Questions over magistrate

Council wonders why less experienced candidate was picked as new code chief.

By TONY BRITT
tbritt@lakecityreporter.com

Jennifer B. Springfield is the city's new special magistrate for code enforcement, though it didn't happen without a few hitches.

Three of the city's five council members voiced concerns about the process that ranked Springfield as the top-ranked candidate for the position, but opted to appoint her anyway.

Zack Paulk cast the lone dissenting vote on the hiring of Springfield as the special magistrate for code enforcement.

Springfield, an attorney with

Paulk

Springfield Law Firm in Gainesville, was appointed during Monday night's city council meeting. Springfield is also general

Broadband Authority.

Wendell Johnson, city manager, said the position was advertised on two separate occasions.

Three proposals were submitted for the position and one of the proposals was disqualified

Fire assessment could jump 71% for hotels

By TONY BRITT
tbritt@lakecityreporter.com

One local hotel owner said the proposed fire assessment rate highlighted in a city fire services study could become a financial burden for those in his business.

The fire assessment rate for local hotels and motels could increase by 71 percent, from $.0758 to $.1293 per square foot, according to the recent study to determine the city's fire assessment rate for the upcoming fiscal year.

Nick Patel, who owns the Comfort Inns and Suites, Hampton Inn, Country Inn and Suites and Red Roof Inn, said the proposed 71 percent increase will be expensive for local hotels.

"I certainly feel it's a burden for the hotels to pay," he said.

Patel said he may address the city council before it votes on the proposed fire assessment rate changes.

"I'm sure if the other local hotel owners are educated about on it they'll be happy to speak to council," he said. "I think it's a huge expense for the hotel industry. Hotels are big boxes and there is a lot of square footage ... with several floors. From that point of view it's going to get really expensive and possibly become difficult

Dan Borislow, inventor of magicJack, dies at 52

WEST PALM BEACH

Dan Borislow, the inventor of magicJack and a pioneer in developing phone calls over the Internet, died Monday, officials at the company he founded said. He was 52. A spokeswoman for MagicJack Vocaltec Ltd., said he died of a heart attack. In a statement, MagicJack CEO Gerald Vento praised Borislow as a visionary. "Dan was a true telecom pioneer whose vision, creativity, energy, passion and single-minded focus was the driving force behind the success of magicJack," said Vento. "Our continued success is dedicated to extending his vision for the great company he created. " MagicJack, based in West Palm Beach and Netanya, Israel, became widely known through television commercials and infomercials beginning in 2008. "Imagine eliminating your monthly phone bill forever," some of them intoned. More than 10 million of the devices have been sold since, MagicJack VocalTec says, and they remain a ubiquitous offering in some 25,000 stores. Vento was named president and CEO of MagicJack VocalTec in December 2012. At the time, Borislow said it was time to hand over the reins to someone else to grow the business.

FSU addresses campus safety amid federal probe

TALLAHASSEE — Florida State University is hiring a Title IX director and two sexual violence prevention coordinators before the fall term starts in five weeks. Interim President Garnett Stokes tells the Tallahassee Democrat that the university is not waiting for a federal investigation to conclude before addressing campus safety and sexual assaults. Stokes says the university has formed several committees to assess its response to sexual violence complaints and is preparing to make changes. Florida State is one of 55 colleges and universities being investigated by the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights for possible Title IX violations. Federal officials also have questioned whether Florida State adequately investigated allegations that Heisman Trophy-winner Jameis Winston sexually assaulted another student. After Tallahassee police and prosecutors investigated, Winston was not charged. Associated Press

George Harrison memorial tree killed by beetles

LOS ANGELES — A tree planted in Los Angeles to honor former Beatle George Harrison has been killed — by beetles. Councilman Tom LaBonge says the pine grew to more than 12 feet tall before succumbing to a bark beetle infestation. The tree was removed last month. LaBonge says it will be replanted in the fall. After Harrison's 2001 death in Los Angeles, the pine was planted near Griffith Observatory. A small plaque at the base commemorates the guitarist and songwriter, who had a deep appreciation of gardening. LaBonge says several trees at Griffith Park have been killed by the beetles.

Man drags woman by car, LCPD reports

By CARTER JACKSON
Special to the Reporter

A Lake City woman was dragged by a man in a car while shopping at an auto dealership, the Lake City Police Department said.

Meadows

The victim was car shopping at Rountree-Moore Toyota when Darren J. Meadows, 45, of Lakeland approached in a 2004 Toyota and began honking at her and her four children, according to an arrest report.

After the woman and her children moved, Meadows reportedly became enraged and started to curse at her children. The victim confronted Meadows to tell him to stop cursing at her children.

According to the report, when the victim confronted Meadows, he grabbed her by the shirt and said, "I will kill you where you stand, you're going for a ride ...," while slapping her in the face.

Meadows then accelerated at low speed, dragging the woman on the side of the car, the report said. A car salesman desperately tried to help her escape Meadows' grasp as he dragged her into US 90, according to LCPD.

Meadows then lost his grip on the victim and fled the scene, the report said.

A passenger in his car who had tried to get Meadows to stop later identified him as the driver, according to LCPD.

The victim had multiple red marks on her face and neck and also sustained bruises on her arms, neck and chest, the report said. She refused medical treatment.

Meadows was booked into the Columbia County Detention Facility on one count of aggravated battery and is being held on $10,000 bond, jail records show.

Mike McKee, the executive director of FGC, will be hosting the forum, and Robert Bridges, editor of the Lake City Reporter, will act as the moderator.

Denille Decker, executive director of the Lake City - Columbia County Chamber of Commerce, said this forum is the public's chance to hear firsthand what the candidates' stances on various issues are.

"It's the only opportunity for people to hear all candidates' opinions at once from the comfort of their own homes," she said. "We're proud to be a part of it."

Another forum will be held for the general election. However, the date of that isn't set yet.

Ichetucknee project enters next phase

Plan to convert sprayfields to wetlands will cut runoff 85%.

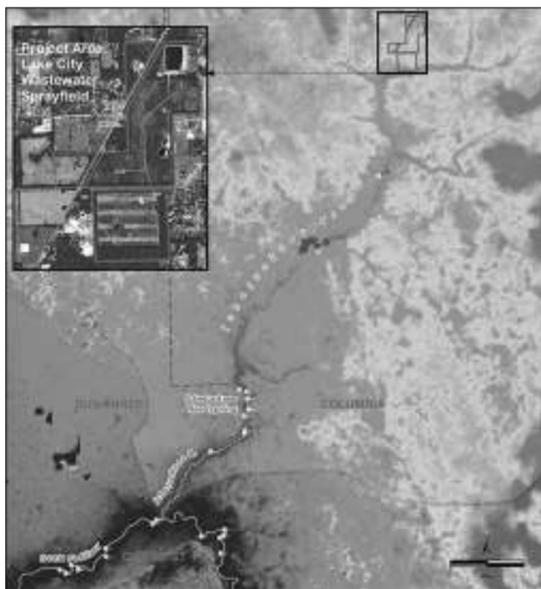

From staff reports

A collaborative effort is underway: the City of Lake City, Columbia County and the Suwannee River Water Management District are moving to the next step in a project to address and improve the water quality in the Ichetucknee Springshed following a successful public meeting. The project is now in the design and permitting phase.

The Ichetucknee Springshed Water Quality Improvement project will provide benefits to the Ichetucknee River and springs by reducing nutrient loading. Presently, Lake City's wastewater effluent is sent to sprayfields located on the Ichetucknee Trace and water recharging the aquifer in this area has been shown to reach the springs in a matter of days.

The city's sprayfields will be converted into approximately 140 acres treatment wetlands will reduce the nutrient loading to the Ichetucknee River. This happens as the wetland system denitrifies the nutrients through natural processes involving vegetation and microorganisms converting it to nitrogen gas into the atmosphere.

The box at the top right shows the area and size of the water quality improvement project in relation to Columbia County and the Ichetucknee River.

This natural process occurs daily in our environment.

The project will improve water quality by reducing Lake City's wastewater nutrient loadings up to 85 percent, thus reducing nutrient loading to the adjacent streams and groundwater which drain to the Ichetucknee. It is an excellent step in reducing overall nutrient loading in the springshed.

This treatment wetlands system has been successfully employed in various locations throughout the state, such as Gainesville and Tallahassee.

The construction phase of the Ichetucknee Springshed Water Quality Improvement Project is expected to begin in January of 2015.

because it was received after the deadline.

Johnson said there was no interview process but that the two candidates who responded were ranked based on their responses to the Request for Proposals.

Although there was no formal interview process, Springfield was vetted by city council members during a July 7 workshop. Folds and Walker was the other law firm that submitted a proposal.

Paulk questioned how it was possible that

Springfield was ranked higher, but listed Folds and Walker as one of her references.

"I find it hard to believe how someone with no experience ranks higher than someone with experience," Paulk said, noting Springfield has no previous experience as a special magistrate for code enforcement while the firm of Folds and Walker does have experience.

"I was just looking for more experience," Paulk said after Monday night's meeting. "Based on the candidates that had applied, I felt like we probably should have interviewed the other candidate as well. I don't have anything against Mrs. Springfield or the other candidate—I don't know either one of them for that matter. I'm just looking for experience when you're looking for a special magistrate position. At the same time the council feels as though we'll give her an opportunity...."

City council member Melinda Moses also said she found it "peculiar" that Springfield used Folds and Walker as a reference, but Springfield had the higher scores.

The RFP responses were ranked by three independent scorers through city staff and Springfield was ranked as the top candidate.

"I agree with Mr. Paulk and I had some reservations," Moses said at the meeting.

Springfield told the council she didn't know that Folds and Walker were going to respond to the RFP.

"I didn't list Dave Wagner (of Folks and Walker) knowing that he was going to also submit a proposal and be competing with me," she said. "He didn't let me know and I guess when the decision was made to submit a proposal he didn't come back to me and say, 'We're going to submit a proposal.'"

Johnson said the scores were ranked by three independent scorers and he also offered to let council members redo the forum so there would be no second guessing the staff's procedures for scoring these types of RFPs.

"This is what we do each and every time we go out for services...," he said.

Councilman George Ward said he agreed with some of the information presented by Paulk.

Ward said he talked with Herbert Darby, city attorney, after the last meeting and was told it's an "at-will" position and services could be terminated at any time.

"I think we should give her a chance and see how she does," Ward said.

Explorers learn crime scene investigation in Tallahassee

By SARAH LOFTUS

Members of the Lake City Police Department Explorer Program aren't just learning how to become police in Lake City. They spent the week of July 13 in Tallahassee at the Florida Law Enforcement Explorer Program with fellow Explorers from across the state and learned the basics of law enforcement as well as the more advanced nuances of it.

The program, headed up by the Lake City and Gainesville Explorers, gave Explorers the chance to see what it's like to train for a career in law enforcement in a residential setting, an LCPD press release says. It was held at the Florida Public Safety Institute.

The Explorers spent their time in the capital learning about constitutional law and ethics in the classroom and building searches and crime scene investigation out in the field. But most of their time was spent learning about advanced law enforcement topics, the press release says.

They also got to hear from officers who work in different aspects of law enforcement, including the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, Florida Wildlife Commission, Department of Corrections, Department of Juvenile Justice and the Florida State University Police Department.

"The training our youth received at FPSI was top-notch," Chief of Police Agatha Gilmore wrote in a prepared statement. "We are excited to participate with this program and look forward to future opportunities it provides."

On Monday morning, Tuimala brought her 12-year-old son and 10-year-old daughter to Walmart with her. She and her son coerced her daughter into stealing a bag full of merchandise, the report says. The three went to the men's clothing section where they all picked out items.

According to the report, Tuimala's daughter then walked away from her and her brother, headed to the gift bags area and picked up a large gift bag.

The three of them reconvened and removed all the clothing they picked out from its hangers and put in a shopping cart, the report says.

Tuimala then separated from her daughter, and her daughter went to the toys department where she put all of the clothing in the gift bag. The girl left the store with the bag full of merchandise and met her brother and mother in the parking lot where they were waiting for her.

According to the report, the young girl stole $203.75 worth of merchandise.

As police investigated, they found a vile of crystals and a locket on Tuimala's wrist full of crystals, LCPD Public Information Officer Craig Strickland said.

Police tested the crystals and found that Tuimala was in possession of crystal methamphetamine, he said.

Tuimala's children were released into the custody of their older sister, Strickland said.

Tuimala was arrested Tuesday at 12:27 a.m. and was booked into the Columbia County Jail.

As of press time, Tuimala is being held in jail on a $2,000 bond.

for the hotels to pay."

According to the study, fire assessment rates for single family dwellings and vacant/agricultural lands will also increase.

Nilgun Kamp, a representative of Tindale Oliver and Associates, said the rates were based on demand by use which took into account the number of incidents, the amount of time a vehicle spent at a location and the amount of personnel sent to each location.

She said a total of about 75 percent of the calls were to single family dwelling units, commercial sites and vacant property. All three of those classifications were expected to have increased rates for the upcoming fiscal year.

There were proposed changes in all six classifications where data was collected.

The proposed assessment for single-family dwellings increased 14 percent, going from $194.01 to $221.76.

The proposed assessment for multi-family dwellings decreased one percent, dropping from $133.54 to $131.55.

The proposed assessment for hotels and motels increased 71 percent from $0.758 per square foot to $1.293 per square foot.

The proposed assessment for commercial establishments, which is also measured in square footage, decreased about 10 percent, going from $1,546 per square foot to $1,386 per square foot.

The proposed assessment for industrial/warehouse space (measured in square foot) decreased 42 percent, dropping from $0.822 per square foot to $0.480 per square foot.

The proposed assessment for vacant/agricultural land increased approximately 21 percent, going from $36.77 per parcel to $44.35 per parcel.

The proposed new assessment rates were presented at the Monday night city council meeting. The study was presented as information only and the city council did not vote on the proposed rates.

City council is not expected to adopt a preliminary resolution for fire assessment rates until its Aug. 6 meeting.

Report: Man dislocated shoulder of 6-month-old

By MEGAN REEVES

mreeves@lakecityreporter.com

A Lake City man was arrested Friday after he allegedly dislocated the shoulder of a 6-month-old baby girl.

Michael Allen Cox, 20, was arrested on charges of cruelty toward a child.

Columbia County Sheriff's Office Corporal Brian Rix responded to lot 17 of the EZ Stop RV Park at 181 SW Howell Street to assist with a possible child abuse incident, according to an arrest report.

EMS medics told Rix that CCSO was first called because of the nature of the incident, but after examination saw no signs of obvious trauma to the child.

The baby had originally been lying in bed with Cox and his fiance, but Cox said he decided to put her in her bassinet.

Cox told Rix that while he was putting the child into her bed, located in the back of the RV, he heard a loud snap. He said the infant started crying, which worried him, so he called 911, the report said.

Cox's fiancee, who is currently a stay at home mom, said that she and Michael have been together for about 11 months and are the primary caregivers for the child.

After reviewing the final medical report, Cox was arrested and charged with aggravated abuse of a child. He was released later that day on $25,000 bond.

OUR OPINION

Harmony in the Streets

The Florida Sheriffs Youth Ranches did it right with the recent Harmony in the Streets day camp in Fort White.

It was a great experience for the youngsters as well as those instructing them.

Harmony in the Streets is a mobile camping program that blends “two highly successful programs of the Florida Sheriffs Youth Ranches, Summer Camp and Youth Camp,” according to the organization’s website.

Some kids can’t make it to the camps.

The idea, then, is to take the camping experience to them, especially to areas generally seen as disadvantaged.

The goals of the Harmony in the Streets program?

Simple.

Show kids how to use their free time in a positive way by developing valuable leadership skills as role models for others.

That has the added benefit of boosting their self-esteem.

In addition, Harmony helps youngsters learn to live in, well, harmony with one another.

Or, in the words of the website: “The program ... teaches youngsters to help foster the acceptance of others and to discover and learn to appreciate the cultural differences of others in the community.”

However you say it, Harmony in the Streets is a fine program for local youth, and one that’s proven valuable since its inception.

Good job, all.

ACCUSATIONS OF TAMPERING WITH CRASH SITE EVIDENCE

Why a ‘liar’ loves to hear from readers

For a writer, it’s a gift to know someone reads your writing. For a storyteller, it’s high praise to hear a story in return. Have I mentioned I love getting mail?

In the mountains where I grew up, storytellers were once known as “liars.” This was not an insult. The tales they told were often more fabricated than factual. But they were entirely true of the human condition, intended not to inform, but to entertain, enlighten and inspire.

I was born into a family of “liars.” My grandparents and parents, my blind baby brother, my aunts and uncles and dozens of cousins, the dogs that slept under the porch, even the fleas that slept on the dogs — we all told stories. But I never once dreamed that I’d grow up to earn my living as a writer.

The story of how it happened is a long one. The short of it is this: I won a scholarship to college. Got married. Had three babies. Took a job as a file clerk for a newspaper and ended up as a reporter and a columnist.

A lot of other things happened, too, along the way. A life can be summed up in the lines of a resume or an obituary, but it’s lived between those lines.

For 20 years, I’ve written a weekly column and every week, I hear from strangers — friends I’ve yet to meet — who read my stories and write in return to tell me stories of their own.

They write about their lives, their families, their hopes and dreams, losses and joys and, most of all, their grandchildren.

I wish you could read them.

Sharon Randall

www.sharonrandall.com

My great regret is not always having the time to reply (I won’t live that long.) But I read every note, every card, every email, and I appreciate every word. It’s enough to make me keep writing. At least for today.

My stepfather was just a boy when his father was killed in an accident. His mother needed help feeding the family, so he quit school to go to work.

He never learned to read. He married my mother when I was 4. She taught him how to write his name. I remember the look in his eyes the day he realized I was watching him practice.

His illiteracy was a family secret. We all knew it, but never spoke of it in his presence.

A few years before he died, when I published a collection of columns, I gave him a copy that I signed and inscribed for him.

I’ll never forget it. He held my book in his big calloused hands, studying my name on the cover. I showed him where I’d signed it and read aloud the inscription. I had seen him cry once, the day my mother died. But this time, it was somehow harder to watch.

Finally, he looked in my eyes. “I can’t read a word of it,” he said. “But I will sure treasure it.”

I’ve been blessed by many fine words in my life, but none that meant more than those.

We read and write for two reasons: To know and to be known. It’s been that way a very long time and I hope it always will. It works like this. You take thoughts and feelings from your mind and heart and maybe your soul and fashion them into words. That is called language.

You put the words on paper or a computer, using lines and symbols you trust to carry your meaning. That is called writing.

Then someone you’ve never met will see your lines and symbols and recognize them as words. That is called reading.

Sometimes the words hold the power to recreate the writer’s thoughts and feelings in the mind and the heart and even in the soul of the reader.

That is called a miracle.

Words matter. They tell us who we are. They turn strangers into friends. They can even make us want to keep doing what we do. At least for today.

I told you all that to say this: I am grateful for your kind words and the stories you write to tell me. I may not always have time to write back and say thanks.

But I will sure treasure it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Shining Star called victim of bias

To the Editor:

I’m responding to the Sunday, July 20 “Our Opinion” article. This anonymous article makes at least two references to “we.” This must be the royal “we,” which is similar to the infamous “they,” used when the facts are not in your corner. There is one unsubstantiated “fact” about “$2.6 million funding a school that isn’t getting the job done.” My reply, as you will see, is not anonymous.

Shining Star Academy is a tuition-free, public charter school that receives its funding from the State of Florida and not the Columbia County School District. It accepts students not only from Columbia County, but also from the surrounding counties. As a matter of fact, the District requires that 5 percent of the Shining Star Academy’s State money be withheld just to pass the money through its accounting system. Five percent seems like a lot for doing little and providing nothing.

Has it been reported anywhere that Shining Star Academy of the Arts (SSAOTA) made twice the testing improvement of any other district school while receiving zero assistance from the district? If you look at the actual numbers you will see that three of the established district schools’ test scores actually declined. Why are the “we” not asking about that fact? I guess “they” are on the district’s “these schools will do better next year!” list.

Another little factoid! Did you know that the district has a special team tasked with assisting public schools with specific help on improving state testing scores? Since three of the district schools test scores declined, I’m not sure how effective the team was; but the team was not offered to SSAOTA, and may have been concealed from them. I don’t believe the notion that the current superintendent is not a fan of charter schools is unknown, but I do suspect that his position has spread down through the district office. Look at how the musings of our current presidential administration are similar to those of King Henry II of England’s musings, while in his court, about the Archbishop of Canterbury, which was “Who will rid me of this troublesome priest?” That resulted in Archbishop Thomas Becket’s subsequent murder. Notice how, without direct presidential orders, the IRS and the Justice Department rushed right out and began targeting conservatives. Who can say the same thing can’t happen here?

I am not anonymous as I am the father of one of Dr. Buzzella’s teachers and the grandfather of two of his students. Being a stakeholder, I have a good deal more information about the school’s advantages and problems than the public at large. I can see the misinformation and bias for what it is. SSAOTA is a perceived threat to the established method of local public education; and therefore, the need is for it to be marginalized.

Oddly, acid may ease the pain

Dear Pharmacist,

You've said that if you have twitches, leg cramps, spasms or heart arrhythmias that you could be deficient in acid. What does this mean? I am taking an acid pill myself for reflux.

— L.B. Las Vegas, Nevada

Dear Reader: You're not taking an "acid" pill, you're taking an acid-blocking pill for reflux. Those drugs are suppressing acid so you don't get reflux.

But this is important to know. If you run low on stomach acid, you will experience those symptoms above due to your inability to extract minerals from your foods.

You see, stomach acid is necessary to get minerals and nutrients out of your food, and into your cells.

Stomach acid is good

Acid-blocking drugs inhibit that process, causing undigested food globules to pass through your stomach and then, microscopic proteins leak into your blood stream. It could

DEAR PHARMACIST

Suzy Cohen

suzycohen24@gmail.com

launch an auto-immune attack, so having sufficient stomach acid is important to your entire digestive tract. I'm not against acid blocking drugs. Thank goodness we have them for when those spicy buffalo wings revisit us at 1 a.m.

Controlling a genuine problem is fine with me, but indiscriminate consumption of acid blockers (sold without prescription in the United States) is not a good idea. Understand, stomach acid is not bad, it's only bad if it's produced in excess.

Keep the trap door shut

Did you know that you will experience symptoms of heartburn if you make too much acid, but also if you are deficient? Weird but true.

Healthy amounts of stomach acid keep the tiny trap door shut between your stomach and esophagus. This sphincter is pH sensitive and in a healthy person, it stays shut because of the natural production of acid in the stomach. When you reduce stomach acid, you then have insufficient amounts, and your stomach pH increases and this causes the trap door to swing open, causing heartburn.

That's why some people who take a digestive acid supplement (like betaine) sometimes feel better.

Small amounts of healthy digestive acids keep the trap door shut, and the acid where it should be (down in your stomach) as opposed to your throat!

Signs of low acid

The signs of low acid (termed hypochlorhydria) include heartburn! Surprised? It's true. Also, you see irritable bowel, belching, cramps, food sensitivities, rheumatoid, Hashimoto's thyroiditis, gallbladder disease, osteoporosis, pancreatitis, yeast infections and rosacea.

You will certainly have chronic fatigue because acid is needed to give you minerals which then participate in the production of both thyroid and adrenal hormones. No doubt, a little betaine can breathe life into some tired people (but get your doctor's approval even though this is over-the-counter). I don't know what's right for you.

Digestive acids are sold at health food stores by names such as "betaine hydrochloride," "betaine with pepsin" or "trimethylglycine."

Begin supplementation by titrating your dosage upward based on symptom relief. Take acid supplements during your meal, or right after and space them apart by 5 minutes if you take more than one pill.

Ask a knowledgeable practitioner if acid supplements are right for you and have your zonulin and gastrin levels tested.

Grapes, chocolate could help repair old, damaged cells

From staff reports

GAINESVILLE — When it comes to staying healthy, it's a cell-eat-cell world.

As cells age, damaged proteins and lipids accumulate within them. Impaired cell parts can send free radicals into the body, and dysfunctional proteins and lipids may break down DNA within cells, causing them to become toxic. Cells usually clean up their own damage through a "housekeeping" process called autophagy. But as the body ages and in people with certain diseases, cells' ability to do this housekeeping becomes less efficient. That means it may be harder for people to recover from cardiac events such as heart attack or other illnesses.

University of Florida researchers have found that combining calorie restriction with a supplement of resveratrol, an antioxidant found in the skin of red grapes, dark chocolate and blueberries, could kick-start this housekeeping process, helping heart cells recover from damage, according to a study published in the journal Free Radical Biology and Medicine.

"The damaged proteins and lipids remain inside cells, eventually making them toxic," said lead author Debapriya Dutta, Ph.D., who earned her doctorate from the University of Florida and is now a postdoctoral researcher at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. "We wanted to see whether an increase in autophagy would remove such damaged cellular components and make the cells healthy again."

In an earlier study published in the journal Autophagy, Dutta and UF researcher Christiaan Leeuwenburgh, Ph.D., showed that increasing the housekeeping process protected cardiac cells from cell death. In their current study, the researchers wanted to test interventions that could improve autophagy in the heart. They further investigated whether the improved process helped protect rats' heart cells against induced stress.

To study this, the researchers restricted the calorie intake of one group of 26-month-old rats — approximately equivalent to a 65-year-old human — by 20 percent over a period of six weeks. Another group received only the resveratrol supplement. A third group received both the calorie-restricted diets and the resveratrol.

"Only the group with caloric restriction plus a higher dose of resveratrol induced autophagy," said Leeuwenburgh, who is also chief of the division of the biology of aging in the University of Florida Institute on Aging.

The researchers think the combination of resveratrol and calorie restriction promotes the role of a protein called mTOR, which regulates cell growth, proliferation and survival, though they say need to further investigate exactly why the combination of interventions was more effective than either just calorie restriction or just resveratrol.

Leeuwenburgh compares cells unable to clean themselves of damaged parts to smoldering houses.

"If you're older and you have a sudden stress condition, the smoking homes become fires," Leeuwenburgh said. "A little bit of smoke is okay, but if they're not removed quickly, the smoke will turn into a fire, and the cell will start releasing proteins that will cause the breakdown of other apparently functional proteins and DNA in the cell, leading to cell demise and ultimately, organ dysfunction."

That also means cells may not be able to react as well to the onset of diseases, especially in older adults. Aggregations of plaque within neurons contribute to Alzheimer's disease, for example. But the plaque could be alleviated by spurring autophagy, which could help clean out the plaque, the researchers said. Increasing the cleaning process could also help cells protect themselves against inflammatory diseases and cancer.

"These kinds of diseases aren't solely due to a lack of autophagy. There are so many factors that come into play," said Dutta, who was the paper's lead author. "But if you increased autophagy for many of these pathologies, it can help the body fight the disease."

Dutta said the next steps are to test autophagy-enhancing treatments in different disease models, eventually starting clinical trials including the combination of weight loss and resveratrol, exercise and other natural compounds such as papaya.

Rhymes inspire reason in womb

Third trimester babies respond to rhythm of their mother's voice.

From staff reports

GAINESVILLE — Mozart, Beethoven or even Shakespeare — pregnant mothers have been known to expose their babies to many forms of auditory stimulation. But according to researchers at the University of Florida, all a baby really needs is the sound of his or her mother's voice.

Research published in the most recent issue of the journal Infant Behavior and Development shows that babies in utero begin to respond to the rhythm of a nursery rhyme — showing evidence of learning — by 34 weeks of pregnancy and are capable of remembering a set rhyme until just prior to birth. Nursing researcher Charlene Krueger, Ph.D., A.R.N.P., and her team studied pregnant women who recited a rhyme to their babies three times a day for six weeks, beginning at 28 weeks' gestational age, which is the start of the third trimester of pregnancy.

"The mother's voice is the predominant source of sensory stimulation in the developing fetus," said Krueger, an associate professor in the UF College of Nursing. "This research highlights just how sophisticated the third trimester fetus really is and suggests that a mother's voice is involved in the development of early learning and memory capabilities. This could potentially affect how we approach the care and stimulation of the preterm infant."

Krueger's team recruited 32 pregnant women during their 28th week of pregnancy, as determined by fetal ultrasound. The participants were between 18-39 years of age, spoke English as a primary language and were pregnant with their first baby. Once recruited, the women were randomly assigned to either an experimental or control group. The mean age of the women in the group was 25. In addition, 68 percent of the women were white, 28 percent were black and 4 percent were of another race or ethnicity.

From 28 to 34 weeks of pregnancy, all mothers in the study recited a passage or nursery rhyme out loud twice a day and then came in for testing at 28, 32, 33 and 34 weeks' gestation to evaluate for the emergence of learning. To determine if the fetus could

METROCREATIVE IMAGES

University of Florida researchers have found that it doesn't have to be Beethoven. Babies at 34 weeks of pregnancy show evidence of learning by response to the rhythm of a spoken nursery rhyme.

remember the pattern of speech at 34 weeks of age, all mothers were asked to stop speaking the passage. Then the fetuses were tested again at 36 and 38 weeks' gestational age.

During testing, researchers used a fetal heart monitor, similar to what is used during traditional labor and delivery, to record heart rate and determine any changes. Researchers interpret a small heart rate deceleration in the fetus as an indicator of learning or familiarity with a stimulus.

At testing, the fetuses in the experimental group were played a recording of the same rhyme their mother had been reciting at home but spoken by a female stranger. Those in the control group heard a different rhyme also spoken by a stranger. This was to help determine if the fetus was responding simply to its mother's voice or to a familiar pattern of speech, which is a more difficult task, Krueger said.

The researchers found that the fetus's heart rate began to respond to the familiar rhyme recited by a stranger's voice by 34 weeks of gestational age — once the mother had spoken the rhyme out loud at home for six weeks. They continued to respond with a small cardiac deceleration for as long as four weeks after the mother had stopped saying the rhyme until about 38 weeks. At 38 weeks, there was a statistically significant difference between the two groups in responding to the strangers' recited rhymes — the experimental group who heard the original rhyme responded with a deeper and more sustained cardiac deceleration while the control group who heard a new rhyme responded with a cardiac acceleration.

"This study could have implications to those preterm infants who are born before 37 weeks of age and the impact an intervention such as their mother's voice may have on influencing better outcomes in this high-risk population."

From ground strokes to rules of the game, young players learn it all at Johnny Young's Junior Tennis Camp.

The second of three camps is going on this week at The Country Club at Lake City. The week-long camp ends Friday and had a near-maximum of 15 participants.

Young, a long-time player and coach, puts the campers through their paces on the court and in the books. "We have a wide range of ability, so we concentrate on the basics," Young said. "Even with kids who have already been in camp, you have got to go over it again and again."

TENNIS: Johnny Young teaches technique, as well as history of the game beginner, advanced beginner and intermediate.

Brothers Houston Crews, 9, and Brody Crews, 8, are trying the sport for the first time. They are students at Columbia City Elementary.

"I have never actually played," Hunter said. "I saw this camp and wanted to try it out. I like it."

"It is my second day and I am getting good at hitting the ball," Brody said.

Riley Lang, 10, has literally taken her game from the street.

"I started playing in the street with my brother," said Lang, who is a student at Eastside Elementary. "My favorite part is learning the forehand and backhand."

Those common strokes are just two taught by Young.

"We cover all six shots — forehand and backhand on the court and at the net, overhead volley and serve," Young said.

Aliyah Tannenbaum, 10, appreciates the sport.

"I have always admired tennis, but I never knew how to do it," the Pinemont Elementary student said. "I have been trying and my mom found this place. It is a great feeling learning how to play."

Young had a girls vs. boys shuttle run/relay going on Tuesday.

"I like beating the guys in the relay," said tennis veteran Kylie Williams, 8, who attends Columbia City. "I have been playing three years and will play anywhere."

Epiphany students Paul Norris, 11, and Richard Jones, 8, also are long-time players.

"I have been playing since I was three," Jones said. "My brother taught me. I am having a good time at the camp."

"I have been doing it for a long time now," Norris said. "I like interacting with Johnny. I have known him for a while and we are real good friends."

Columbia City student Allison Bedenbaugh, 9, says the camp gets her out of the house.

"It is really fun and we're really active," Bedenbaugh said. "You are not sitting at home being bored all day."

Kylee Boone, 11, and Reagan Robinson, 9, are coming to camp from out of town.

The two are cousins and attend with a third cousin. Boone is a student at Suwannee Middle School and Robinson goes to Lake Butler Elementary.

"We have a tennis court by my house and I play with my mom," Robinson said. "I have been to both camps and I like to play my favorite sport."

It is fun to stay active," Boone said. "Johnny is funny. When you think you did bad, he tells you that you did good."

Young covers other aspects of the sport and players have to use pencils as well as rackets.

"I do a lot of lecturing," Young said. "They have to know about the rules and I have them take a test. When they finish they will know every part of the court, the type of tennis balls and the Grand Slam tournaments and what surfaces they are played on."

Young said at the end of camp on Friday players will pair off and play singles and doubles.

"We have challenging games on Friday and cover all the stuff," Young said.

Learning and improving in the sport is great for the campers.

A big plus for parents is the exercise the children receive.

Michael Bryan, 8, who attends Westside Elementary and learned the game from his parents, attests to that.

"I like the times when we can have breaks," Bryan said. "My knees, my feet, everything gets tired."

DEAR ABBY

Girl & cousin both need counseling after assault

Abigail Van Buren www.dearabby.com

DEAR ABBY: My granddaughter "Cindy," age 2, was being watched by her mommy's ex-sister-in-law and her sons. Cindy went to her mommy and said, "Bubby hurt me." Bubby is what she calls her 10-year-old cousin. Her mother called the police. A policeman spoke to her and said there wasn't enough evidence. Now my granddaughter is scared of men.

told me and ask for their assistance in finding therapy for your grandchild. They hear stories like this all too often.

The boy who assaulted Cindy also needs counseling so that he won't/can't repeat what he did to her with another little girl. From my perspective, both of these children need professional help.

DEAR ABBY: For years I dated guys who I knew wanted a committed relationship, while I just wanted to have fun. I enjoyed being single and never saw myself getting married. My mom was married three times to men who abused her. It made the idea of marriage terrifying to me.

Through counseling, I have found healing from my past. I regret the damage I caused by leading guys on. Now that I want to be married, my life feels empty. While I used to enjoy my independence, I now want to share my experiences with someone.

Because of the counseling I have had, I know what I shouldn't settle for, but the only guys asking me out are sleazy. I feel like in some ways life was easier when I wanted to stay single. How do I find a healthy balance so I won't go back to my old ways or end up settling out of desperation? — HEALED BUT CONFUSED

DEAR HEALED BUT CONFUSED: One way would be to continue the counseling. While you may want to be married now, desperation and neediness are not traits that attract worthwhile men.

You need to be prepared to take some time and find a balance in your life while you're looking for Mr. Right. Explore your own interests, make friends with members of both sexes, do some volunteering if you have the time. If you do, the chances of your meeting the right kind of man will improve because you will have more to offer.

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

HOROSCOPES

THE LAST WORD Eugenia Last

will help boost your reputation and your popularity in public and at home. Adaptability will help you get your way. ★★ ★★

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Make plans and follow through. If you don't do the legwork, no one else will. Show your strengths and encourage others to pitch in and help. You can be a hero if you show dedication and a desire to help others. ★★

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You'll face both good and bad things today. Refuse to let personal matters interfere with business and vice-versa. It's important that you don't make impulsive moves based on unrealistic demands. A visit and heart-to-heart talk will help you make a decision. ★★ ★★ ★★

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Deal with tedious paperwork quickly and get on with your day. Romance should be high on your to-do list along with pampering, self-improvement projects and making your surroundings more enjoyable. An unusual meeting will lead to a creative project. ★★ ★★

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make changes, but stay within your financial boundaries. Being the best that you can be and offering your time and services

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Jump in and make the changes that will make you happy. You may not please everyone, but you will discover who you want to share your future with. Anger is a waste of time. Make a move. ★★ ★★

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't feel obligated to please everyone else. You should be excited about any changes taking place as well. Bide your time and look for the secure route that promises to please everyone. Incorporate smart living habits into your life. ★★ ★★

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An interesting proposal or influx of cash will put a smile on your face. Cash will come from an unexpected source. An opportunity to start something new will show potential if you are consistent, methodical and disciplined. ★★ ★★ ★★

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Put more time and effort into home and family. Fixing up your surroundings will lift spirits and bring you closer to the people who count most in your life. Love is on the rise and romance will improve your relationship with someone special. ★★
