Body found in burning pickup

Lake City man discovered dead after fire put out.

By AMANDA WILLIAMSON

A Lake City man was found dead in a burning truck on Southwest Cypress Lake Road early Thursday morning.

According to the Columbia County Sheriff's Office, the Columbia County Fire Department and CCSO arrived at 3198 SW Cypress Lake Road at about 4 a.m. to find a white, four-door Chevrolet pickup on fire near the road. After the fire was extinguished, deputies discovered a single male occupant, Jason Lang, deceased in the truck.

Lang, 36, was a lifelong resident of Lake City. According to his obituary, he graduated from Columbia High School in 1994, attended Anderson College in South Carolina in 2000 and was working at PCS in White Springs. He formerly was employed as a teacher at Richardson Middle School.

At this time, there is no indication of foul play, said Sgt. Ed Seifert, CCSO public information officer. The death is being investigated as accidental by detectives from CCSO and the state Fire Marshal's Office.

An autopsy was conducted Friday, and the results will be made available once

SAN FRANCISCO — An Asiana Airlines flight packed with more than 300 people slammed into the runway while landing at San Francisco airport Saturday and caught fire, forcing many to escape by sliding down the emergency inflatable slides as flames tore through the plane.

At least two people died in the crash, authorities said. One person was unaccounted for and another 181 people were taken to hospitals, most of them with minor injuries.

As the plane approached the runway from the waters of San Francisco Bay around noon, travelers in the terminals and others eyewitnesses could see that the aircraft was swaying.

Officials: Springs money too little for work needed

A child paddles through the Ichetucknee Springs head. Area officials are hoping to get some of the $10 million appropriated by the state Legislature for springs protection projects in 2013-14 to reduce nitrate pollution in the Ichetucknee's water, but advocates for many other springs around the state are seeking shares of the money, too.

Local leaders despair that money will go to projects elsewhere.

Florida lawmakers allocated $10 million to springs protection for the 2013-14 fiscal year, but according to local scientists and activists, it isn't enough.

Florida's freshwater springs are dying. White Springs dried up, and the Ichetucknee River snakes through Florida's rural countryside, contaminated by nitrates and other pollutants. Silver Springs, once clear, has become matted with algae.

"Ten million dollars sounds like a lot of money. But when you see the needs of our local springs, it's not going to go very far," said Chris Bird, director of the Alachua County Environmental Protection Department. "You could easily spend all that money on trying to help the Ichetucknee, and not be done... But it's important to understand that it is a step in the right direction." The Suwannee River Water Management District approached the Lake City-Columbia County Chamber of Commerce, The Ichetucknee Partnership and Columbia County Commissioners about supporting a water quality project for the Ichetucknee. The chamber participated in the campaign by drafting a letter to send to the state Department of Environmental Protection, which controls the purse strings. Dr. Anne Shortelle, director of the water management district, said her district aims to get part of the $10 million to help renovate a Lake City spray field that sits inside the Ichetucknee Trace.

"What we're proposing, if we get the money, is to change that sprayfield into wetland treatment," she said. "There's no

Damaging flooding hits Panhandle

PANAMA CITY — Flooding prompted road and waterway closures throughout the rain-soaked Florida Panhandle on Friday.

Emergency officials from Pensacola to Panama City encouraged residents to stay off water-clogged roads following days of heavy rain. Forecasters called for more rain through the next several days.

In Walton County, a dike break caused the U.S. Coast Guard to close a four-mile section of the Intracoastal Waterway between Choctawatchee Bay and West Bay late Thursday.

Coast Guard officials say they received a call from boaters Thursday afternoon reporting that the dike had given way at mile marker 263 between Panama City and Destin.

The Coast Guard said Friday afternoon that the Intercostal Waterway between mile marker 262 to mile marker 266 in Walton County would remain closed until workers could take care of the broken dike.

The Walton County Commission held a special meeting Friday morning to declare a state of emergency because of flooding throughout that area.

Bay County officials said Friday that roadways there were open, after some closings a day earlier. The county has set up a Red Cross shelter in anticipation of more flooding.

Authorities on Friday arrested a New York man charged with trying to extort money from embattled celebrity cook Paula Deen in exchange for not going to the news media with "true and damning statements" he said she made.

FBI agents and local sheriff's deputies arrested Thomas George Paculis, 62, of Newfield, N.Y., Friday morning. A criminal complaint filed Wednesday in federal court in Savannah, Ga., charges him with extortion.

The complaint says Paculis was threatening to go to the media with statements made by Deen unless the former Food Network star gave him $250,000. The complaint does not specify what was in the statements Paculis claimed were made by Deen.

Paculis had his initial court appearance Friday in New York and was released on bond, said FBI Special Agent Stephen Emmett in Atlanta. He has been ordered to appear in federal court in Savannah on July 16.

GAINESVILLE

— Police say a 62-year-old Gainesville man is in jail following a dispute with neighbors over Fourth of July fireworks.

Authorities say Marc Levy yelled at his neighbors Thursday night over their use of fireworks.

Neighbors told police Levy went into his apartment and returned with an AR-15-style airsoft rifle.

Police say Levy waved the gun in the air, then pointed it at two adults and a 2-year-old child.

When Officer Crystal Castor arrived, she found Levy sitting on his front porch with his arms behind his back. She ordered him to show his hands several times before he complied.

He remained in jail without bail Friday morning, charged with aggravated assault, child abuse and resisting an officer.

Zimmerman prosecution rests case

By KYLE HIGHTOWER and MIKE SCHNEIDER

Associated Press

SANFORD — Jurors in the George Zimmerman trial went into their weekend with a lot of courtroom drama and conflicting testimony to digest.

Friday's action-packed session saw the prosecution rest its case, and the judge reject a defense request to acquit Zimmerman of second-degree murder in the fatal shooting of 17-year-old Trayvon Martin last year.

The mothers of both Martin and Zimmerman listened to the same 911 recording of someone screaming for help, and each said she was convinced the voice was that of her own son.

The question of whose voice is on the recording could be crucial to the jury in deciding who was the aggressor in the confrontation between the neighborhood watch volunteer and the teenager.

"I heard my son screaming," Martin's mother, Sybrina Fulton, said firmly after she was played a recording in which distant, high-pitched wails could be heard in the background as a Zimmerman neighbor asked a dispatcher to send police. Moments later on the call, there was a gunshot and the crying stopped.

Gladys Zimmerman, though, testified she recognized the voice all too well: "My son." Asked how she could be certain, she said: "Because it's my son."

Martin's half brother, 22-year-old Jahvaris Fulton, testified that the cries came from the teen. And Zimmerman's uncle, Jose Meza, said he knew it was Zimmerman's voice from "the moment I heard it. ... I thought, that is George."

After Friday's session was over, defense attorney Mark O'Mara told reporters "there will be a lot of other witnesses" who will testify that the voice on the call is George Zimmerman's.

"But we'll just present the case," he said. "We're just getting started."

Gladys Zimmerman was the defense's first witness. O'Mara said he expects to call "several" of the state's 38 witnesses back as well when trial resumes Monday, and he left open the possibility that he would try to introduce toxicology evidence showing Martin had marijuana in his system at the time he died. Judge Debra Nelson has denied the admission of that evidence for the time being.

O'Mara may also call witnesses who he says have stated that Zimmerman was not a racist. Part of the prosecution's theory is that Zimmerman profiled Martin as one of the young black men he'd called law enforcement about as being possible suspects in burglaries in his townhome community weeks prior to the shooting.

O'Mara said he could rest his case as soon as next week.

wetland there now, so we would have to build one. We think it's a project that anyone could get behind."

A constructed wetland would create a natural process of reducing nitrates in the spray system's treated water.

Bird said that projects selected for the $10 million should do at least one of three things: result in a net decrease in the amount of water pumped out of the aquifer, result in a net increase in aquifer recharge or result in a net decrease in evapotranspiration of water from the water basin.

When state lawmakers wrapped up their legislative session, they remembered to budget money for springs protection but never discussed where the money would go, according to Rep. Elizabeth Porter, R-Lake City. Now, it seems unclear if anyone knows where the money will be distributed.

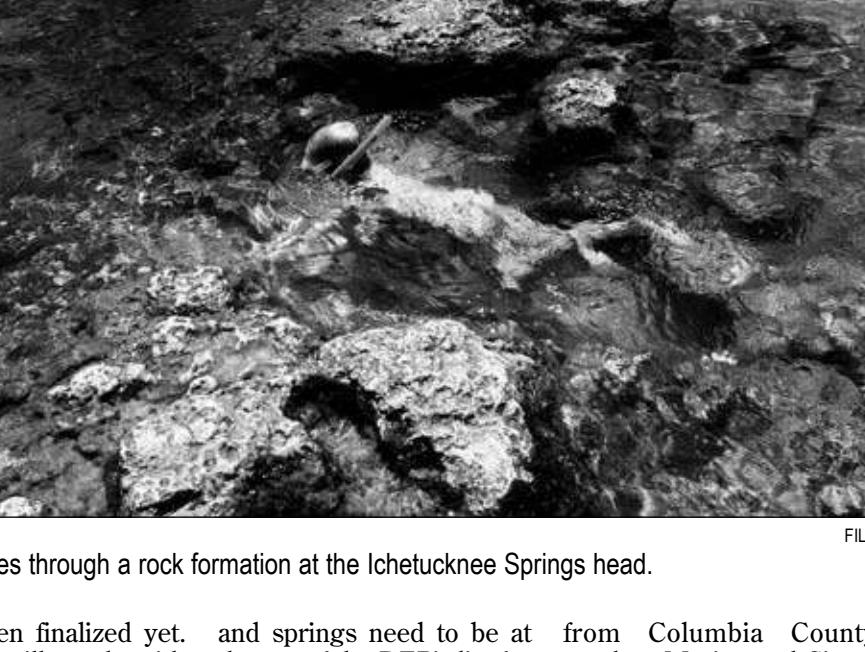

"The department will use the information it requested from the water management districts before session, work with the Legislature and determine how best to spend any money that is appropriated," said Dee Ann Miller of the DEP press office.

"The lists we got from the districts will be used to determine the best springs bang for the buck," she said. "With that in mind, the department and Florida's affected water management districts (Northwest Florida, Suwannee River, and St. Johns River) will select projects that, to the greatest extent possible: involve infrastructure and best management practices, not planning or research; definitively and quantifiably improve spring water quality or flow; are ready to move forward and make an impact. . . ."

Prior to the legislative session, DEP requested a list of projects from all five Florida water management districts. The projects totaled $122.4 million — 10 times what the state spent on springs in 2012.

Now, water management districts are vying for a pot of money smaller than what they asked for, but plans for the distribution haven't been finalized yet. The DEP will work with state politicians, the public and the districts to decide the best way to distribute the funds.

"Ten million dollars for the whole state?" said Joel Foreman, president of the Lake City-Columbia County Chamber of Commerce. "The probability is that it won't be coming to our water district. . . . Typically, money goes south."

Porter recently sat down with DEP officials to discuss her thoughts on the money and where it should be distributed. Coming from an area that contains the largest concentration of freshwater springs, Porter said the DEP seemed very interested in what she had to say. She also recently co-sponsored a water protection bill in the state House that is now state law. It requires water management districts to include certain reservations and institute minimum flows and levels, and it requires districts to enter into inter-agency agreements for resource management.

"This is a great start to restoration and protection of the springs in North Florida," Porter said. "We will continue to put money toward the health of our springs and water bodies each year, and continue to try to increase the dollars dedicated to remediating our springs and water bodies back to their pristine condition."

Porter said the world-famous Ichetucknee River and springs need to be at the top of the DEP's list for project funding, as the two are an economic engine for North Central Florida.

However, Porter's counterpart in the state Senate appears not to agree that the Ichetucknee should be DEP's top priority.

State Sen. Charles Dean, R-Inverness, told the Ocala Star-Banner on May 20 that "At the top of the list for me is Silver Springs, and the springs over at Crystal River."

According to Dean, Silver Springs, a tourist attraction that will become a state park in October after $4 million in changes remove the exotic animals and amusement rides, became his top priority during committee talks because it was already in the works.

When asked by the Lake City Reporter who needs the money the most, Dean responded by email that "The money is going to projects we believe will directly affect our springs in the most positive way. These projects are intended to 'move dirt.' It will be put into effect immediately."

Asked for further clarification of which project deserved top priority, an aide authorized to speak on Dean's behalf said by email that Dean "has continued to ask that both [Silver Springs and Ichetucknee] be funded. We have been told the $10 million will be appropriated across many projects."

Dean's district stretches from Columbia County south to Marion and Citrus counties.

According to Bird, communities surrounding Silver Springs and Wekiwa Springs north of Orlando are working hard to tap into the $10 million.

"I'm concerned that the funding will be so watered down if they try to spread it too thinly," said Merrilee Malwitz-Jipson, president of Our Santa Fe River. "In order to be effective, they need to give $10 million to each springshed that has a troubled spring."

She said the state will be looking at areas that have big attractions, the springs with the biggest "bang for the buck," as DEP stated. But to Malwitz-Jipson, Foreman and many North Central Florida residents, the Ichetucknee River provides an economic engine to this area.

For now, however, over-pumping and nitrogen loading are destroying it, Bird said. Large farms fertilize their land and then the nitrogen runs into the river.

However, Steve Minnis, the director of government affairs and communication with the SRWMD, said he was excited for the $10 million, as the state has never had springs protection money in the past.

"It's not just agriculture," he said, disagreeing with Bird and Knight about the main cause behind the spring's deterioration. "It's all of us. We're all a part of the problem. . . . and we're all a part of the solution."

ing unusually from side to side and that at one point the tail seemed to hit the ground.

By the time the flames were out, the top of the Boeing 777's fuselage had burned away. The tail section was gone, with pieces of it scattered across the beginning of the runway. One engine appeared to have broken away. Emergency responders could be seen walking inside the burned-out wreckage.

News of the crash spread quickly on Twitter and the Internet in this wired city, with eyewitnesses tweeting their stories, posting images of the plumes of smoke rising above the bay and uploading video of passengers fleeing the burning plane.

"It just looked really bad," Belding said. "I've seen the pictures of it since then, and it's amazing anyone walked out of that plane."

The investigation has been turned over to the FBI and terrorism has been ruled out, said San Francisco Fire Chief Joanne Hayes-White said. Federal aviation and transportation investigators were heading to the scene. Asiana, Boeing and the engine manufacturer, Pratt & Whitney, pledged to work with them.

Based on witness accounts in the news and video of the wreckage, Mike Barr, a former military pilot and accident investigator who teaches aviation safety at the University of Southern California, said it appeared the plane approached the runway too low and something may have caught the runway lip — the seawall at the end of the runway.

San Francisco is one of several airports around the country that border bodies of water and have walls at the end of their runways to prevent planes that overrun a runway from ending up in the water.

ANOTHER VIEW

Water war leaving Florida dry

Congress should intervene to keep Georgia and the Army Corps of Engineers from further damaging the seafood harvest and environmental habitat in Florida's Apalachicola Bay. The federal courts have sent a clear message they don't intend to bring fairness, clarity or a sense of urgency to ending the 23-year water wars among Florida, Georgia and Alabama. It's time that Congress established once and for all that the states must share a watershed that serves a distinct need for all three. And Washington needs to act before Apalachicola's oyster beds and estuary dry to the point of becoming both an ecological and an economic crisis.

The three states have battled for decades over a dam that the Corps built in the 1950s on the Chattahoochee River north of Atlanta. Constructed principally to create hydroelectric power and control flooding, the dam has evolved over the years to act as an important drinking water resource for metropolitan Atlanta, which has used water from the reservoir, called Lake Lanier, to meet the needs of fast-growing suburbs.

The withdrawals have come at the expense of users downstream such as Florida's seafood industry, which relies on water flow from the entire basin to feed the Apalachicola River. The river flows south across the Florida Panhandle and empties in the Gulf of Mexico.

A federal appeals court in Atlanta handed Georgia a victory in 2011 by ruling that the city had a legal right to the water, setting aside a lower court ruling that would have opened more flow downstream. The ruling came amid a rapid deterioration of the Apalachicola habitat. The lack of freshwater from the tristate basin has sapped the bay's oyster harvest, which produces 90 percent of Florida's oysters and 10 percent of the country's. Flows into Apalachicola are at the lowest recorded levels since 1929....

Florida Sens. Bill Nelson and Marco Rubio were unsuccessful in adding tough language to the Senate's current water supply bill that could have brought more of the water downstream. Still, the measure calls on the governors of the three states to cut a deal and for Congress to address the matter if they don't. Florida's House delegation and Gov. Rick Scott have also asked the House to include language in its version of the water bill that provides for an "adequate" flow of water to the Apalachicola region....

The appellate ruling may have strengthened Georgia's hand, but that state has an interest in reaching a political solution. The court, after all, noted that the law was "ambiguous" about the extent of the Corps' authority to provide water for metro Atlanta. A deal among the three states would end the costly litigation and give Georgia more certainty over its water supply.

The states agreed in two interim compacts in the 1990s to balance Georgia's water supply needs with those of the downstream states. But this holding pattern cannot continue. Allowing Georgia to stake claim to a federal dam and interstate waters that should operate for the benefit of the entire basin is unfair. It makes no legal, practical or economic sense, and it stands to ruin an industry and region of national importance. Florida should continue pressing its case.

A new birth of freedom

A Fourth of July Gallup Poll presented an interesting picture of our country. Americans overwhelmingly express pride in being American, yet the division is wide and deep about what being an American means.

Eighty-five percent of respondents say they are extremely or very proud to be an American.

Yet, 71 percent say they think the signers of the Declaration of Independence would be disappointed how the country has turned out.

Only 15 percent of conservatives and 12 percent of Republicans say the signers of the Declaration would be "pleased" with how the country has turned out. But, 41 percent of liberals and 42 percent of Democrats say the signers of the Declaration would be pleased.

Clearly, there are very different ideas between the two parties and between conservatives and liberals about what truths the signers of the Declaration felt were self-evident and what exactly rights to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" means.

That's not to say that there was unanimity of opinion even among those who signed the Declaration of Independence.

To state the obvious, there are signatures affixed to the bottom of the Declaration of men who saw no inherent contradiction in a nation founded on the idea of liberty in which slavery was legal.

My guess is that the 85 percent who today express pride in being an American do so because they believe this is a free and moral

parker@urbancure.org

country. We all agree, I think, on these principles.

But, like the difference of opinion about slavery two centuries ago, we have huge disconnects among large parts of our population about what a free and moral country is about.

Anyone who follows what I write can guess where I stand.

It is hard for me to believe that many in our country see no contradiction in believing that freedom can be an American ideal while half of Americans live in households getting some sort of government benefits.

Or that somehow a country can be thought of as free in which 40 cents of every dollar the national economy produces goes to government at either the federal, state or local level.

Or that government can put us in debt to the tune of the total value of the annual output of our economy.

Or that the real debt burden sitting on the American public is some $90 trillion — more than five times the size of our gross domestic product — that represents the unfunded liabilities of Social Security, Medicare and other government programs.

How can we see this as a free, moral country when we legally and casually use abortion as a means of birth control and provide hundreds of millions of taxpayer funds to Planned Parenthood, the nation's largest abortion provider?

Or that government can tell us what kind of health care we need and must buy and can tell employers what kind of health care they must provide.

Or that government can force employers to provide birth control and abortion pills to employees, even, as in the case of the Christian owners of Hobby Lobby, it violates their religious convictions.

Or that children go to public schools where it is illegal to pray or teach traditional family values.

There's been a lot of writing recently about the Civil War battle of Gettysburg.

When President Abraham Lincoln gave his famous address at Gettysburg, Pa., in 1863, he said the nation's business was "unfinished" and he defined the task ahead that "this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

The challenges to freedom stand before us today as they stood before Lincoln then.

America is deeply divided and confused, as it was when the bloody battle at Gettysburg was fought.

We again need courageous leadership that will lead us back to the path of freedom and moral principle that inspired our founders and is our destiny.

Morsi failed to meet expectations

In retrospect, Mohammed Morsi, ousted this week after a year as Egypt's president, should have done what he'd promised voters in the country's first free election: Rebuild the economy, beginning with tourism, the country's largest industry, by reassuring the safety of tourists. Crack down on the kind of petty corruption — routine bribes to traffic cops and lower-level bureaucrats — that unduly infuriates the public. Remove barriers to foreign investment, especially in oil and gas exploration. Attack youth unemployment with New Deal-type public works programs. Without making a big deal of it, greatly step up trade with Israel, the Middle East's most developed economy, and quietly seek its help in setting up a high-tech sector.

This is what Morsi was elected and failed to do. The public disillusionment was overwhelming and manifested itself in the massive public demonstrations that finally persuaded the military to remove him from office.

"We supported Morsi at the beginning. But he is a loser," a flag-waving accountant told The Washington Post. Morsi is a longtime member of the Muslim Brotherhood, described by The Associated Press as "the region's oldest and most prestigious political

mcfeattersd@shns.com

Islamist group."

But during the campaign, Morsi played down his Islamic ties. Symbolically, he distanced himself from the Brotherhood by running as a member of a new party with the calculatedly neutral name of the Freedom and Justice Party. He won with something less than a mandate, just under 52 percent.

Nonetheless, Morsi began to implement, quietly at first and more blatantly as time went on, what is called "political Islam." Members of the Brotherhood and their Islamist allies were named to high government posts. Morsi's rhetoric became increasingly religious. Perhaps the moment he overreached was allowing a panel dominated by Islamists to rewrite the constitution, which was approved in a referendum with only 32 percent voter turnout.

This week, the military gave Morsi 48 hours to begin tackling the nation's economic problems.

When he failed to meet that impossibly short deadline, the military removed him from office in what it insisted was not a coup. But it had all the earmarks of one: the arrest of the Brotherhood's top leadership, Morsi himself held in an undisclosed location, tanks in the streets and the suppression of pro-Morsi media.

Until new elections can be held at some unspecified date, Morsi's interim replacement as president is Adly Mansour, the chief justice of Egypt's Supreme Court. He was sworn in Thursday. Morsi's ouster could be expected to infuriate advocates of political Islam, but Mansour received valuable religious and political cover when Saudi King Abdullah send congratulations on "your leadership of Egypt in this critical period of its history."

As far as the United States stands, Morsi is no great loss. He was an ineffectual leader and his brand of political Islam promised problems down the road. But his ouster was a setback for our espoused principle of elected democracy. Then again, as the late Sen. Everett Dirksen used to say, "Sometimes it is necessary to rise above principle."

Stephen Louis Knight

Stephen Louis Knight, 73, a long-time resident of Lake City, passed away July 3, 2013 at Lake City Medical Center. He retired as Director of Columbia County Environmental Health Services. He was a graduate of Madison County High School, North Florida Community College and Florida State University. An Eagle Scout, he had a distinct interest in genealogy, science, the environment, the Civil War, Indian culture and photography to name just a few. Mr. Knight was a Scout Master for the Boy Scouts leading many local youths to achieve the Eagle Scout Awards. His interest in the Civil War began with his great-grandfather, Jesse Flowers, who fought and survived at the Battle of Olustee. Mr. Knight joined the Blue-Grey Army in its second year when he arrived in Columbia County. He helped build the annual Battle of Olustee Civil War re-enactment and participated in many re-enactments around the US. In his role as a re-enactor, "Colonel Stephen Knight" participated in the Civil War movie North and South. He was also a long-time member of the Blue-Grey Army Board of Directors. His interest in his Indian heritage led him to become a lifelong participant in Indian activities across the country. He was a vital leader for the Alligator Festival in Lake City. He was a member of the Lake City Rotary Club, photography clubs and a proud Elder of Broken Lance Native American Church in Wellborn supporting yearly baptisms in Ichetucknee Springs. The son of the late Aldine W. Knight and Lucille DeLoach Knight Reischman and step-son of the late Jimmie Reischman, Mr. Knight, born in New Orleans, La., is survived by three daughters, Natalie (Jose) Gavarrette of Birmingham, Ala.; Jennifer (Johnny) Cox of Madison, Fla. and Charity (Andrew) Payne of Julington Creek, Fla.; grandchildren Melissa Gavarrette of Los Angeles, Calif.; Joshua Gavarrette of the US Navy; Austin Gavarrette of Birmingham, Ala.;

Lacey Clayton of Madison, Fla. and Trey and Ivie Payne of Julington Creek, Fla.; sister Susan Knight Lamb of Live Oak, one half-sister Ruth Wheeler of New Smyrna, Fla. and brother-in-law Owen Brewer of Tampa, Fla. He was pre-deceased by his wife, Margaret "Maggie" Knight. Visitation will be Sunday, July 7 at Gateway Forest Lawn Funeral Home from 4 - 6 p.m. Services will be held at Gateway Forest Lawn Funeral Home Monday, July 8, at 11 a.m. with Bro. Ken Miller officiating. Burial will be at Oak Ridge Cemetery in Madison, Fla. with a graveside service at 3 p.m. In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to the Broken Lance Native American Church, 11272 113th Road, Live Oak, FL 32060. Fort White's 14U All-Stars softball team won the Babe Ruth Softball district tournament in Live Oak to qualify for the state tournament. Raven Miles was the big hitter for Fort White during the district tournament. She had five hits in seven at bats.

Tough run at state

Fort White 14U, Columbia Rookie all-stars ousted.

From staff reports

Fort White's district champion 14U All-Stars softball team picked up where it left off at the Florida State Championships, but the victory run didn't last.

The 2013 Florida State Championships are at Shocker Park in Ocala.

Fort White, which went undefeated at the district tournament in Live Oak, opened state with a 13-3 win over South Orlando on Thursday.

The next game was pushed back to Saturday and Fort White fell to Mount Dora, 12-2. In the elimination bracket later Saturday, Fort White lost to Madison, 11-7.

Mount Dora advanced in the winner's bracket and will play the Longwood/Winter Park winner for the state title.

The Columbia Rookie All-Stars team, playing in the Rookie State Tournament in Palm Beach Gardens, dropped all three pool games.

Columbia lost to Manatee, 13-3, on Thursday, to Fishhawk, 12-4, on Friday, and to Orlando, 13-7, on Saturday.

Memorable few days for Marshall

Columbia High senior talks about Nike camp, decision to sign with Florida State.

By BRANDON FINLEY

bfinley@lakecityreporter.com

It's been a week that Columbia High's Trey Marshall will never forget.

The to-be senior safety was invited to The Opening at Oregon, a Nike football camp held on the University of Oregon campus and reserved for the nation's top 150 athletes.

On Tuesday, he ran a 4.34 40-yard dash to place him fourth out of his peers and on Wednesday he made his decision to play college football at Florida State University.

For Marshall, the typical attributes came into play when making his decision, but he also had a bit of history steering him in Tallahassee's direction.

"Just the tradition of CHS players going on to FSU and then to the elite," Marshall said.

And while Columbia head coach Brian Allen is one of those people, Marshall said that the decision was ultimately his.

"I do look up to him, but it was my decision," Marshall said. "He made his decision back in 1996, so the program is a whole different thing today. It was a decision that I had to make for myself."

But it was also more than tradition as Marshall wanted to make sure that his friends and family were able to make the trip to see him play at the next level.

"Instead of going out of state, I'm just going down the road," Marshall said.

Marshall said the idea behind getting the commitment out of the way now was to focus on being a Tiger rather than a Seminole.

"It's definitely a relief," Marshall said.

JASON MATTHEW WALKER/Lake City Reporter

Columbia High senior Trey Marshall received national exposure at The Opening Nike football camp in Oregon.

"It allows me to focus on the season. This has been a busy week, but I'm ready to work as hard as I can."

"I'm going to do all that I can do to get a championship."

Johnson doubles up at Daytona

By JENNA FRYER
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH — Jimmie Johnson became the first driver in 31 years to sweep Daytona International Speedway, accomplishing the feat with a dominating run Saturday night for his fourth win of the season.

The Daytona 500 winner is the first driver since Bobby Allison in 1982, and the fifth overall, to win both races in a season at Daytona.

"I don't think I made a bad move tonight. I'm pretty proud of that," Johnson said. "To tie anything that Bobby did is really special."

I'm very proud of that. I've going to take that home and savor it pretty well."

The five-time NASCAR champion was the leader on the restart for a two-lap sprint to the finish in overtime Saturday night. He held off Kevin Harvick on the restart, and then pulled out front to a sizeable lead.

Tony Stewart moved into second and may have been timing his attempt to make a pass for the lead when a caution in the middle of the pack froze the field.

Stewart was second, followed by Kevin Harvick in a Chevrolet sweep.

Clint Bowyer was fourth and team co-owner Michael Waltrip fifth in a pair of Toyotas. Then came Kurt Busch, Jamie McMurray and Dale Earnhardt Jr. as Chevrolets took six of the top eight spots and seven of the top 10.

Casey Mears was ninth in a Ford, followed by Ryan Newman.

The race was stopped for almost nine minutes for a six-car accident with 11 laps remaining that included yet another vicious hit for Denny Hamlin.

Hamlin's car inexplicably turned right and spun hard into the frontstretch wall. It then turned back into traffic and Hamlin was tagged hard by AJ Allmendinger in a hit that caused his car to lift off the ground.

TDC office is moving

The Columbia County Tourist Development Department will be joining five other departments within county government that will be on the move this month. The various Columbia County agencies will be relocating to the Duval Place Complex, at 971 West Duval Street, directly behind the Supervisor of Elections Office. In addition to the TDC offices, other departments joining in the move include Code Enforcement/Safety, Veteran's Services, County Extension Offices, Red Cross and Suwannee Valley Economic Council. Phone extensions are expected to remain the same for all of the departments involved in the move and the transfer of the offices is expected to be completed by mid-July. The refurbished offices were at one time the site of the Lake City Medical Center Complex.

Southside Rec improvements

If you haven't visited the Southside Recreation Complex recently, you'll be impressed with the amount of work going on at the park. Three new combination concession stand/restroom buildings are well underway. A total of 40 sets of new bleachers with safety railing have been installed on concrete pads. ADA-compliant sidewalks have been poured. New shade structures are being installed at the sites of the new bleachers. New dugout roofs are being installed and underground electrical upgrades are well under way. Bids are being solicited for a new LED sign at the entrance to the complex on Bascom Norris Drive. A few months ago the Board of County Commissioners and Tourist Development Council approved nearly $3 million in improvements at the complex with the county funding approximately $1.3 million and the remaining $1.7 million being underwritten by a 1 percent increase in the Local Option Tourist Development Tax. The improvements are scheduled to be done in four phases.

Processed and prepared foods have become staples in the restaurant industry but for Terri Grebs, her name and reputation is based on homemade cooking.

Terri and her husband Jim Grebs own Terri's Sweet Tweets and Sandwiches where they specialize in homemade foods.

From homemade pie crusts, soups, sandwiches or specialty cakes and other baked items, Grebs puts a personal touch and care into her dishes and makes them from scratch — qualities that aren't often offered at chain restaurants.

"This is my second restaurant," she said. "I owned a restaurant a long time, but I've been in the business for most of my life. My husband took me out of the food business and put me in the trucking business and I became a truck driver."

Grebs and her husband worked as a tandem truck driving team for years and then after one year of driving solo, she decided she will incur for older, sicker beneficiaries.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office estimates that about six million people of various ages will pay the tax penalty for not having insurance in 2014, the first year the law championed by President Barack Obama will be fully implemented.

It's hard to estimate how many of those will be the young and healthy adults insurers are trying to reach, but that subgroup makes up a very small portion of the overall market. Even though it's small, experts say it could be enough to throw the system's financing off-kilter.

About 3 million 18-24 year-olds in the U.S. currently purchase their own insurance. Many pay high prices for scant benefits, with high deductibles and co-pays because they make too much to qualify for Medicaid and have no coverage options from their employers or parents. The Urban Institute estimates that the majority of adults in their 20s will qualify for government subsidies under the Affordable Care Act.

Premium hikes could be a disincentive for young people weighing their options. Premiums for people aged 21 to 29 with single coverage who are not eligible for government subsidies would increase by 42 percent under the law, according to an analysis by actuaries at the consulting firm Oliver Wyman. By comparison, an adult in his or her early 60s who would see about a 1 percent average increase in premiums under new federal health rules.

Experts warn a lot of these so-called "young invincibles" could opt to pay the fine instead of spending hundreds or thousands of dollars each year on insurance premiums. If enough young adults avoid the new insurance marketplace, it could throw off the entire equilibrium of the Affordable Care Act. Insurers are betting on the business of that group to offset the higher costs they

QI'm invested in a mutual fund with a 5.5 percent front-end load. Should I sell it and switch to a no-load fund? — H.Z., Medford, Ore.

AThat's a hefty fee, but you've already paid it, when you invested in the fund. So look forward, not backward. If you don't like the fund's performance, consider selling it. There are many terrific no-load funds out there. (Learn more at fool.com/mutualfunds/mutualfunds.htm or morningstar.com.)

Also, check out the fund's annual fees. If its expense ratio is much more than 1 percent, that's not promising. Some index funds will charge you less than 0.10 percent.

QHow does online stock trading work, and is it safe? — T.W., Goshen, Ind.

AIt's not as scary as it may seem, and is even preferred by many investors. It's generally inexpensive, with many brokerages charging less than $10 per trade. Also, you can examine orders carefully before placing them.

To get started investing online, visit the website of the brokerage you're interested in. There, you'll probably be able to download or print forms with which to open an account, or you'll find a phone number to call for help and information. Fill out and submit the application form along with payment to fund the account. You'll then receive an account number and can set up a password. Use those to log in at the website. From there you can check the status of your portfolio and account, or place an order whenever you want.

All reputable online brokerages have security measures in place. Before opening an account, read up on them at the website or call and ask about them. Learn more about good brokerages at broker.fool.com and mint.com/brokerages.

Fool's School*Don't Over-Concentrate

It's good to be focused, but when it comes to parking your hard-earned dollars in stocks, don't put too many eggs in too few baskets. Here are a few ways that we investors fall short of effective diversification:

(1) Owning too much company stock of our employer. The benefits of owning our company stock often include the ability to purchase it at a discount and to be able to easily dollar-cost average into the position.

Employees also tend to know a lot about their company and industry, which can give them an edge.

Nevertheless, too much of a good thing is still too much. Enron serves as a classic example of how owning company stock can go horribly wrong. Remember that you already depend on your employer for your income. It's kind of risky to depend on it for the bulk of your investments, too.

(2) Investing too heavily in an industry with which we are very familiar. Industry knowledge can give us a leg up, but this familiarity fuels a common pitfall, too. For example, it's enticing for an orthopedic surgeon to load up on shares of a medical device company that enables surgeons to perform knee and hip replacements, if the good doctor strongly believes in its products. But if either the sector suffers or the technology falters, then the portfolio shrinks.

(3) Not selling our stock winners to avoid Uncle Sam. It's common to avoid selling a winning stock to delay having to pay taxes on the gains. But this can threaten our portfolio's performance.

If you doubled or tripled your money in a particular stock over some years, that stock may have come to represent a big chunk of your portfolio — meaning that if it takes a tumble, so will your nest egg. Over time, unsold winners can dominate your portfolio and increase your risk.

A good rule of thumb is to try not to let any holding come to make up more than, say, 5 percent of your overall net worth.

My Dumbest Investment*The Short Story

Years ago, I bought stock in a company that my girlfriend worked for. I had been watching it and thought it was undervalued at $34 per share. So I bought about $5,000 worth. As I had hoped, it soon made a modest gain. Then rumors arose that the company would not meet its third-quarter projections and that the stock was expected to fall. Well, I sold — and made a little profit. Two days later it was announced that the company was going to be acquired, and its stock rose to $60.

It goes to show that if you believe in a company, stick with it. Day-trading or short-term trading is no longer an option for me. I will focus on the long term when it comes to solid companies. — R.A., Tucson, Ariz.

The Fool Responds: You're right. Lots of great companies encounter occasional hiccups. It's often best to hang on, as long as you retain long-term faith in their future — especially if you consider them undervalued. Rumors can be dangerous, too, as they won't necessarily come to pass. Strong stocks tend to rise over time.

Fluor (NYSE: FLR) offers engineering, procurement, construction, maintenance and project management services globally, serving the oil-and-gas, power, infrastructure and government markets, among others. Its recent growth has been sluggish, but its future seems bright.

Some have worried about the U.S. government's sequester-caused budget cuts, which could hurt future orders for Fluor's services from the Department of Energy or Defense. Despite that, Fluor's ties to the private energy and independent oil-and-gas sector make it a very attractive bet over the long run.

President Obama has made it clear that he'd like to see America become more energy independent. This will likely result in the construction of new drilling rigs as well as more energy-efficient power plants, and also more pipeline and storage tanks capable of holding an increasing number of natural gas and oil finds. Fluor's bread-and-butter business is these energy and oil-and-gas projects. In just the last quarter alone, Fluor received $6.5 billion in awards — with $3.1 billion coming from the oil-and-gas sector — and its total backlog rose 11 percent to $18.6 billion.

With a forward-looking price-to-earnings (P/E) ratio of about 13, Fluor's stock seems fairly attractively priced and should reward long-term investors. More risk-averse sorts might wait and hope for a pullback in price. (The Motley Fool owns shares of Fluor.)

TOURISM: Bed tax hike

Babe Ruth Small League State tournament with more than 60 teams being hosted from June 29 to July 2. Later in July, the Southside Complex will be hosting two baseball and two softball tournaments. The largest being the Jacksonville Storm Softball Summer Showcase with more than 70 teams expected along with nearly 50 collegiate recruiters.

Bed tax hike

Implementation of the 1 percent increase in the Local Option Tourist Development Tax showed almost immediate results. Collections for April of 2012 were $51,128, compared to $68,959 for April of this year. The increase in bed tax collections from 3 percent to 4 percent began implementation on April 1 of this year with full implementation starting on May 1.

According to Smith Travel Reports, the occupancy rate for lodging in Columbia County increased by 0.7 percent for May of this year with average daily rate (ADR) increasing from $69.79 to $73.19, an increase of 4.9 percent and total room revenues for the month increasing 5.6 percent over May of last year.

SRWMD hosts legislative tour

Approximately 65 individuals were hosted in mid-June for a familiarization tour of the springs and rivers in the Suwannee River Valley area. The group included State Representative Elizabeth Porter, members of her staff and family. Several other senators and representatives were on hand, accompanied by staff and guests. A sizeable contingent from the Suwannee River Water Management District served as guides and hosts on the two-day event which included visits to several area springs, along with the Santa Fe and Suwannee Rivers. The visit was a great opportunity to showcase the beauty of our area and explain about the challenges represented by water consumption, nutrients and other factors on the quality and quantity of available water. The Florida Legislature appropriated $10 million during this year's session to begin efforts to restore these essential water resources which are so important to the economic and tourism sectors and to our overall quality of life. Our congratulations and thanks for all those responsible to the tour and the participants for taking time out of their busy schedules to learn more about these significant challenges and funding needed to stop further deterioration of our water resources.

State parks

With summertime upon us again, it's time to remember our state parks

No discussion about tourism in our area would be complete without talking about our Florida State Parks. In all, we are blessed to have 10 such parks in the Suwannee River Valley, including the nearby Olustee Battlefield. During the 2011-12 state fiscal year (July 1 – June 30) our parks hosted more than 484,000 visitors, provided employment to 52 and generated more than $3 million in direct salaries.

Ichetucknee Springs alone hosted approximately 200,000 visitors.

Florida State Parks have been judged by a national association as the best system in the nation twice in the past five years and are a strong contender again this year. If you, your family members or friends haven't visited one of our parks recently, you'll miss a real treat. They represented wholesome and economical recreation, host an array of special events annually and are literally in our back yard. If you'd like to help support our parks, we recommend visiting friendsoffloridastateparks.com for additional information.

'TWEETS': Terri and Jim Grebs

wanted to get back into the food service industry.

She got sick a few years ago and when she recovered she made a decision that changed her life and put her back into her own professional kitchen.

"I've always wanted a little bakery and sandwich shop and if I don't do it now, it's never going to happen," Grebs said. "We literally put every dime we had set aside and put it into this (restaurant)."

Terri's Sweet Tweets and Sandwiches, 3525 NW Bascom Norris Drive, is open from 11 a.m. - 4 p.m. on Mondays; from 8 a.m. - 6 p.m. on Tuesdays - Fridays and from 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. on Saturdays. They also offer after hours pick-up services for people who can't pick up their orders by the close of normal business.

"We really, truly cater to the customer," she said.

Terri's Sweet Tweets and Sandwiches opened on Oct. 25, 2012, the date Terri and her husband celebrated their wedding anniversary.

"My pie crusts, soups — everything is made from scratch," Grebs said. "We do homemade ice cream, special orders, but mostly we do special orders on whole cakes and pies and we do some sandwich specials. We don't fry here, so we bake everything. The whole thing, besides me getting my dream, was to get my honey out of the truck."

The restaurant is also different because it features a display case featuring several Tweety Bird Looney Tunes dolls.

"I've loved Tweety Bird my entire life, so when I was trying to think of a name for the place, Terri's Sweet Tweets," came, she said. "I was thinking that we people think of 'tweets' they are going to think of computer stuff, but when they walk in and see Tweety, they'll get 'tweets'."

Grebs said working at her shop is a labor of love.

"I can't give the right words [to describe] what I like about cooking for the public," she said. "To see the pleasure on their face when they eat my chocolate cake with mousse and the ganache and I see their face. Ah, that is just decadent, and to see that expression, that for me is worth all the pain, aggravation and everything else that I go through. I get so much gratification."

She said her husband has also developed a special love for the restaurant.

"This is what I love to do and my honey loves it now too," Grebs said. "The first time he made a tip here he was like a kid in a candy store."

Her employees are expected to get to know their customers.

"You carry on conversations with the customers," she said. "You should get to know them, their grandkids and everybody in their families."

HEALTH: Young may opt out of plans

America's Health Insurance Plans and The Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association recently wrote to federal health officials warning that they feared low enrollment by young adults and proposed beefed up penalties for opting out. Insurers worry the $100 penalty might not be a strong enough deterrent. The penalties jump to $695 or 2.5 percent of taxable income — which ever is more — by 2016.

"The key to keeping health care affordable is you really want to balance the pool, where you have enough young and healthy people to balance off the care of the older, sicker people who are likely to utilize much more health care services," said Justine Handelman, the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association's vice president for legislative and regulatory policy.

She said younger people use about a fifth of the services that older beneficiaries do.

Jonathan Gruber, an economics professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who helped craft that state's law, said he thinks the first-year federal penalty should be higher.

The penalty under the Massachusetts law, which served as the model for Obama's overhaul, was $218 the first year in 2007. Gruber said that amount proved effective.

"People hate paying money and getting nothing for it," he said.

Roughly 40,000 of about 6 million Massachusetts residents paid the penalty the first year, he said.

Many young adults have chosen relatively bare-bones health plans before the Affordable Care Act, but the new law requires all plans to offer a minimum set of benefits, thus raising the price for coverage.

The cost of health coverage is difficult to estimate because it includes so many factors, but a 27-year-old making $30,000 a year in 2014 will have a $3,400 premium and will be eligible for subsidies that cover about 26 percent of the bill. That person would end up paying $2,509, or about $209 a month. That does not include deductibles, co-pays and other variables which can vary widely.

The estimates come from the nonpartisan Kaiser Family Foundation's online Health Reform Subsidy Calculator.

Vintage swimsuits on the market

I was one of those little kids who were often called "a fish." You know the type — a pint sized 3- or 4-year-old who could swim like a champ and would rather spend all day playing underwater in a swimming pool than doing anything else. My mom nearly drowned as a teenager, and while she never learned to swim herself, she was adamant about giving me and my sisters swimming lessons. To her credit, all three of us are excellent swimmers today. My swimming abilities even helped pay for school. I swam competitively through my teens and early 20s, and today, I enjoy swimming as my favorite form of exercise.

It follows that investigating the history of the bathing suit is a topic of interest for me. It brings back happy memories of days at swim team practice and now relates to my work evaluating vintage objects.

In the beginning

In the early years of the 20th century, there were strict laws that required women to be fully clothed when taking a swim. The bathing suit requirements of the day included a non-form-fitting costume that consisted of a dress, pantaloons, cap, and shoes. Most women obliged and frolicked in the waves in full length swimming attire while others took their chances with a more revealing bathing suit. Most woolen — yes, that reads woolen as in wool — swimsuits of the early decades of the 1900s were basic black.

All of that changed in the summer of 1905 when Australian swimmer Annette Kellerman announced her desire to become the first woman to swim the English Channel.

'Miles for Amputees'

Man stops here on cross-country fundraising tour.

Flat tires from goathead thorns, dust storms, and temperatures above the 100-degree mark have done little to hamper Grey Tedford as he rides his bike roughly 3,100 miles for amputees. He has miles to go and is fueled by incidents that have caused several of his family members to lose their limbs in unrelated incidents.

Tedford, 19, of Bruce, Mississippi is a rising junior at Ole Miss. Although he is a journalism major, he's currently the biggest story from his hometown.

Tedford has been riding his bicycle a month and eight days, approximately five weeks, to raise funds and awareness for the Amputee Coalition, a nonprofit for amputees.

He named his campaign Miles for Amputees and he's traveled across the country to get financial and inspirational support for amputees.

Lesser-known presidential sites face budget woes

By JEFFREY COLLINS
Associated Press

PINEVILLE, N.C. — Supporters of a North Carolina museum honoring James K. Polk, America's 11th president, are learning a lesson that's hitting home at other monuments to lesser-known American leaders: Government spending on their memorial sites is declining, so private money and grants had better be found quickly.

The small museum on the land where Polk was born is the target of Republican state lawmakers looking for places to cut the budget. Similar money problems are besetting other sites that honor some of the American presidents least likely to make the historians' top 10 list. Ohio has been cutting funds for the state-run museums honoring Rutherford B. Hayes, Warren G. Harding and Ulysses Grant.

The North Carolina budget proposal initially removed nearly all the $110,000 needed each year to run the Polk museum south of Charlotte, meaning it would close for all but a few days a year. Now, the House and Senate are trying to reach a compromise plan that makes some cuts, with hopes that private gifts or grants could make up the difference.

However, even the compromise might be a fatal

Law requires Chinese to visit their aging parents

By LOUISE WATT

Associated Press

BEIJING — Mothers and fathers aren't the only ones urging adult children to visit their parents. China's lawbooks are now issuing the same imperative.

New wording in the law requiring people to visit or keep in touch with their elderly parents or risk being sued and facing penalties came into force Monday, as China faces increasing difficulty in caring for its aging population.

It remains to be seen how much the amended law changes the status quo, however. Elderly parents in China already have been suing their adult children for emotional support, and the new wording does not specify how often people must visit or clarify penalties for those who do not.

In the first ruling since the new wording, a court in the eastern Chinese city of Wuxi ordered a couple to visit the woman's mother or face possible fines — and even detention.

One of the drafters, Xiao Jinming, a law professor at Shandong University, said the new law was primarily aimed at raising awareness.

"It is mainly to stress the right of elderly people to ask for emotional support ... We want to emphasize there is such a need," he said.

Cleaning lady Wang Yi, 57, who lives alone in Shanghai, said the new law is "better than nothing." Her two sons work several hundred miles away in southern Guangdong province and she sees them only at an annual family reunion.

"It is too little, for sure. I think twice a year would be good," she said. "We Chinese people raise children to take care of us when we are old."

Later Monday, the court in Wuxi ruled that a woman and her husband must visit her 77-year-old mother — who lives 25 miles breakup of China's traditional extended families, and there are few affordable alternatives, such as retirement homes.

Xiao said even before the Law of Protection of Rights and Interests of the Aged was amended, there were several cases of elderly parents suing their children for emotional support. Court officials generally settle such cases by working out an arrangement for sons or daughters to agree to visit more frequently. Typically, no money is involved.

The number of people aged 60 and above in China is expected to jump from the current 185 million to 487 million, or 35 percent of the population, by 2053, according to figures from the China National Committee On Aging. The expanding ratio is due both an increase in life expectancy — from 41 to 73 over five decades — and by family planning policies that limit most urban families to a single child.

away — at least once every two months in addition to mandatory holiday visits, or face possible fines and detention, according to the state-run People's Court Daily.

China's legislature amended the law in December following frequent reports of elderly parents neglected by their children. It says offspring of parents older than 60 should see that their daily, financial and spiritual needs are met.

Although respect for the elderly is deeply engrained in Chinese society, three decades of market reforms have accelerated the

HAPPENINGS

Dicks celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary

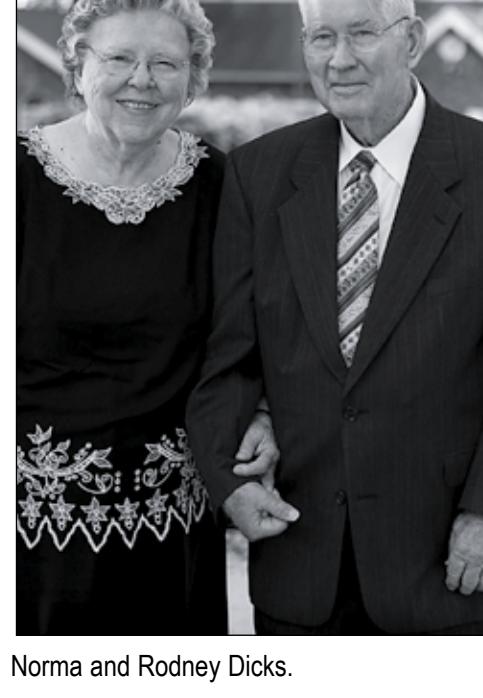

The family of Rodney Seth and Norma Robinson Dicks are pleased to announce their 60th wedding anniversary. High school sweethearts Rodney and Norma were married July 5, 1953, in Lake City.

Rodney served in the Navy when they were married. They returned to Lake City to raise their children on their family farm.

They are loving parents of four children: Regal (Shirlene), Delvey (Cindy), Kevin (Loretta) and Jilene Dicks (Porfiero). They have six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Rodney and Norma are members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and were sealed in the Salt Lake Temple.

A family celebration dinner was held in their honor. We are so grateful for our parents and the wonderful legacy they have built.

Norma and Rodney Dicks.

Cox-Welder engagement

Randy and Cheryl Cox, of Lake City, announce the engagement and pending marriage of their daughter, Lindsey Michelle Cox, of Gainesville, to Gregory James Welder, of Gainesville, son of Alyce Welder and the late James Welder, of Lake City.

The wedding is planned for July in St. Augustine.

The bride-elect is a 2003 graduate of Columbia High School and a 2008 graduate of the University of Florida with a master's degree in elementary education. She is employed at Meadowbrook Elementary School in Gainesville.

The future groom is a 2002 graduate of Columbia High School and a 2009 graduate of the University of Florida with a doctorate in pharmacy. He is employed at the Malcom Randall VA Medical Center in Gainesville.

She attempted the feat amid controversy over her bathing suit. Kellerman sparked an international stir when she was arrested for wearing a one-piece woolen swimming suit. She omitted the pantaloons, cap, and shoes and started a tidal wave of talk. Obscenity laws aside, Kellerman started a swimsuit revolution.

Roaring Twenties

By the 1920s-30s, bright colors, synthetic fabrics, and a more feminine shape emerged in the style of swimsuits. The famous Jantzen swim suit manufacturing firm made the diving girl logo a beach blanket image and everything from billboards to bumper stickers donned the famous logo. In the 1940s, convertible straps which could be unfastened were introduced in part to prevent tan lines. Today, vintage swim suits bring high values on the vintage couture market.

High-end swim suits from the 1950s like those designed by Christian Dior command $1000 to $2000 while more mainstream brands like Catalina dating to the mid 1900s are worth $50 to $350 per suit. The 1950s emphasized the hourglass figure with a "bubble suit" featuring cotton material and low cut top. The 1960s swimsuits saw an interest in showing off the mid-drift, too. Two piece polyester bathing suits of the era were still conservative and covered up one's belly button.

By the 1970s, swim suits were a far cry from the cover-up everything style bathing suits of the early 1960s. Later, Speedo swimsuits from the 1980s featured Lycra materials and straightforward styles. American designer suits

On the market

On the market, vintage swim suits in good condition always bring interest from collectors, and celebrity suits are all the rage. A prominent example of the interest in the vintage swim suit market is celebrity suits. For instance, Pamela Anderson's one-piece red Speedo lifeguard bathing suit from her starring role on the widely popular hit TV show, Bay Watch, recently sold for $275.

stayed with them for a night as he made his way to St. Augustine.

Tedford arrived in Lake City Thursday just before 4 p.m. and headed out Friday morning.

Tedford said he's done previous events with bicycling fundraisers on a smaller scale. Those rides started in Mississippi and went into neighboring states.

"I wanted this one to be the biggest one I've ever done because it has to do with my family," he said. "This is definitely the biggest fundraiser I've ever done."

For The Miles For Amputees campaign, Tedford flew to San Diego, California, from Jackson, Mississippi, on May 27, to begin his landmark trek. He plans to end his fundraising journey July 6 or 7 in St. Augustine at the beach.

Tedford travels at least 50-100 miles per day on his bicycle. His options for sleeping are: Camp at a campground or at roadside; stay in a hotel room and see if a home is available through WarmShowers.org, a website for cross-country cyclists where homeowners allow cyclists to use their home or a room for nights.

He said he didn't really do any physical training to prepare for the ride.

"I rode whenever I could, but I let this ride be my training," he said. "I just built myself up every day. There's no fundraising goal in particular, I just want to raise as much money as I can."

Tedford said the journey has been an adventure he won't soon forget.

"The West Coast arm was the hardest thing I've done in my whole entire life," he said. "The heat, although it is dry heat, I would much rather be in this humidity than over there. Hitting 115-degree temperatures on consecutive days will drain you."

He said when he started his trek he didn't have the appropriate tires to bike out west, and he had 10 flat tires in California and Arizona alone because of goathead thorns.

In New Mexico he purchased extra-strength tubes, tires and tire liners to reduce the number of flats.

On the West Coast, Tedford's trek was also challenged by a dust storm.

"It wasn't the dirt devil you see every now and then, it was a full-out dirt-dust storm with the winds going about 50 mph directly on me, going sideways," he said. "I had to get a ride into town because dust storms last about two or three hours."

Tedford said he doesn't expect much fanfare when he completes his journey in St. Augustine, where his father, girlfriend and other friends will greet him with open arms.

Through social media followers have made contributions and posted comments with their support about Tedford's fundraising effort.

"All my friends back home have given me so much support," he said. "I've had people all over the nation find out about this and they were willing to donate."

ASPCA uses USDA photos to fight puppy mills

Animal protection group seeks to halt cruel breeding shops.

By SUE MANNING

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is bolstering its campaign against puppy mills by showing photos of sick puppies and harsh kennel conditions taken by the federal agency that licenses commercial breeders.

The organization has added 10,000 photos to its "NoPetStorePuppies" website showing dogs at breeders across the U.S. with matted hair, bloody stool, long nails, injured eyes and dental disease.

The pictures were taken by the U.S. Department of Agriculture over the past few years and were obtained through a public-records request. The breeders were warned or given citations to correct the problems.

The ASPCA wants people to boycott puppy sales in pet stores and on the Internet, the places where most puppy mill animals are sold. It included the photos in a database that can be searched by breeder, license number or ZIP code.

"A lot of pet stores will say, 'We don't get pets from puppy mills, but from USDA-licensed breeders,'" said Cori Menkin, senior director of the ASPCA puppy mills campaign.

Rod and Lindsey Rebhan bought a miniature Australian shepherd for $1,000 at a Novi, Mich., Petland store in 2011. The newlyweds considered Jack "our first baby, our little boy," Lindsey Rebhan said.

About a month later, the dog had its first seizure. After 25 seizures over the next four months, he had to be put down.

Because Jack's epilepsy was so severe, vets said it was probably hereditary. The store refunded the sale price, but didn't pay vet bills.

"I'm pretty sure it was hush money," Lindsay Rebhan said.

If the couple had seen the website, they would never have been in the pet store, Lindsey Rebhan said.

Jack came from Evergreen Designer LLC, owned by Daniel Schlabach in Fresno, Ohio, according to purchase papers and the ASPCA website. Phone messages left for Schlabach were not returned.

Photos of the kennel taken Nov. 2, 2011, show a dog with scabs and ulcerations on his muzzle; an underweight dog; four dogs with diarrhea; dirt and hair buildup in den boxes; two dogs with raw skin on their paws; one with a cloudy left eye; and one with a runny nose and a cough.

In a reply to an email query, Petland Novi said it didn't discuss customer claims because its customers are entitled to privacy.

The puppy mill fight started long ago. Agencies took up the cause as the number of pet owners telling heartbreaking stories of illness, death and costly vet care swelled.

The sale of puppy mill dogs has been banned in some cities, including Los Angeles. Stores can sell shelter animals or hold adoption events on weekends.

Animal welfare groups claim the way dogs are kept at some breeders — where they are producing hundreds of puppies at a time — cause chronic physical ailments, genetic defects or fear of humans.

Breeding females are overbred, kept in unsanitary, crowded cages without vet care, adequate food or water. When they can no longer breed, they usually are killed, experts say.

When the puppies are sold, they often are stuffed into crowded trucks and hauled thousands of miles, sometimes getting sick from the trip itself, arriving in bad shape and unable to bounce back from illness or parasites.

"Not all breeders run puppy mills," Menkin said. "Breeders without violations typically won't appear in the database, but if they're only meeting USDA standards, and not exceeding them, then we would consider their operation a puppy mill."

The database photos go back to 2010, and the number for each breeder varies.

"I have not studied it because it's a waste of time," said Karen Strange, a lobbyist for the Missouri Federation of Animal Owners. "Much of the information is old, and it's a publicity stunt for the ASPCA ... and other radical animal rights groups to garner money from the unknowing public."

USDA records show a third of the 2,205 licensed dog breeders in the country are in Missouri.

Republican state Sen. Mike Parsons of Bolivar, Mo., recently told the Legislature there that commercial dog breeding in Missouri was a $1 billion industry that employs thousands and spends millions every year on dog food, veterinarian services and utilities.

Strange said some breeders contacted her when they heard about the photos, wondering how they should react. She said they were told to conduct business as usual and if they were in compliance with state and federal law, they had nothing to worry about.

Menkin disagrees, citing legal loopholes. For example, she said, federal law says a breeder must have an attending veterinarian, but it doesn't say dogs have to be handled by the vet.

Tanya Espinosa, a legislative and public affairs spokeswoman for the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said the agency would not comment on the website.

The ASPCA obtained the photos through the Freedom of Information Act and plans to continue posting pictures, Menkin said.

SITES: Money woes hurting some

blow to the Polk site, said Ben Pelton, treasurer of the Polk Memorial Support Fund, which has also morphed into a group called Keep Polk Open in the fight to save the site.

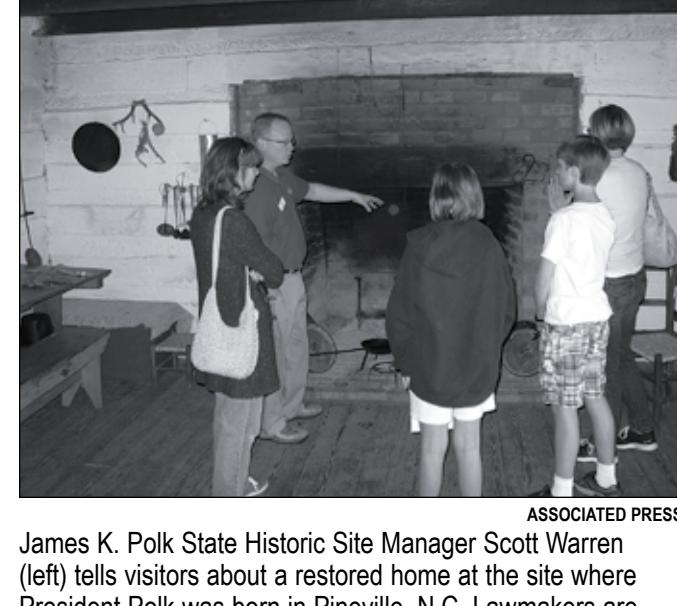

"We are not structured to raise money. We're a support group. How are we going to find $110,000 a year quickly?" Pelton said. "How can the state shut down the birthplace of a president? How many other states have one of those?"

Just 21 states can claim a presidential birthplace. More than half of those birthplaces are in four states: Virginia, Ohio, New York and Massachusetts. Presidential birthplaces and museums are a patchwork of national historic sites, state run facilities and private museums. Many have cut back the days and hours they are open. For lesser known presidents like Franklin Pierce, Chester Arthur or Martin Van Buren, tourists have to visit during the summer because they aren't open for most of the year.

The state-owned President James K. Polk State Historic Site in Pineville includes 21 of the 150 acres that Polk's parents owned, farmed and lived on when he was born in 1795.

The site has a museum and two buildings renovated to look like a home and a kitchen from the period. They are not the Polks' home — those were torn down a long time ago. Instead, officials moved similar buildings from that era to the land in the late 1960s when they decided to build the museum, said site manager Scott Warren.

The Polk site had 16,100 visitors last year, including more than 2,800 third-graders on field trips from Charlotte areas schools.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

James K. Polk State Historic Site Manager Scott Warren (left) tells visitors about a restored home at the site where President Polk was born in Pineville, N.C. Lawmakers are considering a significant cut to the budget of the museum honoring Polk's birthplace that could force the facility to close.

The museum also includes a short film on the president who went to war with Mexico and cut a deal with Great Britain over the Pacific Northwest that led to America stretching from sea to shining sea — a man many historians consider the country's most successful one-term president, or its least-known great president.

Polk's family moved from North Carolina when he was 11, and he is much better known as a Tennessean. The federal site dedicated to Polk is at his adult home in Columbia, Tenn. That location also has Polk's presidential papers.

North Carolina's Polk site is just beginning to deal with what some other presidential sites across the country have already handled when Great Recession swallowed funds for museums and historical sites.

Ohio, home to seven presidents, has cut funding to its presidential museums. The home of Warren G. Harding ended up in Ohio's hands in the late 1970s when the private organization overseeing it ran out of money. The museum is now open just five days a week and only in the afternoon, said Sherry Hall, site manager for the Harding Home President Site.

Harding is a tough president to sell. His administration was tainted by the Teapot Dome oil bribery scandal and several of his appointees went to jail. But he also supported women's right to vote and advocated for educational and economic opportunities for blacks — a progressive stance in the 1920s.

"We're not one of the big guys either. But I like not being one of the big guys," Hall said. "People think they know everything about Lincoln, Washington or Jefferson. They often don't know a lot about Harding, or what they know is wrong. I like being able to teach them something new."

Vogue offers its guide to stylish weddings

By SAMANTHA CRITCHELL
AP Fashion Writer

NEW YORK — There are the stylish brides who wear the beautiful gowns and have their hair and makeup just so, and there are the stylish weddings, where everything from the bridal ensemble to the parting presents has the touch that makes it all seem special.

Vogue.com put together a wedding guide just in time for all those summer nuptials. The Associated Press asked editor Jessica Sailer Van Lith to put together a list of signs that the affair will be one to remember:

■ It's personal. The wedding, from beginning to end, should seem like it belongs to the bride and groom, not like they've plugged into someone else's dream.

Maybe the bride carries her grandmother's handbag, maybe she doesn't take off that necklace she wears every other day of the year. The "perfect" look and feel will come from authenticity, not trends — and certainly not what everyone else is doing.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Vogue's 'The Wedding Guide' has come out just in time for summer nuptials.

■ They've gone local. Couples can embrace the place they were so thoughtful in choosing by offering touches of local cuisine, decor or music.

"Don't truck in flowers or caterers who'll be driving for hours," says Sailer Van Lith. "Immerse you and your guests in the place you are — and have chosen to be."

■ The bride looks like herself. She shouldn't look for a "perfect dress" because there are too many of those, says Sailer Van Lith. What a bride should want is the right dress, and from there it should be easy to pick everything that goes with it, she says.

■ The seating chart makes sense. The seating chart is — and sort of should be — one of the most stressful parts of planning a wedding, but the payoff of success is huge.

"At a stylish wedding, where someone has been thoughtful of the seating chart, all the guests will know the bride and groom have put them there for a reason: because they want these people from other parts of their lives to make a connection."

■ Less can be more, especially with the head count. "Everyone invited is someone the bride and groom want to have there," says Sailer Van Lith. Period.

■ There isn't a set schedule. A wedding isn't a science, it's an art, and, she says, the only people it all needs to make sense to are the bride and groom. If they like a daytime wedding with formal dress, it's OK, and the same goes for the wedding that moves straight to dancing from the cocktail hour.

Victim of bullying in school is not yet ready to forgive

DEAR ABBY: I was bullied from second grade all through school. In junior high the abuse was both emotional and physical, and it happened on a daily basis. My parents' response was that maybe I was the problem – and if I wasn't, people would stop picking on me. (That's a letter for another day.)

What would have been my 10-year high school reunion was two weeks ago. Needless to say, I didn't go. Since the reunion, however, I have received more than 30 messages via Facebook from former classmates. It seems I was the main topic of conversation at the reunion, mainly because everyone apparently wanted to apologize to me.

While I don't doubt the sincerity of their apologies, I truly don't want to have any contact with them (even on Facebook). At the same time, I don't want to be rude and just ignore them.

So far, I haven't replied to any of their messages. I want to know if I must, and if so, what I should say? To be honest, I'd like to tell them all to go to hell, but I'm trying to be nice.

WORDS: You do not have to say anything to any of these people, and you do not have to be "nice." Silence sends a strong message, and it is the one I'm recommending.

Understand that by apologizing they are trying to make themselves feel better. It's also possible that maturity has caused them to realize what they did was wrong. However, you are not obligated to accept their apologies if doing so will make you feel worse.

DEAR ABBY: I am a single mother struggling with my 12-year-old daughter. For the last three months she has been withdrawn, uncommunicative, rude, mean and treats me with contempt. We have been in counseling and are going back again, but I can't ask people to stay with her while I go and recharge my spirit because she's so rude to them as well.

I need to know, Abby, what do other parents do to make it through this incredibly painful period in the lives of their teenager and themselves? – SINGLE MOM IN CANADA

DEAR SINGLE MOM: Your daughter should be evaluated by her pediatrician to be sure there isn't an underlying cause. Could she have been molested, be using drugs, pills, alcohol, etc.? Do her friends act this way? Does she HAVE friends?

Was this behavior tolerated when she was smaller? If a child of mine behaved that way, she would be grounded and her cellphone and Internet privileges canceled until she was 30.

As to whom you can leave her with while you "recharge," does this girl have a father, an aunt, a grandparent who can give you respite? If those resources are not available, you will have to deal with this (with the help of a more effective therapist than the one you were using) until your "problem child" becomes an adult.

■ Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emotions will be difficult to control and stress levels will rise if you don't stay active. Short trips, networking events or doing something that will help you feel good about who you are or the way you look are your best outlet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You've got more going for you than you realize. Don't second-guess what or how you do things. Stand up for who you are and what you can do.

★★★

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Look back at past connections and you'll figure out how to handle a situation you face with someone you work for or deal with. Use your knowledge and experience and you will find a way to come out on top.

★★★

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use your imagination and you'll find a way to attract support, interest and potential partnerships. Don't be afraid to think outside the box or

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take care of your responsibilities and you will have clear passage to do as you please. It's leaving chores unfinished that will lead to emotional problems with people who depend or count on you.

Love is enhanced, so plan a romantic evening.

10 options for seeing the Statue of Liberty

Cruises, shore views provide many photo ops.

By BETH J. HARPAZ

AP Travel Editor

NEW YORK — The Statue of Liberty reopened to visitors on July 4 for the first time since Superstorm Sandy. But for those who just want a photo op with the statue, there are many other vantage points, from Red Hook, Brooklyn, and Governors Island, to a walk across the Brooklyn Bridge. The Staten Island ferry takes you right past the statue for free, while those on bigger budgets can reserve a room with a view at the luxury Ritz-Carlton hotel.

Here are 10 ways to get a great look at the Statue of Liberty, starting with the cruises that resumed service to Liberty Island on Independence Day.

STATUE CRUISES TO LIBERTY ISLAND

Statue Cruises — <http://www.statuecruises.com> — is the sole operator for boats that take visitors to Liberty Island, where the Statue of Liberty is located. Boats resumed departing from the Battery in Lower Manhattan on Thursday, when Liberty Island reopened to the public for the first time since Superstorm Sandy last October. The statue itself was not damaged by the storm, but landing docks and infrastructure, including electrical, phone and sewage systems, required months of repair work by the National Park Service, which operates the statue.

Ellis Island was also damaged by the storm and no reopening date has been set, so cruises to the Statue of Liberty will not be stopping there yet as they did in the past, NPS spokesman John Warren said. But Warren added that the park service is "hopeful" that boats to Liberty Island will soon resume departures from Liberty State Park in New Jersey.

You can buy Statue

Cruises tickets at the Battery, but the cruises do sell out, so advance online purchase is strongly recommended. There are three types of tickets: Access to the statue's crown, $20 ($17 for seniors, $12 for ages 4-12); or access to the pedestal of the monument or the grounds of Liberty Island, $17 ($14 for seniors, $9 ages 4-12).

Visit <http://www.nps.gov/stli/planyourvisit/statue2012reopening.htm> for more information.

STATEN ISLAND FERRY

Take the subway to Bowling Green or South Ferry and hop on a Staten Island ferry for a free ride across New York Harbor. The boats run 24 hours a day. There's always a crowd of tourists on deck taking photos as the boat passes the Statue of Liberty.

OTHER CRUISES

Many vessels offer sightseeing cruises of New York Harbor and Manhattan that sail right past the

The Staten Island Ferry passes the Statue of Liberty as it crosses New York Harbor. The Statue of Liberty, which had been closed to visitors since Superstorm Sandy, reopened for tours July 4, when Statue Cruises resumes departures for Liberty Island from Lower Manhattan. For tourists who want a photo of the famous statue without visiting the island, there are many options and vantage points, including rides on the free Staten Island Ferry.

Cruises tickets at the Battery, but the cruises do sell out, so advance online purchase is strongly recommended. Statue of Liberty. They include the Circle Line, Manhattan by Sail's schooners, Hornblower Cruises, Spirit Cruises, New York Water Taxi and Bateaux New York. Some offer live music or fancy lunch or dinner cruises that can top $100.

BATTERY AND LOWER MANHATTAN

To see the Statue of Liberty without getting on a boat, just head to the southern tip of Lower Manhattan, an area known as the Battery (subway to South Ferry or Bowling Green).

While you're there, consider exploring other parts of Lower Manhattan, which includes the financial district and the 9/11 Memorial. NYC & Company, the city's official tourism agency, offers a guide at <http://www.nycgo.com/lower-manhattan>.

BROOKLYN BRIDGE

A walk across the Brooklyn Bridge is one of the classic New York experiences. In addition to giving you a close look at the bridge's Gothic arches and delicate filigree of cables, it offers a magical view of Lower Manhattan and the Statue of Liberty. To get the full impact of the skyscraper canyon coming into view, take the subway to the Brooklyn side (A or C to High Street) and walk back across the bridge.

GOVERNORS ISLAND

Governors Island, a former Coast Guard facility now used for public recreation, offers inviting lawns, old forts, concerts, art exhibits and food vendors, along with great views of Lower Manhattan and the Statue of Liberty. Get there by ferry, weekends through Sept. 29 from Manhattan or Brooklyn, then walk or bike around the island, <http://www.govisland.com/html/visit/directions.shtml>.

RED HOOK, BROOKLYN

One of the best views of the Statue of Liberty is from Red Hook, an up-and-coming waterfront neighborhood in Brooklyn. A cruise terminal where the Queen Mary 2 homeports is located in one corner of the neighborhood, and lots of popular eateries like the Fort Defiance Bar and Red Hook Lobster Pound line the main street, Van Brunt.

Oddly enough, one of the best spots for viewing the Statue of Liberty is from the parking lot of the local Fairway supermarket, 480-500 Van Brunt, as well as from Fairway's rear patio, which sells ready-to-eat fare.

Another great vantage point is from Red Hook's Louis Valentino Jr. Pier and Park, on Ferris Street between Coffey and Van Dyke, one of the few places where you can get a rare head-on view of the statue, instead of from the side.

A free ferry runs weekends this summer to Red Hook from Pier 11 in Lower Manhattan, <http://www.nywatertaxi.com/tours/redhook>. Red Hook is also fun to explore by bike, and it's one of those rare neighborhoods where you can often find street parking.

MUSEUM OF JEWISH HERITAGE

The Museum of Jewish Heritage — A Living Memorial to the Holocaust at 36 Battery Place — has tall picture windows that look directly out onto the Statue of Liberty. While you look, you can listen to the museum's "Voices of Liberty" sound installation, in which Holocaust survivors, refugees and others discuss why they chose to make the U.S. their home, <http://www.mjhnyc.org/>.

RITZ-CARLTON NEW YORK, BATTERY PARK

The majority of guest rooms at the Ritz-Carlton's Battery Park hotel offer views of the Statue of Liberty, and they even come equipped with telescopes for an up-close look. For July Fourth weekend, prices for a room with a king or two double beds start at $420, going up to $7,500 for a 2,100-square-foot (195-square-meter) suite; <http://www.ritzcarlton.com/en/Properties/NewYorkBatteryPark/Default.htm>.

LIBERTY STATE PARK, NEW JERSEY

This waterfront park on the New Jersey side of the harbor offers the closest view you can get of the statue without sailing past on a boat or stepping onto Liberty Island. There are three ways to get there: Drive; take the PATH train from Manhattan, followed by a light rail and a half-mile (.8-kilometer) walk into the park; or take a ferry from the World Financial Center in Lower Manhattan, <http://www.libertylandingferry.com>. While you're there, check out the Liberty Science Center, a great museum for kids, <http://www.lsc.org>.

Passionate crafters keep crochet alive, thriving

By JENNIFER FORKER

Associated Press

Crocheting these days is so much more than granny squares and chunky Afghan blankets.

It's leaner and trendier than it was in the 1960s and '70s, when the craft was known for its bulky, acrylic yarns. Crochet's enduring popularity is due partly to today's wide array of high-quality, luxurious yarns — many at affordable prices.

Crochet can be found on high-fashion runways and in upscale home decor. Textile artists such as Kaffe Fassett use it.

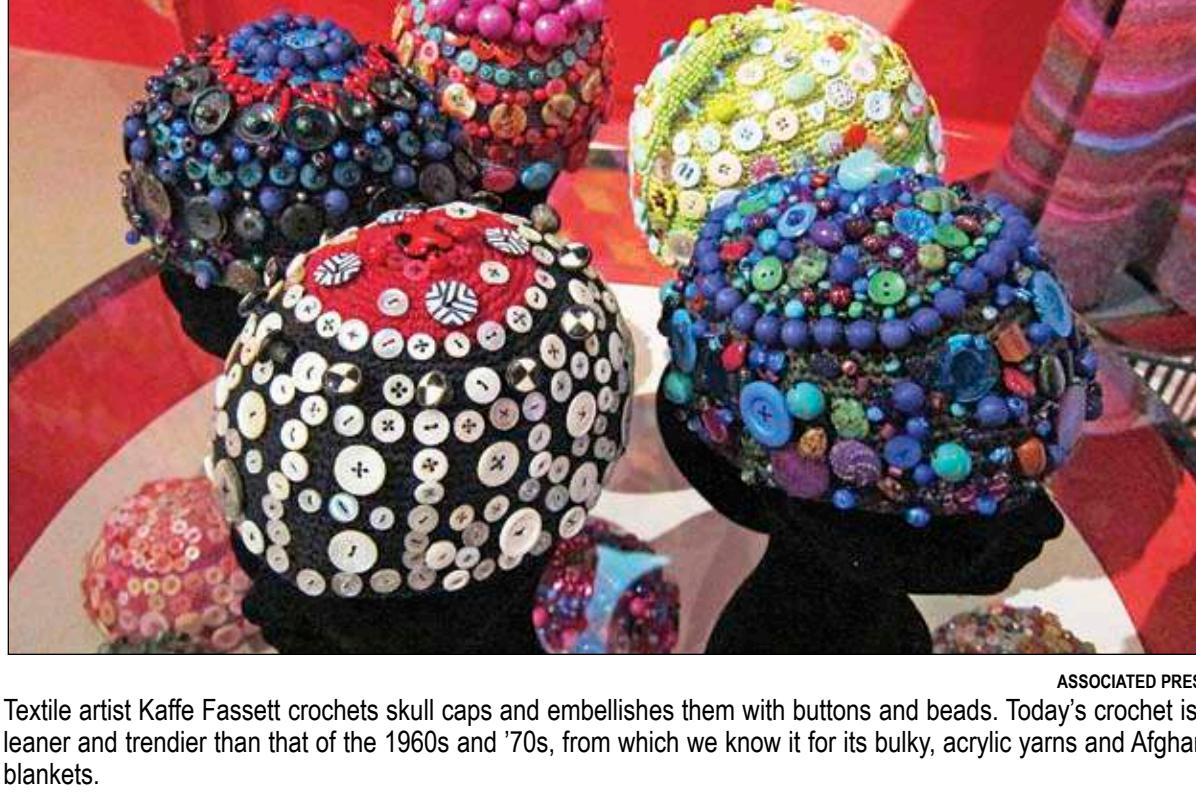

But it also can just be fun: Mischievous "yarn bombers" decorate urban landscapes — street signs, trees, even bicycles and cars — in crochet.

It's never been easier to learn how to wield a crochet hook, thanks to an assortment of books, magazines and online tutorials, the latter of which often are free.

"To me it's like painting with stitches," says Teresa Richardson, 50, of Savannah, Ga., who shares free patterns and video tutorials at her blog, Crochet Geek, begun in 2006. "It's being able to put out an interpretation of something artistic and creative."

Her YouTube video tutorials average 75,000 daily views, according to YouTube Analytics. Some viewers request particular patterns, which challenges Richardson and keeps her working 12-hour days; she recently completed requests to crochet a manatee, an octopus and a sheep.

Carol Alexander, of Berne, Ind., has been crocheting since the Textile artist Kaffe Fassett crochets skull caps and embellishes them with buttons and beads. Today's crochet is leaner and trendier than that of the 1960s and '70s, from which we know it for its bulky, acrylic yarns and Afghan blankets.

early 1980s, when she made a toy for her then-unborn son. A crochet-pattern designer for more than 20 years, she's the executive crochet editor for Crochet! and Crochet World magazines.

Respectful of the craft's past, Alexander champions what crochet has become: classier, creative and commonplace.

"Crochet has always been the 'redheaded stepsister' (to knitting) but not anymore," says Alexander. "It's really out there and setting the standards."

Edie Eckman, co-author of the new "Crochet One-Skein Wonders" (Storey Publishing), agrees that crochet has become more fashionable. "It's OK to be seen crocheting publicly now," muses Eckman, of Waynesboro, Va.

New yarns have helped. Appealing blends that include bamboo, silk or alpaca, for example, allow for thinner, softer yarn. As a result, crocheted pieces can drape more attractively, which is why clothing designers are using more crochet in their work, says Alexander.

The Craft & Hobby Association estimates that 14.7 million Americans crochet, 89 percent of them women.

The traditional and ubiquitous granny square remains popular, but has been re-envisioned.

"People are using it in the same old ways but in new colors and in smaller yarns," says Eckman.

Crocheters and knitters have long argued about which medium is superior. Eckman, who does both, sees each craft's charms. Crochet, she says, is faster, more versatile and more forgiving.

Knitting uses two or more needles to create two basic stitches

— the knit and the purl — which are combined to create hundreds of stitch patterns. Crochet, with its one hook and basic stitches, is able to conjure up thousands of stitch patterns. And because there's only one "live" stitch in crochet, crocheters can change a pattern on the fly more easily than knitters can, and without fear of dropping a stitch.

"Crochet allows you to be relaxed about things," says Eckman. "Knitting requires more structure and forethought."

To learn crochet, Alexander recommends starting with an online tutorial so you can watch another person's hands.

Annie's, the crafts retailer, which publishes Crochet! and Crochet World magazines, posts a free stitch guide online.

Richardson's basic stitch tutorials include instructions for left-handed crocheters. She gently recommends that new crocheters practice the basic stitches — a chain, single crochet, half double crochet and double crochet — before moving on to more advanced projects.

"The key is to keep practicing until you experience those aha moments" when it all makes sense, Richardson wrote recently on her blog.

For inspiration and free patterns, also visit Ravelry, an online community for crocheters and knitters.

And crochet isn't limited to yarn. Jewelry makers crochet with thin wire (often incorporating beads).

"It's so far beyond what we were doing in the '80s and '90s," says Alexander.
