FIREWORKS BLAMED

SUWANNEE COUNTY FIRE RESCUE

Fire consumes a doublewide trailer in the McAlpin area Wednesday night. After the roof burnt away, wind blew through the home and further fueled the blaze, SCFR said.

Celebration gone awry likely cause of blaze

SCFR: Fire probably started on roof and spread quickly.

An Independence Day celebration gone wrong may have started a house fire in the McAlpin area, according to Suwannee County Fire Rescue.

Firefighters arrived at a fully enflamed doublewide trailer around 9 p.m. near 111th Drive, finding the roof almost completely burnt away as fireworks burst in the sky overhead, said SCFR Chief James Sommers.

"That tells us the fire was probably started high," Sommers said.

With the roof burnt away, wind freely rolling into the home and sped up the fire.

SCFR crews were in Live Oak when a passerby reported the fire, but responded promptly, Sommers said.

Crews from four different stations arrived at the scene.

After a 30-minute battle, responders were able to put out the blaze while the homeowners were enjoying festivities in Live Oak, Sommers said.

No injuries were reported.

An official cause is still undetermined, but SCFR believes stray fireworks might be the culprit, Sommers said.

On Facebook, SCFR originally reported the Sign-theft claim dismissed in heated school board race

No charges for uncle, grandfather of Dist. 5 candidates.

By CARL MCKINNEY
cmckinney@lakecityreporter.com

Prosecutors won't be pressing charges against the family member of two competing Columbia County School Board candidates over accusations of stolen campaign signs.

School Board District 5 candidate Stephanie Finnell noticed nine campaign signs go missing near Sisters Welcome Road over a three-week period in May and filed a complaint against her uncle, Earl Peeler, who is also the grandfather of her opponent, Hunter Peeler.

The Third Circuit State Attorney's Office found that no criminal charges could be proven, according to a June 21 letter. Peeler said he didn't know about the decision until the Lake City Reporter contacted him.

"I just want it to go away," he said.

Assistant State Attorney John Durrett reviewed all submitted reports, statements, the scene itself, and photographic evidence, as well as the Lake City Reporter's coverage of the allegations.

"Considering all of the available evidence as well as the arguments to be made and a potential rebuttal, a criminal charge cannot be proven in this matter nor should it be brought before a criminal jury where liberty is at stake," Durrett wrote.

One of Finnell's signs was placed in front of Earl Peeler's property along a public right-of-way, in violation of county regulations, Durrett wrote. But Peeler claimed it was on his property and he was only relocating it.

Finnell's son set up a game camera near the site and captured Peeler removing a sign, but the camera appears to have been placed on Peeler's property without permission, meaning the evidence was obtained by trespassing.

> Peeler said he didn't know about the decision until the Lake City Reporter contacted him. "I just want it to go away," he said.

Peeler said he could push for trespassing charges over the camera, but has no intention of doing so.

"It's behind me," he said Thursday.

On May 24, the camera snapped a photo of someone holding a sign in one hand and preparing to pull out another.

Finnell identified the subject as Peeler, who confirmed it was him in the photo.

But Peeler denies stealing the sign, saying it was one of four he moved off his property and onto county land over a several-week period.

Finnell contends the sign was already on county property, which Peeler denies.

A deputy told Peeler the sign was on a county right-of-way, according to a Columbia County Sheriff's Office report.

County ordinance prohibits putting any sort of sign on county property, political or otherwise.

Every political candidate is given a packet explaining the rules for campaign signs.

When a sign is posted on county property, the proper procedure is to inform code enforcement, which typically returns them to the candidate, a deputy told Peeler.

Finnell originally didn't want to press charges against Peeler, but later changed her mind, according to CCSO reports.

Finnell's son and her campaign manager contacted a deputy the day they discovered the photo.

They wanted to report "multiple sign thefts" from the area of Sisters Welcome Road and Covey Court, according to the first CCSO report.

They said the signs were on county-maintained property, the report states.

They showed the deputy the photo, identifying the subject as Peeler.

The deputy wrote that there were "several resemblances" between him and the person in the photo.

"The subject was captured with a campaign sign in his hand and looks as if he is about to remove another sign from the ground," the report states.

Peeler told the Lake City Reporter that the sign that was already in his hand was one for his grandson's campaign, and he only pulled out one of Finnell's signs.

The deputy contacted Peeler, who agreed to speak to law enforcement to "clear his name," according to the report.

Peeler told the deputy he moved the sign about 20 yards to the other side of Covey Court, saying multiple times he didn't steal or damage Finnell's property.

After the deputy explained that the proper procedure for dealing signs on a county right-of-way was to inform code enforcement, Peeler said he would not touch any other signs placed in front of his property, as long as they were on the county side.

He stands by that.

"I'm not going to bother her," he told the Lake City Reporter. "I'm not going to touch her signs."

When the deputy asked about another sign that went missing on Sisters Welcome, Peeler said the property owner removed it.

Peeler told the deputy he had put a sign there for his grandson with permission from the landowner, prompting Finnell to put one there as well.

Later, Finnell told the deputy that Peeler "lied" during the interview, according to the report.

Finnell could not be reached for comment for this story.

of State, according to Suwannee County Sheriff's Office reports.

Hamant and White, who are married, accepted money for work they never attempted to complete, misleading their victims over the course of several months, according to the reports.

They contacted victims through text messages and gave fake updates, saying orders had been started, were in progress or ready for pick up, the reports state.

After promising to return the deposits to the victims, Hamant and White never did so, according to the reports.

While searching the couple's house, deputies found two guns in White's possession.

White is a convicted felon and isn't legally allowed to own firearms.

Deputies arrested the pair on Tuesday. White has since posted bond.

Hamant faces charges of fraud and felony use of a two-way communications device.

White faces charges of fraud, felony use of a two-way communications device and possession of a weapon by a convicted felon.

White was sentenced to prison in Indian River County in 2009 for uttering forged bills, multiple counts of fraud and grand theft, according to the Florida Department of Corrections. She was again sentenced in 2010 in Brevard County for two counts of grand theft and multiple fraud charges, including credit-card fraud.

White was released in 2014.

FRAUD

Tavaress Montriel Thomas of Southeast Mill Street was the caretaker for his victim's son, FDLE wrote in a statement.

Thomas had access to their account and used personal information to obtain loans, according to FDLE. Investigators believe he netted more than $61,000.

Thomas has previously been accused of defrauding several business owners in Tallahassee for over $186,500, FDLE wrote.

In March, the Lafayette County Sheriff's Office asked FDLE to investigate the current case.

Thomas was booked into Lafayette County Jail. The case will be prosecuted by the Third Circuit State Attorney's Office.

Investigators believe there could be additional victims.

Anyone with information about suspicious or fraudulent activity involving Thomas can contact the FDLE Live Oak field office at 330-2840.

fire as being near 112th Street, but later issued a correction.

Thousands of people are injured by fireworks every year, according to the National Fire Protection Association.

Fireworks start an average of 18,500 fires per year, including 1,300 structure fires, 300 vehicle fires and 16,900 other fires, the group says. These fires cause an average of three deaths, 40 civilian injuries, and an average of $43 million in direct property damage, according to the group.

In 2017, U.S. hospital emergency rooms treated an estimated 12,900 people for fireworks-related injuries. More than half of those were to the extremities, while more than a third were to the head.

Children younger than 15 years of age accounted for more than one-third of the estimated 2017 injuries, according to estimates from the Consumer Product Safety Commission's 2015 Fireworks Annual Report.

OUR OPINION

The show goes on

Weather is always a big unknown when planning an Independence Day fireworks show anywhere in Florida, but this year things looked particularly dicey. The lightning and rain are predictable all summer long — until they aren't.

No matter, to Dennille Decker and her staff at the Chamber of Commerce. They stage this grand event each and every Fourth of July without regard to anything but putting on a good show.

Nothing's going to make them back down.

The weather threatened, then threatened again on Wednesday, but finally eased off.

Despite the celestial fits and starts, this year's festivities came off without a hitch.

As always.

A fitting tribute to Ms. Decker at her last major event for the Chamber before moving on to a new position.

Well done, Ms. Decker.

We know you can't control the weather, but you do a darned fine job taking care of earthbound matters entrusted to your control.

We know you aren't going far, but we're all going to miss you just the same.

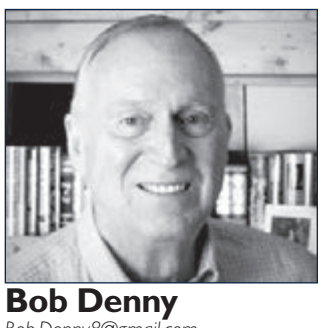
Building a happy lifestyle



Bob Denny
Bob.Denny8@gmail.com

Your "life" is what happens to you. But your "lifestyle" is a result of choices you make, or neglect to make, in each moment of your life. Every moment of your life you have almost unlimited choices of what you can do. Every moment of your life you're presented with situations, events, challenges, and opportunities. What do you choose to do with all those moments?

Life brought me some powerful, surprising, as well as wonderful and terrible challenging situations and experiences. There's been fantastic love, heartbreaking tragedies and losses, and so many success and failures. There have been great times, and hard times, too. I've served my country in foreign lands. I've enjoyed playing football, tennis, swimming competitively, and enjoyed lots of years of surfing, and even participated in a surfing contest. Along the way, I've managed to find the career of my dreams!

You have probably read some of my ideas for building that happier, more fulfilled life that you deserve.

But this really isn't about me. It's about you! Some of you have called me or written me with your ideas for building better lives. I know that there so many of you who have had those major experiences in your life, both happy and painful, that challenged you to learn and grow from as a result of going through them. When you've faced tragedy, heartbreak, the thrill of success, and the joy, love, and pleasure that life can bring, how have those major events in your life changed you? How have you learned, grown, and become better for them? How have you managed to face hard times, and survive or even to thrive in spite of them? It's sometimes (but not always) true: "If it doesn't kill you, it'll make you stronger!" Whatever these big transition points in your life were, however you adapted or chose to deal with them, and the lessons you were able to glean from them, helped make you what you are today: a wonderful person, who deserves that happiest and best life that each of us deserves. Take a look at yourself; see yourself that way!

I'm reaching out with a challenge for you. So many others can benefit from your experiences, and the lessons life has taught you. What happened to you that made you who you are today? What were the big challenges, and how did you face them? What are those valuable lessons that you learned from those challenges life presented you, that helped you survive, succeed, and to make the most of your life? How have you tried to make the most of what you've got to work with—your own unique talents, skills, abilities, knowledge, and interests?

How can you use those important lessons life taught you to help others along their own paths through the rough and painful times, as well as to make the most of the experiences and the opportunities to learn from? Reach out. Make the world a little better because you're here. Large or small, everything you do can make a difference. Smile at those people you meet in the supermarket or at a community event. Chat with someone you just met. Support local humanitarian causes. There are so many opportunities to bring a little happiness to someone. How about the homeless, lonely or troubled kids, racial issues, building your community, police/community relations, and medical professionals? Donate a "buddy bench" for lonely kids at school. Call a friend and show some interest in their lives. Have dinner conversations with your family and friends. What can you think of to do? How much better will the world will be when we all do just a little more? And in the process, you will make your own life that happier, more fulfilled and better life that we all deserve.

President right to seek security in sky

Many Americans gaze at the sky and see only a vast uncharted frontier for exploration. But President Donald Trump reminds Americans that there's another potential reality in space: It could become a military battlefield, a place where this nation's independence is protected or lost.

The point isn't to repel an alien invasion from deep space. We're not worried about Klingons. But Americans do have reason to be concerned about technologically advancing adversaries here on Earth. China and Russia have ambitious satellite programs. Such satellites can be used for improving telecommunications, internet coverage, weather forecasting. Or they may be weaponized to shoot down rival satellites, disrupt a nation's land-bound electrical grid, and stake a claim to space (and hence ground) superiority.

A war in space could be swift and devastating. "We could be deaf, dumb and blind within seconds," says Rep. Jim Cooper, a Tennessee Democrat. "Seldom has a great nation been so vulnerable."

Trump's solution: Create a "Space Force" to defend this nation's security against adversaries that could gain military superiority on the ground via military dominance overhead, in space.

Trump recently ordered Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Joseph Dunford to take on the mission. "Our destiny beyond the Earth is not only a matter of national identity, but a matter of national security," Trump said.

No argument there. Trump didn't offer details, but Congress decides whether and how a sixth branch of the military could be carved out and what its aim would be. The administration's first mission: selling the idea to skeptical lawmakers. Last year, Congress grounded a plan to create a new "Space Corps" as part of the U.S. Air Force. Many lawmakers and defense officials opposed the move, arguing that it would create an unnecessary layer of bureaucracy and boost friction among branches of the military. Translation: Existing military budgets might be pinched to make way for a new space service. Congress ordered a study instead, due by year's end.

Trump's Space Force may never fly. But he's right to remind Americans that this nation's adversaries pose a threat to national security. It's a fitting recognition for the holiday when we celebrate liberation from another country's domineering rule. No going back.

The space race isn't just about war, but about resources. In 2007, Russia, the nation of Sputnik and illegal territorial expansion, planted a flag 3 miles beneath the North Pole to stake a claim to the polar region's vast oil and gas deposits. We imagine Russian President Vladimir Putin would love to shove the U.S. flag aside on the moon — or beat the U.S. to colonizing Mars — and proclaim them the bounty of his rapacious expansionism.

All of this brings to mind the long-running debate over a former president's fears of spacebound warfare — President Ronald Reagan's oft-maligned Strategic Defense Initiative, aka Star Wars.

In 1993, this page pointed out that SDI had already outlived the threat for which it was intended — the Soviet Union. President George H.W. Bush scaled it back and declared its purpose was to guard against a handful of missiles launched by a Third World dictator or renegade unit of the now-defunct Soviet Union. We saw the appeal then, given the omnipresent threat of nuclear proliferation.

If anything, the case for a defensive posture in space has strengthened. Nuclear proliferation, particularly to terror groups, is a greater threat today than 25 years ago. So is the possibility that some U.S. rival will learn how to paralyze — from space — this nation's digital and other electrical systems.

Space is supposed to be the new, limitless frontier for peaceful endeavors. But a geopolitical tussle on Earth could easily morph into an arms race in orbit. Whatever you call it, the U.S. needs a smart, robust defense — and offense — in space.

CHRISTIAN CONCEPTS

Gary King

I do not trust this generation or culture to give me an unbiased and honest reimaging of God apart from what has already been revealed in the Bible.

I recently read an article that explored the question, "Is God male?" It seems some think the nouns and pronouns used to describe God in the Scriptures are masculine and may give readers a skewered or limited perspective of the nature of God.

The reasoning goes something like this; all the authors of the Bible were men who penned their various books in cultures that were decidedly patriarchal. Their use of masculine terms in describing God were colored by their gender and culture, therefore, we should consider redacting the Scriptures to bring them into conformity with our current cultural perspective.

My chief concern here is what this sort of thinking suggests regarding the inspiration of Scripture. It infers that the Word of God was influence more by the human authors to the detriment and discredit of the divine Author. Is the Bible the Word of God, or the word of man?

When it comes to the definition of inspiration of Scripture, I agree with the one formulated by the late Dr. Charles C. Ryrie. He wrote "biblical inspiration… is God's superintendence of the human authors so that, using their own individual personalities, they composed and recorded without error His revelation to man."

This definition accounts for the idiosyncrasies and varying styles of the human authors without detracting from the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures; making them avowedly the Word of God and not the word of man.

What this means is that God was fully aware of the gender and culture of the human authors He inspired to write His Word, and that they would describe Him in masculine terms, and He had no problem with it.

Theologian Kelly Brown Douglas subscribes to these gender-neutral changes. She says making them "frees God from these very limited, finite images of God in which we are creating God in our own image instead of trying to live and reach into the image that is God."

She is saying that the image of God portrayed by Moses, Paul and the rest of the biblical authors is not as good as the image she and others like her are proposing. My question is, who is trying to create God in an image they are more comfortable with, and why?

We currently live in a culture and generation that has already produced gender-neutral Bibles, and the Queen James Version that Happy birthday, America!

HEART MATTERS

God gives us freedom because he wants us to chose him.

Happy Birthday America!! As the fireworks explode, let's celebrate our country by considering the freedom we enjoy as citizens. Freedom is a powerful thing, and like anything powerful, it brings with it a measure of risk and uncertainty. Having freedom means that no one makes our choices for us, but it also brings the liability of those choices; whether they produce blessing or suffering, the results are ours to claim.

Given that the driving force behind America's birth was religious freedom, it is strange that while our country is associated with independence, Christians have long convinced the world that we are anything but free. It is the common perception that Christians have a long list of impossible rules to live by, (hence their sour dispositions.) In his book "A Scandalous Freedom", author Steve Brown tells the following story:

Abraham Lincoln went to a slave market. There he noted a young, beautiful African-American woman being auctioned off to the highest offer. He bid on her and won. He could see the anger in her eyes and could imagine what she was thinking, "Another white man who will buy me, use me, and then discard me." As Lincoln walked off with his "property", he turned to the woman and said, "You're free."

"Yeah. What does that mean?" she replied.

"It means that you're free."

"Does that mean I can say whatever I want to say?"

"Yes," replied Lincoln, smiling, "it means that you can say whatever you want to say."

"Does it mean," she asked incredulously, "that I can be whatever I want to be?"

"Yes, you can be whatever you want to be."

"Does it mean," the young woman asked hesitantly "that I can go wherever I want to go?"

"Yes, it means you are free and can go wherever you want to go."

"Then," said the young woman with tears welling up in her eyes, "I think I'll go with you."

Galatians 5:1 says, "It is for freedom that Christ has set us free. Stand firm then and do not let yourselves be burdened again by a yoke of slavery." God gives us freedom because He wants us to choose Him. Picture this newly freed young woman living and perhaps even serving in Lincoln's home, not because she must, but because she chooses, out of gratitude and for her own protection. In her world, there would always be one waiting to take her back to

Jesus recognizes our need for discernment

This is an archived article that ran in February.

Robert Bass
robertcbass@yahoo.com

The other day when I was in the grocery store picking our limes I had to discern which two limes were the best out of all the ones that were on display. I had to exercise discernment. There is another area of discernment that I need along with the rest of society that is spiritual discernment. We all need to learn how to discern the difference between the truth and what is false. The disciples grew up under the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees before Jesus called them to follow him. You know as well as I do that the disciples of Jesus probably struggled between the teaching they grew up with and the teaching of Jesus. As you read Matthew 16:5-12 Jesus says to his disciples, "Watch and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." Jesus was aware of their discussion and begins rebuking them for their little faith. He asked them questions that pointed out their lack of faith in God's provision and their need for spiritual discernment. Matthew looks back now remembering the resurrection of Jesus and the day of Pentecost when the Holy Spirit came filling the disciples of Jesus Christ with power from on high so that they could be obedient. He didn't recognize his need for spiritual discernment then but Jesus did. God recognizes not only your physical needs but also your spiritual needs and meets both of them fully in the Lord Jesus Christ. God the Father has deposited the Holy Spirit who is the Counselor, the Spirit of Truth in the life of each person who believe in the Lord Jesus. His ministry is to remain in our lives forever convicting us of sin, righteousness and of the judgment to come. He teaches us to discern the difference between what is the truth and what is false. Just as the disciple's minds were open to be able to discern between what is true and what is false so the Lord will open our minds to understand if we seek him. When the Lord gives us discernment we must follow through with obedience. What good is it to know something if we are not going to obey what the Lord shows us. The Lord wants you to pray and ask for wisdom, knowledge and understanding. This is why the study of the Scriptures is so important. When we study the Scriptures, memorize them, and meditate on them the Lord will open our hearts and minds to his will. Often times we make judgement calls based on external appearance's like the limes in the grocery store. I really cannot see into the limes that I am buying until I get home and cut one open. We must remember that God knows the heart of each person and he gives us discernment so that we can discern between what is true and what is false. Pray and ask Jesus for spiritual discernment so you can do his will.

'17 champ Muguruza, Cilic out in upsets

Van Uytvanck stuns defending champ, Pella rallies to beat last year's runner-up.

By HOWARD FENDRICH
Associated Press

LONDON — Garbine Muguruza insisted she wasn't thinking about attempting to collect a second consecutive Wimbledon championship. She was adamant that she was not focusing on defending her title.

"It doesn't really matter," she would say, "what happened in 2017."

Well, it seems safe to say she'll really want to forget what happened at the All England Club in 2018. Muguruza was stunned in the second round 5-7, 6-2, 6-1 by 47th-ranked Alison Van Uytvanck of Belgium on Thursday, the latest upset in a series of them at the grass-court major tournament.

"It's a little bit sad," Muguruza said. "But today didn't go my way."

That's become a familiar refrain for prominent women at this topsy-turvy Wimbledon.

Only two of the top eight seeded women are still in the field after four days of action.

Van Uytvanck, meanwhile, began this week with a 1-4 record at Wimbledon and only one Grand Slam quarterfinal appearance to her name. Muguruza, meanwhile, owns two major titles, including the 2016 French Open, and was the runner-up at the All England Club in 2015.

But that didn't matter on this day.

Van Uytvanck was aggressive from the baseline, compiling a 29-18 advantage in winners, and broke in seven of Muguruza's 13 service games. Still, it was not easy finishing off the most significant victory of her career.

"Inside," the 24-year-old Belgian said, "I was, like, dying."

The No. 3-seeded Muguruza joined No. 2 Caroline Wozniacki, No. 4

NASCAR's 'Young Stars' tired of blame for sport's woes.

By DAN GELSTON

DAYTONA BEACH — It was the finish NASCAR banked on as the genesis of its ballyhooed youth movement.

Austin Dillon and Darrell Wallace Jr. finished 1-2 in the Daytona 500, a promising pair of 20-somethings behind the wheel of iconic car numbers that could excite old-school fans, yet a pair with enough social media savvy that might attract millennials to a sport in dire need of a spark.

The kids were coming!

Wallace and good buddy Ryan Blaney, Chase Elliott, William Byron and Daniel Suarez were among the relative newcomers in NASCAR who had their images plastered on billboards and program covers and hailed as NASCAR's version of The Next Big Thing.

Yet, at NASCAR's halfway point, the series returns this weekend to Daytona International Speedway with the so-called Young Guns in danger of becoming The Next Big Bust.

Chevrolet's performance plummets in new Camaro

Automaker hasn't been in victory lane since Daytona 500 in February.

By MARK LONG
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH — Darrell Wallace Jr. has a proposition for the two guys dominating the NASCAR Cup Series: Swap cars for a race and see what happens.

Vocalizing what's been obvious on the track all season, Wallace said Thursday the problem with the Chevrolets is, well, the Chevrolets.

"My car handles way worse than (Kevin) Harvick or Kyle (Busch)'s car at 200 mph," Wallace said at Daytona International Speedway. "Just because the cars look the same and they all go through tech and everything, they are damn sure not the same.

"My car is not the same as any other 18 or 4 car. It would be interesting to say, 'Let's swap seats and see how that goes.'"

Chevrolet has been mostly noncompetitive since Austin Dillon won the season-opening Daytona 500 in February. The American automaker hasn't been to victory lane since and hadn't really gotten close until Chevy driver Kyle Larson swapped the lead on the final lap with Busch last week at Chicagoland Speedway.

Meanwhile, Toyota and Ford have pulled away in the standings. Toyota's stable includes Busch (five wins) and defending Cup Series champion Martin Truex Jr. (three wins). Ford has Kevin Harvick (five wins), Clint Bowyer (two wins) and Joey Logano (one win).

For Chevy, it's been a bumpy debut for the Camaro, which

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia — Kylian Mbappe and Thierry Henry both attended France's Clairefontaine academy before playing as left wingers at Monaco, and they both won French league titles as teenagers.

Mbappe wants to replicate another one of Henry's accomplishments — a World Cup title for France in his first tournament.

Henry, 40, is France's leading scorer with 51 goals, the 19-year-old Mbappe is Les Bleus' new sensation, with three, matching Henry's total from 1998 and

DEAR ABBY

Son strives to revive faded memories of mom long gone

DEAR ABBY: I'm 52. My mom died when I was 11. It wasn't until I reached my mid-20s that I realized I have no memories of her, and few memories of my childhood before I was 11. Dad and I lived a few hours away from family, and after Mom passed, no one spoke about her much. I imagine that was because it was painful. She was only 29.

I never cried over her death, and I don't remember missing her as a child or teenager. There are only a handful of photos of her and a couple of passed-down stories. I understand that people block memories of traumatic events and things they don't want to remember. I remember the night it happened in detail, but not the memory of her. I have seen a few psychiatrists at different times during the course of my life to deal with stress and daily life issues, and while they were aware of my background, we never really got into this.

For some reason it's bothering me more and more now. I want to remember my mother. When I ask her friends and relatives about her, I get general answers -- she was a nice person, very loving and crafty, etc. How does someone get their memories back? I've heard hypnosis can help, but I'm not sure. Do you have any advice? -- SON LEFT BEHIND

DEAR SON: Many people are reluctant to talk about family members who have passed on because they are afraid it will be painful for the listener. Perhaps if you approached your relatives and explained why you are asking for more details, it might jog some memories. However, if that doesn't bear fruit, then talking with a mental health professional about the fact that this is increasingly bothering you would be a good idea. That person can recommend hypnosis if it's appropriate.

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorced 53-year-old woman. My children are grown, and I have a good career in HR and payroll. It's not my dream job, though. I applied to and was accepted into a Master of Architecture program, but I just found out they will accept only 12 credits from my associate's degree, which means I will need five years of full-time college to achieve my dream, while working full-time, of course.

I'll be 58 when I graduate and probably should be planning for retirement, not taking on $100,000 in student loans. Should I abandon this dream? Have I run out of time to take on such a lofty goal? Or should I just sit back and relax and travel now that my kids are grown? By the way, my retirement goal was age 72. -- NOT SURE IN MICHIGAN

DEAR NOT SURE: What you are contemplating takes a great deal of stamina. Some individuals in their 50s are up for the challenge, others not so much. Before you commit, talk to a guidance counselor at the school to explore what opportunities might be available to an older graduate with no work experience in the field.

Would you still plan to retire at 72? Your student loans could take many more years to pay off if you don't quickly become a high-earning architect, so consider your next move carefully and receive as much unbiased counsel as you can before making a final decision.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend, "Pierre," and I have been a couple for 18 months. We moved in together three months ago.

The trouble is, Pierre is French, and he doesn't believe in marriage. He says it's an "outdated institution and a social construct." He also claims that no one in France gets married.

My parents are very religious, and they do not support us living in sin. They say if we have a child out of wedlock, they will cut me off completely.

What should I do? I love my family, but I also love Pierre. And I've always dreamed of having a romantic wedding with my father walking me down the aisle. I know Pierre is committed to me, but he dislikes the institution of marriage and won't budge on this. I'm 34 and my biological clock is ticking. Any advice will be appreciated. -- CONFLICTED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR CONFLICTED: Pierre has given you fair warning and so have your parents. Marriage exists in France just as it does here in the USA. That Pierre doesn't believe in it should be an indication that the two of you have very different definitions of what a committed relationship is, and it may be partly cultural in nature. How do you feel about that?

I think it's sad that the parents of a 34-year-old woman would threaten to cut her off if she decided to have a child without being married. If you can support one, that choice should be yours and not theirs. My advice is to stop dreaming about a romantic wedding with your father walking you down the aisle unless you can find a man with a different view of commitment than Pierre appears to have.

P.S. I once had a poodle named Pierre. He and I got along fine and marriage was never discussed.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Socialize, network and explore new possibilities, but don't drain your budget. If you live within your means, you will ease stress and impress someone you love. Personal improvements will be gratifying, and romance should be on your agenda. ★★★

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your desire for something new and exciting will lead to temptation. Don't give in to someone asking for too much or trying to convince you to get involved in something that isn't good for you. Restraint and patience will be required. ★★★

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Look for answers, ask questions and stay focused on getting ahead personally and professionally. A change is in your best interest but must be reasonable and within your budget. Make physical improvements that will result in greater confidence. Romance is highlighted. ★★★★

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Mull over your options and let your imagination wander. The ideas you come up with will help you bring about change that will improve your life and help you project a positive attitude that will convince others to join your cause. ★★

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Put your plans into motion and aim to achieve what you set out to do. Being organized and prepared for whatever unexpected circumstances arise will counter loss or failure. Underestimating what you can handle should be avoided. ★★★★★

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel, educational pursuits and new experiences will all lead to personal growth and a greater understanding of what's possible. Encourage change, but if you don't implement discipline to ensure you don't take on the impossible, an unusual partnership will develop. ★★★

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look at the cost involved in something before you decide to take part. Emotions must not be allowed to sway you in a direction that could end up limiting your chance to advance. Personal expenditures need to be monitored carefully. ★★★

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't act on impulse. Consider the pros and cons and formulate a plan that is realistic. A unique idea will capture your attention, but verify the cost and time involved before you sign up for something that could be taxing. ★★★

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put more time and effort into personal improvements. Whether it's your surroundings, relationships or a physical update that makes you feel confident and good about the way you project your image, move forward. You'll get positive results. Romance is highlighted. ★★★★★

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't leave anything to chance. An emotional matter will disrupt your plans if you aren't prepared to make last-minute changes to compensate for whatever transpires. Don't let anger take over when what's required are strength and courage. ★★

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Express your feelings and work hard to improve a personal relationship. Letting little things come between you and someone you love will lead to regret. Be willing to work with someone in order to resolve problems. ★★★★

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A display of confidence and ownership by someone you are competitive with must not be allowed to bring you down. Look for a unique way to counter any put-down you encounter; you will recapture the attention you crave. ★★★ replaced the maligned Chevrolet SS this year.

"A lot of people were pumped up about the Chevy Camaro, and we haven't delivered the wins that we thought our camp would this year as far as that goes," Dillon said. "We're working, though, as a group to get closer. Larson had a great shot at Chicago. That's positive. And hopefully we can figure out how to get the speed that his Camaro has shown all year."

Larson has been the lone bright spot for Chevy in 2018. The Chip Ganassi Racing standout has six top-five finishes, as many as fellow Chevy drivers and Hendrick Motorsports teammates Chase Elliott (four) and seven-time series champion Jimmie Johnson (two) combined. Elliott will race Saturday after suffering a sprained ankle this week.

"I think everybody in the Chevrolet camp is frustrated when it comes to not seeing the wins up on the board," Dillon said.

Chevy won 13 consecutive manufacturer championships in the premier Cup Series between 2003 and 2015. But Toyota and Ford have clearly closed the gap. The reason is complicated, but one Chevy believes it will be able to handle in time.

Chevrolet designed the Camaro to take advantage of NASCAR's previous inspection system of templates.

But NASCAR switched to a more precise scanning system this year, which erased some of Chevy's expected gains. Ford, especially those at Stewart-Haas Racing, improved the most from the change in inspection procedures.

Adding to Chevy's woes, NASCAR began enforcing a rule that requires front splitters to be completely flat. That tweak changed aerodynamics and caused the Chevrolets to plow through turns more than before.

Teams had been allowed to make their own splitters in previous years, and Toyota had been the biggest beneficiary of that rule in 2017. The Japanese automaker won 16 of 36 races, including the championship, last year.

BLAME

They're not winning races — or even fans inside their sport.

International Speedway Corp. President John Saunders pinned some of NASCAR's woes on the failure of the new crop of drivers that have failed to replace retired stars Dale Earnhardt Jr., Tony Stewart, Jeff Gordon, Carl Edwards and even Danica Patrick in performance or popularity.

"We still have an issue with star power, and hopefully this stable of young drivers coming along will start to win and build their brands," Saunders said Thursday.

ISC owns tracks in California, Kansas, Virginia, Arizona and Alabama and reported a 10 percent dip in attendance this season for the six races held on its properties from March through May.

Weather and travel; ticket prices and event oversaturation; and long, boring races — all kinds of critical issues and mundane nuisances — have been blamed for NASCAR's tumble.

Now it's Saunders' turn to gripe about the dearth of stars, and the drivers have had enough of serving as NASCAR's whipping boys.

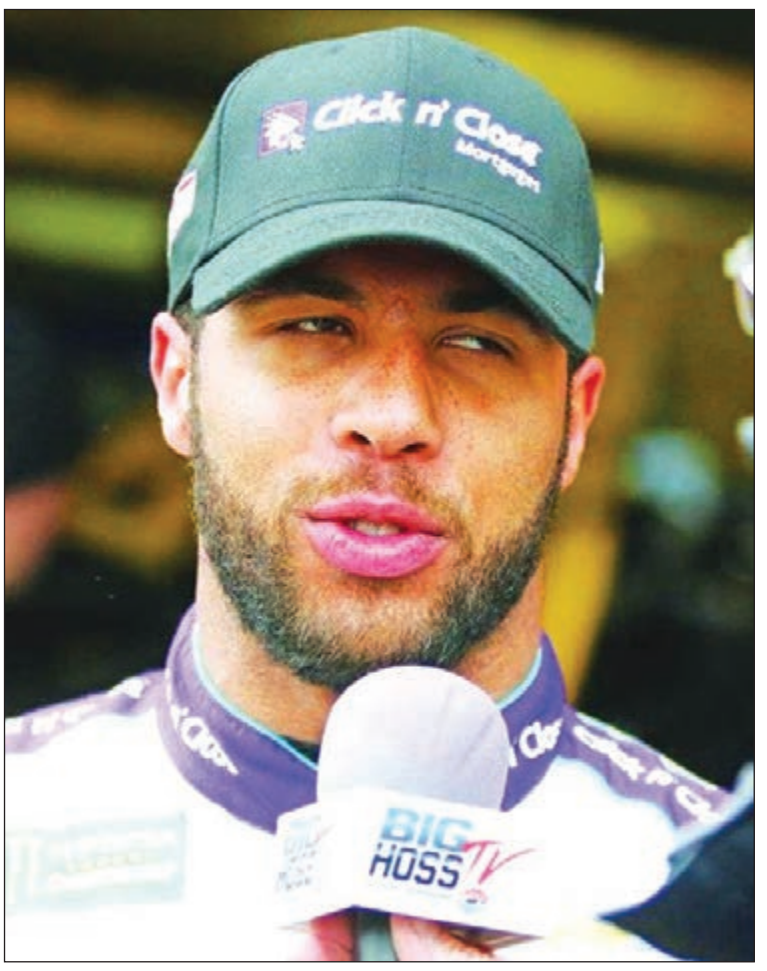
"Honestly, this whole 'young guys need to win now' thing is getting old," the 24-year-old Blaney said. "We're trying. We're trying our hardest. It's not like I go out there and I'm happy for fifth every single week.

"Any other guy under the age of 25, I'll just say is the same way. It's not a competition here between young guys and old guys. It's a competition between 39 other cars and yourself. No matter what your age is or your experience level, everyone is trying to accomplish the same goal."

Wallace threw the criticism back at Saunders, saying outdated tracks that fail to keep pace with modern-day amenities are just as much at fault for driving away fans.

"It kind of goes hand-in-hand from us behind the wheel to people that are here hosting us," Wallace said.

Wallace, whose second-place finish in the Daytona 500 was the best ever by a black driver in the event, is a social media darling with more than 176,000 Twitter followers, posting behind-the-scenes videos and starring in a documentary series that aired on Facebook Watch. The 24-year-old Richard Petty Racing driver even takes on his critics and serves as his own one-man publicity machine for NASCAR fans.



BOB BOOTH KROEGER/Fort Worth Star-Telegram/TNS

Darrell Wallace Jr. is interviewed at Texas Motor Speedway on April 7 in Fort Worth, Texas.

But it's checkered flags and championships that will define drivers, not likes and retweets.

"I might not post stupid videos every week or stuff like that to try and gain fans," Kyle Larson said, taking a subtle shot at Wallace. "I try to gain fans on the race track."

Larson, 25, nearly broke his season-long winless streak last week when he lost a last-lap dual with Kyle Busch at Chicagoland. Busch won his fifth race of the season and rubbed his hand in his eye to mimic a crying child for all the fans whining that the 2015 Cup champion won another race.

NASCAR has a three-driver chase toward the championship through the first 18 races:

—Busch, 33, five wins.

—Kevin Harvick, 42, five wins.

—Martin Truex Jr., 38, three wins.

Dillon and 28-year-old Joey Logano, an 11-year veteran and former Daytona 500 champ, are the only drivers in their 20s who have won this season. Just six drivers have won races, and NASCAR's 16-driver playoff field could have more contenders making it on points than victories.

"I think it would be healthy for the sport if we just see more variation in winners," Blaney said. "There have been six winners this year. Come on now. You can't just put that on the young guys for not winning. That's a lot of other people that aren't winning, too."

Seven-time champion Jimmie Johnson is winless. So is former Daytona 500 champion Denny Hamlin and 2012 series champ Brad Keselowski.

But those greats all have resumes that can stamp them as future Hall of Famers.

Fair or not, NASCAR and its tracks threw their promotional weight this season behind up-and-comers instead of perennial contenders and have paid the price for the slight: FOX and FS1 averaged 2.54 million viewers for Cup Series races this season, down 23 percent from last year (3.31 million).

The youth movement needs to start, well, moving.

"I just want to know what we do about it, do you know what I mean," Dillon asked. "How do you move forward with that? Because the guys that are in the sport are talented enough to win."

They're talented and most have been handed the keys to cars for the premier organizations in NASCAR — Elliott has four-time champ Jeff Gordon's old ride and 25-year-old Alex Bowman has Earnhardt's No. 88 Chevy at Hendrick Motorsports.

Wallace can't blame fans for tuning out.

"I am looking at myself from a fan's point of view," he said. "This guy is 22nd in the points, hasn't won anything, finished second in the Daytona 500 and is getting promoted the hell out of — and hasn't done anything."

He has plenty of company.

UPSETS

Sloane Stephens, No. 5 Elina Svitolina, No. 6 Caroline Garcia and No. 8 Petra Kvitova on the way out so far, along with five-time major champion Maria Sharapova. Those departures leave No. 1 Simona Halep, the French Open champion who won in straight sets Thursday, and No. 7 Karolina Pliskova in the field, along with seven-time Wimbledon champion Serena Williams, who is seeded 25th, and five-time champ Venus Williams, who is No. 9.

"I mean, anyone, on a good day, can beat anyone," Van Uytvanck said. "That's what I think. I still think the top players, their average level is higher than, let's say, subtop players. But anyone on a good day can beat anyone, for sure."

Sure seems that way, particularly this week.

Among the men, too.

Resumes and past performances do not matter. At all.

Marin Cilic, for example, entered his second-round match with all sorts of advantages in experience and success over his opponent, including a runner-up finish at the All England Club a year ago and a U.S. Open title in 2014.

So when Cilic took a two-sets-to-none lead against a guy who began the week with records of 0-2 at Wimbledon and 6-15 at all majors, it appeared the No. 3 seed was on his way to a straightforward victory and a step closer to a potential semifinal rematch against defending champion Roger Federer.

Hold that thought. The outcome that seemed obvious vanished, and Cilic is gone, giving away a big edge in a 3-6, 1-6, 6-4, 7-6 (3), 7-5 loss to 82nd-ranked Guido Pella of Argentina in a match completed Thursday after being suspended midway through the third set because of rain the evening before.

"A big surprise," Pella said.

Cilic called it a "big disappointment."

"Just didn't feel so good. I was not as accurate as yesterday," he said. "I was just missing some balls, giving him chance to keep playing."

His exit means the highest-seeded man No. 1 Federer possibly could face before the final as he bids for a record-extending ninth Wimbledon title would be No. 8 Kevin Anderson or No. 9 John Isner. They're two of the tour's biggest servers, and both won contests carried over from Wednesday.

Isner hit 64 aces and saved two match points in his victory. In another suspended match, three-time major champion Stan Wawrinka lost to qualifier Thomas Fabbiano of Italy.

On the other half of the draw, two past champions, Rafael Nadal and Novak Djokovic, both advanced in straight sets. Not all went smoothly for Djokovic, though: He was visited by a trainer after feeling pain in his left knee over the last couple of games because of what he termed "a bad move" during a point.

"It seems like it's nothing major. Hopefully, tomorrow I'll see @ the practice session how it feels," the 12-time major champion said. "Hopefully it's going to be fine."

If Mbappe scores again, France plays Uruguay in Friday's quarterfinal , he would become the first Frenchman since 1958 to score four at a World Cup since Just Fontaine's record 13 over six games in 1958 .

Henry and Mbappe both share the electric pace Fontaine had, but with a far more rounded game than their illustrious predecessor.

"I don't really like to compare players from different generations, but they have a similar profile, with their speed and ability to beat players," said France coach Didier Deschamps, captain of the 1998 champions. "I can only wish Kylian the same career as Thierry."

Deschamps said that after Mbappe's debut in a qualifier at Luxembourg in March 2017. He already was hailing Mbappe's maturity.

"His biggest strength is his composure when he's through on the goalkeeper," Deschamps said. "That's very rare at his age, and it's why he's so efficient."

Mbappe showed that in a 4-3 win against Argentina last Saturday , scoring two clinical second-half goals after earning a first-half penalty kick with an astonishing run from deep inside his own half. Mbappe stole the spotlight from five-time FIFA Player of the Year Lionel Messi, and he emerged as a candidate to join Neymar in the conversation for who is the world's best player after Messi and Cristiano Ronaldo move on.

FRANCOIS MORI/Associated Press

France's Captain Thierry Henry celebrates after scoring a penalty against Austria during their World Cup 2010 qualifying soccer match at Stade de France in Saint Denis, north outskirts of Paris, France.

Mbappe has played as a wide forward and as a central striker for both France and Paris Saint-Germain, joining from Monaco last year in a deal worth 180 million euros ($216 million). Playing alongside Neymar and Edinson Cavani in a star-studded attack, he helped PSG win all three domestic titles.

Like Henry, Mbappe grew up in a Paris suburb: Mbappe in Bondy, Henry in Les Ulis. Mbappe has been active in the community and he says he will donate his World Cup earnings to a charity that organizes sports for children with disabilities.

Mbappe scored six goals in his first 19 international games and Henry seven: three at the 1998 World Cup and two when France won the European Championship in 2000.

Henry's pro career was launched in 1994 by Monaco coach Arsene Wenger, who brought him to Arsenal from Italian side Juventus five years later. Henry scored at least 20 league goals in six consecutive seasons for Arsenal, and a club record 228 in all competitions for the Gunners.

Wenger moved Henry to Monaco's first team after Henry scored more than 40 goals the under-17 team in one year.

"Henry already had a great attitude. He was already mature and didn't need anyone to control him," youth coach Paul Pietri told The Associated Press. "He crushed everyone with his physique, his strength. He could carry the attack all by himself, he could do everything."

A 76-year-old Corsican now in retirement after nearly 30 years on Monaco's staff, Pietri recalled exactly when Henry's "natural class" first stood out.

"We went to a tournament in Italy, which we always did at the start of the year," Pietri said. "We beat Lazio 5-3, with three goals from Henry. Then we drew 3-3 against AC Milan, with three goals from Henry. I told myself 'This lad can play with the pros.' Wenger took him."

But Pietri adds a note of caution when predicting Mbappe's future.

"What we need to see is if Mbappe lasts 15 years. You shouldn't forget Henry is Arsenal's leading scorer, the best they ever had," Pietri said.
