County gets debt extension

By CAROL KENT

CHIPLEY — Washington County has been given a bit of a reprieve in the face of SunTrust Bank's October option to call the county's notes.

Commissioners voted Thursday to use $520,000 of the county's debt service funds to pay a lump sum on the $1.1 million tax note, cutting that debt in half; $150,000 will be left in debt service funds to allow for unforeseen financial issues, such as spikes in variable interest rates.

The board acted on advisement from Interim Clerk of Court Harold Bazzel and former Leon County Financial Director Bill Bogan, who was enlisted to help tackle the problem of addressing the county's financial woes.

The plan is to make regular payments on the $1.1 million non-tax exempt debt while continuing to pay only the interest on the tax-exempt note, which has a balance of $5.5 million. That debt stems from a sales tax promissory note used for various projects, such as renovations to the county offices on South Blvd. The principle on that loan was originally due Oct. 1.

Washington County has only paid interest on both loans since 2009.

Bazzel and Bogan both say the initial lump payment will be a jumping off point to negotiate a new amortization schedule for the county's debt to SunTrust Bank.

"The bank is working with us on the issue," Bogan said. "After reviewing our financials, they have agreed to give us a five-year extension on the loan."

"By taking this action, the commissioners are paying off the higher interest loan first."

The plan is to make regular payments on the $1.1 million non-tax exempt debt while continuing to pay only the interest on the tax-exempt note.

Wrongful termination case nets Byrd $10,000

CHIPLEY — The Washington County Board of County Commissioners has agreed to a $10,000 settlement in the wrongful termination suit filed last December by former employee Ellen Byrd.

Byrd, who had served as an administrative assistant with the Planning Department since 2010, was among three employees laid off during last year's workforce reduction at the county annex.

Byrd's original complaint stated she was the victim of retaliation, stemming from

2 more boys are named as victims at former school

TAMPA (AP) — Researchers have identified two more sets of remains buried on the grounds of a former Florida Panhandle reform school for more than a half-century, the team announced Thursday.

The University of South Florida team said it has identified the remains of 13-year-old Thomas Varnadoe and 12-year-old Earl Wilson, who both died while confined at the Arthur G. Dozier School for Boys.

Varnadoe died in 1934, reportedly of pneumonia. Wilson was beaten to death in 1944, reportedly by four other boys while in a small confinement cottage on the property, known as the "sweat box." The other boys were convicted in his death.

In August, researchers said they had identified George Owen Smith as the first of 55 bodies they exhumed from the school property.

cal and sexual abuse, but the Florida Department of Law Enforcement concluded after an investigation that it couldn't substantiate or dispute the claims because too much time had passed. Many former Dozier inmates from that era call themselves "The White House Boys" after the white building where they say the worst abuse took place.

Fire position, maps get OKs

By CAROL KENT

Ckent@chipleypaper.com

CHIPLEY — County commissioners reiterated the legitimacy of the Poplar Head substation by voting 4-1 to have county coverage maps redrawn to officially reflect fire department coverage areas when they met in regular session Thursday.

Chief Myron Pierce had previously expressed concern that E-911 didn't have an updated map in their system, although E-911 Director Major Randy Brown assured commissioners that emergency responders were being dispatched to the area "appropriately."

Commissioner Lynn Gothard was the sole "no" vote, stating she thought it would be wise to let the incoming fire coordinator handle the matter because of possible effects on funding for fire departments county-wide.

The updating of fire coverage maps has the backing of the Washington County Chief's Association and will

Ex-pastor jailed on drug, sex charges

By ZACK McDONALD
747-5071 | @PCNHZack
zmcDonald@pcnh.com

PANAMA CITY — The former pastor of a Panama City Beach church is in jail again after he allegedly gave a 16-year-old girl marijuana and then forced sexual advances on her, according to court documents.

Markus Quin Bishop, 54, was arrested Tuesday and charged with delivering a controlled substance to a minor and felony battery. The charges stem from a Sept. 11 incident at Bishop's home on Fox Run Boulevard, according to police. Bishop also was charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Bishop's attorneys said that because he is a long-standing member of the community, his bond should be set at $17,500. But prosecutors argued during Bishop's first appearance Wednesday that a prior conviction for domestic battery demanded a higher bond, which was set at $35,000.

Bishop allegedly provided the girl with marijuana in an attempt to intoxicate her before professing his love and kissing her against her will, according to his arrest affidavit. They were alone at Bishop's home when he offered her marijuana and suggested they go swimming, the Bay County Sheriff's Office reported.

"The victim/child said she was extremely 'high' but agreed," the report stated.

According to reports, the girl became uncomfortable with Bishop's advances in a hot tub and exited, so he suggested they get in the pool. In the pool, Bishop took a flotation device from the girl, placed his hands on her lower back and guided her around the pool, investigators reported.

Bishop then began kissing her waist area. She got out of the pool to get away, but Bishop followed and began kissing her on the mouth, according to investigators.

A warrant was issued for Bishop's arrest Tuesday, and he surrendered the same day, officials said.

The former pastor of Faith Christian Family Church in Panama City Beach, Bishop has a previous history of battery. He was sentenced to one year of probation in January 2009 after he punched his wife in the eye during an argument at their home.

Bishop pleaded no contest to domestic battery, wrote a letter of apology to his wife and had his probation terminated after six months.

Bishop was the senior pastor of Faith Christian Family Church until it folded in 2012 amid financial turmoil. The church filed bankruptcy in June of that year.

He also is an internationally known author, speaker and host of the "Faith Is the Victory" television broadcast.

Bishop surrendered his passport before his first appearance Wednesday. He also cannot leave the state and must undergo random drug screenings.

His arraignment was set for Oct. 27.

Thomas Varnadoe, 13, and Earl Wilson, 12, are believed to be the latest two boys identified by USF researchers.

Thomas Varnadoe's nephew, Glen Varnadoe, said at a Thursday news conference his father also was sent to the school.

"It's been a long road for me and my family," Varnadoe of Polk County said.

It was a priority for the family to "remove (Thomas) from the atrocity-laden soils."

Records showed 31 burials at the Marianna school between its opening in 1900 and its 2011 closure for budget reasons. But USF researchers found the remains of 24 additional people between last September and December.

In 2008, the Florida Department of Juvenile Justice held a ceremony to officially "seal" the building and recognize the boys who passed through it. Some of "The White House Boys" were present and media coverage of the event, as well as an order from then-Gov. Charlie Crist, led to the investigation. Researchers, reacting to the allegations, excavated the graveyard at the school.

At its peak in the 1960s, 500 boys were housed at the Dozier school, most of them for minor offenses such as petty theft, truancy or running away from home.

In 1968, when corporal punishment was outlawed at state-run institutions, then-Gov. Claude Kirk visited and found the institution in disrepair with leaky ceilings, holes in walls, cramped sleeping quarters, no heating for the winters and buckets used as toilets.

"If one of your kids were kept in such circumstances," he said then, "you'd be up there with rifles."

Some of the bodies were found under roads or overgrown trees, well away from the white, metal crosses marking the 31 officially recorded graves.

Richard Varnadoe, 85, brother of Thomas Varnadoe, speaks to the media after a news conference Thursday.

Wayne Wilson, nephew of Earl Wilson, speaks to the media after the news conference.

not change disbursement of fire funds at this time.

The creating of the fire coordinator position also received a split vote, with Commissioners Gothard and Todd Abbot, and Commissioner Charles Brock voting "yes," and Commissioners Alan Bush and Joel Pate voting "no."

The position, which will be considered a department head title, will be funded by monies transferred from the unused Tax Deed Over Bid funds, will have beginning allocation of $101,602, with the salary funded for just the first year. Discussion was held earlier by commissioners that state funding could partially assist with funding the position's salary for subsequent years.

The new budget line item includes $42,016 for salary, $2,000 for communications and freight, $2,500 for training, $4,500 for gas and other operating supplies, and $30,000 to purchase a truck to replace the one County Coordinator David Corbin will relinquish to the position due to the vehicle already being equipped with lights and other emergency features.

In other action, the board:

- Requested County Attorney Jeff Goodman to look into hiring a financial consulate to be placed on retainer status

- Agreed to negotiate with the Department of Juvenile Justice to lease of-office space recently vacated by the Guardian Ad Litem program.

- Approved the annual contract with the Washington County Health Department

- Approved the Washington County Sheriff's Office purchase of a 2014 Ford F150 from Chipola Ford in the amount of $8,408.50

- Approved the Rural Works Program, which addresses roadway improvements in Washington County and surrounding areas

- Approved a Proclamation designating October as Community Planning Month

- Approved leasing trucks to increase equipment available for and expedite FEMA projects

- Heard from resident Willie Jean Thomas about continuing problems with road washouts on Gainer Road.

- Approved a State Aid to Libraries Grant Agreement which net allow $114,000 for the county's library services over the new fiscal year.

- Reviewed bids for work on Falling Waters Road. The lowest bidder was Anderson-Columbia at $595,000.50.

- Approved a Comprehensive Emergency Management Plan Update

- Approved the 2014-15 Medical Examiner Interlocal agreement with Washington County's share to be $62,000 of the $770,202 budget.

Chipley woman injured in log truck collision

From staff reports

BAY COUNTY — The Florida Highway Patrol reported two Chipley residents suffered serious injuries after their vehicle collided with a log truck at 6:15 a.m. Thursday, Sept. 25, on State Road 77 just south of U.S. Highway 388.

According to the report, Jennifer Weber, 39, of Chipley and her nine-year-old passenger were traveling in a 2008 GMC Yukon on the outside, southbound lane of State Road 77, not far behind a log truck.

Weber stated she remembered driving close, but she did not remember colliding with a log that went through the windshield. The driver of the log truck, whose identity was unknown at press time, was not aware a collision had occurred and continued traveling south on State Road 77.

Weber veered to the right of the roadway and came to a rest on the west shoulder facing south of State Road 77.

There were no witnesses, and FHP states all available evidence supports that Weber collided into a log on the truck's trailer.

No charges have been filed in the incident.

Cabinet OKs land deal in Washington County

From staff reports

Gov. Rick Scott and the state Cabinet on Tuesday approved spending about $4.4 million on environmentally sensitive land in Monroe and Washington counties.

The Washington County project, costing $780,000, includes about 348 acres along Holmes Creek. Environmental officials said the creek primarily is fed by springs and the land acquisition will help the state's efforts to protect springs.

In the other project, costing $3.6 million, the state will acquire about 928 acres that are part of what is known as the Florida Keys Ecosystem Florida Forever project.

The purchase is aimed, at least in part, at helping protect hardwood hammocks, along with plants and animals, such as the Lower Keys marsh rabbit and Key deer, according to information presented to the Cabinet by state environmental officials.

Attorney General Holder leaves mixed legal legacy

WASHINGTON (AP) — It wasn't difficult for Barack Obama and Eric Holder to be in the same orbit. Both were sons of immigrants, Columbia Ivy Leaguers, basketball fans and prominent African-American political figures.

They first met almost 10 years ago, dinner guests of a mutual Washington friend who seated Holder next to the newly elected senator from Illinois.

On Thursday, Obama announced Holder would be stepping down as his attorney general, one of his longest serving Cabinet members.

"This is bitter-sweet," the president said.

Holder, who will stay on the job until his successor is confirmed by the Senate, was at his side.

"In good times and in bad, in things personal and in things professional, you have been there for me," he told Obama.

Indeed, during the course of six years on the job, Holder has had his ups and downs. He also has become a rare figure: a close Washington friend of the president.

As attorney general, Holder aggressively enforced the Voting Rights Act, addressed drug-sentencing guidelines that led to disparities between white and black convicts, extended legal benefits to same-sex couples and refused to defend a law that allowed states to disregard gay marriages.

He oversaw the decision to prosecute terror suspects in U.S. civilian courts instead of at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and helped establish a legal rationale for lethal drone strikes on suspects overseas. All were Obama priorities.

He also has been Obama's point man in the federal response to the racial tensions in Ferguson, Missouri, where a white police officer shot and killed an unarmed 18-year-old African-American last month.

"His greatest legacy has been in the areas of civil rights and race," said Carl Tobias, a professor at the University of Richmond School of Law. He said Holder aimed for a frank discussion in the U.S. about issues surrounding race with a dialogue "that intrinsically defies completion and so remains unfulfilled."

Although his enforcement of civil rights laws and fight against voter ID laws made him a champion of civil rights groups, they also made him a top target of conservatives, who said he put race at the forefront and endangered the integrity of elections.

Early on, he was roundly criticized for an ultimately abandoned plan to try terrorism suspects in New York City. A botched gun-running probe along the Southwest border prompted Republican calls for his resignation, many liberals accused him of failing to hold top bankers accountable for the economic meltdown, and civil libertarians complained loudly that Holder's Justice Department did little to curb broad post-911 surveillance and record-gathering by the government.

John Fund and Hans Von Spakovsky, conservative authors of a critical book on Holder, "Obama's Enforcer: Eric Holder's Justice Department," wrote that Obama found in Holder "both a kindred spirit and a heat shield against criticism that would often be directed at the White House."

Yet, some in the White House also believed Holder created political problems for the president.

Under his watch, the Justice Department cracked down on journalists reporting on national security matters. The department secretly subpoenaed Associated Press phone records and used a search warrant to obtain some emails of a Fox News journalist as part of a separate leak investigation. The cases created a furor, and Obama ordered Holder to review the department's policies, resulting in tougher guidelines for obtaining reporters' phone records and email.

In an interview Thursday, Holder said Obama respected the separation between the White House and the department and let the department "do those things I thought appropriate."

He said his biggest regret was "the failure to pass any responsible and reasonable gun safety legislation after the shootings in Newtown." He said he thought the nation would embrace change that was "not radical but really reasonable" on gun safety after the massacre at the Connecticut elementary school.

As for the civil rights uproar in Ferguson, Holder said he's not sure whether the Justice Department will finish its investigation into the shooting before he leaves. "I don't want to rush them," he said.

FSU chooses Thrasher for next president

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — Florida State University is hiring powerful state Sen. John Thrasher as its next president despite significant opposition from people on campus who contended he isn't qualified for the post.

The FSU board voted 11-2 Tuesday to hire Thrasher over three academics, pushing aside objections from FSU faculty who cited his lack of education credentials. Thrasher, a former state House speaker and chairman of Gov. Rick Scott's reelection campaign, also drew criticism after he sidestepped questions during a campus forum about climate change and evolution.

But Thrasher's supporters say his political connections and clout could help FSU in its quest to move into the ranks of the nation's top research universities. Thrasher also vowed that he would help the university get more money to boost faculty salaries.

Student protesters began chanting "FSU is not for sale" after the vote.

The 70-year-old Thrasher graduated from FSU in 1965 with a bachelor's degree in business and later received his law degree from the school. In the Legislature, he helped win approval for the university's medical school, which opened in 2001. Thrasher also spent four years on FSU's board. He has never taught, however, working as a lawyer and a lobbyist in addition to politics.

During his final interview, Thrasher maintained he would reach out to his opponents if selected. He also said he shared the same goal as others at helping improve FSU.

Thrasher is stepping in at a time when the university has come under fire for its handling of star quarterback James Winston. Winston has been involved in a series of off-field incidents in recent months, and he was suspended from last week's game for making "offensive and vulgar" comments about female anatomy on campus. The university initially only suspended him for a half, but then late Friday switched it to an entire game.

The selection still has to be ratified in November by the Board of Governors. But the statewide panel has never refused to endorse the selection made by a local university board.

The other candidates include former West Virginia University Provost Michele Wheatly, Colorado State University System Chancellor Michael Martin and University of Alabama at Birmingham Vice President Richard Marchase.

FSU has been without a president since Eric Barron left in April to take the top post at Penn State University. The process to hire a successor has been bumpy ever since Thrasher emerged as a candidate. Initially FSU planned to interview him ahead of all candidates but that created a backlash and ultimately led to the search being delayed.

Emails obtained by The Associated Press this past summer showed that the consultant first hired to help FSU told the head of the search committee that the university was trying to "concoct a competitive process" that would end with Thrasher's hiring. Those same emails showed Thrasher reached out directly to top FSU officials about the job and that the former campaign manager of Scott gave advice about the search.

Florida judge throws out state's voucher expansion lawsuit

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — A Florida judge on Wednesday threw out a lawsuit aimed at blocking a significant expansion of the state's main private school voucher program.

The move isn't expected to end the ongoing legal battle, but it gave a victory to proponents of the almost $300 million program which currently pays to send children from low-income families to private schools, many of which are religious.

The lawsuit was being closely watched because it also jeopardized a new program that expands services to disabled children.

State legislators in May passed a lengthy education bill that created the new program and expanded the state's main voucher program to middle-income families. The lawsuit filed two months later contends legislators violated a requirement in the state constitution that bills can cover only one subject when they passed the measure.

But Chief Circuit Judge Charles Francis dismissed the lawsuit after finding that a Lee County social studies teacher did not have the legal standing to file it. The lawsuit was also backed by the Florida Education Association, which is the union that represents Florida teachers.

Francis, however, did say that Tom Faasse and the union, could amend the lawsuit if they wished.

The FEA did not say in a statement whether or not it would continue with the lawsuit. But the union has a second lawsuit that seeks to have the entire program shut down.

"We wish the judge had taken up the merits of the case, because it's clear that the Legislature overstepped its authority in passing this legislation," said Joanne McCall, vice president for the union, in a statement.

Sen. Andy Gardiner, R-Orlando, called on the FEA to drop the lawsuit since it would could potentially harm almost 1,000 disabled students who will be receiving the new "personal learning scholarship accounts" as they are called. These accounts would allow parents of children with disabilities such as autism and Down syndrome to receive services worth $10,000 a year.

"The last thing these students and their parents need is a politically motivated legal attack from union bosses financed by the paychecks of hard-working Florida teachers," Gardiner said.

Poll: Governor's race too close to call; voters not happy with either

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — The race between Republican Gov. Rick Scott and Republican-turned-Democrat former Gov. Charlie Crist is too close to call and voters aren't happy with their choice, according to a Quinnipiac University poll released Wednesday.

The poll shows 44 percent of likely voters prefer Scott, and 42 percent prefer Crist, while 8 percent say they'd vote for Libertarian Adrian Wyllie. The margin of error is plus or minus 3.1 percentage points, meaning the race is a statistical tie.

Voters seem to agree, though, that neither major party candidate is trustworthy. The poll showed that 49 percent of voters don't think Crist is honest, compared to 37 percent who say he is. Scott's numbers are similar — 51 percent say he isn't trustworthy compared to 39 percent who say he is.

"When fewer than four in 10 voters think both the Democratic and Republican candidates for governor are honest, you know this has been one of the nastiest races in state history," said Peter Brown, assistant director of the university's poll. "They have been throwing so much mud that they both are covered in it."

Neither candidate has a good approval rating, with 49 percent of respondents saying they have an unfavorable opinion of Crist compared to 48 percent who said they have an unfavorable opinion of Scott.

Voters do think that Scott is a stronger leader, the poll found. When asked about Scott, 58 percent said he has strong leadership qualities and 34 percent said he doesn't. That compares to 46 percent who said Crist is a strong leader and 45 percent who said he isn't.

Neither campaign commented on the poll. The poll of 991 likely voters was conducted Sept. 17-22.

Mexican flavors

La Cocina chef shares owners' favorites

By JAN WADDY

747-5072 | @JanWaddy
jwaddy@pcnh.com

PANAMA CITY — Executive Chef Ben Lillard of La Cocina Mexican Grill and Bar recreated a couple of the restaurant owners' favorite recipes during a cooking demonstration Saturday at Somethin's Cookin'.

"The Chile Relleno is one me and Ann worked on together. I must have made it 100 times. Traditionally, it is stuffed with cheese and fried. We wanted to do something different," Lillard said. "I looked at 10 different cookbooks and at least 10 different recipes for the Snapper Veracruz. It was the same thing — George had it at a resort 10 years ago in Mexico, too, and this one now tastes exactly like it."

Panama City native Ann Hartley and her husband, George Hartley, relocated from Dallas, Texas, where they were big fans of Tex-Mex flavors. The Hartleys, who also own George's at Alys Beach and Seagrove Village MarketCafé, opened La Cocina five years ago in Seacrest to satisfy their cravings for Mexican cuisine. This has meant a lot of taste-testing as Lillard has been entrusted with recreating flavor profiles of dishes the couple has enjoyed during their travels.

"I call it upscale Mexican; it's family-friendly, too," said MaryAnn Bradford, who also has eaten the La Cocina's Chile Relleno at the restaurant, but admitted she didn't know what was in it until the cooking class.

Listed on the dinner menu, La Cocina's Chile Relleno, Ann's favorite, is a grilled poblano pepper stuffed with sweet and spicy ground beef topped with crema and pomegranate seeds.

"Now I can envision it," Bradford said. "I couldn't figure out what I was tasting, and now I know it was the raisins. I was used to cheese so it threw me — very good though. I thought the sauce on the top was white cheese, but now I know it's sour cream."

La Cocina's Chile Relleno and Snapper Veracruz are two items served from 5-9 p.m. at La Cocina, 10343 E. Scenic Highway 30A.

"Dinner is 5-9, but if you get there before 9 we'll serve you," Lillard said.

He usually is at La Cocina during lunch on Saturdays, but planned to head to the restaurant right after Saturday's demonstration. "I am usually at the restaurant, but it's college football season, so a Mexican restaurant in the South is not busy at lunch time," he admitted.

For the chile relleno, Lillard starts by roasting six large poblano peppers, which he receives from the restaurant supplier. His recipe for the stuffing makes enough for six large or eight medium-sized stuffed peppers, if you are making them at home.

"At the grocery store, I have a hard time finding large ones — have to pick through a lot of them," said Lillard, who rubbed a little oil on the peppers and then charred them to get the skins off.

"I am just going to put them straight on the gas burner. If you don't have gas, you can't do this. But you can put it in the oven if you want or on a griddle or grill pan. If you have a grill at home, you can just fire up the gas grill for five minutes, the easiest way," he said. "Roasting the peppers in the oven will make them softer. Put them on broil and flip halfway through. The griddle is more difficult, because they're not flat. When the peppers blister up real good, let them cool off and the skin will peel off."

After the peppers were charred, he picked them up and put them in a bowl, then covered the bowl with plastic wrap and set them aside. The steam continues to help separate the skins.

"When you take the peppers off, remove them with a pair of tongs — but I don't have a lot of feeling left in my fingertips," he admitted.

Lillard sautéed the chopped onion in a pan with a little canola oil before adding the ground beef.

"At the restaurant, I use 80/20 ground beef. At home, I use 90/10 leaner. With lean meat, you have to add a little more oil," said Lillard, who continued to mix the meat in the pan with the onion. "Break it apart really well. You don't want any chunks in there. This is the stuffing for the pepper."

He then put the apricots, raisins and walnuts in a food processor.

"I use yellow raisins or golden — I just like the flavor better. You can chop by hand," he said. "I use a $2,000 Robot Coupe at the restaurant but can't afford that at home. I use a Cuisinart. At the restaurant we make 30 of these a day and it saves a lot of work."

Since he didn't have any tomato sauce on hand, he improvised by pureeing diced tomatoes.

"At this point, if I was using fattier ground beef, I would put it in a strainer to get the fat off," said Lillard, who added the fruit and nut mixture in with the ground beef before mixing in the tomato sauce. "I don't put any salt, because I am putting chicken base in and it's salty. You can always add more later, but you can't take it away."

He tasted, then added 1½ tablespoons of Tone's chicken base and cinnamon.

"I am only adding about a quarter of a cup of Tupelo honey — gets sweet fast," Lillard said. "So that's the stuffing. Set the mixture aside and let it start cooling off a bit."

About 30 minutes had passed from the beginning of the class when Lillard took the plastic wrap off of the bowl filled with peppers. He began rubbing off the charred skins with his fingers.

"What you want to avoid doing is rinsing them under running water, which will wash off any flavor," he said. "Poblanos normally are not spicy. I am going to take the seeds out, but if you like spice, you can leave them in. Split the peppers down the side and expose the middle. Reach in and those seeds should pop out."

He laid the poblano pepper in his hand, split side up, to spoon in the stuffing before putting the pepper, split side down, on the plate.

"I think it presents better with green flesh of the chili," Lillard said. "People eat with their eyes too. Don't put too much in and you can close it all the way. The sauce is super super easy."

The white cream sauce — crema — was a blended mixture of sour cream, chopped walnuts, chicken base and sugar.

"This is fantastic. The sauce is unbelievable," Ann Miller said after taking her first bite. "I'm not a Mexican food fan, and I do like this."

The smokiness of the roasted poblano was nice contrast to the creamy sweet and spicy ground beef. The few poblano seeds left behind on my chile relleno added just enough spice that had me looking for a drink, but the sauce added a little cool relief.

"The secret ingredient is sugar. If you want it a little sweeter, add more sugar; want it a little saltier, add more chicken stock to it," said Lillard, who measures by eyeing and tasting. "My favorite snack is to take a strawberry and dip it in sour cream and brown sugar — absolutely delicious — just roll it and dip it. This sauce would probably work, too."

The chile relleno may be served immediately or reheated before being topped with the sauce.

"Reheat at 350 to 325 degrees," suggested Lillard, who doesn't even own a microwave in his home. "You also could probably warm it in the toaster oven. Chile relleno just means 'stuffed pepper' in Spanish. You can stuff it with whatever you want. Nobody's going to judge you."

Fresh fish is a natural on a Mexican menu so close to the beach. The Snapper Veracruz features Gulf snapper with a tomato herb caper and raisin sauce.

"We serve it with broccoli or carrots, some sort of vegetable of the day at the restaurant," said Lillard, who served the dish with white rice for the demonstration. "You can use whatever kind of rice. I use Uncle Ben's long grain at home and at the restaurant. I puff it up in the chinois in the deep fryer. I always stop rice from cooking when there is still a little water; then leave it covered with the steam to soak up the rest."

For the sauce, he was able to skip a step and omit the ¼ cup of extra virgin olive oil from the recipe by using 3 inches of garlic paste. When using fresh garlic, Lillard sautéed it in the olive oil before adding it to the pot on the stove for the sauce.

"I also use fresh tomatoes at the restaurant and strain out the juice, but if you find a good shortcut, it's OK to use," said Lillard, who drained the Pomi chopped tomatoes and reserved the juice.

La Cocina goes through 250 pounds of fresh tomatoes a day.

"Later, I am going to add some of the tomato water back in. I also use the chinois at home to make cheese. If my milk is about to go bad, I put it in a pot, squeeze fresh lemon in it and let it sit an hour or two to get to room temperature. Then I bring it to low; don't bring it to a boil and all of the fat goes to the middle and the whey to the side. Strain it and it is creamy like cottage cheese. Use the curd and throw away the rest. I put it in the fridge another week or two."

While conversing, Lillard threw bay leaves, fresh parsley, dried Mexican oregano, green olives, raisins and capers into the sauce to warm on low heat.

"Sprinkle in extra salt, because the tomato soaks it in," said Lillard, who added Himalayan sea salt. "I use kosher salt at the restaurant."

For the demonstration, Lillard used fresh Red Snapper from Tarpon Dock

Seafood Market. "I usually get it with the skin. I like the skin — gets crispy. There are no bones in here," he said. "Fresh snapper cooks really fast."

He cut the fillets into serving sizes, rubbed them with oil and sprinkled Mexican seasoning on top.

"We use Bad Byron's Jubilee Seafood Seasoning at the restaurant," said Lillard, who added it is available at local grocery stores. "When you drop water in the pan, you know it's hot. You don't want to put snapper in a cold pan; it will stick. You can do it in a grill pan, the oven, on the grill outside — no big deal. If it had the skin on it, I would put skin down in pan. I do the same thing with chicken. Anything with skin on it, the skin goes down first."

As the sauce thickened, he added some of the tomato juice back in to loosen it back up. The aroma from the sauce began filling the bar area, and the snapper already started to turn white up the side. He flipped over the fillets to continue browning on each side, then covered the fish to finish cooking.

Rice was spooned onto each plate, topped with snapper, then a delicious salty sauce.

"Olives make that wonderful," said Brenda York, a retired teacher, who also spent a little time "catching up with Ben." — "I taught him in fifth grade at Tommy Smith Elementary."

In celebration of La Cocina's fifth anniversary on Aug. 21, Lillard was able to combine some of his Southern heritage with Tex-Mex flavors for restaurant specials, such as brisket hash. He has a chance to do more specials in the off-season, when he is not at his busiest.

"We'll do 700 people in a night, so it has to be great, but it has to be simplified," Lillard said. "Our record night was 740 people in four hours. We turned the restaurant four full times."

Southerland, Graham battle at debate

By MARGIE MENZEL
News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — Sparks flew Tuesday at the first debate in an increasingly contentious race between Republican incumbent Steve Southerland and Democratic challenger Gwen Graham for the District 2 congressional seat.

Supporters of both candidates cheered, gasped and groaned as the pair traded jabs before the Network of Entrepreneurs & Business Associates in Tallahassee.

The barbs began during opening statements when Graham — daughter of former Florida Gov. and U.S. Sen. Bob Graham — vowed to break the gridlock in Congress, saying Southerland had played too adversarial a role in Washington.

"I heard Congressman Southerland's voice come over the radio, and he proudly proclaimed, 'I did not go to Washington to make friends,'" she said. "Well, friends, he has accomplished that goal — and he has accomplished that goal at the expense of the people of North Florida." Southerland, a Panama City Republican who was elected in the tea party wave of 2010, blamed the gridlock in Washington on Democrats: President Barack Obama, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi.

"I think Barack Obama and Nancy Pelosi and Harry Reid were doing pretty good at creating gridlock before we got there," Southerland said.

The debate, moderated by journalist Bill Cotterell, came amid a race that has drawn heavy attention from the national political parties. Democrats have targeted House District 2, which includes 14 counties, as one of a relative handful of areas where they could pick up a Republican-held seat in November.

GWEN GRAHAM

The district ranges from heavily Democratic Leon and Gadsden counties in the east to the heavily Republican Panama City area, including part of Holmes County and all of Calhoun, Franklin, Gulf, Jackson and Washington counties. Graham is from Tallahassee and Southerland is from Panama City.

THE ISSUES

Issues covered during the debate included the economy, national security, health care, raising the minimum wage, immigration reform, military veterans, violence against women and campaign-finance reform.

On the Affordable Care Act, Graham said, "Democrats bit off far more than they could chew, and Republicans have voted over 54 times to return our health-care decisions to the hands of the insurance companies. Both got it wrong when they put in place Obamacare."

Southerland, who in 2010 beat seven-term Democratic Congressman Allen Boyd by running against Boyd's vote for the health-care law, said House Republicans had proposed plans that would put health care choices "back in the hands of the people. ... The Republican proposals moving forward really make sure that no one will ever stand between you and your physician of choice."

On the question of raising the minimum wage, Southerland said, "We need to be focused, really, on how we're going to increase wages for all Americans. ... If you look at what this president has done since he's been in office, he has hammered the middle class."

Graham said she would support "an incremental increase in the minimum wage so as not to hurt the businesses, but to do it slowly and then tie it to the rate of inflation so we no longer get back to a point where the minimum wage keeps people in poverty."

The candidates agreed only on the need for a bipartisan approach to campaign finance and that securing the U.S. border would be the top priority of a comprehensive immigration-reform policy.

They used the debate to revisit previous sparring, as when Cotterell asked Southerland why he voted against reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act.

Southerland said he supported an earlier version of the act.

"I'm proud to support that bill," he said. "It was only when Harry Reid wanted to inject politics and use women — not aid them — as a political ploy that I said enough is enough. ... The fact is, I have supported this legislation."

"Congressman, that is just a lie," Graham replied. "He did not vote for the bill that was a bipartisan bill that ... passed the House, passed the Senate and was signed into law. You did not vote for the bill that is the law today. ... I'm disappointed in you for that."

Offered a chance to rebut, Southerland did. "I can honestly say that the disappointment that Mrs. Graham has in me really means very little," he said.

"What matters most is how you feel. And you know what? ... Over the past four years I have gone to Washington, D.C., and I have fought for you, for a better future. You know that. You know me. And the reason you know me is because even if Gwen didn't grow up here, my family has been in this district for 200 years."

Graham didn't let that go by, either.

"I am proud of my North Florida heritage," she said. "I find it insulting that Congressman Southerland would question that. My grandmother was born in the Panhandle. My great-grandfather was one of the first licensed physicians. I have lived here all my life. I graduated from Leon High School in 1980. All of my children graduated ..."

The rest of her remarks were drowned in cheers.

The only other debate currently scheduled between the candidates is Oct. 15 at the Capital Tiger Bay Club in Tallahassee.

Some banks reissuing cards over Home Depot breach

The Associated Press

Some lenders are preparing to reissue credit or debit cards to customers to head off possible losses following the breach of customer data at Home Depot.

Capital One Financial and JPMorgan Chase & Co. said Wednesday they are preparing to assign new cards to account holders because of the data theft at the home-improvement retailer.

Earlier this month, Home Depot confirmed that malicious software lurking in its check-out terminals between April and September affected 56 million debit and credit cards.

Target, Michaels and Neiman Marcus also have been attacked by hackers in the past year.

While lenders often will issue customers a card after it's been lost, stolen or used to make an unauthorized purchase, Capital One and JPMorgan are taking action based merely on whether accounts might be compromised.

Capital One, which issues debit cards in addition to its namesake credit card, is preparing to do a proactive, "mass reissue" of credit and debit cards on accounts that it believes are at risk because of the Home Depot data breach, said spokeswoman Pam Girardo.

Tempers flare over possible bay closure

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN

Franklin County seafood workers served up a kettle of bitter stew Friday evening to the man who has advocated for them during these difficult times.

The allegations were thick as gumbo or thin as a knife, depending how you look at it, against Shannon Hartsfield, president of the Franklin County Seafood Workers Association, at a meeting that packed the courthouse annex tighter than boats on Cat Point.

Mainly the audience picked from all sides at most everything Hartsfield said, and accused him of supporting talk out of Tallahassee that it will take a complete bay closure to give the oyster bars a fighting chance to recover.

"This man here, your president, is wanting to close it down," shouted oysterman Duane Topham, and got applause.

Shouts from the audience halted Hartsfield's attempt to detail the upcoming $4.5 million shelling program, funded through a federal fishery disaster grant from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

"The funding we have coming up right now is going to be turned loose at the end of this month," he said. "A lot of people's having problems to meet standards for the 2012 year. I only have 20 people who came in and meet eligibility for the new shelling program for new paperwork."

Hartsfield said the gates will now open for those already in the shelling, whose funding dates back to Tropical Storm Debbie in 2012, the baseline for qualifying. Those who have full-time jobs aren't eligible to shell, he said.

"There may be more money coming to the shelling program, maybe a little more money added," he said.

Hartsfield said that with 200 boats, at a cost of about $25,000 a day, the funds will only last for so long, and that the entire funding will be expended this year, and not spread out over three years.

Many complained, loudly, that the organizers had cut off the last shelling prematurely, leaving people in the lurch. Hartsfield said the cut-off had come only in the last month of a nine-month effort.

Postal Inspectors

Protecting Our Mail

What was in your mailbox today? Was there something special for you? You may not have thought much about how letters and packages leave one location and arrive at another.

The U.S. Postal Service moved 22 million pieces of mail every hour in 2013! Mail is delivered to about 153 million addresses in the United States.

With all that mail moving around every day, postal inspectors have a big job: protecting post office employees, equipment and customers from attacks and crime.

When mail was carried on horseback or by stagecoach, criminals could easily attack. Mail at that time might have included large amounts of cash or other valuables. Keeping the routes safe was important. Benjamin Franklin, the postmaster general, appointed William Goddard as the first postal surveyor in 1776. In 1880, the title "post office inspector" was first used.

What kinds of crimes involve the mail?

Our Postal Service makes it simple for us to share items and information. We can easily send a letter, a bill for payment or a package to someone.

But this convenient service also makes it easy for criminals to abuse the system. Crimes involving our mail system include:

- Fraud. Customers may receive mail that promotes a dishonest scheme trying to scam them out of money.
- Theft. Items may be stolen from mailboxes. This could include packages, or it might be a letter that has private information in it. That information could be used to steal from the person it was sent to.

- Shipping illegal items. People may try to send illegal drugs or other items through the mail.
 - Mail terrorism. Dangerous materials can be sent through the mail, such as bombs or poisons.
- Postal inspectors investigate these types of crimes and educate the public and Postal Service employees about how to identify fraudulent or dangerous mail and stay safe.

He enjoys tap dancing, martial arts, swimming, running marathons and collecting comic books. He speaks Spanish and English. Freddie supports charities such as those helping kids with AIDS.

Dangerous Mail

Trusting the mail

When you get a letter or package in the mail, aren't you excited to open it? Most of us look forward to receiving something.

People don't expect attacks through the mail. They trust that an item received by mail is safe for them to open.

Experts say that violent attacks through the mail are unusual. For instance, over the history of the Postal Service, fewer than 10 pieces of mail have been found to have a dangerous chemical or biological substance.

Still, an explosive or dangerous chemical sent through the mail could hurt many people at once.

The Postal Inspection Service works with managers of mailrooms at big companies and government offices and with postal employees to teach them how to identify a suspicious package.

It also protects post offices and their employees and customers from theft and assault.

Case history: Anthrax

In October 2001, government officials and members of the media began receiving letters with a deadly bacteria dusted on them. Anthrax is the disease caused by the bacteria. Twenty-two people were infected, and five people died. Two different post offices, along with part of the U.S. Capitol, had to be cleaned and fumigated after contaminated mail passed through their mail processing machines.

Case history: Mail bomb

In 1991 in Alaska, a mail bomb killed a man and injured his wife. The bomb was sent to their son by three people who helped a convicted murderer plan and build the bomb for revenge. Postal inspectors worked with the Anchorage Police Department in solving the crime.

Jordan Windle

People enter a swimming pool in many different ways. Some step in or slide in, while others may shout "Cannonball!" As a diver, Jordan Windle excels at splashing into the water from high above it. On Aug. 17, Jordan won the 10-meter competition at the U.S. national diving championships, jumping from a platform more than 30 feet above the water.

Jordan was born in a small village in Cambodia. When he was a baby, both of his parents died. He was adopted by an American couple and came to the United States before he turned 2. Five years later, he attended a summer camp and learned about diving. He's been somersaulting, tucking and twisting ever since.

Jordan's goal is to reach the 2016 Summer Olympics in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. His favorite diver — and friend — is Olympic gold medalist diver Greg Louganis. He also enjoys playing tennis, basketball and video games, and hopes to become a marine biologist.

Inspectors at Work

Special events

Imagine you wanted to send a fan letter to a favorite athlete during the Super Bowl next February. Did you know the Postal Service operates temporary post offices during big events, such as the Olympics or political conventions?

The Postal Inspection Service helps to set up these temporary offices and make sure they are safe. Inspectors work with employees of these offices to train them how to screen, or check, the mail.

Disasters and emergencies

After a natural disaster such as a hurricane, post offices may be damaged, and mail can be lost. At these times, victims really depend on receiving paychecks or money from insurance companies.

Postal inspectors help to return service to normal. They make sure the mail is delivered where it should be, restore equipment to working order, and re-route the mail when needed to avoid the damaged area.

Would you like to work as a postal inspector? Here are some of the jobs you might do.

Once there, he discovers they are being held captive by a group of murderous thieves, led by Roger Porter, who are there to claim a fortune in gold, hidden in the underground river that flows through the park. MASCAR THIS WEEK

QUESTIONS & ATTITUDE

Compelling questions ... and maybe a few actual answers

Associated Press/CHERYL SENTER

At 16, he's Cole the minor, but he's also now a NASCAR winner.

OK, who's going home this week?

Well, nobody, actually. Remember, this is the "playoffs" in name only. It's not like baseball, football or even the PGA Tour's version of playoffs. Just because you're eliminated, you don't have to go home. Those pesky sponsor commitments say otherwise.

How about figuratively speaking?

It would be easy to point to the bottom four in the standings and suggest they're on their last legs, but keep in mind, only eight points separate eighth place from 13th, so the whole picture can change faster than you can say "Trouble in Turn 3!" Other fun news: Kevin Harvick was irritated by Joey Logano's restarts at New Hampshire, and when Harvick gets a burr in his saddle, things are always more interesting.

Cole Custer? Is it a stage name?

Sure sounds like it, but no. Custer became the youngest winner of a NASCAR touring event when he won the Truck race at New Hampshire (16 years, seven months, 28 days, if you're scoring at home). Don't know if his future will turn out as great as some are predicting, but he has perhaps the most marketable racing name we've seen in a while. With a name like Cole Custer, it was either racin' or bull-ridin' for him.

HOT TOPICS: 3 ISSUES GENERATING A BUZZ

Hot (and not)

While Team Penske rolls, Gibbs' guys stagger

Associated Press/JIM COLE

That's not decorative crepe paper on Kyle Busch's car, it's Bear Bond, which was needed at New Hampshire to hold the team's Chase chances together.

A "Tale of Two Teams" is being written chapter by chapter as the Sprint Cup Series burrows into the Chase.

On the upside is Team Penske, which seems to do no wrong, winning the past three races.

On the downside is Joe Gibbs Racing, a three-time Cup champion now having trouble tying its own shoelaces.

The last time a Gibbs driver tasted champagne in Victory Lane was on May 4, when Denny Hamlin won at Talladega Superspeedway.

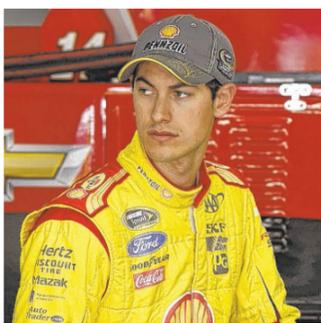

Fast-forward to Sept. 21 at New Hampshire and Hamlin's crew could not get fuel into his No. 11 Toyota on pit road.

"Couldn't get fuel in it and that pretty much set the tone for the rest of our day," Hamlin said Sunday.

Indeed, it set the tone for Gibbs' three-car effort.

Hamlin finished 37th, while teammate Matt Kenseth, who won seven times in 2013, posted a 21st-place effort, thanks to a push into the wall from Paul Menard.

Kyle Busch, whose No. 18 Toyota looked like it had been in a demolition derby, defied gravity to finish eighth. To make this truly unsettling for JGR, Kenseth got into Busch early in the race, with both avoiding complete disaster.

Hamlin and Kenseth need solid top-10 runs this weekend to ensure they make the first playoff cut. The 16 Chase drivers will be whittled to 12 after Sunday's race at Dover.

Kenseth shrugged it all off. "You do the best you can every day and take the results you have and move on from there," the 2003 Cup champ said.

Way up front, Penske's Joey Logano won the race, breaking a two-race winning streak by teammate Brad Keselowski, who was relegated to a seventh-place finish.

"It's great for everyone at Team Penske," Keselowski said of this playoff surge. "We certainly have a lot to be proud of, but there's still a lot of work to do."

Talk about work to do, just look at Gibbs Racing.

"We'll just keep fighting, keep going," Busch said.

ROOKIE SHINES

Kyle Larson continues to impress as he presses closer to Rookie of the Year honors. He was second at Loudon and hopes to score a win over the last eight races of the season. "Really proud about how we've been running," he said. "I know other teams that are in the Chase notice that, and I'm sure they're worried about us for next season already."

CAUTION CRAZY

Sunday's race at New Hampshire produced 15 yellow flags, the second-most this season. The race was scheduled for 300 laps (301 were run), and nine of those cautions happened in the last 100 laps of competition.

"It was a tough race, and just one little mistake you wreck, so it's pretty crazy," driver Carl Edwards said.

Winner: Jimmie Johnson
Rest of the top five: Brad Keselowski, Matt Kenseth, Clint Bowyer, Kyle Busch
Dark horse: Aric Almirola

Disappointment: Greg Biffle
First one out: Ricky Stenhouse Jr.
Don't be surprised if: Johnson extends his Dover winning streak to three straight victories.

FEUD OF THE WEEK

MATT KENSETH PAUL MENARD

Matt Kenseth vs. Paul Menard: Menard, who is not in the Chase, put Kenseth, who is in the playoffs, into the wall.

Godwin Kelly gives his take: "Kenseth just shook his head and said, 'It's always frustrating when you get in a wreck.' End of story."

SPEED FREAKS

Questions we just had to ask — ourselves

AP/CHERYL SENTER

Kevin Harvick was ticked last week, but better days are ahead.

Will a non-Penske driver ever win again?

GODSPEAK: It sure feels like a two-car battle, but don't look now, here comes Jimmie Johnson.

KEN'S CALL: Glad you asked. Yes, I'm thinking Kevin Harvick this weekend at Dover.

Which of the bottom four drivers sneaks into the Chase's next round?

GODSPEAK: I'm looking for Richard Petty's No. 43 to make the cut. The team just needs a sprinkle of luck.

KEN'S CALL: When Kurt Busch needs to go to the front, he usually finds a way. He's my guy.

NEW HAMPSHIRE REWIND

Daytona 500 winner Dale Earnhardt Jr. had to race hard and rally back to finish ninth at New Hampshire. Earnhardt is sixth in the points and should advance to Round 2 of the Chase, but Sunday's race was a challenge for NASCAR's most popular driver. He talked about his day with the media after the race:

You rallied back pretty well at the end.

"Yeah, I like the way we worked all day. We had to put on some real old tires there. We ran out of tires, so that last set of tires we put on had some practice laps on them. We still hung in there and had some good restarts.

"Everybody gets on (me) about them restarts; we had some pretty good ones today. The last one wasn't too good, but I was on the inside slipping around. We had fun, and I'm glad we were able to rebound. That was pretty dramatic there for a while. Had a little issue on the right-front, which is going to happen; we shook it off. We shook it off like Denny Hamlin (laughs), and we went back to work.

"The guys gave me great stops after that, and I'm proud of my team.

"You're going to have mistakes. I'm going to make mistakes, but nobody really got on anybody — everybody sort of regrouped and we finished out the day."

The pace seems furious. When you have an issue, how cognizant are you that other people could potentially have an issue?

"Yeah, it's early in the race when we had our problem. It's real hard to deal with it when it happens late. It's real hard to overcome those things, obviously, when it happens late in the race. We were fortunate on that end to have it early. You just have to be patient."

How do you feel going to Dover?

"We run good there. I know everybody is looking at us like we are falling off a little bit. But Chicago hadn't been a great track for us, and New Hampshire hadn't either. Dover has. So, I will be surprised if we don't go down there and be competitive."

Closer than my cell phone

Traveling, especially by air, is not my favorite pastime. I know some people who just delight in flying from one point to another point. If you would count all of those people who do, I would be nowhere on that list.

Recently I had to travel involving changing planes, which involved spending a night at the Orlando airport. I could have come home, which is about two hours away, or I could spend the night and catch the plane the next day. It would cost me about the same to stay overnight at the airport as it would to travel back home and then return to the airport the next day. So, after all of my meticulous calculations, I decided to spend the night at the airport.

I determined while there to get the most of my night's stay at the airport. The hotel at the airport was one of those big international hotels. It had more stories than a politician on the campaign trail. As is usually the case, my room was on one of the top stories of the hotel.

Checking in at the front desk, I then went to my room and settled down for the evening. I was not going to waste my time huddled in my hotel room, rather, I was going to look around and experience the "nightlife" at this international airport.

Have you ever made a decision, then looking back on it you thought to yourself, "Self, we are never going to do that again." Such was my case.

I decided to get some supper around 8 o'clock in the evening. This, I found out, was the time high society folk eat. Why they eat so late, I will never know. But, since I was with high society, I decided to act and eat like high society.

The restaurant in this international hotel was one of those highfalutin restaurants where you really do not know what is on the menu. The menu was in every language except English. Fortunately, they had some pictures and fortunately, my index finger was still in good working order. I ordered my supper, set back and observed the high society all around me.

One thought that stumbled through my brain at the time was, "I wonder if these people in this restaurant know that I am not part of high society?"

About this time the wine steward, I guess that is what he is called, came by to take my wine order. The only wine I know is spelled with an H. When I declined the wine, people began to suspicion I was not part of high society. I guess you cannot be part of high society unless you wine a little.

I finished my supper and decided to wander around in the huge lounge area on this floor. Everybody there was talking and so I got an order of coffee, went to a couch, sat down and just observed what was going on around me. One thing I noticed was that most people seemed to be on their cell phone. What would happen in our society if cell phones suddenly stopped working for three minutes? There would be such a panic across our country that nobody would actually survive.

I decided I should call someone on my cell phone. After all, I am trying to fit in with this high society. My dilemma came when I tried to figure out who in the world I should call at 10 o'clock in the evening.

Then it dawned on me. I will call the Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage. I do not know why I did not think of this before. So, I pressed the speed dial and the phone started ringing.

As soon as the phone started ringing, a thought danced in my mind. What in the world am I calling her for? What in his world would I talk about?

Before finishing all of the questions floating around my cranium my wife answered the phone.

The first words out of her mouth were, "What did you forget now?"

It seems that whenever I go on a trip, before I get too far down the road I remember something I forgot. When I assured her that I had not forgotten anything, I sensed a slight pause on the other end and then she said, "Did you miss your plane?"

Within the next few minutes I was bombarded with question after question, all I did was call, and at this point, I could not remember why I had called her. It just seemed like the thing to do at the time.

After she settled down a little bit and her panic seizure ceased, I told her I just called to call.

"Oh," she said, not knowing how to answer that.

I was shocked. It had never happened before. I am going to cherish this memory for as long as I live. I actually caught her when she had nothing to say. Needless to say, I relished that moment because it will probably never happen again.

After I hung up, I sat sipping some more coffee when one of my favorite verses came to mind. "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear" (Isaiah 65:24).

My comfort rests in the fact that God is closer to me than my cell phone.
