Local cold-storage firm won't pay property taxes on improvements for 10 years.

United States Cold Storage received tax exemption on $15.2 million of facility improvements as the company plans to expand its business in Columbia County. The agreement was finalized at Thursday's county commission meeting.

The tax exemption will be in effect for 10 years, the maximum time allowable by state law.

Jesse Quillin, economic development director, said the company plans to add 105,000 square feet of new space, which will require the company to hire 15 additional employees at a pay rate of 148 percent of the county average.

The company will still pay property taxes on its existing property totaling about $216,000, Quillin said.

The Economic Development Advisory Board recommended the county commission approve the project at their last board meeting.

The tax exemption will be for 100 percent of the value added to the property by the $15.2 million improvements.

MAKING SURE THE BEAT GOES ON

LCMS band looking for an upgrade

'We can't even buy this stuff anymore because it's obsolete,' says director David Chandler.

By DEREK GILLIAM

The director of the Lake City Middle School band has a goal to improve the sound of the drumline, the heart beat of any band, and make it safer for his students to perform in parades, concerts and football games.

"Some of these drums sound like junk. You can't tune them right. They don't sound like they're supposed to," 12-year-old LCMS band member Camren Hinton said.

Hanging by the chalk board are five metal harnesses. The padding has been compressed from years of use. The harness is used when the drumline takes the show to the streets.

"That one slips," Celeste Archer, 13, said while pointing at one of the harnesses.

Then she thinks about the rest of the harnesses. "They all slip," she said.

David Chandler, director of the band, said the harnesses distribute the weight of the drum across the body, making it easier to carry the drum in parades or at football games. When a harness slips, the weight of the drum isn't evenly spread out across the student's frame.

"It's essentially sheet metal on the shoulder, and these things are especially uncomfortable," he said. "We can't even buy this stuff anymore because it's obsolete." Chandler said the students raised $800 last year through car washes and donations in hopes to one day replacing their equipment. While

County approves new pay grades

Commission also gives OK to one cent increase in bed tax.

By DEREK GILLIAM

The division managers for the county may receive raises after the county commission approved placing them in new pay grades. When the positions were created, the county commission provided funding of $50,000 for increase compensation for the new positions in the next budget.

Both the administration manager and the safety manager salary will now fall somewhere between $57,678 and $86,507. The operations manager was kept as an exempt position with his salary falling outside the county pay plan and will be negotiable.

Lisa Roberts, administration manager, heads 10 departments and supervises 55 employees. David Kraus, safety manager, heads seven departments and supervises 76 employees. Kevin Kirby, operations manager, heads six departments and supervises 116 employees.

A consultant provided recommendations to the commissioners on how big a raise they should be given.

County Manager Dale Williams said he spoke to the division managers separately and provided them with his assessment on their performance. One of the division managers brought the consultant's recommendations and the county did not spend any money on those recommendations.

Commissioner Bucky Nash said he would rather see salary increases come from the bottom up. He sited the number of county employees making less than $20,000.

In the county 20 employees make less than $20,000 and 131 employees make between 20,001 and $39,999.

Williams said he's "100 percent" for providing raises to employee at the bottom, but said an across the board 3 percent pay increase would cost the county between $600,000 and $650,000. Williams said finding $100,000 of recurring funds would be possible and

Gregory to stay 'Meet the Press' host

NEW YORK
David Gregory has re-upped as host of "Meet the Press."
NBC News shared no details, but described the new deal as "a long-term commitment."

"What a great vote of confidence from NBC," a pleased-looking Gregory said Thursday. He said his first four years in the moderator's chair have passed quickly.

"In some ways, it feels like we're just getting started," he said.

The 42-year-old Gregory began as host of the Sunday morning public-affairs program in December 2008, succeeding the late Tim Russert.

Before that, he was Chief White House correspondent during the presidency of George W. Bush. He joined NBC News in 1995.

Gregory is only the 10th permanent host of "Meet the Press," which premiered in 1947 and continues as the longest-running program on network television.

Looking beyond the new contract, Gregory said he planned to be hosting the program "for as long as they'll let me."

"I can't think of a better platform to have for doing what I love to do — the interviews — and as an outlet for my curiosity," he said. "I think this is an impactful, influential program, and I love being associated with it."

Rapper Ja Rule leaves NY prison in gun case

ALBANY, N.Y. — Platinum-selling rapper Ja Rule left an upstate

New York prison Thursday morning after serving most of his two-year sentence for illegal gun possession and headed straight into federal custody in a tax case.

U.S. Marshals escorted the 36-year-old musician out of Mid-State Correctional Facility at 9:30 a.m. He was being held at the Oneida County Jail in central New York as he awaited word from the Federal Bureau of Prisons about where he'll serve time in the tax case.

The rapper has some time remaining on a 28-month sentence for tax evasion that ran concurrently.

Ja Rule, whose real name is Jeffrey Atkins, may have less than six months left and may be eligible for a halfway house.

AROUND FLORIDA

Nuclear utility law changes pushed

TALLAHASSEE — Four Republican state senators Thursday announced plans to seek changes in a state law that lets utilities charge customers for future nuclear power plant construction even if it never gets built.

A House member sponsoring repeal legislation, though, said the Tampa Bay area lawmakers' proposal won't work because it doesn't go far enough and utilities will find a way around their revisions.

Sen. John Legg, R-Lutz, said the legislation's intent is to protect consumers' interests, assure accountability and transparency and responsibly plan for Florida's long-term energy needs.

"On the details, there is plenty of room for conversation," Legg said at a news conference. "But on these three principles there will be no room for compromise."

Legg's bill, which hasn't yet been filed, would set a deadline for construction to begin and eliminate the profit utilities can make on customers' prepayments if they fail to build a plant. Another provision would reduce interest utilities now earn on carrying costs on their projected construction cost balances from a current 8.5 percent to an annual market rate, said Sen. Jack Latvala, R-Clearwater.

UCF suspends frats, sororities

ORLANDO — The University of Central Florida has suspended many fraternity and sorority activities until alcohol and hazing issues are addressed.

In an announcement

Wednesday, the university administration said recent events indicate the school's Greek community needs a change in culture when it comes to alcohol use and hazing. No information on anything specific was released.

Hazing has been a topic of discussion and debate in Florida since the November 2011 death of Robert Champion. The Florida A&M University drum major died after a brutal hazing ritual aboard a bus.

UCF officials said they will develop a comprehensive plan to address alcohol and hazing issues.

More than 3,100 students participate in 48 recognized Greek organizations at UCF.

A school news release says fraternities and sororities will be permitted to hold organizational business meetings but little else.

House Democrats elect new leader

TALLAHASSEE — Rep. Darryl Rouson will lead Florida's House Democrats in 2014-16.

The minority party's caucus narrowly elected the St. Petersburg lawmaker as its next leader on Wednesday.

Rouson will succeed Rep. Perry Thurston of Plantation. In the unlikely event Democrats unseat Republicans as the majority party in the 2014 general election, Rouson would become speaker.

The Democratic caucus elected him over Rep. Mia Jones of Jacksonville 23-21 on a second ballot. They had tied on the first ballot.

The 58-year-old Rouson is a lawyer and former Republican who once supported then-GOP Gov. Jeb Bush. He also served on former Gov. Charlie Crist's transition team when Crist was a Republican. Crist, too, has switched parties and now is considering running for governor again as a Democrat in 2014.

Crash into cruiser kills motorcyclist

TAMPA — A motorcycle traveling at a high rate of speed crashed into the back of a Florida Highway Patrol cruiser that was parked in a construction zone along the Courtney Campbell Causeway.

The driver of the motorcycle was killed in the Wednesday night crash. FHP says a female passenger was taken to the hospital in critical condition.

The highway patrol says the inside lane of the bridge that spans Tampa Bay was closed for construction. The trooper who was helping control traffic through the work zone wasn't injured.

Man gets 6 years for fatal shooting

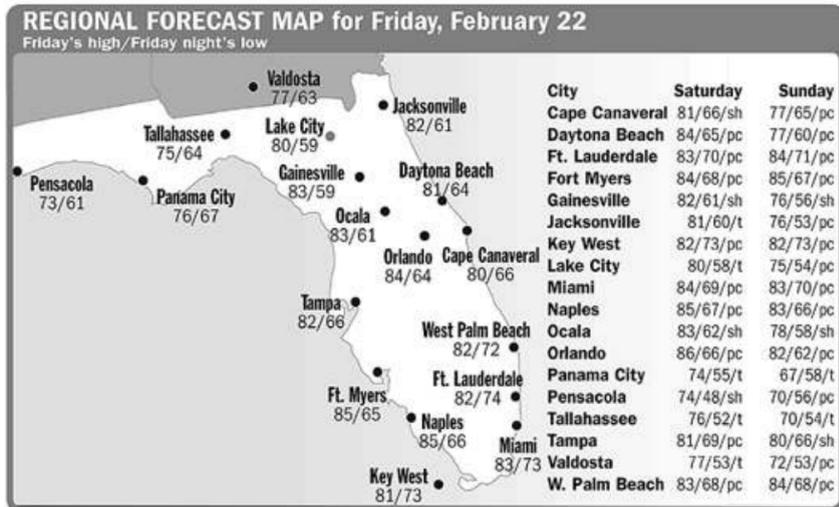

DADE CITY — A Tampa Bay area man has been sentenced to six years in prison for a fatal shooting after a party.

As part of a deal with Pasco County prosecutors, 23-year-old Douglas Gabriel Cevallos Jr. pleaded guilty Wednesday to manslaughter.

Authorities say several teens were involved in a fight following a party in June 2009. At some point, Cevallos picked up a .40-caliber handgun that fell from the pocket of someone involved in the fight. He began waving the gun around and shot 17-year-old Dustin Sean White.

According to the Tampa Bay Times, investigators don't believe Cevallos intended to kill White.

In Connecticut, Biden urges action on gun control

By JOHN CHRISTOFFERSEN
Associated Press

DANBURY, Conn. — Vice President Joe Biden sought to rally support for the Obama administration's gun control proposals as he spoke Thursday at a conference on gun violence being held not far from the scene of December's school massacre, saying it fundamentally altered the debate.

Biden acknowledged gun control has traditionally been viewed as the third rail of American politics, recalling that when President Barack Obama asked him to take the lead, the president told him he didn't have to do it if he didn't want to.

"America has changed on this issue," Biden said at the conference at Western Connecticut State University, which the gunman once attended. "There is a moral price to be paid for inaction."

Noting the courage of the families of the victims at Sandy Hook Elementary in nearby Newtown, Biden said elected officials should show political courage.

"We have to speak for those 20 beautiful children who died 69 days ago, 12 miles from here," Biden said. "We have to speak for the voice of those six adults who died trying to save the children in their care that day who can't speak for themselves. You have to speak for the 1,900 people who have died at the other end of a gun just since Sandy Hook in this country."

Biden advocated a series of proposals, including universal background checks for gun owners, a ban on many military-style weapons and a limit on the size of magazines. He said the measures would save lives even though there was no guarantee they would prevent all mass shootings.

"Fewer children will die," Biden said.

U.S. Sen. Richard Blumenthal, who organized the conference with two other members of the state's congressional delegation, said those measures are achievable. He said the Newtown shooting dramatically changed the prospects for gun control.

"Newtown has transformed America, and we need to build on that sense of urgency going forward," Blumenthal said. "Preventing gun violence was thought to be untouchable politically two months ago. That unspeakable horror has given us unstoppable momentum."

Connecticut Gov. Dannel P. Malloy, attending the conference, announced that he wants to immediately ban high-capacity ammunition magazines, require background checks for the transfer of firearms and expand the state's assault weapons ban. He has expressed frustration that the state legislature has not acted more quickly to form a response to the Newtown tragedy.

The gunman, 20-year-old Adam Lanza, killed his mother at their Newtown home before going to Sandy Hook and slaughtering 20 children and six adults. He committed suicide as police arrived.

Drought could spread to state

By JOSH FUNK
Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Climate experts say the drought affecting more than half of the nation will persist in the Great Plains and West through the spring and spread over more of California, Texas and Florida.

Experts from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Climate Prediction Center and the National Drought Mitigation Center at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln released their latest predictions Thursday.

Currently, 56 percent of the continental U.S. is covered by some form of drought. That's an improvement from last summer, when the drought covered two-thirds of the nation.

The drought forecast calls for conditions to improve somewhat in eastern Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Georgia and South Carolina. But the February-through-May drought forecast predicts conditions will worsen overall this spring, NOAA climatologist Dan Collins said.

And below-average precipitation is expected this spring in most Western states and the southeastern United States.

As a result, the drought is expected to spread from southern California to cover nearly the entire state. All of Arizona, most of Texas and most of Florida also are expected to be affected.

Texas rancher Debbie Davis said she's already sold off more than half of her cattle herd because feed and hay prices have risen in the drought, and now she's wondering whether more changes will be needed.

"We're trying to figure out whether this is the new normal — is this climate change?," she wondered.

was at the Richardson Community Center during an NAACP election and has been at the Winfield Community Center. She said as a convicted sex offender he should not be allowed on the premises. She said an oversight occurred because he gave the addresses of the facility and not their names, so Lewis' probation officer, who reportedly gave him permission to be there, was not aware the facilities were public recreation areas.

Lewis was convicted in August 2011 of sexual activity with a 17-year-old girl and sentenced to 15 years' probation.

Coker said during a telephone conversation in January, Williams told her Lewis was a personal friend of his. She claims Williams told her he would take steps to "alienate, obstruct and interfere" with her, according to a Feb. 14 letter from Gundy to Williams and other commissioners.

Coker was addressing the board to get an update on the funding status of "It's About My Effort," a local community and educational group she founded. Coker is seeking matching funds from the county to secure a state-funded grant.

Commission Chairman Stephen Bailey said her claim about Williams was not relevant to the question of funding for her group.

Coker said it was "I'm trying to ascertain whether or not commissioner Williams' commitment to conspire with individuals is going to affect this commission's decision with regards to my organizing ..." Coker said as Bailey interrupted her to say he wanted to ensure she stayed on point.

Williams said he helped Coker with her efforts to secure state funding through a matching grant and that he never threatened to hurt her chances of receiving county funds.

"At no time did I threaten to take the grant money or to squash the grant," Williams said.

Bailey again intervened. "It appears to me there is an ax to grind somewhere and this board doesn't need to be involved where there are axes to grind," he said.

During the public comment section at the meeting's end, Gundy said that a commissioner threatened Coker and "it was unprofessional, unethical and unwarranted."

He said he plans to request an investigation by Gov. Rick Scott's office as well as the Florida Department of Law Enforcement.

Williams declined further comment after the meeting but said he would issue a statement at a later date.

Lewis has not been charged with violating the terms of his probation.

The band raised about $2,900 through patron donations and carwashes. The cost of the drums is $4,500. If the school were to buy new equipment it would cost about $12,000, Chandler said.

Band members will be washing cars at First Federal Bank by the Lake City Mall March 16 to Chandler said anyone who would like to donate to help the band buy the new drumline set can call 758-4800.

Parts of the agreement require the company to "provide credible documentation" each year to establish the number of full-time employees working in the expanded business. If the company does not hire the additional 15 employees, the county can revoke the tax exemption.

Currently, United States Cold Storage employs 44 full-time workers. After the expansion, the company will be required to keep 59 employees on full-time status to receive the tax exemption, according to the job creation agreement.

The county's estimated lost revenue from the tax exemption will be $121,828 for the first year. This year the county will collect more than $17.7 million from taxes based on real property and real estate.

The job creation project between United States Cold Storage and the county was code named "Project Action."

ANOTHER VIEW

Bad billing system squeezing counties

If there was any doubt the state's Medicaid billing system is badly flawed and a threat to local taxpayers, the proof was the $373 million "bill" Florida counties got last year.

Pressed for a review by stunned county officials and their lobbyists, who have complained about the poor system for years and repeatedly pointed out common errors, state officials discovered that counties were, indeed, overbilled by about $200 million, and certain corrections were made.

But that doesn't end the dispute over a flawed system that is unfair to counties and overcharges local taxpayers.

In Gov. Rick Scott's proposed budget for the next fiscal year, counties would be on the hook for about $278 million. The counties — which, again, clearly have a better handle on their fair share of the costs than the state — have countered that $220 million is closer to the truth.

The root of the issue is that Medicaid is a complex federal and state program for the poor and disabled, and it involves too many bureaucrats. As the Florida Association of Counties points out, the program does not "respect" county lines, and as a result, the billing system is fraught with mistakes, including incorrect addresses and multiple bills for the same service, among others.

For example, a bill could reflect a patient's address as Tampa General Hospital when that person could live in another state. Yet, Hillsborough County would be billed for a portion of the costs.

According to the Association of Counties, the state review prompted by the outrageously high bill to the counties last year found that about $84.4 million in errors occurred because the state Agency for Health Care Administration could not verify a Medicaid recipient's county of residence.

"Technical reasons" were attributed to another $47.4 million in bad bills.

Ideally, counties shouldn't even be involved in Medicaid payments. But it's highly unlikely the current system will be changed, so the best the state Legislature can do, at this point, is to take steps to correct the deficient billing system to ensure accurate and fair costs to counties. It should be a priority.

Lawmakers and state administrators also shouldn't be so skeptical when officials from Florida counties question a Medicaid bill or the broken billing process. These local officials, who have budget challenges of their own, have had too many unfunded mandates forced down their throats from Tallahassee.

The last thing they need is to be forced to pay inaccurate or inflated Medicaid bills that may have even been sent to the wrong county.

Local officials want to resolve this budgetary nightmare. They're not looking to avoid their fair share of the costs. They certainly were right last year. Gov. Scott should listen to them and ensure that local taxpayers aren't stuck with bad bills.

Does your child ever lie to you?

Are you disappointed often when you find out how many successful, famous, or influential people have lied to you? Recently Lance Armstrong admitted to doping with steroids for years as the world's leading bike trophy winner. Mark McGuire admitted to regularly using steroids for years, to become a great baseball hero. Tiger Woods, Bill Clinton, John Edwards, and Balloon Boy's fame-seeking parents—the list goes on and on. Why do so many heroes choose lying instead of truth?

Psychologists tell us that people lie to avoid shame, punishment, scorn, or getting caught. Once a person has lied, and the lie worked for them to avoid consequences, learning takes place and a habit begins forming. Lying can become a regular way of relating to people, a way of life.

But, every coin has two sides: Lying may get you out of a hot spot, or create a favorable image temporarily, but you pay the price in the long run. People who lie usually need to cover a lie with other lies, and may have trouble keeping track of their stories.

Every lie probably has some guilty feelings associated with it, even little "white" lies. Even if no one finds out about the lie, guilt doesn't go away, but builds up, and self-respect declines. Lying becomes part of the person's character.

Therein lies the problem. If you have noticed that your children sometimes lie to you, here are some ideas that could change that undesirable behavior.

- Take an attitude of wanting to help them fix the problem, rather than becoming angry, or blaming or resenting the child's behavior.

Robert Denny
 Bob.Denny8@gmail.com

The problem is the behavior, not the child.

- Make sure that you're being a good example for them. Children learn more from what you do, than what you say.
- Communicate to them that you want to be a partner, a coach, and a confidante. You're there to help them build the best lives they can for themselves.
- Give them opportunity to tell the truth with reasonable consequences. Remember that children lie because it works for them at some level. They may be able to avoid punishment, gain your good graces, or to avoid your judgment or scorn. Don't give them a reason to lie.
- When your child admits to bad behaviors, or admits to a lie, approach them with the attitude of problem solving: How can we fix the situation you're in? How can we learn and grow from our mistakes, and become better people by doing the right thing?
- Work with them to solve the problem. What's wrong with this situation, and what would be the ideal outcome?
- When a child lies to you, use it as a "teaching moment." Explain to them reasons that telling the truth is better. For instance, you want to be a trustworthy person. It's so much better if you can be counted on to tell the truth. If you take responsibility for anything you've done wrong, I'll be there to help you resolve it in the best way, and make it right. You don't want to be the kind of person that has to lie to cover your tracks. Holding onto guilt and worry about getting caught are some of the consequences. You can feel relieved, a little proud of yourself, and better about your life. What does the child think are the actions necessary to correct the problem, and achieve the best outcome?

- Ask the child how you can help. Let him or her suggest ways you might help. Then it's okay for you to suggest some things you might do to help.
 - Remember that if the results of telling the truth work for the child, if it's satisfying and rewarding, then he or she is much more likely to tell the truth in future situations. Praise the child for honesty and deciding to do the right thing. You may find that it's not only working well for the child, but also for you. Your relationship with this child will be much better because of your help.
 - Show them that you're on their side. Help them fix the problem and make it right. Make it a pleasant, rewarding experience for both of you.
- Try it out. Truth telling has its price, but it has its rewards. They their heads up high and know they did the right thing. You'll feel good about learning a new parenting skill, and like yourself better, too.

You've been good citizens. Now get out.

I'm old. I know it. My idea of burning the candle at both ends is to stay up late enough to catch the weather on the 11 p.m. news. I can't remember the last time I was out with a group that closed up a saloon. I've had a double knee replacement. I commute in a little four-door sedan that's an indeterminate tone of beige.

As I say, I'm old. But I don't need my local elected officials reminding me of it. Worse yet, they hint, oh so indirectly, that I would be doing Bethesda, Md. an economic and social favor if I made way for a younger, more desirable demographic — the 18- to 34-year-olds who are smart enough to be pulling down big salaries but too callow to realize that they should be saving for their kids' college education and their own retirement.

Before these familial responsibilities arrive, which they will do with frightening rapidity, the Montgomery County Council thinks — according to a Washington Post article — that these folks should be investing this extra capital in the local nightlife so Bethesda and its adjacent suburbs become a "hipster magnet."

 mcfeattersd@shns.com

Bethesda is perhaps Washington's oldest suburb in the sense of being purely a bedroom community, but it has since become a city in its own right with the usual inner-suburb problems — not enough parking and too many deer.

To lure "Generation Y" out of the more-happening neighborhoods in Washington, the county is proposing the creation of a "Task Force on the Night Time Economy" to study ways, says Post, "to enliven the bar, music and after-hours dining scenes." Where was this task force when I was interested in civic involvement? Instead, I was an officer of a chain of nonprofit day-care centers.

Bethesda — thanks to my generation, which is now supposed to get out of the way — has one of the best restaurant districts in the Washington area. But apparently that's not good enough. We gather, eat dinner, carefully monitoring our alcoholic intake, and then quietly say our good nights and go home.

The county is looking for a younger, more raucous breed of restaurant-goer. It is considering loosening the liquor laws and noise ordinances. The county also wants to identify those areas that are, in a wonderful new formulation, "underbarred." Apparently my generation wasn't drunk or loud enough. I wish the authorities had said something at the time. I'm sure we could have stepped up our game if we had known it was our civic duty.

Nor do the authorities seem to sense an inherent contradiction in trying to attract patrons to bigger bars with louder music that stay open later and their ominous public-service ads that warn of the grim fate in store for anyone who fails a breath test.

The county council should be careful what it wishes for. My generation can hold its liquor, doesn't shout and gets home in time to catch the weather forecast. You feel the cold at our age.

The cost of discipleship

Last week we talked about the need for revival in the church. This week the subject is "discipleship." Neither of these subjects is for the ones who have never come to Jesus for salvation. These subjects deal with those who are saved. It is not about salvation; for salvation is free and costs us nothing, but it cost our Lord everything. It cost Him His heavenly home for 33 years. John 6:38 says "For I have come down from heaven, not to do my own will, but the will of Him who sent me." It cost him his happiness and brought great sorrow upon him. Matthew 26:38 says "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Luke 22:44 tells of His "agony." It cost Him His life on that cross with all the torment that came before death. It cost Him separation from His Father for He cried "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me." (Read Psalms 22.)

Our Savior suffered all this and more so we could have salvation — free. Don't let anyone or any organization tell you that you have to do anything except "believe in the death, burial, and resurrection" for salvation (1 Cor. 15:1-4). Ephesians 2:8-9 says "For by grace are you saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God, not of works, lest anyone should boast."

But being a disciple cost us something. What does it mean to be a disciple of Christ? One who follows one's teaching. Jesus said in John 8:31 "If you abide in

BIBLE STUDIES

Hugh Sherrill ems-hugh43@comcast.net

my word, you are my disciple indeed." A disciple is not only a pupil but also an imitator of Jesus. (John 15:8).

When Jesus called His disciples, they responded immediately. Mark 1:16-20 records the call of Simon (Peter), Andrew, James, and John. The scripture says that they left all immediately and followed Jesus. Luke 5:27-28 is the call of Levi (Matthew). He also left all and followed Jesus. Yes, to be a disciple of Jesus, a price has to be paid. I remember years ago most all Southern Baptist churches had on Sunday afternoon "discipleship training." Most churches have stopped doing that. Thank God for the ones that still do.

Some of the prices paid for discipleship recorded in the Bible are as follows: All the New Testament writers except John laid down their lives for their Savior. Mathew died from the wounds of a halberd; Mark was dragged to death by a team of horses; Luke was hanged; Peter and Jude were crucified; and James was smashed to death by a club. John was boiled in oil; he lived but was disfigured for life.

Paul was five times scourged with the Roman cat-of-nine-tails. Three times he was clubbed within an inch of his life. I would suggest that all Christians read "Foxe's Book of Martyrs."

Concerning discipleship Ephesians 2:10 says "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good work." America needs more disciples of Jesus and unless the church sees this need, they will not be developed. Church leaders today need to make sure today that their church has a good discipleship program. To teach discipleship, one has to be a disciple. False religions do this very well.

Helping the troubled

Every now and then we learn of a celebrity taking their own life. It may be a movie actor, a popular musician, or politician. We have heard of the difficulties they have had in their life in recent times. Then one day we hear the tragic news, they died because of an apparent suicide.

It is not the purpose of this article to explain why one would take their life. Why they would decide that ending their life is the best solution to their circumstances. Why they believe there is no reason for continuing to live.

The purpose of this article is to get us to meditate for a few moments about how we can help others handle or deal with difficult situations in their life. The ancient patriarch Job said, "Man, who is born of woman, is short-lived and full of turmoil (trouble — KJV, NKJV, NIV and ESV)" (Job 14:1). Life is filled with one problem after another. As soon as one burden is lifted, another one is place upon us. It seems to be a never-ending cycle.

Solomon, the wise king of Israel, reported in his book we call Ecclesiastes, that life under the sun is vanity and a striving after the wind. Solomon writes about how he tested life and there was nothing under the sun that would truly bring happiness. Having lots of money did not bring happiness. Building projects or involving ourselves in our work will not bring happiness or purpose to life. At the conclusion of his book Solomon says, "the conclusion, when all has been heard, is: fear God and keep His commandments, because this applies to every person. For God will bring every act to judgment, everything which is hidden, whether it is good or evil" (12:13, 14).

Getting suicidal people to open up and talk about their problems, burdens and circumstances seems to be a major problem. The majority of these troubled people seem to be individuals who tend to keep things inside and do not want to share them with anyone. How to get them to open up may be very difficult, or nearly impossible, but an effort has to be undertaken. Even the best professionals may not even be able to help them with their situation because they cannot get them to open up and talk.

Often people have been dealing with drugs or alcohol for a period of time and it seems to no longer be effective. They have tried for a long time to cover up their pain or their difficulties with this substance but they have not been successful. The burdens and situations just seem greater than any solution that can be found. It seems that the suicidal reach a point where they just give up, even on themselves. They just cannot take it any longer. Ending their life seems to them as the only "real" solution.

Our hearts need to go out to these types of people. We need to have compassion upon them and their situation. We need to let them have "their space" but maybe we need to be more willing to "bear one another's burden, and thus fulfill the law of Christ" (Galatians 6:2). Jesus has promised that if we will "learn from [Him]" that we can "find rest" (Matthew 11:29).

The premature death of a celebrity is always hurtful to society. The family of the celebrity is hurt probably beyond what we can imagine. But celebrities are not the only ones troubled. It may be your next door neighbor or your co-worker. It may even be someone living with you in your own home. Let's learn to help those that are troubled.

Healing broken relationships

A familiar quote to many is "Am I my brother's keeper?" It is one that we either say aloud or at least think from time to time when we are expected to be responsible for another person.

Still, it is a strange comment when we remember that these words originated from the mouth of the world's first murderer. (see Genesis 4:1-10) Killing someone is not the way to avoid taking responsibility for them... in fact, it does just the opposite. Cain was the first of many who found out the hard way!

We don't have to go as far as murder to realize that sin always causes us to blur the lines of responsibility in relationships. Jesus addressed this issue of responsibility to others in Matthew 5:21-24: "You have heard that it was said to the people long ago, 'Do not murder, and anyone who murders will be subject to judgment. But I tell you that anyone who is angry with his brother will be subject to judgment ... therefore, if you are offering your gift at the altar and there remember that your brother has something against you, leave your gift there in front of the altar. First go and be reconciled to your brother; then come and offer your gift.'" At first glance, the beginning of this scripture seems to easily

HEART MATTERS

angieland3@windstream.net

apply to the reader, revealing that God equates certain anger to murder. The anger this verse speaks of is unresolved anger, better known as unforgiveness. This subjects us to the consequences of choosing not to forgive such as bitterness, rage and malice. Then there is a twist in the application. Verse 23 tells us that when we go to offer our gift at the altar and "there remember that your brother has something against you," we are to go to him and attempt reconciliation. That shoots holes in our theory that if someone has a problem with me, it is their responsibility to fix it. Certain of this, we ignore our spouses "coolness" toward us or the fact that a friend or family member is avoiding us, convincing ourselves we have done nothing wrong. But listen, this ministry of reconciliation is so important to God, He wants us to tend to this even before we show up to worship. If we took this instruction seriously, what impact would it have on our marriages? Friendships? Family relationships? Work relationships? God is calling us to take responsibility to help heal broken relationships no matter which side we are on ... because our hearts really do matter.

Blessings,
Angie

Storms and wildfires

When wood reaches 572 degrees, it gives off a gas which reacts with oxygen to make a flame. The flame will heat the remaining wood, making the fire grow stronger. This will happen even on cold days. The temperature at which something ignites is called its flash point. There are different causes for "wildfires" of course. Sometimes it is because of storms and lightning may strike, causing a fire to begin. Sometimes (unfortunately), the cause is human, whether by accident or on purpose. The death and destruction which follows is awful, and recovery is slow for those who lose everything. Of course some fires are started and controlled in order to minimize the danger of these wildfires.

When looking at Thomas M. Bonnicksen's article dated Sept. 25, 2004, entitled "What Storms Teach About Wildfires", it started me thinking about what we could learn about 'storms' and 'wildfires' in the home.

Sometimes families experience "storms" and "wildfires," which are very destructive. Everyone in the end suffers, because no one seems to know how to prepare for or avoid the storms, and even fewer know how to put out the fires.

Mom used to tell us, "Come in the house,

Jack Exum Jr.
jackexumjr@yahoo.com

there's a storm coming!" "Don't play with fire. You may get burned!" Kids learn to avoid things like this, but unfortunately, we learn by experience. Why do we insist on touching it anyway?

Some points about dealing with family storms and wildfires:

- 1.) Learn to forgive each other. You aren't perfect and neither is your spouse.
- 2.) Learn to say, "I love you just the way you are." Acceptance is a key to a happy home. 3.) Learn to set and keep boundaries to protect your family. It is your home; ex's and in-laws, should not be allowed to interfere, and "third parties" should never be allowed anywhere close to your relationship. Solomon says, "Drink water from your own cistern, running water from your own well" (Proverbs 5:13). Affairs are out of bounds! Wise up, unless you love getting burned.

4.) When 'storms' (problems) come, draw close to each other. Support and protect each other.

5.) Deal with things before they get out of control. My uncle wanted to do some burning on his property behind ours. All went well until the fire got out of control. Before long we were all out trying to put the fire out. Then the fire department came. Advice: Don't start what you can't finish, (or put out).

Flash points are different with each person. All it takes is a word, or a certain look, or maybe even a memory. The fire flares up and the fight is on. Some fights just ain't worth it.

6.) Learn that the past is the past, and cannot be changed. Why spend time digging it up again.

7.) Learn to speak gently. Solomon says "A gentle answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger. The tongue of the wise adorns knowledge, but the mouth of the fool gushes folly. The eyes of the Lord are everywhere, keeping watch on the wicked and the good. The soothing tongue is a tree of life, but a perverse tongue crushes the spirit." (Proverbs 15:1-3).

Next pope will face Vatican troubles

By NICOLE WINFIELD
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — If evidence was ever needed that the next pope must urgently overhaul the powerful Vatican bureaucracy called the Curia, the scandal over Pope Benedict XVI's private papers is Exhibit A.

The pope's own butler stole sensitive internal letters to the pontiff and passed them off to a journalist, who then published them in a blockbuster book. The butler did it, he admitted himself, to expose the "evil and corruption" in the Vatican's frescoed halls that he believed was hidden from Benedict by those who were supposed to serve him.

And if that original sin weren't enough, the content of the leaks confirmed that the next pope has a very messy house to clean up. The letters and memos exposed petty wrangling, corruption and cronyism at the highest levels of the Catholic Church.

The dirt ranged from the awarding of Vatican contracts to a plot, purportedly orchestrated by senior Vatican officials, to oust a prominent Catholic newspaper editor as gay.

Ordinary Catholics might not think that dysfunction in the Apostolic Palace has any effect on their lives, but it does:

The Curia makes decisions on everything from bishop appointments to church closings to marriage annulments and the disciplining of pedophile priests.

Papal politics plays into the prayers the faithful say at Mass since missal translations are decided by committee in Rome. Donations the faithful make each year for the pope are held by a Vatican bank whose lack of financial transparency has fueled bitter internal debate.

Indians remain undefeated

Fort White picks up win against Newberry, 9-0.

By TIM KIRBY
tkirby@lakecityreporter.com

FORT WHITE — Another starter, another shutout.

Fort White High's baseball team beat visiting Newberry High, 9-0, behind the four-hit pitching of Lane Pendergrast.

Pendergrast pitched a complete game with six strikeouts and four walks. No Panther made it past second base.

The Indians gave Pendergrast plenty of run support, starting with two runs in the third inning.

Fort White added three runs in the fifth and four in the sixth.

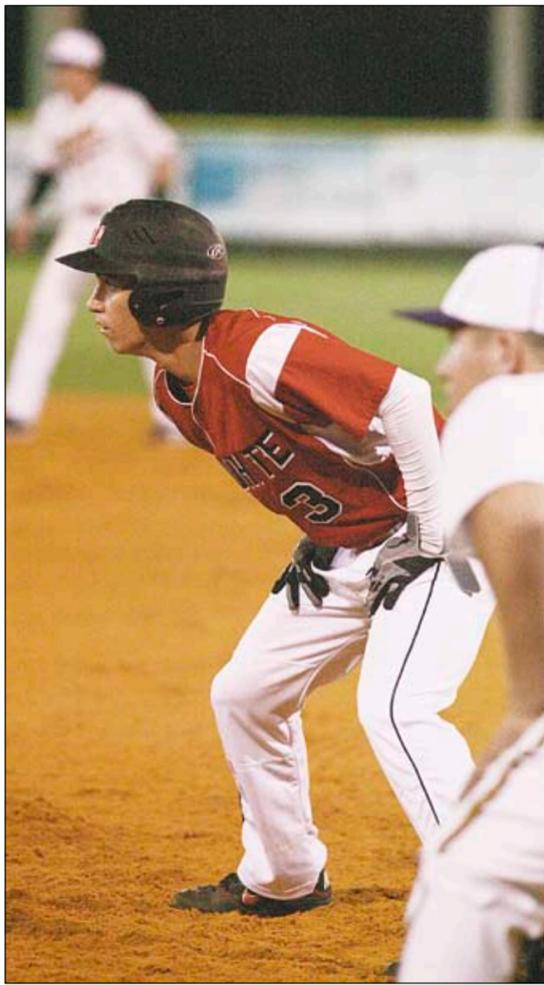

Robby Howell had four RBIs, twice getting hits with the bases loaded.

In the third inning, Brady Wilkinson and Kevin Dupree walked. Kodey Owens ran for Dupree and Willie Carter reached on an error to load the bases. Howell hit a towering shot that fell at the fence between left and center field to score the two runs.

Between a pair of intentional walks, Dupree ripped a one-two pitch for a home run in the fifth inning. Brady Wilkinson opened the inning with a single and Kody Moniz doubled him home ahead of Dupree's blast.

Rhett Willis started the final rally with an infield hit. Brady Wilkinson and Moniz singled with Willis scoring.

Dupree was walked and Carter also worked a walk for an RBI. Howell singled by the third baseman to drive in the final two runs.

Zach Gaskins and Trace Wilkinson also had hits for Fort White.

Kyle Kirby started for Newberry (3-2) and lasted four innings. He was relieved by Alex Wilkins, who pitched the final two innings. Kirby had two singles for the Panthers. A pickoff at first by Pendergrast and a six-four-three double play ended the first inning and Newberry didn't threaten again.

Fort White (4-0) plays Buchholz High at 7 p.m. today in Gainesville.

Big field blowout

Falcons cruise past Wolves, 9-1, at Columbia.

By BRANDON FINLEY
bfinley@lakecityreporter.com

For Lake City and Richardson Middle Schools it was a sneak peek at what the next level would be like as the Falcons beat the Wolves, 9-1, at Columbia High on Thursday.

The Falcons started early with five runs in the bottom of the first.

Hunter Houston tripled and scored on a throwing error for Lake City's first run. Tyson Ellis followed up with a hit to score Austin Harris, who reached on a triple earlier in the inning for a 2-0 lead.

Garrett Finnell, who reached earlier in the inning on a walk, stole home for a 3-0 lead.

The Falcons closed out the inning with Jeremy Solomon's hit to score Cole Frier and Ellis for the 5-0 lead.

Harris scored his second run on a triple by Finnell in the second inning and the Falcons went into the third with a 6-0 lead.

In the bottom of the third, the Falcons added three more runs.

Clayton Stinruck scored Frier on a single and Brock Edge scored Solomon and Stinruck on a base hit for a 9-0 lead.

The Wolves' only run came in the top of the fifth inning when Scott Cannon scored on a bases-loaded walk by Trey Houk.

The game was called going into the bottom of the fifth inning.

"The whole point of playing was to get the kids some experience on the big field," Lake City head coach Shayne Edge said. "They were all really excited and played well."

The Sunday Scramble had six teams competing for the daily game money and a shot at the big money pot.

First place went to the team of Brandon Goss, Tiara Carter and Butch Howell at 5 under.

Second place was decided by a chip-off. The chip of Todd Carter edged out the chip of Brian Shead by less than a quarter of an inch, giving Todd Carter and team members Michael Harris and Callie Harrington second place.

The pot had Nos. 16 and 17 in play, but No. 18 was the lucky hole drawn so the pot rolls over.

Spots are filling up for the Tuesday Night Team Twilight League, as 17 teams are signed up. Seven more spots remain. Deadline to sign up is March 3. Play will begin after the resumption of Daylight Savings Time on March 12, with tee off by 5:30 p.m.

Spaces are still available for the Branford Rotary Club Three-Person Scramble on March 2 at 8 a.m. Call John Lacquey at 935-1705 or any Branford Rotary member to sign up.

Big Sunday take for Thomas

Another +9 score won the Saturday blitz. Eli Witt did the honors this time for a three-point margin over Brian Sneed. Jonathan Allen and Robbie Kerby tied for third at +5, followed by Bud Johnson, Steve Thomas and Michael Yacovelli tied for fifth.

The skins pot was lucrative with only two winners — Steve Patterson and Allen.

Mike McCranie (+12) ran away from the field in A flight of the Wednesday blitz. Buddy Slay (+5) and George Burnham (+3) were his closest pursuers.

COUNTRY CLUB at LAKE CITY

The B flight was anything but a runaway with six players in contention. Bob Randall and Ed Higgs escaped the pack for a first-place tie at +6.

Bob Wheary, John Raulerson, Jerry Smith and Shelton Keen made it close with a tie for second at +5.

Buddy Slay led the skins game with two winners including a nice pot hole prize. Steve Patterson and Mickey Willcox split the remaining skins with McCranie and Wheary.

Katrina Counts had the best draw in the LGA "blind nine" competition. Her net 31.5 topped Shirley Edelstein by two strokes. Cathy Steen and Roberta Whitaker shared third place with 34.5

Anita West scored the only chip-in on No. 2.

Match one of Good Old Boys play was a walkover for the team of Monty Montgomery, Joe Persons, Carl Wilson and Hugh Sherrill by a 10-5 count over the team of Mark Risk, Larry Ward, Bill Wheeler and Bobby Simmons.

The second contest went to the foursome of Don Christensen, Merle Hibbard, Emerson Darst and Dan Stephens by a single point over the team of Stan Woolbert, Mike Spencer, Tony Branch and Jim Stevens.

Match three was also a one-point victory, this time for the team of Jim Bell, Eli Witt, Dennis Hendershot and Howard Whitaker, 6-5, over the team of Rhea Hart, Jim McGriff, Dave Cannon and Bill Rogers.

Montgomery (37-36-73) edged Risk (37-37-74) for medalist honors. Stephens fired a steady 39-39-78, followed by Hendershot with 38-41-79.

The MGA BU-BB is Saturday with a team draw at 7:30 a.m. and a shotgun start to follow.

The Ruben Thomas Memorial Tournament is Thursday with a 9 a.m. shotgun start. The course will be closed until 1:30 p.m.

Tebow cancels talk at controversial Dallas church

Associated Press

DALLAS — New York Jets quarterback Tim Tebow has backed out of an appearance at a Baptist mega church in Dallas run by a pastor who has created controversy with his remarks about gays and other faiths.

Tebow tweeted Thursday that he canceled a scheduled April 28 appearance at First Baptist Church due to "new information that has been brought to my attention."

"I will continue to use the platform God has blessed me with to bring Faith, Hope and Love to all those needing a brighter day," Tebow wrote.

The Rev. Robert Jeffress, First Baptist's pastor, confirmed in a phone interview that Tebow called him Wednesday night to cancel.

Jeffress said Tebow told him he would like to speak at First Baptist at some point, but "he needed to avoid controversy right now for personal and professional reasons."

Jeffress has preached that gay sex is sinful, Mormonism is a cult and Islam promotes violence and pedophilia. He said Thursday that First Baptist was being mischaracterized as a "hate church," and that the church's teachings were consistent with historic Christian beliefs.

Tebow wasn't going to speak about anything controversial, Jeffress said.

Kevin Harvick celebrates in Victory Lane with the championship trophy after winning the first of two 150-mile qualifying races for the NASCAR Daytona 500 auto race at Daytona International Speedway on Thursday in Daytona Beach.

Harvick and Kyle Busch win Daytona 500 duels

By JENNA FRYER

Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH — There are two certainties heading into the Daytona 500: Kevin Harvick is the favorite, and no one is sure what the action will look like in the "Great American Race."

Harvick remained perfect through Speedweeks on Thursday by winning the first of two 150-mile Budweiser Duel qualifying races, and the victory has positioned him as the top pick to win NASCAR's version of the Super Bowl.

Being labeled the favorite is the last thing the 2007 Daytona 500 winner wanted headed into Sunday's season-opener.

"We like to be the lame-duck underdog. That's what we're shooting for," Harvick said.

Harvick is a perfect 2 for 2 at Daytona International Speedway. He also won an exhibition race last week-end. This strong start comes at a time when Harvick has found a balance in his life with the addition of son, Keelan, who was born last July, and as he heads into his final season with Richard Childress Racing. Harvick has already decided to move to Stewart-Haas Racing in 2014.

"We've been fortunate to win the first two races of Speedweeks. We've just got to keep a level head on our shoulders, not get too high over what we've done, just do the same things that we've done," he said. "If it's meant to be, it's meant to be. I think we definitely have the car and team to be in contention to do that."

But nobody is quite sure what the 500 will look like with NASCAR's new Gen-6 race car. Sunday's race will go off with a full 43-car field, double the amount of cars that ran in Thursday's qualifying races. There were 19 cars in last Saturday's exhibition.

Kyle Busch, winner of the second duel, believes more cars on the track will create a much different race than what fans have seen so far. All three races at Speedweeks to date have lacked much action as drivers continue to learn the new cars and how it reacts in traffic and different aerodynamic situations.

"With more cars out there, we might see it be a little bit different come Sunday," Busch said. "There were half the field in each race, obviously. There's going to be twice as many good cars, twice as many middle of the pack cars, twice as many back of the pack cars. If you can get your car handling, driving, feeling good, you'll be able to be one of the guys that's up front."

Is Busch, who was wrecked out of last week's exhibition just 15 laps into the race, one of those guys?

"I feel that's where we're at," Busch said. "That's an added bonus for us right now."

Busch gave Toyota its first victory of Speedweeks and snapped Chevrolet's dominance. Harvick took the new Chevrolet SS to Victory Lane twice, and Danica Patrick put it on the Daytona 500 pole in time trials.

Busch held off Kasey Kahne, in a Chevrolet, and learned the driver out front is in the strongest position.

"It's hard to pass the leader," said Busch. "Stay out front. When you get out front, you can hold everyone off."

But Kahne, who settled for second, said timing will be critical and nobody is sure just yet what move will be needed to win the Daytona 500.

"I think it's tough because you don't know when you get that push. You don't know when it plays into your time," said Kahne, who never got close enough to Busch to take a solid shot at the win. "I think you need to be ready at any time to get to the front, to second, to third, try to move up. I don't think waiting till the last lap is a ticket the way things are right now."

And Kahne wasn't ready to give Harvick the win in the big race, either.

"I think Kevin looks really good," he said. "He's got this place figured out. I think he can be beat, yeah. There's a few of us in the second race who had really good cars, and I could move around really well, similar to what Harvick did in the first race."

In the first race, Harvick held off Greg Biffle over a four-lap sprint to win. Harvick and Biffle also went 1-2 in last Saturday night's exhibition race.

The starting field for the Daytona 500 is set by the results from the pair of 60-lap qualifiers, but Patrick held onto the pole by running a safe race in the first qualifier. The first woman to win a pole at NASCAR's top level, Patrick earned the top starting spot in time trials last weekend.

She started first in the first qualifier, raced a bit early, then faded back to run a conservative race and ensure she'll start first in the 500.

"I hate coming to the end like that and just lagging back," she said. "That's not fun. But it's also really ignorant to go drive up into the pack and be part of an accident for absolutely no reason. You're really not going to learn much there."

Patrick wound up 17th out of 23 cars.

"What I really feel like I need to do is go down to the Harvick bus and see what he's doing," she said. "He's got it going on down here."

The first race was dull until Denny Hamlin brought out the only caution with seven laps remaining. Hamlin lost control of his car, spun into Carl Edwards and triggered a four-car accident that also collected Regan Smith and Trevor Bayne, who had a dominant car early in the qualifier.

"I know what the wrecks look like now, I am really familiar with them," said Edwards, who was wrecked at testing in January and in practice for the exhibition race last week. He was also black-flagged in the exhibition race when his window net fell off.

Hamlin said the accident was a product of drivers trying to learn the nuances of NASCAR's new Gen-6 car.

"It just shows you that any kind of bad aero position you put yourself in, your car can be vulnerable," said Hamlin, who was running in the high line when he inched into Edwards' space down low.

Juan Pablo Montoya, who infamously crashed into a jet dryer during last year's Daytona 500 to trigger a massive fuel fire, stopped for minor repairs during the caution. Montoya restarted the race in 13th with four laps remaining, but rocketed through the field to finish third.

"It was time to go," he said. "It's hard, you don't want to tear up the car, and at the same time you want to go. The bumpers are a little fragile. You have to be careful with that. You want to have a good car at the end."

The bulk of both races seemed to be one long parade of the Gen-6 race car. Unsure of how the cars handle in packs, and when the drivers choose to side-draft, most of the field in the first race played it conservatively.

"The choice was obviously made by a bunch of us to run around in circles and just make laps," said two-time Daytona 500 champion Michael Waltrip, who needed a clean race to guarantee a spot in Sunday's field. "There were a lot of people that just wanted to get through some laps and understand what was going on. There were some of us that would have run like that until they threw the checkered just to make the race. And then there were some that decided it was time to go, and they made it work."

Waltrip is racing in a special Sandy Hook Special Support Fund paint scheme, and his car number has been changed to No. 26 as a tribute to the 26 students and teachers killed in the Newtown, Conn., school shooting.

DEAR ABBY

Fraud investigator mortified by wife's arrest for fraud

www.dearabby.com

DEAR ABBY: My wife of six years was recently arrested for wire fraud, involving the receipt of unemployment benefits. She was receiving money when she should not have been. I knew she had applied for benefits since she was laid off; however, I was not aware that she was falsifying documents in order to receive the benefits.

I feel hurt, betrayed and offended. I am a retired law enforcement officer and currently an independent fraud investigator. Our relationship had been on the rocks for some time prior to this humiliating event. How do I handle this mess? - BETRAYED IN FLORIDA

DEAR BETRAYED: The first thing to do is realize that your wife's indiscretions are a reflection only on her character, not yours. Then let the law take its course, and once you have cooled off, decide rationally if you want to continue a marriage that has been "on the rocks for some time."

DEAR ABBY: Before my daughter turned 18, she followed the court's visitation specifics, as her brother does. Now that she's 18, she doesn't call or come over at all. She won't answer phone calls, so I text her. She'll respond with one-word answers - "yes," "no," "maybe."

It doesn't bother me that she chooses to live this way. She's an adult. I sent her money for her birthday. She didn't acknowledge it. If I text invitations to her, I still don't hear from her.

She doesn't go to college, doesn't drive, doesn't have a job and lives off her enabling mother. According to her brother, she plays video games all night and sleeps all day.

After her birthday silence, should I continue sending her money for occasions? The lack of respect makes me think not, but my love for her says I should. Is there a lesson to be taught, or do I continue dropping a check in the mail twice a year? The money is insignificant. Learning respect, I believe, is important. - DAD IN BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

DEAR DAD: It doesn't bother you that your daughter chooses to live this way? That she doesn't work, doesn't go to school, plays video games all night and sleeps all day? Is she on drugs? Suffering from severe depression?

Your daughter's behavior is not normal. You have described a young woman in serious need of counseling to bring her back to reality. If you love your daughter, forget the etiquette lesson and help her to get the psychological help she needs.

DEAR ABBY: When I was 17, I was checked into a psychiatric hospital for severe depression and a suicide attempt. While I was there I met "Jim," a boy who was there for the same reasons. To make a long story short, we kept in touch and now we're dating. We benefitted from the experience and are good for each other.

The catch is that he lives more than an hour away from me. We see each other frequently, but friends often ask how we met and we don't know how to answer the question. Generally, we say something vague about how we have known each other for a long time, but some people continue to press. Neither of us wants to advertise that we spent time in a psych ward. How can we gracefully sidestep the question? - DODGING THE QUESTION IN THE U.S.A.

DEAR DODGING: It is difficult to sidestep a question that is asked so frequently in the course of conversation - especially if a couple seems compatible. Because you would rather not be specific, just say you met in a teen counseling group a few years ago. It's the truth - you were being counseled.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 15-year-old student who reads your column every day, and I hope you can help me.

I want to be closer to my parents. They yell at my siblings and me and call us names. It hurts me very much. If we make a mistake - even a little one - or forget our chores, we can expect to be insulted, yelled at, etc. I have learned to tune them out, but I don't understand how such intelligent people like my parents can act this way.

Years ago, I decided to talk to them about it, but that was seen as an act of defiance. My parents, especially my father, can't take constructive criticism and respond with more yelling.

Each of our arguments leaves me upset for days. But I still believe I need to do something. I want to be close to them before it's too late, but I have lost so much respect and trust for them, and they probably feel the same.

Please, Abby, I don't know what to do. I would greatly appreciate your advice, although I know you are very busy. Thank you for taking the time to read my letter. - HOPEFUL IN NEW YORK

DEAR HOPEFUL: You have my sympathy. Harsh words can leave wounds that last longer than physical bruises. Some parents develop hair-trigger tempers when they are under financial pressure. Others, without realizing it, model their behavior on the way their parents raised THEM and overreact when their children make mistakes.

Because you haven't been able to get through to your father, talk to a trusted adult relative about the fact that you would like to be closer to your parents but don't know how. If they hear it from another adult, they might be more open to the message.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 26-year-old mother of a 13-month-old daughter,

"Lissa." I am a "by-the-book" mom. I'm still breastfeeding and I am strict about what I allow my daughter to eat. She has just barely started to eat table food.

I don't want my child to have bad eating habits, so I try to give her only healthy items at dinner-time. Her dad, on the other hand, thinks it's funny to give her junk, including sugar. When she was only 2 months old, I caught him giving her licorice. The other day, it was soda and ice cream. I don't agree with this, and it's causing us a lot of fights.

When we sit down to dinner, I have Lissa's meal set aside. But before I can sit down, her dad starts giving her things off his plate and then she won't eat her dinner. I have told him I don't like it, but he doesn't understand that I want to teach her good eating habits.

Am I wrong in trying so hard? Or should I just give up and let her eat junk? - TRYING MY BEST IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR TRYING: Parenting is supposed to be a team sport and I'm more concerned about the fact that Lissa's dad is undercutting you than what's going into her mouth right now. If he continues, in another year or two, your little girl will regard him as a pushover and you as a big meanie.

You may need an impartial mediator to get through to Lissa's father, and the perfect person to do that is your child's pediatrician.

The only thing about your approach that might be of concern to me is your calling yourself a "by-the-book" mother. A conscientious parent not only goes by the book and is consistent, but she also uses her head and listens to her heart. I hope you will remember that.

Pole vault

In historic first, Danica leaps to next level

For the first three days of Speedweeks at Daytona, all the buzz was about Danica Patrick and what she was doing off-track, specifically her romance with fellow Sprint Cup rookie Ricky Stenhouse Jr.

But after Sunday's pole qualifying for the 55th annual Daytona 500, the talk shifted to Patrick's activities on the track. She made NASCAR history by turning a lap at 196.434 miles per hour to win the pole for the 500. She became the first woman to win the pole for a race in the series now known as Sprint Cup. And she became the first driver since Jimmie Johnson in 2002 to win the pole for the sport's most prestigious race in their rookie season. Patrick broke the qualifying record for females held by Janet Guthrie, who qualified ninth at Bristol and Talladega in 1977.

She will start the 500 alongside outside pole-sitter Jeff Gordon, and the remainder of the starting lineup will be determined after Thursday's Budweiser Duels.

Like many a Daytona pole winner before her, Patrick gave much of the credit to her crew, led by veteran crew chief and Daytona Beach resident Tony Gibson.

"I appreciate the recognition, but it really falls, as I think I said before I went out on the track, 90 percent on Tony [Gibson] and his guys, everybody that gives me the car to go out there and be fast, and maybe 10 percent on me," Patrick said. "All I have to do is think about going out there, being smooth, not letting the car bind up, running on that yellow line.

"Outside of that, I think it shows how well-prepared Tony and everybody was, how strong the Hendrick engines are, how good the new Chevy SS is. We've been fast since practice in January."

Gibson said Patrick, who will start on the pole for the first Budweiser Duel qualifying race on Thursday and on the pole for the Daytona 500 no matter where she finishes in the Duel, understated her contribution to the final result.

"It's more than 10 percent because you can put a good product out there, but if you don't have the person to drive it, put everything else together, it can really damage your day," he said. "We just gave her a product that was really good and she took it the rest of the way. It's more than 10 percent, I promise you. It's 50/50."

Gibson also pointed out that Patrick had a lot on the line, not just because of her gender but because of her lack of a guaranteed starting spot for the 500.

"I'm proud of her," he said. "I know there was a lot of pressure on her to come here and qualify well, in the top six, to lock us in. I'm proud of her to carry that weight on her shoulders. She didn't falter. She did everything right. She hit her marks, hit her marks on the shifts, and here we are."

Patrick, who also made history in the Indianapolis 500 and by winning an Indy car race in Japan, attributed her record-breaking racing career in large part to fast cars, to her upbringing and to her ability to perform at a high level while under the glare of the spotlight that comes with being a high-profile female performer in a mostly male sport.

"First and foremost, I grew up with good values and good goals," she said. "I was brought up to be the fastest driver, not the fastest girl. That was instilled in me from very young, from the beginning.

"Then I feel like thriving in those moments where the pressure's on, has also been a help for me. I also feel like I've been lucky in my career to be with good teams and have good people around me. I don't think any of it would have been possible without that.

"For those reasons, I've been lucky enough to make history, be the first woman to do many things. I really just hope that I don't stop doing that. We have a lot more history to make. We are excited to do it."

NOTEBOOK

If it walks like a duck, it can win

In recent years, being a lame duck in NASCAR hasn't been the performance killer many assume it might be.

Several soon-to-be-splitting drivers and race teams have had strong runs of late. In 2011, after being dismissed from his job as Tony Stewart's crew chief, Darian Grubb led Stewart to five Chase wins and the championship.

Last year, in his final year at Roush Fenway Racing before moving to Joe Gibbs Racing, Matt Kenseth won two Chase races.

This past Saturday night, Kevin Harvick, starting his final year at Richard Childress Racing before moving to Stewart-Haas Racing, won the Sprint Unlimited. It was his third win in the past five of the non-points Sprint Cup season openers.

"I don't think it's been that big of a deal," Harvick said of his lame-duck status during his winner's interview. "Kenseth did a great job with his situation [last year]."

Harvick said that he still wants to win even though he's leaving, and the people on his team that are staying put feel the same way.

"The atmosphere is great, honestly," he said. "Everybody is just working toward the same goal — that's winning the races. We have to be professional anyway, whether it's lame duck or not. You can call it whatever you want, we're going to have a [whole] lot of fun racing, having a good time, doing our jobs ...

"We're all here to do a job, and we have a responsibility to the people that are spending millions of dollars on the side of that car to do it as best we can."

Harvick's crew chief Gil Martin said he feels the same way.

"This [sport] is too hard to be miserable," he said. "It's too hard of work not to come out and try to win. That's not in [Harvick's] nature. That's not in our team's nature to try not to win.

"Anybody that thinks just because of what the situation is that anybody's going to lay down, they're sadly mistaken, because we're going to try to win this championship ... We're going to do whatever it takes to win it. That's pretty well the bottom line."

And Harvick, who has spent his entire Cup career in Childress' No. 29 Chevrolet, said there are other reasons for wanting to succeed this year.

"Pride also comes in there pretty good, too," he said. "It's fun to prove people wrong."

Townley: Truck win 'priceless'

Camping World Truck Series driver John Wes Townley, who was criticized earlier in his career for wrecking too many race cars, made all the right moves in Saturday's Lucas Oil 200 ARCA race at Daytona International Speedway.

Townley, driving a Toyota for Venturini Motorsports, started from the pole, then held off all challengers to get his first major racing victory and Venturini's first at Daytona.

His previous best finish was a third place at Daytona in 2010.

"Personally, this is priceless," Townley said. "I almost wouldn't trade it for anything in the world except my family. It's a real honor to win at Daytona."

Kyle Larson, who plans a full Nationwide Series campaign this year, finished second. Martinsville Speedway track president Clay Campbell was 14th, and former Sprint Cup driver James Hylton, now 78, finished 26th in his final run at Daytona. He's set to retire at the end of the season after 50 years of racing in NASCAR and ARCA.

After Car of Tomorrow, Gen-6 heads back to the future

The Sprint Unlimited and its 19 participants offered the first clues to how the new Generation 6 race car will perform during this week's Daytona 500, and the early indications are that the race will play out much like those of seven or eight years ago, before the introduction of the Car of Tomorrow.

"It's going to be a pack [of cars], absolutely," said Unlimited winner Kevin Harvick, who beat Greg Biffle and Joey Logano to the finish line as the two challengers both recorded career-best Unlimited finishes. "I don't think there's going to be too many chances. You'll see some cars break away. I think if you turn on a 2000 race, one of those races, it's going to be very similar ... [and] you're going to have a lot more advancing of positions when you get so many cars out there."

Unlimited runner-up Greg Biffle predicted that drivers will be able to move up in the middle groove, a tactic the late Dale Earnhardt used with great success back in the day.

"There's going to be a middle," he said. "I went up the middle a few times. Some guys tried it and made it work. The middle actually worked OK for me."

The Gen-6 car has a shorter rear spoiler than the CoT, and Dale Earnhardt Jr. said he noticed the difference in the Unlimited.

"With this little spoiler on the back, it's really easy to lose the draft because the air gets to your nose pretty quick," he said. "The distance of the draft isn't as far back as it used to be off the car in front of you, so you can lose it pretty easily. You have to be real careful. Me and the No. 99 [Carl

Dale Earnhardt Jr. drives the No. 88 Chevrolet on Saturday during practice for this Sunday's Daytona 500 at Daytona International Speedway. (NASCAR photo)

Edwards] both lost it right there at the end of the second segment [of the Unlimited]."

Handling was a non-issue in the Unlimited as chilly, nighttime temperatures made for good grip for race cars, but Denny Hamlin predicts that won't be the case on Sunday in the Daytona 500.

"I think if we get any kind of sunny 70 degree day or so at the [Daytona] 500, handling will be an issue just halfway through a fuel run," he said.

With complete race cars and key components of them being in short supply due to the switch to a new car, there was relatively little risk-taking during the practices leading up to the Unlimited, as teams didn't want to overburden fabricators already swamped trying to get fleets of cars prepared for the upcoming season.

"You're just so short on cars, you didn't want to take any chances," Harvick said.

But once the green flag dropped for the Unlimited, it was time to try some moves with the new car.

"You knew if you tore that car up, you didn't need it anymore," he said.

One team that was in a fix for race cars was the No. 78 team of driver Kurt Busch. He wrecked one in practice and another in the Unlimited.

Richard Childress, whose shops build cars for the No. 78 team, said late Saturday that his crew would work overtime to get Busch the equipment he needs for the Daytona 500.

"We're going to help them in any way we can," he said. "We'll probably have one of those cars back [Sunday], repaired."

Changes to the interiors of the Gen-6 cars were a factor in a couple of incidents early in Speedweeks.

Matt Kenseth said that was a factor in a crash he caused during practice for the Unlimited.

Kevin Harvick said the locations of the mirrors is one of the issues.

"The first five or six times I looked for the mirror, it was in a different spot, and I didn't see it because it wasn't there," he said. "I heard Matt [Kenseth] talking about it. Both wrecks have happened because of that left-side mirror, things being different compared to what they were in the past."
