Library speaks out on Banned Books Week

Event showcases censorship, local library head says.

By SARAH LOFTUS
sloftus@lakecityreporter.com

Everybody has that one favorite book that's changed their life or heavily impacted them, Columbia County Public Library main campus youth services coordinator Stephanie Tyson said. When you ban books, you risk never finding that special book, she said.

"If people are allowed to tell you what to read, you may never find that book that changes your life," Tyson said.

That's really what Banned Books Week is all about — making sure people have the freedom to read any book they want.

Banned Books Week started on Sunday and ends on Saturday. The week is dedicated to promoting books that have been banned across the U.S. Commonly banned books include those in the Harry Potter series and classical works of literature such as Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn.

The Columbia County Public Library put a banned book display up at its downtown location on Wednesday. About 20 books that people have tried to ban are on the display, including "The Color Purple" by Alice Walker and "The Absolutely True Diary of a Part-Time

State prison purge is on

Gangs, such as one at CCI, seen as major issue.

By DARA KAM
The News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — Florida Department of Corrections Secretary Mike Crews has made a public show of his attempts to purge the agency of abusive prison guards in the wake of news reports about inmates' horrific deaths at the hands of corrections workers.

But a major bust at a North Florida prison — ignored, for the most part, by the department — paints a vivid portrait of what some insiders say is the key corrupting force within prisons: gangs and their connections with crooked guards.

Two former prison sergeants are awaiting trial after being accused of ordering an inmate to be killed to protect the guards' role as kingpins of an institution-wide gang operation.

Former Sgts. Robert Simmons and Delrikos Brooks face a slew of felony charges, including ordering the hit on one of the inmates at Taylor Correctional Institution, money laundering and directing the activities of a criminal gang. Simmons

Report: Man faces charges for sexual assault on young girl

Halstead

By SARAH LOFTUS
sloftus@lakecityreporter.com

A Lake City man was arrested Tuesday morning for sexually assaulting a young girl early this month, according to a Columbia County Sheriff's Office arrest report.

Shane Lee Halstead, 45, of 148 SW Neighbors Glenn, was booked into jail at 11 a.m. Tuesday for sexual battery of a victim between 12 and 18 years old, according to the report. As of press time, he was still in jail on a $500,000 bond.

The incident occurred while he was on the way home from a vacation, the report says.

After he had sex with her, he told her, "Don't tell anyone, or you will be in trouble," according to the report.

The deputy working the case contacted the Department of Children and Families, which said it would investigate.

The Florida Department of Law Enforcement found evidence of the assault on the victim's clothes, according to the arrest report.

Halstead denied the allegations, calling them "ridiculous," the report says.

Florida woman jailed after baby found in trunk

FORT LAUDERDALE
A 19-year-old South Florida woman faces child abuse charges after deputies found her 5-month-old child in her vehicle's trunk during a traffic stop.

Broward Sheriff's deputies say they tried to pull over a vehicle on Tuesday but Breona Watkins kept driving. When she stopped, the deputy heard a baby crying in the trunk.

According to an arrest report, the child was lying on top of a pair of hedge clippers and was surrounded by dangerous objects including a gas can and other debris. Watkins told authorities she asked her 14-year-old passenger to slide the baby into the trunk through a back seat panel because she didn't want to get ticketed for not having a car seat.

Watkins remains jailed on $7,000 bail. It wasn't known whether she has a lawyer.

Lee school board strikes down district testing

FORT MYERS — A southwest Florida school board that recently rescinded a vote to end standardized testing in classrooms has agreed to strike down all district-mandated tests.

The Lee County school board took the action Tuesday night in Fort Myers.

The News-Press of Fort Myers reports the board struck down the school district's proposed testing calendar, eliminating 68 tests from kindergarten through fifth grades. The decision puts assessments back in teachers' hands.

The tests were created by the district to monitor progress. Board member Mary Fischer says the vote lowers the volume of tests given to students.

District spokeswoman Amity Chandler says teachers and principals will be given authority to decide whether to administer tests. The board voted in August to opt out of statewide testing. That vote was rescinded in September.

2 wounded in shooting; 2 dead in car crash

KISSIMMEE — Police say two people were wounded in a shooting at Florida mall, and two men in a car matching the suspects' vehicle description were killed in a crash as they fled.

Police say the victims' injuries aren't life-threatening. They were shot Tuesday evening near Osceola Square Mall's Ross Dress for Less store in Kissimmee, outside Orlando, after an argument in the store spilled outside.

Police say the gunmen got into a car and drove away. The vehicle crashed into another car about three miles from the mall. Police say the men inside died from what appeared to be crash-related injuries.

Joke on 2 Fox cartoons draws negative attention

NEW YORK
The Fox network isn't responding to suggestions that it edit its upcoming crossover episode of "The Simpsons" and "Family Guy" to remove a joke where the punch line is "your sister's being raped."

The line appears in Sunday's much-awaited special where Bart Simpson and his family hang around with Stewie and the rest of the "Family Guy" crew, and has already circulated in a trailer for the episode that Fox released online over the summer.

It punctuates a scene in which the incorrigible Bart is instructing Stewie Griffin in the art of the prank phone call. Bart dials the owner of Moe's Tavern and asks whether there is anyone there with the last name Keybum, first name Lee. When Moe calls out to his patrons, asking for a "leaky bum," everyone gets a laugh.

Stewie thinks that's cool, and asks to make his own prank call.

"Hello, Moe?" he says. "Your sister's being raped."

Tim Winter, president of the advocacy group Parents Television Council, said he's a long-time fan of Matt Groening, creator of "The Simpsons," and sought out the trailer when it was released.

"I was blown out of my shoes when I saw the scene with the rape joke in it," Winter said. "It really troubled me."

He said he found it particularly offensive in the context of stories about sexual assaults on college campuses and, most recently, talk about abusive treatment of women by some players in the National Football League. He said when rape is accepted as a punch line for a joke in entertainment, "it becomes less outrageous in real life."

Winter said he wrote to Groening, "Family Guy" creator Seth MacFarlane and Fox in August, asking that the joke be removed when the episode is shown on television. He said he received no reply.

Fox's entertainment division, through a spokeswoman, said it would not comment on the criticism or whether there are any second thoughts about the joke.

Photos show prison toll on pop legend

LOS ANGELES — Two newly released photos of Phil Spector show the toll of age and prison on the once flamboyant music legend.

The most recent photo shows a bald, somber-looking 73-year-old Spector staring straight into the camera on Oct. 28, 2013. An earlier photo of a smiling Spector is dated July 24, 2013.

California Department of Corrections spokeswoman Terry Thornton said Tuesday that the October photo was taken when Spector was moved to the prison system's huge California Heath Care Facility in Stockton. The facility provides medical and mental health care to the state's sickest inmates, including those with chronic conditions.

Thornton said she couldn't reveal details of Spector's health because of state medical privacy regulations. He is serving 19 years to life for the 2003 killing of actress Lana Clarkson.

Poll: Governor's race too close to call

By BRENDAN FARRINGTON
AP Political Writer

TALLAHASSEE — The race between Republican Gov. Rick Scott and Republican-turned-Democrat former Gov. Charlie Crist is too close to call and voters aren't happy with their choice, according to a Quinnipiac University poll released Wednesday.

The poll shows that 44 percent of likely voters prefer Scott, and 42 percent prefer Crist, while 8 percent say they'd vote for Libertarian Adrian Wyllie. The margin of error is plus or minus 3.1 percentage points, meaning the race is a statistical tie.

Voters seem to agree, though, that neither major party candidate is trustworthy. The poll showed that 49 percent of voters don't think Crist is honest, compared to 37 percent who say he is. Scott's numbers are similar — 51 percent say he isn't trustworthy compared to 39 percent who say he is.

"When fewer than four in 10 voters think both the Democratic and Republican candidates for governor are honest, you know this has been one of the nastiest races in state history," said Peter Brown, assistant director of the university's poll. "They have been throwing so much mud that they both are covered in it."

Neither candidate has a good approval rating, with 49 percent of respondents saying they have an unfavorable opinion of Crist compared to 48 percent who said they have an unfavorable opinion of Scott.

Voters do think that Scott is a stronger leader, the poll found. When asked about Scott, 58 percent said he has strong leadership qualities and 34 percent said he doesn't. That compares to 46 percent who said Crist is a strong leader and 45 percent who said he isn't.

Neither campaign commented on the poll.

Wyllie received 8 percent support even though 86 percent of respondents said they don't know enough about him to form an opinion. No Libertarian candidate on a statewide ballot has received as much as 1 percent support in a Florida election.

The poll of 991 likely voters was conducted Sept. 17-22.

CCSO: Man stole from neighbors, sold stolen items to a pawn shop

By EMILY BUCHANAN
ebuchanan@lakecityreporter.com

A local man was arrested on Tuesday after stealing from two neighbors' houses and selling the stolen items to a pawn shop, according to Columbia County Sheriff's Office.

Robert James Martin, Jr., 22, of 5040 NW Lassie Black St., faces charges of burglary, grand theft and dealing with stolen property, an arrest report said.

A deputy said he talked to a victim on Tuesday as he responded to a burglary that occurred on Monday at a home on NW Lassie Black Street, the report said.

The man told the deputy that on Monday around 3:30 p.m., he returned home from work and parked his truck on the side of his house.

He told the deputy that some time during the night someone had stolen two chain saws and two reels, which valued together at $1,199.90, from the bed of his truck.

The deputy found shoe prints leading from the man's fence to the house two doors down to Martin's residence. The report said the deputy then talked to the owner of the home.

The report said on Tuesday, the deputy conducted a follow-up of the case. A victim informed the deputy that he was at the Five Points pawn shop at 2072 Highway 441, where he had located his stolen rods and reels and two chain saws. The pawn shop was able to identify Martin as the man who sold the items to the store, the report said.

The man told the deputy he knew Martin from a few doors down, the report said. The man's other neighbor, who also lives on NW Lassie Black Street, said his house had also been burglarized within the last 24 hours, where three chain saws, a generator and a rod and reel were stolen. All were valued in the amount of $2,150.

The deputy said he spoke with the pawn shop staff to confirm both victims' stolen property was in the pawn shop, the report said. The stolen items were then sold back to the original owners.

Martin initially denied having knowledge of the stolen property, but later admitted he stole from the first victim, the report said. He denied stealing from the second victim's house, the report said, telling the deputy "I didn't do it but I ain't snitching."

The report said based on the pawn slips with Martin's signature and thumb print, the deputy said evidence proved that Martin had stolen the items and committed the crimes listed above.

Martin was booked at the Columbia County Jail with a $50,000 bond, according to online inmate records.

RAID

"There have been no arrests in connection to our criminal investigation," Whitney Ray, press secretary with the Florida Attorney General's Office, said by an e-mail Wednesday afternoon.

Ray did not release any additional details regarding the investigation.

"This is part of a criminal investigation and it would be inappropriate to comment," he said.

Officials at Shands were also tight-lipped with details of either doctor's status with the hospital.

"The physicians are independent members of the medical staff and the hospital is not involved," said Linda Silecchia, Shands Lake Shore Market director of Marketing and Communications in a prepared statement. "Any further questions should be directed to the law enforcement agency or practice. The hospital has no information."

The search warrant called for the seizure of complete medical files of those Medicaid recipients that underwent breast biopsies, Cesarean child birth deliveries and hysterectomies by Mohan or Atta from Sept. 1, 2010 through the present.

Other items that were included in the seizure were medical supply notices, patients records, prescriptions, Medicaid handbooks, telephone logs, patient X-rays, e-mails, test results, prescriptions and reports or information prepared by other persons that may be on the premises including all financial records including method of payment and possible insurance carriers utilized.

Craig Strickland, Lake City Police Department public information officer, on Tuesday confirmed that at least one LCPD officer was at the scene with the state agents.

According to witness accounts, authorities took computers, patient files and other documents out of the office, as well as interviewed patients and employees who were at the office Tuesday.

Witnesses said there were at least five agents on site collecting the materials and the materials were taken away in two vans.

The office was open and seeing patients Wednesday.

The five-page search warrant was signed by Third Circuit Judge Wesley Douglas Friday.

OUR OPINION

Get rid of those old pills safely

National Prescription Drug Take-Back Day is upon us again and we encourage anyone with old or unused medications to take the opportunity to dispose of them properly.

The event is Saturday from 10 a.m. - 2 p.m. at the Lake City Public Safety Building, 225 NW Main Blvd.

The drug take-back program is valuable on many levels.

Say you were prescribed medicine you never used, or just have a few pills left over. Or say the person for whom medication was prescribed has passed away.

You don't want to flush unused meds away because we've learned in recent years that nothing can ever really be flushed away. It can come back to haunt us in one form or another.

Drugs collected Saturday will be delivered to the DEA, which will get rid of them for good.

It's not just prescription drugs we're talking about here, either.

Say you find something in your home that just shouldn't be there — or anywhere. If it's in pill form or otherwise a solid, legal or not, bring it along on Saturday (no liquids or needles, please).

This is the second such event this year in Lake City, and the demand is high each time.

We expect another good turnout on Saturday.

Confidence-killing experiences

David loved baseball, and it was always a big part of his life. He expected that his 9-year-old son would share that fascination, and maybe I would become a great baseball player someday.

He formed a team with my fourth grade class and set himself up as coach. At our first Saturday practice, he batted flies for us to catch. We didn't know it at the time, but I was kind of nearsighted, and had some trouble judging a fly ball. Way out in center field, I missed the first and second flies. His frustration and anger grew. When I missed the third fly in a row, he stomped all the way out to center field, and promptly slapped me hard enough in the face to knock me down. I was humiliated, distraught, devastated. The physical pain from the slap was nothing compared to the resentment and disgust I felt from my father. The practices stopped.

Maybe you have had some unpleasant experiences like this? They not only hurt at the time, but can actually scar us emotionally if we don't find ways to overcome the setbacks, and ways to develop our skills, knowledge, and confidence. If we don't find a way to succeed, we're left with failures that leave us feeling incompetent, and leave us with a poor self-concept.

When we see little kids learning and developing, we can see a natural interest and drive to grow and develop competence. Kids have a natural confidence, and it can either be nurtured and encouraged, or damaged or destroyed. When confidence is damaged, it can generalize to other areas of that child's life, where it can impede school success, social skills, and development of healthy happy relationships. I can remember feeling lonely and left out of play and friendships in elementary school. Sometimes I'd spend recess and lunch just walking around the schoolyard pretending I had someplace to go, to avoid possible rejection.

Can we do something to rebuild that natural confidence? The good news is that people are changeable! We can relearn and find ways to rethink traumatic experiences, and learn behaviors and ways of developing healthy interactions with others, form happy relationships, and rebuild much of the natural confidence we were born with. Psychological research demonstrates that contrary to popular opinion, trying to convince someone that they're good or pushing them into social situations really doesn't help. Children see through that, and can feel patronized. Real confidence happens when we have success experiences. The more little things we are able to succeed at, the more we change our thinking and our belief that we can do, rather than we can't. All the small successes add up to strengthen our belief that we can succeed, that we are capable and competent. Our confidence builds with each small success. So, what can we do for ourselves?

Find challenges that have the opportunity to succeed. Don't give up; instead, keep challenging yourself by finding progressively difficult obstacles to overcome, and face your problems and learn and grow in the process. If we don't keep trying and reaching out, our fears and lack of confidence will cause us to fall back into depression and hopelessness.

What can we do for our kids, and for other young people in our lives? Show them respect and appreciation, and help them find the little challenges that will give them the opportunity to learn and develop, and to build up that confidence that comes from feeling like they can meet the world's challenges and opportunities and use them to become the wonderful people they are capable of being! Encourage them, and then celebrate their successes with them.

Yes, it took time for me to build a confidence that empowered me to have successful careers in counseling, teaching college, and public speaking and writing. It's been a great growth experience.

Congress adds to shame as work piles up

Even for this do-nothing Congress, this is appalling. After a five-week summer vacation, the honorables spent barely a week at work before heading home again — this time until after the November election.

From their perspective, that may be their most important task — to get re-elected, though most are running for relatively safe seats. That makes it even more important for constituents to show up at town halls to ask tough questions and hold members of Congress accountable. Too often, these events become promotional campaign appearances.

The 113th Congress is on track to be the least productive in 60 years, with barely 160 pieces of legislation enacted so far — about 120 fewer than the previous Congress at the same point and 220 fewer than the one before that.

Yet the stalemate in Washington,

D.C., is fine with many Republicans, who hope to take control of the Senate and keep a majority in the House on Nov. 4.

The only potential upside is that in a lame-duck session — without re-election to worry about — members of Congress might do what's best for the country. Given their recent track record, however, that's probably too much to ask.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

POW/MIA coverage called poor

To the Editor:

To say I was disappointed in the article that appeared in the Sunday paper regarding the POW/MIA ceremony at the VA Hospital would be an understatement.

There was no picture of Lt. Commander Jason Williams, who was the guest speaker, there was no picture of the POW/MIA table that was the symbolic centerpiece of the event, and no mention of the American Legion Post 57 Honor Guard that conducted the ceremony honoring those that never returned from our wars.

It appeared to be a ceremony honoring only those whose pictures appeared in the paper. I believe this was an egregious oversight on an event such as that.

Miriam Eugenia McBride Ward

Mrs. Eugenia McBride Ward was born on September 5, 1925 in Sanderson, Florida. She later attended Columbia High School in Lake City, Florida and was the oldest of 5 girls. In high school Miriam was involved in many activities, and was a very popular student. She was the President of her Jr. and Sr. classes, was the Florida Daughters of the American Revolution Good Citizen recipient, was in the National Honor Society, Student Council, and was the Valedictorian of her senior class of 1943. An academic scholarship enabled her to attend Wesleyan College in Macon, Georgia for one year.

In 1945 she married Raymond E. Ward in Lake City. "Gene" was a former neighbor and Navy Pilot. The newlyweds then moved to their first duty station at NAS Pensacola.

Over the next 25 years, Miriam, "Gene", and their only child Milinda, were stationed in Jacksonville, FL / Virginia Beach, VA. / Atlantic City, NJ / Seaford, NY / Guantanamo Bay, Cuba / Rota, Spain / Brunswick, GA / and Lemoore NAS, CA. When Gene retired in 1970 (LCDR Raymond Eugene Ward) the family moved to Tallahassee.

Miriam was a community volunteer, working as a Sunday School Teacher, Girl Scout Leader, "Grey Lady", President of the Officer's Wives Club, was always on the committee for her Columbia High Class of '43 reunions, and devoted herself to giving love and assistance to any family member who needed help. She was beloved by everyone, and was a true "Southern Belle" / Navy Wife. Unfortunately, in 1997 she had a stroke, which permanently paralyzed her. One of her classmates signed her "Columbian" yearbook with a statement that truly "sums up" Miriam — "To a real person, as fine as I have ever known."

Funeral services will be conducted at 2:30 p.m. on Saturday, September 27, 2014 at the First United Methodist Church of Lake City with Pastor Jeff Tate officiating. Interment will follow in Forest Lawn Memori-

Semi-annual drug take-back Saturday

Bring unwanted prescription drugs to Lake City Public Safety Building.

By TONY BRITT
tbritt@lakecityreporter.com

There were 22,134 Americans who died in 2011 from overdoses of prescription medications, including 16,651 from narcotic painkillers, according to information from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The Lake City Police Department wants to reduce the possibility that any of those victims are living in Lake City and this weekend will be participating in a program to get unused, unwanted and old medications out of local households.

The Drug Enforcement Administration and almost 4,000 of its national, tribal, and community law enforcement partners will participate in the ninth National Prescription Drug Take-Back Day.

The Lake City Police Department will hold a Prescription Drug Take-Back event from 10 a.m. - 2 p.m. Saturday at the Lake City Public Safety Building, 225 NW Main Blvd.

"There will be three containers out front here in the Lake City Police Department public safety building lobby," said Officer Craig Strickland, Lake City Police Department public information officer.

The LCPD has participated in the program the past five times it was conducted during the last 30 months. Strickland said there are traditionally two drug take-back programs during the year, one in the spring and one in the fall, and this weekend's event makes the second event of the year for the police department.

"The purpose of the event is to get out of everyone's house, apartment or living area, any unused, old prescription medication that may be around," Strickland said.

He said there are instances where people were given medicines that they never used, or had a family member who died and they collected their medications, but didn't have anywhere to properly dispose of the items.

"It's also for anybody who may come across any illegal narcotics at their house," he said. "You can just take it and bring it here. This is an anonymous, no questions asked, drug take-back program."

Only pills and other solids, like patches, can be brought to the collection sites — liquids and needles or other sharp objects will not be accepted.

"The program helps get those drugs out of apartments, houses and living areas where young people and teenagers or other abusers may get their hands on them," Strickland said. "Somebody that is an abuser will take any kind of narcotic just to get some type of high. There has also been mixing parties where youth and teens have gotten together and put all the prescription pills together and just pop the pills. This program is to get it out of their hands — just to get it out of the house."

The LCPD has not set a collection goal for the program.

"The containers will also be available in case someone can't make it here between 10 a.m. - 2 p.m.," Strickland said. "An officer will have to come in off the road and escort people back to drop the unwanted meds off because they'll be in a secure location."

After the pills have been collected, DEA employees will collect the containers and weigh the amount of medication collected before taking them to a site for disposal.

'Friends' brings classical music to the area

From staff reports

The Friends of Music Concert Series was begun almost 20 years ago by Bill Poplin, professor-emeritus of Florida Gateway College. Concerts were held at First Presbyterian Church of Lake City where he and his wife, Linda, were musicians. For the past two years concerts have been at Covenant First Presbyterian Church of Live Oak.

The series brings outstanding performers of classical chamber music to the area, and all concerts are free to the public.

Both Poplins have taught music in Columbia County: Bill at the college, Linda at Columbia High School and at Eastside Elementary. They continue to teach by bringing concerts to the area.

"We've hosted performers from all over the world," said Linda Poplin. "Many of them we've housed in our home, and it is a pleasure to get to personally know musicians from other countries. We've had performers from England, France, Austria, Romania and several outstanding groups from the Czech Republic."

Most of the European musicians come to the Friends through Raymond Weiss Artist Management in New York City. Other performers are from the United States.

For the past six years Linda Poplin has been scheduling the concerts by email.

"I've made many contacts throughout the state of Florida," she said. "Now performers are contacting us wanting to be part of our series."

The concerts are free to the public through the generosity of people of the community.

This is the only strictly classical concert series in the area. Every effort is made to schedule The Friends of Music Concert Series so that dates do not conflict with other local concert and entertainment series.

The 2014-15 Friends of Music Concert Series promises to be an exciting one. On Nov. 11, the FSU Early Music Ensemble will provide a concert of singers and instrumentalists.

"This is only the second time in our forty-seven years in Lake City that people of the area will get to hear crumhorns, sackbuts, recorders, and lute," said Linda Poplin.

A January 24, 2015, concert will feature the Chamber Singers of the University of North Florida from Jacksonville. A February 24, 2015, performance will be presented by The Suchon Woodwind Quintet from Slovakia. They will have with them pianist Michiko Otaki. The closing concert of the 2014-15 season will be Trio Solis (piano, violin, cello) with Pamela Ryan, violist. They are faculty members of the FSU School of Music. All concerts in the Friends of Music Concert Series will take place at 7:30 pm in Covenant First Presbyterian Church on White Avenue in Live Oak. Concerts are free to the public and a reception follows each concert.

When it comes to teaching children about banned books, Tyson said the best way to do it is to explain the importance of thinking for themselves.

She illustrates what thinking for themselves means through a book. One of the best books that does that is "Stephanie's Ponytail" by Robert Munsch.

The book starts with a little girl going to school with her hair in a ponytail. Her peers tell her it looks ugly, but she says she doesn't care and keeps her hair in a ponytail. The next day everyone is wearing their hair in a ponytail. So to be different, Stephanie goes to school the following day with her hair in a side ponytail. Again, the other kids tell her it looks ugly, she says she doesn't care, and the following day, the other students are wearing their hair just like Stephanie wore her hair the day before.

Each day Stephanie wears her hair in a new way — each day's do more ridiculous than the previous day's, and then all of her classmates copy her hairstyle.

Finally, she tells everyone that she's going to shave her head. So the next day, the teacher gets to school with a shaved head. The boys arrive at school with shaved heads and then the girls come also with shaved heads. Then, Stephanie gets to school.

But instead of having her head shaved, her hair is in a ponytail, just the way she liked it.

The book shows the dangers of letting others think for you, Tyson said. If the students had thought for themselves, they never would have shaved their heads. Instead, they let someone else choose their hairstyle, and they ended up with something they hated, she said.

Banned Book Week is about the dangers of censorship, which isn't exactly what "Stephanie's Ponytail" is about, Tyson said.

When you allow people to censor what you can read, you're not thinking for yourself, she said.

It's important for children to understand the concept of censorship because many books that have been banned across the U.S. are children's books like those in the Captain Underpants series, Tyson said. Even Little Red Riding Hood has been banned.

"If it's something that appeals to them and gets them to read, I don't see what's wrong with it," she said.

and Brooks are being held in the Taylor County Jail.

For more than a year, at least five guards, including Simmons and Brooks, allegedly helped the Bloods, Folk and MPR — Money, Power, Respect — gangs by smuggling drugs, cell phones and cigarettes into the prison in exchange for thousands of dollars in payments, according to probable-cause affidavits.

The MPR gang is said to have a stronghold on Columbia Correctional Institution in Lake City.

A gang member there bragged on Instagram of making large sums of money selling cell phones within the prison, according to an arrest warrant.

He allegedly said he made more than $12,000 on one partial shipment of cell phones.

Last fall, Brooks and Simmons ordered inmate David Powell to be "removed" after he threatened to expose the operation, according to the allegations. Powell survived two botched attempts on his life in which other inmates stabbed him.

Sources familiar with similar investigations said the Taylor County cases are the only ones in recent history in which corrections workers have been charged with ordering an inmate to be killed.

But the way the guards are alleged to have been paid for sneaking contraband into the Perry prison and the manner in which the gangs operated their criminal enterprise — outlined in detail in the Simmons and Brooks cases — is all too common in the Florida corrections system where, by the agency's own estimates, at least 10 percent of the 100,000 inmates are affiliated with gangs.

Probable-cause affidavits accompanying the arrests of the guards read like a script from a cable television show.

The gangs allegedly paid Simmons up to $24,000 for eight trips to Tampa, where he picked up drugs and cell phones from the brother of inmate David Cancel, a one-time high-ranking gang member. Cancel then sold the goods for a profit.

Simmons would wear a heavy jacket in warm weather to let gang members know when he had goods for sale, the documents say.

Brooks, described as the "alpha" member of the prison's "Bloods" gang, allegedly sold MDMA, also known as "Molly," and synthetic marijuana known as "K-2," or spice, for between $50 and $300, according to court records.

Powell, at one time an elite member of one of the gangs, got sideways with the guards when he caught Brooks giving a cell phone to an inmate and threatened to expose him, the documents allege. Simmons spread the word to other inmates that Powell was ratting out Brooks. While outside at the recreation yard the next day, Powell was jumped by several gang members and stabbed, but not seriously.

After the first bungled attempt on Powell's life, Brooks, a strapping 33-year-old who earned $32,000 a year, pretended to sympathize with the inmate and offered to set up a fight between Powell and other gang members.

The next day, Brooks and Simmons sent another inmate to "finish the job" on Powell, according to the allegations. Former guard Valshantaya Cook — who wasn't supposed to be working in the dorm but who was sent there by another guard in on the plot — was accused of giving inmate Ernest Harrington entrée into Powell's dorm. Harrington stabbed Powell in the hand, but, again, Powell escaped serious injury. Cook later told other guards that Harrington was not involved in the attack on Powell. Cook was charged with a variety of crimes, including money laundering, bringing contraband into a prison and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon.

Lawyers for Brooks and Simmons either did not return calls or did not want to speak on the record. Trials, postponed repeatedly in part because inmates who snitched on the guards and other gang members have been moved from the Perry institution, are set for November. Sources close to the cases expect further delays.

Drugs and cigarettes are the backbone of the black-market economy run by gangs in the Perry prison and others throughout the country.

But cell phones like those alleged to have been slipped into the prison by Simmons, Brooks and their cohorts are an even bigger commodity.

Smart phones allow gang members to communicate with each other by text or phone within and between institutions. And, perhaps more importantly, the cell phones are the conduit for financial transactions in which inmates can pump money into prepaid debit cards in the possession of guards.

Investigators who uncovered the Taylor County guard-gang conspiracy exposed how inmates allegedly used "MoneyPak" payments to Green Dot cards — available at most convenience stores — to shuttle money to Simons and Brooks, their relatives or others involved.

According to court records, here's how the scheme worked: A relative or friend of one of the gang members would purchase a "MoneyPak" payment — often for up to $300 — and receive a 14-digit code. Inmates would get a text with the code on it, then use their cell phones and the code to transfer funds onto Green Dot cards possessed by Brooks, Simmons or one of their aides.

"This method of transferring money allows the staff to launder the funds to minimize detection by law enforcement," Aubrey Land, the Department of Corrections investigator responsible for the arrests, wrote in probable-cause documents.

Land is one of four investigators who sued the Department of Corrections earlier this year after Gov. Rick Scott's inspector general refused to grant them whistleblower protection. The investigators were concerned about retaliation after exposing the 2010 gassing death of Randall Jordan-Aparo, an inmate at Franklin Correctional Institution.

The Perry busts mirror what Land, in transcripts associated with the whistleblower lawsuit, said he and fellow whistleblower John Ulm and Department of Corrections investigator James Padgett uncovered at the Panhandle prison where Jordan-Aparo died.

Other sources intimate with Florida prisons say similar relationships between guards and gangs throughout the state are responsible for myriad crimes, including inmate-inmate deaths that remain unsolved.

Combating gangs should be one of prison officials' top priorities, said Jim McDonough, a former Department of Corrections secretary under Gov. Jeb Bush.

Prison workers make relatively little money and often work in communities where the institutions are the major employer. Guards too easily can be lured by money and the power that accompanies a prominent role as a purveyor of popular black-market goods.

Hurricane charge on insurance bills will be removed

Associated Press

WINTER PARK — Florida's so-called "hurricane tax" will finally come off the insurance bills of its residents.

Citizens Property Insurance agreed Wednesday to remove a 1-percent surcharge on homeowner and auto insurance policies, including the policies of people who aren't even Citizens customers.

The surcharge will end in July 2015, two years earlier than planned. Citizens officials said the assessment could end early because the insurer is expected to have enough money to pay off money borrowed in 2007.

The state-created Citizens was forced to borrow money to pay off claims after slow-moving Hurricane Wilma lumbered through South Florida nearly a decade ago. Under state law, Citizens can place an assessment on most insurance bills, including auto insurance policies, to cover any losses.

But Citizens — like the rest of Florida's insurance industry — has been able to build up a surplus since the state has not sustained a direct hit from a hurricane since Wilma.

Citizens, with nearly 934,000 policyholders, is supposed to be the state's insurer of last resort but it is now the state's largest property insurer.

Citizens officials estimate that the extra charge has cost some Floridians more than $1,000 since it was first put in place.

This is the second "hurricane tax" now in place that will be removed from insurance bills.

State officials earlier this year agreed to end next year a separate 1.3 percent surcharge that was also placed on insurance bills to pay off claims related to Hurricane Wilma. That surcharge, which is tied to the Florida Hurricane Catastrophe Fund, will come off bills this coming January.

organization for the distribution ... in essence to allow their illegal trade to go on. And they turn to an organization in prison that they think is helpless, that organization is something that always exists on the outside might be a gang. But very quickly, the inmates understand and exploit the vulnerability (of the guards)," McDonough said. "The power shifts pretty damn quick. The inmates now have power over the very guards that they have allowed to partner for a trade."

Crews has been on a mission to ferret out corrupt and abusive guards since The Miami Herald reported earlier this year about mentally ill inmate Darren Rainey, who died at Dade Correctional Institution after guards allegedly forced him to shower in scalding hot water as punishment two years ago.

Crews acknowledged he has focused on ridding his agency of the worst of the worst over the past two months. He's fired 45 guards and traveled to every prison in the state to share his "zero-tolerance" abuse and corruption policy with staff. He said he intends to apply that same policy to guards who bring in contraband and endanger the safety of other staff as well as inmates.

"My hope would be one day we eradicate our system of all of that type behavior. But is it going to take a little while? Yes," Crews told The News Service of Florida this week.

Some guards "fall prey to the temptation" of sneaking in cell phones because of the cash rewards, Crews said. Until now, the consequences were not harsh enough, the secretary indicated.

"If you just bring them in a room, you tell them to cough and tell them to take off their uniform, you put them in their clothes and then they walk out the door, there really is no deterrent because there's too much money changing hands with this," he said.

Pointing to an Okeechobee Correctional Institution guard who was fired Thursday for bringing 12 cell phones and chargers into the prison, Crews said he is intent on forcing workers to understand that he means what he says.

"When you have an incident happen, maybe they walk out in their street clothes but they walk out in handcuffs and they are criminally charged. If that doesn't get the attention of our staff, I honestly don't know what will. But is it going to be something that happens overnight? No. We didn't get into this position overnight," he said.

Peanut farmers face tough challenge

Barely enough rain during the summer to eke out a crop, too much rain lately to harvest it.

Following a less than ideal summer growing season, Mother Nature continues to add insult to injury.

September is prime time for peanut harvest in North Florida, and some farmers are saying they are doing a better job of peanut "planting."

They say this because the peanuts dug on September 1 were rained on 13 days straight after digging, and by the time they were finally loaded on the truck, they are pretty confident that one third of the crop had fallen off the vines. Those will emerge next spring as weeds.

Peanuts are also very sensitive to leaf diseases. Since about August 28, farmers have struggled to treat fields with fungicides and are seeing high levels of a disease called Late Leaf Spot in the local peanut crop.

This is a result of wet plant canopies and cooler conditions.

Plant pathologists recommend farmers spray peanuts that will not be harvested in the next 14 days when disease conditions are prevalent and environmental conditions are good for disease pressure.

However, that has been easier said than done. Daily rainfall has been the biggest factor. Some fields are too muddy to hold up equipment and others are ready to be harvested.

Without dry soils to dig through, and sunshine to dry the peanut vines before harvest, harvesting operations throughout North Florida are at a virtual standstill.

The short-term forecast does not look very promising right now.

Peanut farmers like to say that anyone can plant peanuts, and anyone can grow peanuts. However the most challenging part of peanut production is harvesting.

Harvesting requires specialized equipment including peanut diggers and peanut combines. Labor requirements are also high for operating equipment and hauling peanuts to local buying points.

The sandy soils of Columbia County are a blessing at harvest time, because peanuts are much easier to dig in dry sandy soil than they are in heavy soils that hold more water and become muddy and sticky when rainfall is high.

The beginning of peanut harvest has been conducted under "too-wet" conditions because of the rainy weather pattern.

Peanuts are very unforgiving about harvest timing because at maturity the pod or peanut hull will separate from the plant. Additionally, when each pod matures, the seed inside will begin to sprout if harvesting is delayed.

After digging, farmers in the area are using vine conditioners that gently lift the vines and separate the leaves from the soil where heavy rain had pressed the leaves into the surface.

This can reduce drying time and potentially save farmers waiting time, and improve harvesting.

The peanut combine works by shredding the vines and separating the nuts off the vines, which are blown by air into a basket on top of the combine. Sometimes farmers will say the peanut vines are like a "wet dish rag."

A farmer needs peanut vines to be crisp and dry for a combine to work effectively.

So where does the "adding insult to injury" come into the picture?

The injury was some area fields receiving only 12.9" of rain from May 16 through August 25. This was barely enough to eke out a crop in most dryland fields. Scientists recommend 25-30" of rain for a peanut crop.

The insulting part of this is that we have received 12.5" from August 30 to Sept 17.

Area farmers received as much rain in 19 days, preventing harvest operations, as in the previous 100 days when the crop was growing.

Columbia using new technology to benefit team.

By BRANDON FINLEY
bfinley@lakecityreporter.com

In the past couple of weeks, those in attendance at Columbia High football games may have noticed something new on the sidelines.

Two weeks ago, the Tigers debuted televisions, and the football team isn't just catching up on old episodes of Lost on Netflix.

The Tigers have used new technology to hook their iPads up the televisions and use them as video monitors to dissect offensive and defensive plays. For head coach Brian Allen and the Tigers, it's a leg up on the competition.

"It's like anything else whether you look in the classroom or corporate America," Allen said. "If you don't have it, you're behind. With our budget, we've been able to have the best opportunity to be successful."

Allen said the plan has been to implement this technology and it's something he's thankful to have in the budget.

"We go to clinics each year and all the technology that's made available, it's something that gives you in-game corrections," Allen said. "If you can use the iPad, then you can do all the things you'd do on the white board. It gives a visual."

Allen said the plan is for the Tigers to use the monitors the rest of the season, but there's one thing that can stand in the way. Columbia came face to face with that problem against Terry

Parker. "When the weather is good, it definitely works great," Allen said. "When you have bad weather, you have to go back to what you've been doing."

With the monitors in place, there's no more waiting until Monday to see the mistake you've made. In the days of old, coaches could preach at players, but they were unable to visually demonstrate where mistakes were coming. Those days are over.

"You can make corrections for the next series," Allen said. "If you utilize it like you should do, you should score or prevent the other team from scoring. It's a major benefit."

The Tigers are hoping it shows up on the scoreboard as Columbia continues its quest to a state championship.

"It should help us win two games we're not supposed to," Allen said.

Insight offered on RMS injury

By BRANDON FINLEY
bfinley@lakecityreporter.com

After an injury in a game involving Richardson and Lake City middle schools left an injured player on the field for more than 20 minutes waiting on an ambulance, the question of safety may have crossed the minds of many readers.

"We received word this morning he was doing fine," Richardson Middle School assistant coach Al Nelson said.

Unfortunately, ambulances aren't available for every sport played at the middle or high schools.

Columbia High assistant principal Donnie Harrison offered his insight on the procedures.

Varsity football games are the only contests where ambulances are on hand, but medical staff is on hand for many other contests at all schools.

"The ambulances are a service that are provided to us free of charge," Harrison said. "Unfortunately, they're not at every sport. Obviously, we want them there as much as possible."

Harrison said it was not that they were concerned with other sports, but with a limited number of volunteers and a wide array of sports throughout the town, staff could not be on hand for every event.

And there are more reasons than just the competitors for ambulances on hand at varsity football games.

"Sometimes, it's relatives there and it just happens," Harrison said.

"It's not just at varsity games, but most of the time it is. There's a lot of times for varsity games we don't have them on the road. One reason that they're here besides the players is for the fans. There's more people at those games, so there's concern for the fans as well."

Harrison that no matter the sporting event, they'll have experts on call and medical staff is available at almost every sport.

DEAR ABBY: I always thought that "Lana," my wife of 14 years, and I had the perfect marriage. When I discovered she was having an affair, it hit me like a train wreck. After many weeks of trying to discover who she really is, I found out she has had several affairs throughout our marriage.

I still love my wife and feel I could forgive her and regain my trust in her. The problem is, she says she is trying to recover from her actions, so she can no longer hear about my problems or respond to any of my questions.

Lana is now saying I need to see someone to discuss our issues with. We are already seeing a marriage counselor, but I suspect he is too connected to us as a couple. What do you think? — LOST IN LIMBO

DEAR IN LIMBO: I think the marriage counselor should have made clear to you and your wife that in order for trust to be rebuilt it takes LOTS of dialogue and listening on the part of both spouses. And painful as it may be for Lana, she owes you the answers to your questions.

That said, I think she is correct in suggesting you talk to someone individually. With the help of a licensed psychotherapist — someone who is there be with. Dad is happy as a clam. He's enjoying life and has lots more life to live. The only thing that mars his happiness is my sisters' attitudes. What can I do to help them? I don't want to be too harsh because I know they are still grieving, but I hate to see them drive a wedge into what remains of our family. — JOY IN TEXAS

DEAR JOY: Please accept my sympathy for the loss of your mother. Perhaps you should remind your sisters how grateful they should be that your father has been able to find happiness after losing your mother. Not all widowers are able to do that. Stress that his desire to remarry is a tribute to the relationship he had with your mother, because men who had unfulfilling marriages usually don't want to commit again.

Point out that they have nothing to gain by alienating Colette and a lot to lose, because the more they treat her with disrespect, the farther away they will drive her — and your dad. Then suggest that if they can't resolve their grief, they join a support group or consult a therapist for help.

My problem is my sisters. We are all adults with families of our own. They don't like Colette at all. They are rude to her and behave like spoiled children. Colette is very different from Mom, but our family has always been open-minded and taken pride in our conviction that "normal" is just a setting on the dryer. Colette isn't after Dad's money, nor is she forcing her way into our lives. She's also not trying to replace Mom. It appears she genuinely cares for our dad, which I can understand.
