6 still in running for asst. county manager

By STEVEN RICHMOND
srichmond@lakecityreporter.com

The search for Columbia County's new assistant county manager has narrowed to six applicants who feature diverse work experiences including geography, law, county administration, airport management and nuclear engineering.

According to County Manager Dale Williams, the final six include Alachua County Administrative Support Manager Ronald Akins, SunGard Senior Product Consultant David Donovan, Leesburg Deputy City Manager Doug Drymon, FDOT Engineer Jordan Green, Taylor County Assistant County Administrator/Emergency Management Director Dustin Hinkel and Third Circuit Assistant State Attorney Melissa Olin.

Ronald Akins

Ronald Akins began his professional career as a staff accountant and budget analyst for St. Vincent's Medical Center following graduation from the University of North Florida in 1991.

He continued to work in financial and budgeting roles for a series of organizations with an emphasis in healthcare, including Biloxi Regional Medical Center, Unicare Home Health of MS, Healthcare of Berrien County and Shands Healthcare in Gainesville before founding his own company, Healthcare Consulting and Executive Recruiters, Inc., in Sept. 2001.

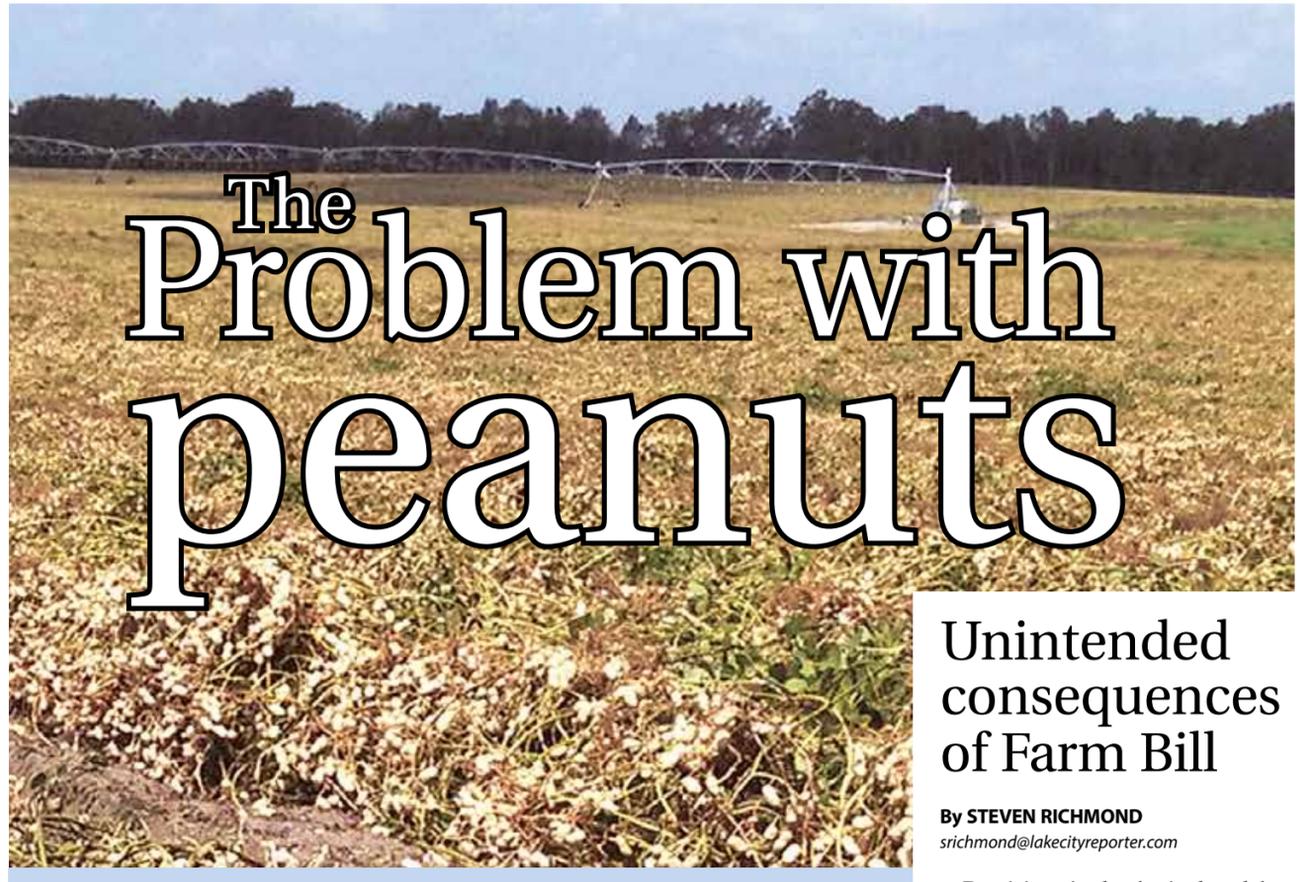

After selling his business in 2003, Akins became a financial management analyst for the Alachua County Commission and currently serves as the county's administrative support manager.

According to his application, Akins is a certified public manager, a licensed Florida Realtor and obtained a Master of Health Science Administration from Georgia Southern University in 1995.

The Problem with peanuts

'The [agricultural] sector was the one that stayed strong and kept hiring people' following the 2008 recession. 'It's imperative we get this right.'

Local peanut farmers are crying foul over problems with the Farm Bill.

Unintended consequences of Farm Bill

By STEVEN RICHMOND
srichmond@lakecityreporter.com

Provisions in the Agricultural Act of 2014, also known as the Farm Bill, placed a cloud of uncertainty over the peanut industry's economic stability, local experts say.

The legislation essentially allows farmers who have certain pre-2002 land known as generic base acres to take advantage of financial safety nets put in place to protect peanut farmers against market fluctuations.

Yoho

"There's a concern that the safety net for peanut prices transfers over to these generic base acres — that generic base is 13 million acres nationwide," said Mace Bauer, an Agronomy and Commercial Horticulture Agent with the Columbia County Extension Office.

Farmers will only have base acres for any given crop, including peanuts, if they were cultivating the land before the 2002 Farm Bill provisions took effect.

Local residents have reached out to Washington for help and addressed their concerns directly to Rep. Ted Yoho (R-Gainesville) during a Feb. 24 town hall meeting at the University of Florida.

"The [agricultural] sector was the one that stayed strong and kept hiring people," following the 2008 recession, Yoho said Wednesday. "It's imperative we get this right."

The university's Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences went to work producing an impact study of various scenarios that could play out on the world stage and ultimately affect the peanut's economic viability.

Yoho said he plans to use that

'Healthy' recovery at hand for local housing market

By TONY BRITT
tbritt@lakecityreporter.com

The Columbia County housing markets continues to improve, and in February showed signs of positive growth through a variety of economic indicators.

According to the Florida Board of Realtors' Monthly Market

Detail, which chronicles single family home sales in the county compared to last year at this point, the local housing market is seeing a steady improvement.

"The numbers look good — really good," said Dan Gherna, Lake City Board of Realtors executive vice president. "All the numbers are up. We've had a slow steady rise. We're stable and I think were poised for a decent summer."

Closed sales are up 122 percent, as 40 homes were sold in February 2014, compared to 18 homes in February 2013.

Gherna said the average sale was $163,900.

"That's really good," he said. "That means the higher end homes are selling. We had a couple of sales that were in the $400,000 - $600,000 range."

The report indicates median sale prices also increased 7.7 percent, roughly $9,000, jumping from $117,000 in February 2013 to $126,000 last month.

The two sales in the higher range brought the median sale price up, though there were seven sales below $50,000.

However, the average sale price only increased two percent, from $135,883 in February 2013 to $138,567 last month.

There were 64 new listings last month, compared to 55 new

Researchers plan $3M springs study

Two University of Florida institutes and the St. Johns River Water Management District are starting a three-year $3 million study of the impact of pollutants on Florida's springs.

St. Johns district chief scientist Ed Lowe says researchers hope to identify the areas that are the major sources of nitrates and other pollutants in the springs.

The study will focus on Silver Springs in Ocala and Wekiva Springs in Apopka. Lowe tells area newspapers that the findings likely will apply to many other springs in the state.

Scientists say nitrates from fertilizers, septic tanks and farming operations spur algae growth in the water. Researchers hope to learn how to better manage the sources of the pollution to improve the health of the state's iconic springs.

Senate passes student data privacy bill

TALLAHASSEE — School districts will no longer be able to collect certain types of student data under a bill passed by the Florida Senate.

The Florida Senate on Wednesday passed a measure that came in the wake of complaints about the state's move to Common Core State Standards. The vote was 38-1.

The bill (SB 188) would ban school districts from being able to collect and retain information on the political or religious affiliation of students and their parents. It would also ban the collection of biometric information including student fingerprints, palm scans or iris scans.

The state also calls for creating a new student identification system so that school districts could eventually stop using social security numbers.

A similar bill is also advancing in the Florida House.

Senate passes flood insurance

TALLAHASSEE — The Florida Senate is backing a bill to entice private insurance companies to sell flood policies in the state that's the most vulnerable to storm surge.

The Senate on Wednesday unanimously passed the bill (SB 542) sponsored by Sen. Jeff Brandes, a Republican from St. Petersburg. It heads to the Florida House where a similar bill is moving.

The legislation is designed to make it easier for private companies to sell flood insurance.

Florida is home to 37 percent of the federal policies and state officials say congressional attempts to overhaul the troubled program burdened many Floridians with skyrocketing premiums. Congress just recently rolled back some of the increases it permitted in 2012.

Disney unlocks autistic boy

NEW YORK — In his new book, "Life, Animated," Ron Suskind tells the remarkable story of how Disney movies unlocked his autistic son's emotions.

Owen Suskind was a typical toddler until age 3, when his developing language and social skills vanished. He was diagnosed with regressive autism.

Gradually Owen became fascinated by Disney movies, watching and re-watching them endlessly. One day, at his brother Walter's 9th birthday party, Walter became a bit teary. "Walter doesn't want to grow up, like Mowgli or Peter Pan," said Owen. Comparing his brother to Disney characters was the most sophisticated thing Owen, then 6, had uttered in years.

Suskind and his wife, Cornelia, began to encourage Owen's Disney passion. Owen, now 23, used Disney characters and stories to relate to real-world situations. He recovered his lost language. And by finding other autistic kids with Disney affinities, his social isolation eased.

"These movies have powerful themes going back to the Brothers Grimm and thousand-year-old myths," says Suskind. "But it wasn't until the arrival of the VCR for domestic use that kids like Owen could rewind and hyper-systemize to learn, at their own pace, from these emotionally rich narratives the things that they couldn't get from human interactions."

Owen used the movies to understand himself and his place in the world. He viewed himself as a sidekick. He told us, "A sidekick helps the hero fulfill his destiny." These are very deep ideas. He would give sidekick identities to other kids at school and say, "I am the protector of sidekicks. No sidekicks left behind."

listings last February, and there were 54 new pending sales last month, compared to 36 new pending sales last year at the same time.

Gherna said the “months supply of inventory” indicator was key for the local housing market.

“We’re down to 10.6 months’ supply, which is the lowest it’s been in a long time,” he said. “Five percent is supposed to be the benchmark, and 10.6 indicates that it’s somewhat of a buyer’s market.”

Gherna said several of the homes were foreclosures, and most of those sales have been completed in cash through the investment market. The report notes that investors are far more likely to have the funds purchase a home available up front, whereas the typical home buyer requires a mortgage or some other form of financing.

February 2014 saw 13 cash sales, compared to nine in February 2013, a 44.4 percent increase.

Gherna said he believes the statistics will continue to show improvement as the local housing market moves into the second quarter of the year.

“I think this is going to be a healthy recovery,” he said. “It’s not going to be a tremendous recovery, but a healthy recovery.”

data as he works with other lawmakers to address the farmers’ concerns.

“We’re sitting down with the Agricultural Committee up here, we’ve got letters highlighting what we want to do,” Yoho said. “I don’t want a black eye on [agriculture] because Farm Bills are so hard to pass.”

According to Bauer, Columbia County has 3,947 base acres and roughly 2,500 more acres without base status the past three years. On average, the local farmers yield roughly 13,650 tons per year.

“Biggest thing is the young fellers trying to grow peanuts,” said James Terry, a local farmer who grows peanuts, cattle and small grain. “They haven’t been growing them long enough to get a base. The old ones are the only ones who have base.”

Farmers have to make roughly $450 to $500 per ton of peanuts to break even and maintain their business, Bauer and Terry said.

“For farmers that don’t have the system with base, beginning farmers, their level [of government protection] would be $355 per ton,” Bauer said, referring to what’s known as the loan rate. “However, someone that has base prior to 2002, their number would be $535 a ton [the ‘reference price’]. That would include anyone who had cotton or generic base.”

Peanuts fall under a category known as protected commodities, which also includes other staple crops such as wheat, corn, rice and soybeans. These crops have similar safety net programs in place for their production as well.

“Peanuts cost so much more to grow than those other crops, those are pretty stable,” Terry said. “You can’t afford to grow peanuts under a certain price.”

Part of the generic base acre decision stems from a trade dispute between Brazil and the United States over the tendency of American farmers to export cotton that, the Brazilians said, hampered cotton growers in emerging markets.

“These programs become complicated because you’re trying to balance one crop against the other,” Yoho said.

Now that cotton growers with the generic base acres will have the opportunity to grow peanuts and obtain the safety net, agricultural experts are concerned the shift will disrupt peanut industry economics.

“Essentially most peanut farmers are cotton growers and most cotton growers are peanut farmers in the Southeast,” Bauer said. “The concern is a minor shift in cotton acres can disrupt the market.”

The land area for crops like wheat and corn dwarf that of peanuts nationwide, which lends the crop a higher degree of economic fragility.

“Peanuts are only produced on about 1.2 million acres, so even a 10 percent increase in peanut acres can really disrupt the market,” Bauer said. “Now we have this large number of generic base acres which are eligible for the peanut program, so if they plant the peanut, it’ll really disrupt the market dynamics.”

So what does this mean for consumers?

“Peanut prices should be low,” Bauer said, alluding to a bumper crop over the past few years. “We’ve had an oversupply of peanuts...they’re at historic low prices now and should stay there for the foreseeable future.”

But if more farmers enter the market, competition could cut into farmers’ profits, especially those newcomers post-2002.

“They [the new farmers] are heavily financed, have heavy debt loads and they won’t be sustained at low peanut prices,” Bauer said. “It might be profitable for a farmer [with base], regardless of market prices, to plant peanuts on generic base acres than it is to grow cotton. If that’s the case, you’re going to have a long-term depressed market.”

But Bauer said he was confident local farmers would remain resilient.

“You’ve got a lot of people who are just survivors and not getting any government giveaways anyway...they haven’t got all their eggs in one basket,” he said, adding many farmers already have a healthy diversification of crops and that the extension office was working with those that don’t.

However, long-term solutions for the peanut industry’s outlook remain unclear. Yoho said he was in talks with the Agricultural Committee in Congress, but that neither he nor his colleagues have yet to produce any amendments or proposed changes to this year’s Farm Bill.

“I don’t see any politically palatable fix,” Bauer said. “[Congress] probably made the best decisions they could make.”

Terry would like to see more support for new farmers.

“Make it so the young farmers coming in have the chance to establish a base,” he suggested. “They’re at the mercy of whatever the market will give them.”

Despite what direction Congress takes, uncertainty will always be a certainty when it comes to agriculture.

“Farming’s just a gamble,” Terry said. “You just hope and do the best you can.”

Getting trauma fees under control

A Senate committee took an important first step Tuesday toward protecting consumers from outrageous hospital trauma response fees. The Health Policy Committee voted to place a temporary $15,000 cap on the fees that are arbitrarily set by hospitals and have no connection to the cost of trauma services provided to seriously injured patients. The proposed cap is still too high, but it is a positive development and the concept can be refined as the bill moves through the Legislature.

The Tampa Bay Times reported earlier this month that hospitals in Florida that provide trauma care charge trauma patients an average of more than $10,800 — no matter what treatment patients receive or how long they stay. The trauma center response fees were intended to help hospitals recoup some of the cost for keeping specialized medical personnel available around the clock. But none of the trauma centers could tell the newspaper how the fees are set or how they relate to the actual costs of the centers. The six trauma centers operated by the for-profit Hospital Corporation of America ... charge an average trauma response fee of $28,000. Even legislators who are sympathetic to HCA's argument with the state over opening three controversial trauma centers recognize that fee is indefensible.

The Senate legislation, SB 1276, was amended by Sen. Denise Grimsley, R-Sebring, to include the $15,000 cap on trauma response fees until July 2015. A temporary cap is useful, but at that level it would only affect the HCA trauma centers and one other for-profit trauma center. One hospital, UF Health Shands in Gainesville, reduced its $10,000 fee to $4,000 after the Times started asking questions. A better approach would be for lawmakers to set a lower temporary cap, then direct the state to develop trauma center response fees that are tied to the severity of the patient's injury, the length of time spent in the trauma center and the actual cost of providing the service.

The Senate bill appears to be a compromise for HCA. In return for a cut in its trauma center response fees, the hospital company would get to keep open its three recently opened trauma centers, including Bayonet Point. Never mind that those three trauma centers are at the center of an ongoing legal dispute and have hurt existing trauma centers such as Bayfront Health St. Petersburg. Instead, there would be a one-year moratorium on opening new trauma centers while the state overhauls its approval process.

A stream of Ocala officials and residents sang the praises of the HCA trauma center in that city during the Senate committee hearing. Every community would like a trauma center. But expensive trauma centers cannot be on every corner like banks and gas stations, and the private competitive marketplace cannot be allowed to determine their locations and costs for patients. There is a compelling public interest in state review and approval of the location, performance and charges of trauma centers to ensure there is a sustainable statewide network.

The Senate bill is a reasonable start in establishing a temporary cap on trauma center response fees and a moratorium on new trauma centers. But there is more work to be done, and the Legislature should not inject itself in the legal fight over the three HCA trauma centers.

Nothing good in military sex-assault verdicts

The verdicts are in and only one thing seems certain. No one in the two sensational military sexual assault cases is innocent — not the general or his woman scorned nor the Naval Academy midshipman and his once reluctant accuser nor for that matter the woeful system that prosecuted the whole mess.

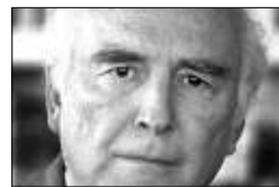

To paraphrase a legal adage, bad cases often bring bad results, and that above anything else seems to be the conclusion here. Brig. Gen. Jeffrey Sinclair escapes without jail time after being charged with forcing a sexual act on his ex-mistress, an allegation that could have brought him life in prison. He gets reprimanded and fined $20,000. He now just wants to hug his wife and kids. I'll bet he does, if they're dumb enough to accept him.

The mistress — who was his regular bedmate for three years — gets to keep her anonymity (at least in the national press) but loses her veracity by apparently lying about a key bit of evidence, resulting in the general's lenient sentence.

One might say these two deserve each other. Maybe they should be the ones to hug or whatever and make up.

At least Sinclair, the highest ranking officer to be tried for an adulterous affair, was expected to have enough judgment to avoid such a dangerous liaison. He had full knowledge of the cardinal rule he was breaking. That simply is that one can do anything in the Army, but just don't get caught. Apparently, the heat of Iraq and Afghanistan inflamed him. He also reportedly had assignations with other women.

In the matter of Joshua Tate, a former Navy football player, the lack of maturity on everyone's part legitimately could be cited as a mitigating factor no matter what opponents of the current method of military justice might demand. Both Tate and the female fellow midshipman who clearly was pressured into accusing him of taking advantage of her while she was too drunk to resist were guilty of gross irresponsibility. This all took place at an off campus Toga/Yoga party where excessive alcohol consumption mixed badly with raging hormones.

Tate was acquitted of the allegations after three days of lurid testimony in which his alleged victim admitted she didn't remember too much about that night. She had for nine months just fervently wished that the whole thing would go away and even asked Tate to lie for her about what happened. She finally capitulated to threats from another female classmate to bring charges.

The entire matter turned on whether one can be too drunk to consent. The judge decided the prosecution didn't make its case that she had reached that point.

This is a tragedy for both parties. They both lose. Tate has agreed to leave the academy rather than face charges of lying. While the young lady will remain in line for a degree, she has been the object of mindless, despicable depictions in the social media and is considered a campus pariah. She and Tate and others showed hideous judgment that often accompanies college social activities, especially in high octane, rigidly disciplined schools like the military academies. Blowing off steam becomes almost a necessity.

That is not meant to trivialize or excuse what occurred here.

Unfortunately, that has gone on too long not only at the academies but in the regular callous response of the military justice system and chain of command to those women who allege sexual exploitation and harassment on the part of their superiors or are afraid to do so.

These high-profile cases — Sinclair's and Tate's — were affected by political pressure. In the Sinclair matter, the discovery of high-level emails discussing the political implications tainted the process. Those in and out of Congress seeking to bring major changes in the military's adjudication of sexual abuse cases were outraged by Tate's acquittal. Actually the original decision to go ahead with the prosecution obviously was based to some degree on concern about the political fallout.

Neither outcome should be considered prime examples for reforming an obviously bad system. In truth, the cases probably should not have been brought considering the circumstances. There was a strong implication of an angry, jilted woman in the Sinclair affair. While clearly guilty of breaking military law, he was overcharged. The burden of proof of Tate's accuser was too heavy to carry given her own indiscretions and uncertainties.

Internet must remain free and open

As we note the 25th anniversary of the birth of Tim Berners-Lee's World Wide Web, the integrity of the Internet is threatened as never before. China and Russia are launching cyberattacks at unprecedented levels, and the NSA's hacking and spying are destroying trust in technology.

In that context, the Obama administration has announced it will give up U.S. control of the Internet to an international governing body. This has been in the works for more than a decade — but the president needs to be certain that the transition to a nonprofit will maintain a free and open system. That is not at all clear today.

Silicon Valley can't keep driving the U.S. economy unless the guiding principles that shaped the Internet are the foundation of its next governing body.

If it were possible, we would urge Obama to hand control of the Internet back to "God." But the bushy-bearded, sandal-clad tech genius who bore that nickname, the University of Southern California's Jon Postel, died in 1998 after serving as unofficial governor of the Internet for decades.

Postel helped devise the protocols that underpinned the web and then served as the Internet's primary administrator. His philosophy, now known as Postel's law, was that any "implementation should be conservative in its sending behavior, and liberal in its receiving behavior."

Postel died just as the current Internet administrator, the Los Angeles-based ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers), was being formed. ICANN contracts with the Commerce Department to keep the system running.

Critics of releasing control now, including Newt Gingrich, fear that foreign governments will swoop in and stifle its democratic principles.

It's a legitimate fear, given that in 2012, the World Conference on International Telecommunications considered handing control of Internet operations to the United Nations, a frightening thought.

Commerce Department officials have issued guiding principles for the next governing body that emphasize the importance of a stable, open Internet. They say they will not turn over control to a government-led organization of any form. That's a relief...

Unfortunately, the United States has lost some of its moral authority in this choice because its own spying outrages have been exposed. It's one more reason the president needs to restore Internet integrity, starting with its own use of the system. And he should not hand anything over until we know who or what will be Postel's heir.

SPIRIT OF THE SUWANNEE

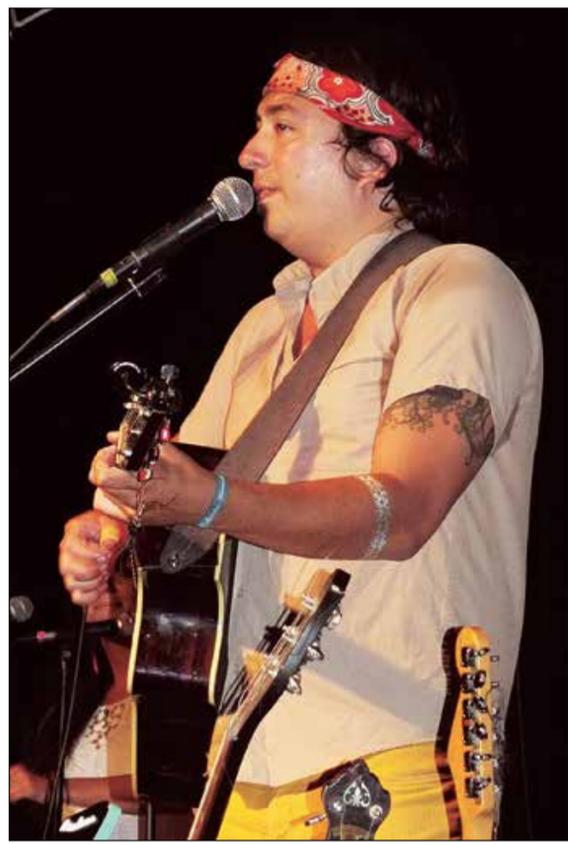

SPRINGFEST

From staff reports

LIVE OAK

Swannee SpringFest 2014 may just go down in history as the best ever. The weather was perfect, the artists were magnificent, the thousands upon thousands of music- and festival-lovers soaked in the surroundings, the sun and of course the music. The artists themselves seemed caught up in the splendor and magic of it all, playing some of the finest music ever heard at SpringFest.

This festival was four days of pure heaven for Americana/Roots music lovers. The melodious sounds of blues, bluegrass, jazz, new grass, mountain grass and outlaw bluegrass wafting across the Spirit of the Suwannee Music Park was soul soothing and inspiring.

Beartoe Band made its debut at SpringFest and shook the rafters inside the Music Hall with music from bluegrass and jazz to haunting melodies that gave you the shivers. This band plays music not easily describable, yet leaves the audience spellbound.

Original SpringFest founder Randy Judy was a guest this year with his band Big Cosmos. This year's band was filled with famous musicians.

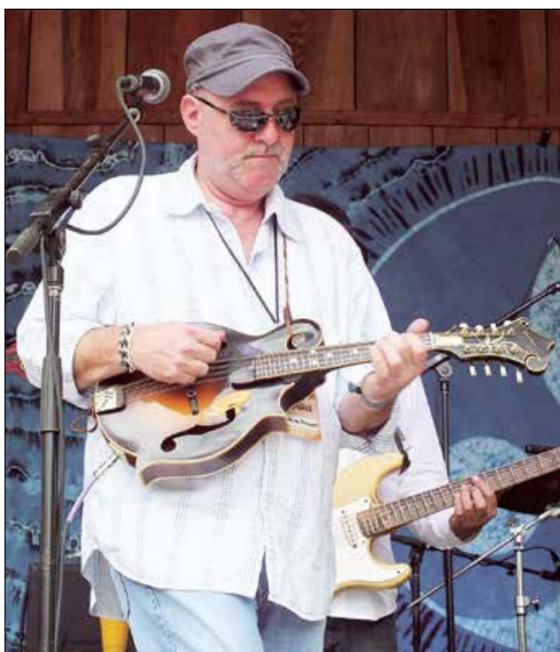

Fans enjoy the many activities offered at SOSMP'S SpringFest 2014.

Famed Fiddler Sue Cunningham was at the top of her game Saturday at Suwannee SpringFest.

JASON MATTHEW WALKER/Lake City Reporter

Columbia High slugger Alex Milton eyes a pitch against Suwannee High earlier this year.

Things looking good in Phillips' first year at CHS

By BRANDON FINLEY

bfinley@lakecityreporter.com

It didn't take long for Columbia High head baseball coach Heath Phillips to put the Tigers in a winning position.

In only his first season, Phillips has the Tigers in position to take home the top seed in the District 2-6A race.

Columbia is currently 12-2 with a 3-0 district record. Oakleaf High has a 3-1 district record and Gainesville has a 4-2 district record with both losses coming to the Tigers. A win next week against Oakleaf would almost guarantee the Tigers the top spot.

"What helps us is us beating Gainesville twice, because they have beat Oakleaf," Phillips said. "Technically, if we split with Oakleaf, we're in great position for the No. 1 seed."

Columbia will play three games this week, beginning with a district game at Orange Park High at 1 p.m. today.

Columbia hosts Bell High at 7 p.m. Friday and Chiles High at 1 p.m. on Saturday.

"It's a district game with Jason Plyn, a senior, having the ball (today)," Phillips said. "Friday, Tyler Myrick will have the ball, then Saturday, we will have Chiles. Both (Dalton) Mauldin and (Caleb) Vaughn will throw a couple of innings."

Phillips expects Saturday's game to be the marquee matchup.

"We can't look ahead of anybody," Phillips said. "I don't know much about the teams we play on Thursday or Friday. I know their record, but with any baseball game, you can't just look at a record. Chiles is a powerhouse program. I have a lot of respect for their coach and their program. We have to come out with our A-game. Hopefully the ball will drop where we need it to drop."

Phillips said there's two ways of thinking about having two starters compete in one game.

"I don't really want to give them two weeks off, so going into next week, I know we have Oakleaf and

Tales of the great white

There will be times that I write stories for the Lake City Reporter that go beyond our North Central Florida region. Stories of Hogzilla, world record bass, white marlin, and 40" trout go well beyond our region, and instantly go viral on the internet. Here's the latest, although this story has video and photo proof to back it up!

I grew up fishing the waters from Sarasota Bay to Tampa Bay. Sometimes we went inshore, sometimes we went near shore, and sometimes we'd be really brave and head out to the deep. I remember as a kid being afraid of hooking something so big that it would drag me in, of course this never happened, but the thought of Jaws was always in the back of my head.

Great white sharks are rarely seen in the Gulf of Mexico. The apex predator is known for living in cool waters not commonly seen on our coast. As you read this, you may have a hard time believing one that has been spotted eerily close to our shore.

As Jimmy Campbell left Friday with his father Wayne aboard the Trista Lynn to fish near the shore, they stopped close to the three-mile green buoy west of Bean Point, the northernmost point of Anna Maria Island, to get

rob@outdoors360.com

bait. This was an area I'd go to often as a teenager, and most of the time we were in just a 17 foot center console Mako.

"There were a lot of bait schools around," said Jimmy Campbell, who is well known for his success in local fishing tournaments. "As we're going around the bait schools, a big shark came up, almost examining us, curious about what we were doing."

Wayde Campbell, has been fishing commercially for nearly 50 years and never heard of a great white sighting that close to shore.

"At first we thought, 'Hey, that's a great white' but didn't really believe it," Jimmy Campbell said. "Then it sort of rolled on its side and we knew right then it was definitely a great white, not a mako or other big shark."

The large shark, which Campbell estimated at between 12 and 14 feet, hung around the boat for a few minutes as all aboard stared in awe. The lingering allowed Campbell to get a picture and another angler to get a video.

"We thought it would be scared of the boat, but it wasn't. If we had a big bait like a bonita I'm sure I could've hooked it!" said Jimmy Campbell, an ambitious angler.

Although rare, great whites are not completely unusual in the Gulf of Mexico. In years past, they have been seen and caught by anglers when water temperatures are between 65 and 70 degrees. On Friday, the water temperature was 68 degrees where the Campbells were fishing.

Last March, Go Fast! Fishing Charters hooked a reported 18-foot great white shark 30 miles west of Anna Maria Island, fighting it for a few hours before cutting the line. The video of this encounter went viral.

On Jan. 24, 1994, an estimated 2,200-pound great white was brought into Indian Rocks Beach. That beast was caught 23 miles offshore.

Great whites are currently protected, so catching one would require its release by law. "That still would have been fun!" Jimmy Campbell said.

The fact it was only three miles from shore is the most unusual detail here. Campbell says another angler who saw the shark in the same area Saturday contacted him, also confirming it was a great white.

Rob Chapman/Special to the Reporter

Just a few days later, video of another great white shark, was shot by Michelle Wynne. It was taken at M7, about 7 miles from the other encounter, and another place I fished frequently. The shark made several passes in their trolling spread, and even followed just behind the motor. They were able to get several really good looks at it. Josh said the shark was around 10-foot long.

Videos and photos of the shark(s) can be seen at Outdoors360.com. The great white shark link on the website will continue to keep running updates of the sightings, as more information continues to come to the surface.

Fort White Middle on winning side of things

From staff reports

Fort White High's middle school softball team had only been able to get in five games by March 18, but the Lady Indians posted their biggest win at home over Bradford Middle School. Fort White won 9-8 in the bottom of the seventh inning.

Shelby DuBose pitched a complete game with six strikeouts. She helped herself at the plate, going 3-for-5 with an RBI and run scored.

Shaylen Raulerson had two hits, and RBI and scored a run. She had a phenomenal backhand play at shortstop, making the long throw to get the first out in the last inning of a tied ball game.

Jamie Tolkkinen and Aubrey Callum both has two RBIs. Savana Terry, Raven Miles and Aubrey Callum each scored a run. In the last inning of the tied game, Kacey Carter hit a stand-up double. After Jennifer Allen was hit by a pitch, DuBose singled to load the bases. With two outs, Terry squared to bunt on a 1-2 count and threw the pitcher off rhythm. The result was a passed ball and Carter scored the winning run.

"I couldn't be more proud of my girls for working hard to pull out the victory," coach Tiffany Bratcher said.

don't play again until April 7," Phillips said. "There's some time in there that I can't have them not pitching. Anytime I can get them into innings, I'm going to get them into innings. I've thought about doing it in the playoffs. I'm not going to say that I'm definitely going to do it, but I like the idea."

DEAR ABBY Friends urge grandma to let younger grandson be adopted

www.dearabby.com

DEAR ABBY: I'm 62 and own my own home. I have legal guardianship of my eldest grandson, who is 5. Another grandchild is 2 1/2 and in foster care. I would like to keep both children together because I have been told that in the long run it is better so they won't lose contact with each other.

Some friends of mine have been telling me I should let the little one get adopted through the state in a closed adoption. This is really traumatic for me and I'm not sure what to do.

Please give me some advice. I love both of my grandchildren and want the best for them, now and in the long term.

— QUANDRIFIED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR QUANDRIFIED: Many grandparents raise their grandchildren successfully. If your health is good, and you have a high energy level and relatives who can provide respite when you need it, have both of your grandchildren live with you. If not, you must consider what could happen to them if something should happen to you.

AARP can be a helpful resource. It offers information on a wide variety of issues related to raising grandchildren, financial assistance and advocacy. To find out more, go to www.aarp.org/grandparents.

DEAR ABBY: I have been divorced for about 10 years and have dated far more since my divorce than I did before I married. The marriage ended because my wife was emotionally abusive.

What disturbs me is that somehow I either attract, or am attracted to, emotionally abusive women. They are usually successful, confident, good looking and controlling, and the results are always the same. The relationships don't last long. How do I stop being attracted to the same type of partner? — REPEATING PATTERNS

DEAR REPEATING: In order to break any cycle, a person needs to understand how the pattern became established in the first place. People are usually attracted to the familiar, and it may have something to do with the dynamics of the family in which you grew up. Ask your doctor for a referral to a psychologist who can help you to understand, so you won't make the same mistake again. It's the quickest fix for what ails you.

DEAR ABBY: I take pride in my looks, and when I go to parties, the dresses and accessories I choose. I am often asked where they came from, and I feel the question is rude and inappropriate. Am I being rude to evade the question, or is there a proper response when I'm asked? — TIME AND PLACE

DEAR TIME AND PLACE: When someone asks where you found an item you're wearing, it is usually intended as a compliment because the person would like to find something similar. If you prefer not to share that information, smile and thank the person for the compliment, then change the subject.

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19):

Opening up to new activities or interests will do you a world of good. Getting to know someone through a different avenue will help you recognize where your relationship is heading and how to best prepare. Romance is highlighted. ★★★★★

TAURUS (April 20-May 20):

Make choices based on your intuitive insight. Someone may try to mislead you using charm or romantic gestures to win your support. Take the time to ask questions and run a background check to put your mind at ease. ★★

GEMINI (May 21-June 20):

Offering help might be misconstrued as meddling in other people's affairs. Avoid getting too close or personal with someone you do business with. Pay more attention to what's going on in your own personal life and make positive changes that will improve your relationships. ★★★★★

CANCER (June 21-July 22):

Sign up for activities that help you expand your friendships and bring you pleasure. Sharing your knowledge, experience and memories will attract someone who can open your mind to all sorts of interesting people, cultures and pastimes. ★★

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22):

Don't let your emotions lead to financial loss. A fast-cash scheme may tempt you, but the stress and cost involved aren't worth it. Put your effort into having fun with the people you love as well as building a secure home base. ★★★

THE LAST WORD

Eugenia Last

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take a look at new alternatives. Sometimes it pays to take an unorthodox approach to a problem or issue you face. Don't rule out any suggestion without giving it a fair chance. An unusual partnership will help broaden your outlook. ★★★★★

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22):

Share your thoughts and plans for the future. Taking steps that will bring about an upgrade mentally, physically or financially will pay off and bring in compliments. Romance is in the stars, and making positive lifestyle changes will lead to happiness. ★★★★★

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21):

Take the road less traveled and you will find all sorts of interesting options. Being creative and in touch with your feelings will help you make wise and happy choices. Make changes to your living quarters to encourage originality. ★★★★★

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):

You will face opposition. Uncertainty and confusion is likely to set in when dealing with a friend or colleague offering vague and confusing information. Don't make a decision until you feel satisfied with what's being said. Focus on home and family. ★★

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19):

An unexpected situation will arise. Communication is likely to be misconstrued, leading to a poor choice or mishap. Get all the facts and protect personal information that you feel may be used against you. Rely on past experience. ★★

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18):

Offer a new twist to a service or skill you have, and you will find a way to bring in extra cash. Working at self-improvement will result in compliments as well as bringing a little love and romance into your life. ★★

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20):

A group effort will pay off. Look for people sharing your concerns, interests or thoughts regarding an investment or service. Offer a strategy that will encourage others to join, thereby multiplying your chances to become a success. ★★

Local Wolves begin new USSSA season

Special to the Reporter

The Richardson Community Center/Annie Mattox Park North, Inc. 7th- and 11th-grade USSSA basketball teams debuted March 15 with games at Richardson Middle School.

Their home gym at Richardson Community Center is awaiting the installation of new bleachers.

The 7th-grade team played the Gainesville Stampede with the Stampede winning, 59-50. Leading scorers for the hometown Wolves were Maleak Miller, 22, and Latorrence Jones, 11. Leading the Stampede were D. Ivery, 35 and D. Burch, 11.

The 11th-grade Wolves defeated the Rising Stars Heat of Ocala, 57-49. Leading scorers for the Wolves were Dilan Hall and Mareo Robinson, 13 points each, Jordan Coppock, 12, and Darrell Jones, 11.

The Rising Stars Heat were led by T. Varnedoe, 10 and D. Bnutt, 9.

The 11th-grade team played Suwannee's travel basketball team in Live Oak on March 18 and fell, 70-47.

Leading scorers for the Wolves were Jordan Coppock, 22 and Dilan Hall seven.

Leading Suwannee were (UF commit) Kavarious Hayes, 22 and Jamari Wheeler, 20.

Both teams Lake City teams competed in the Stampede Shootout in Gainesville over the weekend.

The 11th-grade team will host Suwannee at 2 p.m. Saturday.
