Site committee narrows decision

CHIPLEY — Site Selection Committee members, along with school board members and city residents, met Thursday to discuss the location on which a new Kate M. Smith Elementary School might one day be built.

Only two members of the five-person committee were able to attend Thursday's meeting, but Superintendent Joe Taylor said he would poll the other members next week so the Washington County School Board can approve the site selection at the Jan. 15 meeting.

"There's nothing new here, this has been a 20-year process," Taylor said of the plans for a new elementary school. The district is looking at a 22-plus acre site off South Boulevard on which to build a new elementary campus.

The district owns the South

Boulevard site as well as the property on which the current elementary school sits, and the choice the site committee is facing boils down to whether or not to build the new campus at the same location where the current Kate Smith Elementary School is located, or move to another site entirely.

The two members present, as well as most of the audience, favored building the new elementary school on a different site than where the current school is located.

"We are looking at a two-year or three-year construction cycle," Taylor said, "Which would mean that for two years or more you would have construction going on right there on campus while also having classes, if we chose to build on the current location."

"Having construction going on while trying to hold classes

Jehovah's Witness Assembly focuses on the conscience

PANAMA CITY — Large delegations of Jehovah's Witnesses and Bible students from Bonifay, Chipley and the four-county area will attend a special Christian assembly at the Marina Civic Center in Panama City on Saturday, Jan 12.

In order to accommodate the more than 2,000 expected Witnesses, visitors and families, the same program will also be held on Jan 13. William Adams, circuit overseer, said.

He said all sessions are open to the public, giving serious attention to how one can utilize their conscience properly. Some questions that will be answered are "What is hazardous to the conscience, and how can we train our conscience?"

The blessing that can come to those who follow their Bible-based conscience will also be discussed. Adams explained that the program would include Bible lectures, interviews, panel discussions and symposiums.

Both sessions will begin at 9:40 a.m. All seats at the Christian gathering are free, and no collections are taken. For more information, call Scott Hatton at 217-3032 or Richard Wintz at 547-4497.

Be kind to yourself, others

Did you end up making any New Year's resolutions? If you did, perhaps one of your resolutions was to be kinder to others. If so, that's wonderful. But don't forget to be kind to yourself, as well.

SHANNON SEYLER
Faithfully Yours

Many people treat themselves in ways that would be considered scandalous if applied to others. Do you honestly expect other people to work themselves half to death, accept blame for things that aren't their fault, single-handedly accomplish tasks that should be delegated to multiple people, solve everyone else's problems and never get a single moment to themselves? Of course, you don't. So why have similarly unrealistic expectations of yourself?

Someone I knew once suffered a serious injury but was horrified by the idea of allowing others to take care of him. One day, he had a massive hemorrhage. "Don't worry about me," he insisted. "I'm doing fine!" Had he not been physically dragged to the hospital, he would've politely bled to death. Sometimes, we can take the need to not impose upon others too far.

Be good to yourself. Remember it's okay to accept help sometimes. If you feel you've been bearing the weight of the world on your shoulders, ask yourself why. Have you conditioned others to believe you're some kind of magical being responsible for solving everyone's problems? If so, it's okay to let people figure out things for themselves sometimes. This includes kids. Children who have an adult swooping in to fix every little problem often develop poor coping skills. They'll still be expecting someone else to solve their problems well after they reach adulthood.

Avoid playing the martyr. If you find yourself constantly whining about the sacrifices you make, there's a simple solution: Stop sacrificing. The martyr complex — seeking to impress others with woeful tales of self-sacrifice — is more widespread than many people realize. It's psychologically similar to people who live through their kids. Having no lives of their own, they vampirize every aspect of their children's lives. Professional martyrs, also having no lives of their own, manufacture their own problems and then invite everyone to a big pity party afterward. Sure, they give up a lot for others. And you can bet that they'll never let others

CHARITY OF THE WEEK Children International

One important part of Children International's work is their child sponsorship program. Sponsorship donations help children receive free medical and dental exams, as well as nutritional assistance. Donations also fund community centers, scholarships, disaster relief efforts and more. Children International operates in multiple countries, including the United States. Those who sponsor children receive letters and photos from their sponsored kids. Sponsorship for a child is $25 per month. For those who do choose sponsorship, some have been able to meet their sponsored children in person. For over 75 years, Children International has been providing a helping hand to children around the world.

forget it, either. Under the guise of dedication, they're actually practicing an extreme form of selfishness, expecting applause (and worse yet, guilt from others) for even the smallest act of so-called "duty" or "sacrifice." People who really do practice duty and sacrifice don't go around boasting about it.

Some people make New Year's resolutions to change their physical health while disregarding their psychological, intellectual, moral and spiritual health. You don't have to develop the body of an Olympic gold medalist in order to make a beneficial change in your life. There are improvements that don't involve dropping a pants size. If you're interested in spirituality, perhaps it's time to take your spirituality a step further. What can you do to better yourself spiritually? How can you make yourself more emotionally healthy? How can you be more ethical? What new things will you learn this year?

One fun way to enter a new year is to do something that you normally wouldn't. Step out on a limb and try something new, something out of character. Whatever you do to usher in the new year, have a good time with it. If you've been driving yourself too hard, relax. You don't have to take on the problems of the entire world, or even your entire family. Don't be a martyr. Above all, resolve to have some fun this year. You'll feel better for it.

Don't forget that the new year also gives you a fresh opportunity to start sending in your regional religious news. If your events aren't announced in the paper, it's probably because you didn't send them in. Nobody will know about your events if you don't announce them. Be sure to send in news of your local events so everyone gets a chance to hear about them. E-mail church news items to rseyler@chipleypaper.com.

The proposed site for the new elementary school is seen in this aerial map, presented to the site selection committee on Thursday at the Washington County School District administration building board room in Chipley. The property is northeast of the Chipley High School and Roulhac Middle School campuses and stretches between Brickyard Road at the south end of the property and South Boulevard at the north end.

would be distracting," said Lesa Burdeshaw, principal at Kate M. Smith Elementary School.

Another issue with the current site is that the campus is bisected by a city street, Taylor said. "We have talked to the city about closing that road, and there are utilities there that the city would have need to maintain access to."

Taylor said having a city street run through a campus is something the Department of Education frowns on.

The 22-acre site off South Boulevard stretches to Brickyard Boulevard and is separated from that street by a drainage area. There is no construction on the property, but the water utilities are in place, Taylor said. "Another problem with the current site is the infrastructure under the school is 60 years old," he said. With the new location, all the water and sewerage plumbing would also be new.

The district is trying to get a site located and a package prepared so the project can be presented to the Special Facilities Construction Account Committee in Tallahassee in August. If the project can be approved in August by the state, then it is possible the school could be considered for state funding beginning as early as 2014.

"This is a long-term project, but we have to get the process started," Taylor said. Currently there are two Special Facilities projects in line ahead of Washington County School District that have been approved by the state for funding — a $49 million and a $36 million project. "If we can get approved, and if no other schools are out there planning a project, we could be number three in line," Taylor said.

Taylor said the elementary school is projected to cost about $20 million.

Once the school board approves a site for the new school, the next step will be to get an architect's drawing for the project.

"We'll probably start advertising for an architect's services in the next two weeks or so," Taylor said.

Memorial services were held at the First Baptist Church in Chipley with the Rev. Michael Orr officiating.

"We will miss him in Kiwanis Club," Page said. "We made him an honorary lifetime member when his health got to where he couldn't attend meetings."

"I think his service and what he meant to the Kiwanis Club was evident by the number of Kiwanians at the service today," Page said. "There were a bunch of us there."
