eligibility). Swift came aboard last season, even with all those talented backs on the roster. Zamir White, touted as the nation's top prospects, signed with Georgia coming into this season but was sidelined by a knee injury.

Georgia faces Auburn (6-3, 3-3) on Saturday in the 122nd renewal of the Deep South's oldest rivalry.

The Tigers certainly know what they're up against.

"Swift and Holyfield kind of resemble the backs they've had in the past," defensive tackle Dontavious Russell said. "It's always a challenge."

NOT SO FAST

HARVICK'S PENALTY CHANGES THE STORYLINE HEADING INTO PHOENIX

Kevin Harvick celebrates his victory at Texas on Sunday. A penalty handed out Wednesday by NASCAR took away Harvick's championship berth.

You can look at NASCAR's midweek blowup in one of two ways. You can hew to that old public relations saying: Any publicity is good publicity, as long as you get the name spelled correctly. Or you can say this is bad publicity. Well, everybody's spelling the name right — N-A-S-C-A-R — but this is still bad publicity.

With only one race left to determine three of the final four drivers eligible to win the championship in the season finale, NASCAR announced on Wednesday that this year's dominant driver, Kevin Harvick, has been denied an automatic final four spot because his team cheated in last Sunday's race in Texas, which he won.

Harvick can still make the championship cut, but he has to earn it at Sunday's race in Phoenix. His Texas win still counts in Harvick's and NASCAR's statistics. But it no longer locks him into that final four berth, as would have been the case had he not been driving an illegally aided car.

That's the way the sanctioning body traditionally does things. Whoever wins a race forever remains the winner, but said winner may be docked points, fined and otherwise punished for violations discovered during inspections after the event.

Those postrace inspections include a check at the track, then closer scrutiny after the car has been hauled to NASCAR's Research & Development Center in Concord, N.C. That's where Harvick's Ford was found to have an unapproved spoiler.

The spoiler — the metal flare affixed to the car's trunk to provide critical aerodynamic downforce — is important at a track such as Texas Motor Speedway, where Sunday's race was held and where top speeds surpass 200 mph. Every NASCAR Cup Series car has a spoiler — but it can't vary from the officially approved version.

The victory was Harvick's eighth this season, more than any other driver. It was also the second time his winning car has been found wanting in the R&D inspection.

So on Wednesday, conversation swerved from how great Harvick looked in Texas to how iffy Harvick's win looks, how his season and the sport as a whole are tainted.

Twice NASCAR has caught Harvick's team cheating — infractions serious enough to removed the perks of victory if not the victory itself, and to call for point penalties, fines and suspensions. A fan might reasonably wonder whether Harvick's six other wins are legit.

And what's with an inspection process that takes half a week to complete and have the results announced? With NASCAR bearing down on what's supposed to be a grand finale, we're reminded that fans can't be sure about the validity of a race result for days after the checkered flag waves.

Harvick's punishment jumbled the eight-driver playoff picture.

» Still locked into the final four is Joey Logano, whose win at Martinsville a week earlier withstood all postrace scrutiny.

» Harvick, instead of nailing his spot with the Texas win, sits fourth in the points chase, just 3 points clear of the fifth-place team and in danger of missing the final four. He's been extremely successful at Phoenix, with nine wins including the race just after his Las Vegas infraction. He could win this one, too, and lock up the spot, but a stroke of misfortune could derail his quest for a championship.

» Kyle Busch and Martin Truex Jr. moved ahead of Harvick in the points race, improving their odds of making the final four.

» Kurt Busch and Chase Elliott, respectively 3 and 17 points behind Harvick, now have a much better chance to score enough points to make the cut and oust Harvick.

NASCAR's tough inspections are not a bad thing. Teams have engineers and master mechanics whose intent is to bend, even break, the rules if they can get away with it.

But goofs like the Johnson penalty and taking days to complete the process that resulted in Harvick's punishment leave a stain on the sport.

By the time the series reaches the title-deciding last race a couple of Sundays from now at Homestead-Miami Speedway, fans will want to shake off this week's mess. They will want to watch the race for what it is, see who among the final four prevails.

Then they can wait a few more days to find out if what they saw was real.

The Harvick penalty was a bombshell ruling by NASCAR

NASCAR dropped a black flag on Kevin Harvick this week, altering the playoff picture and sending a dark message to the teams still trying to make the title race.

Harvick has basically had his win at Texas taken away from him. He keeps the trophy and the money, but he loses the automatic spot in the Homestead final, he loses 40 points, which puts him perilously close to elimination this week at

HARD 'N' FAST

BY ED HARDIN
(Greensboro) News & Record

Phoenix, and he loses his crew chief for the rest of the year.

This was a devastating ruling for the Stewart-Haas team and puts a serious burden on the most dominating driver we saw all season.

This was classic old NASCAR, handing down a late-season penalty without many specifics, both to shock the sport and to send the message to the other teams. Harvick's car was found to have an altered spoiler.

But by keeping the specifics private, it suggests something worse was attempted by Rodney Childers and the SHR fabricators.

Whatever it was, NASCAR deemed it to be blatant cheating and an attempt to steal a championship.

The irony is that Harvick is clearly the favorite this week at Phoenix, a track where he has dominated in recent years. Now, he might have to win there to qualify for the championship in a season he's dominated.

This was a bombshell of a ruling by NASCAR, the severity of which the sanctioning body rarely makes. This was along the lines of Michael Waltrip and the mysterious substance in the engine manifold before the 2007 Daytona 500 and the Richard Petty win at Charlotte in 1983 when his engine was found to have enlarged bore and stroke pistons.

This ruling is even more severe because of the timing of it.

Harvick's entire season is in jeopardy now. And his team's reputation has been tarnished. Even if he goes on to win the championship, Harvick will carry the burden of a cheating violation that makes his great season suspicious.

THE RAREST OF THE RARE

What to know about a cancer you may not have heard of

FAMILY FEATURES

A woman celebrating her 40th birthday, a young boy starting second grade or a college grad about to begin his career. All three could develop a rare form of cancer known as epithelioid sarcoma (ES), a form of soft-tissue sarcoma. There is little information available about ES. Patients, advocates, doctors and researchers across the United States are aiming to educate people about this ultra-rare cancer and the unmet need for an effective, tumor-specific treatment. Consider these facts about ES:

What are Soft-Tissue Sarcomas and What is Epithelioid Sarcoma?

Soft-tissue sarcomas (STS) are a type of cancer that occur in tissue like muscle, fat, skin, nerves and blood vessels. There are more than 50 types of STS, including ES, which is a rare form that can occur under the skin in the limbs (such as the arms, hands, legs or feet) or soft tissue in other places like the abdomen. Adults in their 20s and 30s and men, in particular, are more likely to get ES, although it can affect people of all ages and genders, according to research published in the Journal of Clinical and Aesthetic Dermatology.

How Rare is Rare?

According to the American Cancer Society, a rare cancer is defined as fewer than six new diagnoses per 100,000 people per year. ES is an ultra-rare cancer. According to available epidemiology and case reports, it is estimated about 600 people are properly diagnosed in the U.S. and Europe each year.

What are the Most Common Types of ES and How Do They Impact Diagnosis?

ES can take two forms:

- Distal-type: Classic form, typically affects teenagers and young adults.
  - Typically forms under the skin in areas like hands, legs and feet.
  - Can be mistaken for another skin condition like an infected wart or a wound that won't heal, which may delay diagnosis.
- Proximal-type: Rarer form, mainly affects adults and is more aggressive.
  - Typically forms in central areas of the body like the abdomen.

- Can be mistaken for menstrual cramps or an upset stomach, making identification and diagnosis more difficult.

Dealing with a Diagnosis?

Due to its rarity, harmless appearance in its initial stages and occurrence in young people, ES is often misdiagnosed, according to the Liddy Shriver Sarcoma Initiative. For this reason, the Sarcoma Foundation of America recommends checking often for lumps and bumps in places they shouldn't be.

For people faced with a sarcoma diagnosis, it's important to get a second opinion from a sarcoma specialist. These specialists have extensive knowledge of STS and can determine what form of sarcoma one may have, what stage it is and the best course of treatment. The specialist may confirm the diagnosis with a physical examination, a scan or a tissue sample (biopsy) of the area.

It's common to feel a range of emotions after a diagnosis of ES, according to Clear View Health Partners, including:

- Fear
- Denial
- Frustration
- Anxiety
- Hope that treatment will be successful
- Determination to beat ES

What Treatment Options are Available?

Treatment options depend on a variety of factors, including the location of the tumor, tumor staging and whether the disease has metastasized or spread to other parts of the body.

For patients with early stage ES, many elect to have surgery to remove the tumor, which may precede or be followed by radiation therapy or chemotherapy treatment, according to the Journal of Clinical and Aesthetic Dermatology. If the cancer returns or spreads, a patient may undergo radiation therapy and chemotherapy. New treatment options are being studied through clinical research, which is why seeking a specialist in the field is important if one is faced with a diagnosis.

As with many cancers, early detection is important and can increase survival or successful treatment. Typically, the distal form of ES is associated with more favorable survival rates than the proximal form.

AN ES DIAGNOSIS JOURNEY

In the spring of 2008, Maria Voermans' 4-year-old daughter requested an "airplane ride," and as Voermans lifted the young girl up with her legs, she had to make an "emergency landing" because of some sudden and significant pain in her upper right thigh. After a few months, the pain persisted. Voermans continued to jog and play sand volleyball, thinking nothing of it. At the recommendation of her primary care physician, she took some anti-inflammatories and tried to rest, which wasn't easy to do as a single mother of two young children.

Two more months went by and her leg caused increasing problems. She could feel something in her leg, but never considered it a "lump" because it was not visible on the outside. Voermans took matters into her own hands and visited a sports medicine orthopedic specialist for further testing.

An MRI found a mass in her right leg and she was referred to one of the few musculoskeletal oncologists in Wisconsin, her home state. He ordered a biopsy, which on Voermans' youngest daughter's third birthday confirmed her worst fear: it was a rare form of cancer called proximal-type epithelioid sarcoma, and it was stage three. Her biggest concern was not living to experience future holidays, birthdays, graduations and other life milestones with her daughters.

Voermans underwent chemotherapy, radiation therapy and had surgery to remove the tumor. As of July 2018, Voermans reports the cancer has not returned.

Today, she's a wellness coordinator supporting other people diagnosed with cancer who are undergoing treatment or post-treatment. She's able to use her own cancer journey to provide empathy to others, and it's brought satisfaction to the whole experience.

Sara Gilbert stars in "The Conners"

'The Conners' brings back beloved characters

By Kyla Brewer
TV Media

Sitcoms are a staple of prime time, peppering just about every night of the week. But few of this season's sitcoms have generated as much buzz as "The Conners."

Since losing his wife, Dan Conner (John Goodman, "The Big Lebowski," 1998) has been soldiering on as the head of the household in "The Conners," which airs Tuesday, Nov. 13, on ABC. The show is a spinoff of ABC's "Roseanne," a comedy about a working-class family in the fictional small town of Lanford, Illinois, which aired from 1988 to 1997, and again last spring in a much lauded revival.

"Roseanne" centered on Conner family matriarch Roseanne (Roseanne Barr, "The Roseanne Barr Show"), but a now-famous racist Tweet from the comedian about Valerie Jarrett, senior adviser to former president Barack Obama, prompted ABC to cancel that show in May, despite its stellar ratings. Three weeks after Barr was ousted from the series, the network announced plans for a spinoff featuring all of the original cast with the exception of Barr.

Fans and critics wondered how "The Conners" would fare without the actress, but so far, things are looking good for the comedy. In a review of the show's debut episode on rollingstone.com, TV critic Alan Sepinwall expressed hope for the new incarnation of the series sans the controversial comedian.

"There are enough sturdy characters and performances here to move on without her," wrote Sepinwall, "and the premiere felt more focused than many of the episodes from the spring."

In addition to Goodman, Sara Gilbert ("The Talk") returns as Dan and Roseanne's youngest daughter, Darlene, who's set to take on an even larger role in "The Conners." Original series star Alicia Goranson ("Boys Don't Cry," 1999) is back as the eldest, Becky, and Michael Fishman ("Undrafted," 2016) once again appears as Roseanne and Dan's son, D.J. Emmy winner Laurie Metcalf ("The Big Bang Theory"), who was a breakout star of the original show, reprises her role as Roseanne's flighty sister, Jackie, in "The Conners."

The cast of the new comedy also includes a number of performers who weren't part of the original series but appeared in last spring's revival. Emma Kenney ("Shameless") portrays Darlene's daughter, Harris Conner-Healy. Ames McNamara ("At Home With Amy Sedaris") portrays Darlene's son, Mark. Their father is Darlene's ex, David, played by Johnny Galecki ("The Big Bang Theory"), who will guest star in the show. Young actress Jayden Rey ("Unforgettable") plays D.J.'s daughter, Mary, while Maya Lynne Robinson ("Mom") stars as D.J.'s wife, Geena.

As far as the ratings go, the debut of "The Conners" performed fairly well against the competition, drawing more than 10 million viewers. The show may not have reached the peak of the revival's debut ratings last spring, which attracted 18.44 million initial viewers, but the premiere was still among the top-rated shows of the night, behind only CBS's "NCIS" in its time-slot. Interestingly, the spinoff's premiere was on par with the spring finale of "Roseanne," so it looks as if plenty of fans are still interested in the Conners' story.

Just like its predecessor, "The Conners" is set to tackle hard-hitting subjects as the Conners work through their grief after the death of Roseanne from an accidental opioid overdose. The debut addressed not only the subject of opioid addiction and abuse in America but also the desperate lengths underinsured, financially strapped people may go to as they try to compensate for their lack of coverage. Roseanne, as it was discovered in the premiere, was part of a neighborhood network of people who would trade and share medicine. After the show's debut, Barr was critical of how her character was killed off, saying the opioid overdose "lent an unnecessary grim and morbid dimension to an otherwise happy family show," in an official statement on Facebook with Rabbi Shmuley Boteach.

During its 10-episode first season, "The Conners" is expected to continue the conversation about a variety of issues facing working-class Americans. Along with typical family dilemmas such as financial strain and co-parenting tensions, the show will look at gender issues through the eyes of Dan's gender non-conforming grandson, Mark.

The future success of the series rests very much on the shoulders of the cast, particularly the very capable shoulders of Goodman. He won a Best Actor Golden Globe for his work as Dan during the original series run and went on to enjoy a successful film career, often collaborating with acclaimed filmmakers the Coen Brothers. His credits include "O Brother, Where Art Thou" (2000), "Monsters, Inc." (2001) and "10 Cloverfield Lane" (2016).

Recurring characters from the original series will also appear in the show's debut season, including stage legend Estelle Parsons ("Bonnie & Clyde," 1967) as Roseanne and Jackie's mother, Beverly. Natalie West ("The Poker House," 2008) reprises her role as Roseanne's friend Crystal and James Pickens Jr. ("Grey's Anatomy") is expected to appear as family friend Chuck Mitchell.

As the Conners and their friends forge ahead through their grief, life will go on in Lanford, and the family will once again tackle challenges with love and laughter. Check in with Dan and his brood in a new episode of "The Conners," airing Tuesday, Nov. 13, on ABC.

The season for sweets: 'Holiday Baking Championship' returns to Food Network

Host Jesse Palmer with some of the "Holiday Baking Championship" contestants

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Thanksgiving is pretty much the unofficial kickoff to the holiday season, but Food Network's been quick out of the gate this year with both returning favorites and new surprises already underway a few weeks before Turkey Day. This year's "Holiday Baking Championship," always an audience favorite, got underway last week and is currently airing Monday evenings.

Former NFL quarterback Jesse Palmer returns to host this year's competition, which brings nine of the country's best holiday bakers together to vie for a $25,000 prize. That's a lot of dough, especially at this time of year, but earning it won't be easy with a series of insidiously tricky baking challenges standing between the contestants and the prize.

This week's episode, airing Monday, Nov. 12, gets the contestants into the Thanksgiving spirit a few weeks early. In the pre-heat challenge, the eight remaining bakers are divided into teams to make their favorite varieties of Thanksgiving pie. The Thanksgiving theme continues in the main heat challenge, in which the bakers are given a variety of seasonal ingredients and tasked with making beautiful stuffed cakes.

As in years past, baking experts Duff Goldman ("Ace of Cakes"), Nancy Fuller ("Farmhouse Rules") and Lorraine Pascale ("Worst Bakers in America") serve as judges, keeping a watchful eye on the contestants' every move and sampling all of their sweet and savory creations before deciding at the end of each episode which one of them has to hang up his or her apron for good.

It's a brutally tough competition, but it's also filled with holiday cheer. Over the course of the next several weeks, the bakers will be challenged to come up with seasonal desserts that make cranberries the star, make sweet treats that combat the post-turkey dinner sleepiness by incorporating coffee, build cream puff displays inspired by holiday decorations and even make beautiful hand-painted eggnog cakes that taste as good as they look.

It's the most wonderful time of the year, especially for lovers of baked goods. "Holiday Baking Championship" currently airs Mondays on Food Network.

hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: Has the show "Life in Pieces" been canceled? We really enjoyed it and I keep looking for it to reappear.

A: It's understandable you'd be worried about the fate of "Life in Pieces." Since the end of season 3 in the spring, there's been an explosion of news about new projects the cast members and producers are taking on. That's usually the first (and sometimes only) sign of a cancellation. But not this time.

"Life in Pieces" has been renewed for a fourth season, which will premiere sometime over the winter (there's no firm date yet).

The announcement glut can be explained by the fact that the show has reached the stage where it can survive without quite as much attention from its producers. And with a huge ensemble cast, it's always afforded its stars a little extra free time beyond what they'd get on another show.

It's usually around the season 2 or 3 mark that producers start launching new projects, once the show has developed a bit of a formula and a solid production team that knows the show well.

"Life in Pieces" director and executive producer Jason Winer is at that stage. Now that the series has hit its stride, he can turn his attention to new shows. But instead of taking a one-at-a-time approach, he's taking on a bunch at once. He's co-producing a sitcom called "Single Parents," which launched in September on ABC, and he also has deals for two others, drama series "The Family Practice" and the working-mom sitcom "Woman Up."

For the latter series, he's also enlisted the talents of "Life in Pieces" star Zoe Lister-Jones.

She's not the only "Pieces" actress doing double duty, either. Co-star Hunter King has a pretty weird arrangement with "The Young and the Restless" where she comes and goes in the role of Summer Newman in that series in between shooting "Life in Pieces." Indeed, the soap series brought in an understudy to play Summer for just a couple of days this fall while King zipped away to shoot her other show.

Meanwhile, Winer's fellow "Life in Pieces" producer Aaron Kaplan has also announced a new family-themed sitcom, "Carol's Second Act," starring Patricia Heaton in the title role.

Q: What happened to Christopher Kimball on the "Cook's Country" and "America's Test Kitchen" programs?

A: The relationship between Christopher Kimball and the food-media empire he helped to create went sour seemingly overnight, as things often do when they're left out too long.

Their relationship was out very long indeed — Kimball hosted PBS's "America's Test Kitchen" (and later its spinoff, "Cook's Country") since its debut in 2000.

He also helped create the company behind it, Boston Common Press, in the early 1990s. Kimball and Boston Common created a food-media empire together, until 2015 when Kimball was ousted from the company under contentious circumstances.

He hosted one more season of both shows in 2016 and maintained a minority stake in the company, but they were no longer on good terms.

This was proven late in 2016, when the company sued Kimball for trying to "literally and conceptually rip off" the "America's Test Kitchen" format for his new project, "Milk Street."

"Milk Street" has at least followed the same approach to multi-platform publishing: Kimball quickly launched a magazine, TV show, podcast, cooking school and even a set of cookware, all under the "Milk Street" brand (named after the company's address in Boston).

Fittingly, the nasty breakup played out in multimedia as well, with each side publishing articles explaining their positions. The highlight was probably the website launched by Boston Common Press, WhyWeAreSuingChristopherKimball.com, which is pretty well exactly what it says on the package.

Q: I was just watching reruns of "Night Court" and I was wondering, why did they switch bailiffs so often?

A: The revolving door of female bailiffs in "Night Court" is one of the few sad details of that otherwise whimsical show.

Longtime TV writer and actress Selma Diamond originated the role, playing it as a smoking, gravel-voiced and world-weary cynic, also named Selma. But she died of lung cancer after the second season.

They brought in Florence Halop, who filled the role as a similarly cynical senior citizen. Sadly, she also died, also of lung cancer, after just one season.

Once the sting had died a little for fans and producers of the show, it came to be known among both groups as the bailiff's curse.

Marsha Warfield stepped in to the role next, and cut a very different figure: she was a young black woman who, rather than being a sarcastic joke-cracker, played it as a stone-faced hard case (she kept the world weariness). She stayed in the role until the end of the show in 1992.

In an interview with People magazine partway through her run, Warfield joked about being the one to break the curse. "There's no way to say this without sounding callous, but if the two women before me had been 33-year-old black women, I would have been really nervous about taking the part."

The Tonight Show With Jimmy Fallon (repeat)

Today, President Trump met with Kanye West at the White House. Incredible. If you told me 10 years ago that Trump and Kanye would be meeting at the White House, I would've said, "Oh my God — Kanye becomes president?!"

That's right, Trump met with Kanye West at the White House. And while they spoke, both Trump and Kanye's assistants looked at each other and said, "Man, I thought MY boss was nuts."

Facebook will now let you launch group chats with 250 people at once. The feature even has a new name: Hell.

I saw that President Trump is on the campaign trail, and he's spending the night in Las Vegas. Which means tomorrow he'll wake up in a hotel room with a tiger, a baby and a face tattoo.

Jimmy Kimmel Live

We are on the road this week, coming to you from the Howard Gilman Opera House at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. I'm glad to be back. I had to come back. I still had $8 left on my Metrocard.

You know, there's a perception that New Yorkers are rude, and that really isn't true. There's just not a lot of phony chitchat that goes on in other places.

We are here for a week — until Friday night. This is a limited engagement. Just like Pete Davidson and Ariana Grande.

It's beautiful in Brooklyn this time of year. In L.A., the only time the trees turn color is if they're on fire.

New York rats are so bold. You know, in other cities, they'll hide in your attic. Whereas in New York, they'll eat your pizza on Instagram.

Late Night With Seth Meyers (repeat)

According to a former Yale classmate, Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh once set off a bar fight in college after confusing another patron for the lead singer of the band UB40. And if you have any idea who that is, you also be 40.

The White House announced today that President Trump will donate his second quarter salary to the Small Business Administration. And Trump knows a thing or two about how to run a small business. "Step one: start by inheriting a large business."

According to a new poll, when taking a U.S. citizenship test, only 24 per cent could correctly identify one thing Benjamin Franklin was famous for. Even worse, 36 per cent asked, "Is that the guy 'Hamilton' is about?"

A team of scientists recently completed an experiment studying the effects of the drug MDMA on octopuses. Which was part of a bigger experiment of what happens when you give scientists LSD.

Weekend Update With Colin Jost and Michael Che (repeat)

Based on his testimony, I guess Kavanaugh thought the hearing was about whether he was cool in high school. I gotta say, you're not really helping yourself in a drunken assault case when you yell about how much you like drinking and how strong you were at the time.

You know, if you have calendars from 1982, it does not prove you're innocent. It proves you're a hoarder. You know when most people throw out their calendars from 1982? 1983.

To be fair to Judge Kavanaugh, it's insane that he has to answer questions about his high school yearbook. If you looked into anybody's high school yearbook, you'd find something super embarrassing. Like, I regret that my senior quote was a Smash Mouth lyric, and I very much regret that my hairstyle was "The Rachel."

Speaking of drinking games, if you took a shot for every time Kavanaugh lied about his yearbook, you'd be as drunk as Brett Kavanaugh was in the summer of '82.

Kavanaugh could be the deciding vote on issues concerning the very people he makes feel unsafe. It'd be like letting the Coyote decide on Road Runner's rights.

The Meg

While exploring the deepest part of the Pacific Ocean, a team of scientists encounters a massive creature that attacks their submersible and causes it to lose contact with the surface base. Jonas Taylor (Statham), a man who previously encountered something similar in the ocean's depths, is summoned to help stage a daring rescue operation, but when the mission goes awry, a prehistoric predator that's been trapped in the deep for millions of years is let loose, making its way to the surface and hungering to take a bite out of a planet that hasn't seen a predator of its monstrous size in a very, very long time.
Director: Jon Turteltaub. Stars: Jason Statham, Rainn Wilson, Bingbing Li, Cliff Curtis, Winston Chao, Shuya Sophia Cai, Ruby Rose. 2018. 113 min. Action.

Alpha

A prehistoric hunting expedition ends in disaster when adolescent boy Keda (Smit-McPhee) is knocked off a cliff by a stampeding herd of bison. Left for dead by his tribe, the boy struggles to make his way back to his village despite his injuries, and when he's attacked by a pack of wolves, he succeeds in fighting them off, injuring one of the animals in the process. He takes pity on the wolf and nurses it back to health, forming a bond between species that changes the course of both of their lives.
Director: Albert Hughes. Stars: Kodi Smit-McPhee, Jóhannes Haukur Jóhannesson, Marcin Kowalczyk. 2018. 96 min. Adventure.

Mile 22

When foreign police officer Li Noor (Uwais) offers the United States important information in exchange for passage out of his country, elite special agent James Silva (Wahlberg) is sent to Indonesia to collect him. With deadly enemy agents willing to do anything to prevent Noor from escaping the country with the information that he holds, the bodies begin to pile up as Silva fights his way through the city streets, determined to get his charge to an airstrip 22 miles away, no matter the cost.
Director: Peter Berg. Stars: Mark Wahlberg, Lauren Cohan, Iko Uwais, John Malkovich, Ronda Rousey, Sam Medina. 2018. 94 min. Action.
