County to apply for $5 million in growth funds

By Diane M. Robinson
The News | @HCTA_Diane
Drobinson@chipleypaper.com

CHIPLEY - In a joint effort with City of Chipley, Washington County Board of County Commissioners is poised to pursue a $5 million grant for the Governor's Growth Fund.

During a workshop on August 15, Chipley City Administrator Dan Miner approached the commission to request the county write a grant to round out funding for the purchase of land to be used as an additional capacity sprayfield. The 485-acre tract of land is located south of Interstate 10 and would serve the city for many years to come, and will help with development south of the 77 corridor.

If the funding would become available, the city would be in a position to close the three current sprayfields in use and would also allow the county to benefit from the growth south of Chipley.

Chairman Tray Hawkins said residents need to understand the county would still have the ability to develop south of the interstate.

"We still have the ability to develop south of the interstate," said Hawkins. "This is just another step in the right direction."

The measure is expected to be on the consent agenda for the next regular session.

Also at the meeting, an interlocal agreement between the county and its municipalities is set to be on the consent agenda concerning animal control services provided by the county.

The interim agreement will be used until September when the county will bring forth the final ordinance concerning animal control and code enforcement. The terms of the agreement state the municipality will pay for services rendered according to the size of their population and that it will be the participating municipalities' responsibility to capture the animal for the county to transport.

Wausau approves proposed budget

By Diane M. Robinson
The News | @HCTA_Diane
Drobinson@chipleypaper.com

WAUSAU - The first reading of an ordinance concerning the proposed budget for the Town of Wausau for the 2018-2019 fiscal year was approved when the Wausau Town Council met in regular session August 9.

The proposed budget is set at $361,500, with the largest revenue source coming from the water department totaling $169,300. This year's proposed budget is down about $120,000 from last year due to grants being closed out according to Town Clerk Margaret Riley.

"Our budget is reflecting what is the norm for Wausau this year," said Riley. "We have closed out our grants so they are no longer reflected in our budget."

The final reading and adoption of the proposed budget are set to be held at 6 p.m. on September 13.

Engineer Cliff Knauer updated the council on the status of plans for the Fire Department construction project. Knauer advised the plans were being sent to electrical engineers and would then be transmitted to the state for approval. The town is ahead of schedule with the deliverables on the project at this point in time according to Knauer.

Drobinson@chipleypaper.com

CHIPLEY - Phase II of the Emerald Coast Subdivision project was approved when Washington County Planning Commission met in regular session August 7.

Currently, there are seven existing lots and seven more have been added to the subdivision.

The Emerald Subdivision site is a two-lane county road located along the 7.9-acre tract where the existing lots are to be developed as single family homes. The newly approved plat will be used for the same purposes. The initial lots were approved in November 2017 with five lots having already been sold for development.

Owner Leola Brock said there is interest in the lots.

"We have had a lot of interest in the lots thus far," said Brock. "Additional lots will add to that."

Over 20 districts move forward with 'guardians'

Lloyd Dunkelberger
News Service Florida

TALLAHASSEE - About a third of Florida's school districts are taking steps to deploy armed "guardians" on school campuses to prevent incidents such as mass shootings, according to the state Office of Safe Schools.

Damien Kelly, a veteran law-enforcement officer who is the first director of the newly created safety agency, told the Florida Board of Education on Wednesday that 22 of the 67 districts are in the process of deploying specially trained personnel under the "Coach Aaron Feis Guardian Program."

The program was named for an assistant football coach who used his body to shield students during the Feb. 14 mass shooting that killed 14 students and three staff members at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland.

The guardian program, which is part of a $400 million school-safety law passed this year by the Legislature and approved by Gov. Rick Scott, has been controversial, with some districts rejecting the idea of training school personnel to be armed.

But with a mandate that each Florida school have at least one safety officer, some districts are using the guardian program, which was designed to supplement the traditional use of school resource officers and other law-enforcement officers.

The Legislature set aside $67 million in one-time funding for the guardian program to cover the cost of doing background checks and training the personnel. The guardians will also be provided with a $500 stipend to cover equipment costs.

Kelly, who spent 13 years with the Florida Department of Law Enforcement and a dozen years with the Memphis police, said 22 local sheriff's departments have applied to train volunteers for the guardian program, with about $9.4 million in funding requests.

With students already back in their classrooms in the majority of districts for the 2018-2019 academic year, Kelly outlined other school safety initiatives underway including: A FortifyFL app that will let students and others use their mobile phones to report suspicious activity, a data-analytics system that will allow the monitoring of social media in school districts, and the appointment of a "school safety specialist" in each of the 67 districts to coordinate safety activity. The specialists will be trained by Kelly's office.

Kelly also described to the Board of Education, which was meeting in Orlando, numerous meetings he has held with local school officials, law enforcement agencies and others as the new school-safety initiatives are put into place across the state.

He said he has been reviewing recommendations that were developed in the wake of other mass shootings, ranging from the Pulse nightclub shootings in 2016 in Orlando to the shootings at a Las Vegas music festival in 2017.

The safety suggestions include the use of active-shooter training, the need to test communication systems, planning for access by medical personnel and the need for more tourniquets, Kelly said.

He also said he has visited schools where new fencing has been installed to limit campus access, although in some cases it has drawn complaints from the public.

Chewing gum heir sinks money into medical marijuana

Dara Kam
News Service Florida

TALLAHASSEE - The Wrigley fortune was built on its domination of the chewing gum market, but an heir to the confectionery dynasty is investing millions in an industry that not so long ago had a far less wholesome reputation.

In a transaction some construe as the normalization of the medical cannabis industry, William "Beau" Wrigley Jr. led a $65 million round of funding in Surterra Wellness, one of Florida's 14 licensed medical marijuana operators.

"I haven't been this excited about a business in a very long time. We have an incredible and incredibly professional team that is approaching this industry with a great deal of discipline," Wrigley, who also became chairman of Surterra's board, said in a statement.

The Wrigley funding, which took place last month, is the latest in a number of recent transactions in the state's budding medical-marijuana industry.

In an agreement announced last month, the Canadian firm Scythian Biosciences Inc. said it intends to spend $93 million to purchase a majority of 3 Boys Farms --- a Florida medical-marijuana operator that has yet to begin selling products to patients --- and an unnamed "health care organization." In June, California-based MedMen announced it was paying $53 million to acquire Eustis-based Treadwell Nursery, another of the state-licensed "medical marijuana treatment centers."

Surterra also has a license to sell medical marijuana in Texas and has an application pending in Virginia, CEO Jake Bergmann said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

The Wrigley stamp of approval could signify a shift in what is quickly becoming one of the state's hottest commodities, following the passage of a 2016 constitutional amendment broadly legalizing medical marijuana in Florida.

"This is something that is really validation for what the team at Surterra has been building. We set ourselves apart by having the highest quality and consistency with organically produced products. And having someone who is a well-known American CEO who's built and sold brands, to not just invest in us but join us as chairman is really a testament to what the whole team has built here," Bergmann said.

The Wrigley company, established in 1891, was sold to Mars, Inc., a decade ago. But prior to that, with Beau Wrigley at the helm, Wrigley acquired Altoids and LifeSavers.

The Wrigley-led investment in Surterra is "good for the entire industry," Bergmann said.

"It lets patients, investors, essentially everyone know that the business has evolved and is maturing to be a professional staple of American industry," he said.

The latest equity round brings the funds pumped into Surterra by investors to $100 million, according to Bergmann.

The money will be used to expand Surterra's Florida operations, double the number of employees to 750 by the end of the year, and invest in clinical trials, according to Bergmann.

Since lawmakers in Florida first legalized non-euphoric medical marijuana in 2014, the state's cannabis industry has been plagued by legal and administrative challenges, delays in implementing the constitutional amendment and drawn-out rule-making processes that have created frustration for legislators, patients, operators and investors.

A Tallahassee judge last week ruled that a state law capping the number of medical marijuana operators "directly contradicts" the 2016 constitutional amendment, which was approved by more than 71 percent of voters. But it's unclear what, if any, impact Leon County Circuit Judge Charles Dodson's decision will have since he did not stop health officials from continuing their current processes.

Still, marrying Wrigley --- whose namesake brands have been found in checkout lanes around the world for more than a century --- with one of the state's leading marijuana purveyors can be seen as another step toward putting cannabis, which requires a doctor's approval, in a category with other household-name products.

"This is about helping people. It can give people a normal life, let them go to school and be a normal member of society. It is incredible to craft that opportunity in an industry that is starting from scratch," Wrigley said in the statement.

The candy heir pointed out that three-dozen states have some sort of authorization for cannabis.

"Once people can get over the perception curve, they see the many benefits of this," Wrigley said.

Unintended consequences of hiking minimum wage

A recent study from the University of Wisconsin-Madison confirms — once again — that good intentions don't repeal the laws of economics.

In 2014, Minnesota raised its minimum wage to $8 an hour and kept hiking the floor. It currently sits at $9.65 and will continue to increase with inflation. In contrast, Wisconsin left its minimum wage at the federal level of $7.25. This allowed Noah Williams, an economics professor at the University of Wisconsin, to compare what happened in the two states to employment in the fast-food industry and for young people. He examined those areas because 60 percent of restaurant workers earn the minimum wage, and most minimum wage workers are under 24.

"Following the minimum wage increases, limited service (fast food) restaurant employment fell by 4 percent in Minnesota relative to Wisconsin," wrote Mr. Williams. "Further, youth employment fell by 9 percent in Minnesota following the minimum wage increases, while it increased by 10.6 percent in Wisconsin over the same time period."

Taking a minimum wage job is the first step to getting a better-paying job. Policies that reduce these employment opportunities can hurt a young person's career for years.

Mr. Williams also found that Minneapolis-area restaurants increased prices by an average of 6 percent after the minimum wage hike, while prices had fallen by 2 percent in the four prior years. For individuals who found a job, there were benefits. Average annual pay in Minnesota fast food restaurants increased 5.5 percent more than in Wisconsin.

These results are similar to a 2017 University of Washington study of Seattle's minimum wage, which has risen to $13 an hour. It found the wage hike had boosted hourly earnings in low-wage jobs by 3 percent, but reduced hours worked by 9 percent. Researchers also concluded that Seattle would have had 5,000 more jobs without the minimum wage hike.

"The overall body of recent evidence suggests that the most credible conclusion is a higher minimum wage results in some job loss for the least-skilled workers — with possibly larger adverse effects than earlier research suggested," wrote economist David Neumark in research published by the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco.

Throughout the country, conversations are ongoing about if the minimum wage should be hiked. In Nevada, for example, in a 2015 legislative presentation, Assemblyman William McCurdy II haughtily dismissed the idea of minimum wage hikes causing job losses as a misconception. Legislative Democrats then voted unanimously for a constitutional amendment that would increase Nevada's minimum wage to $14 an hour in 2022.

Some in Florida are talking about a $15 minimum wage.

But people need to be cautious as minimum wage hikes can essentially outlaw certain types of jobs and boost unemployment, particularly for younger and unskilled workers. Feel-good progressive nostrums don't override economic reality.

This editorial first appeared in the Las Vegas Journal Review, a sister paper with GateHouse Media.

ANOTHER VIEW

A Stunning Dereliction of Duty By the Feds

Joe Guzzardi

The Department of Homeland Security's latest Entry/Exit Overstay Report represents more disappointing evidence that the U.S. exercises inadequate enforcement of its immigration laws. Too often, those who want to enter, enter. And those who, once here, wish to stay, stay.

DHS' fiscal year 2017 analysis of nonimmigrant, temporary arrivals through official Ports of Entry that includes tourists, temporary workers, students, business travelers and exchange visitors totaled 52,656,022. Of those, 701,900, 1.33 percent, overstayed. The largest offending category is student or exchange visitors, the F, M and J visa holders; Canadian overstayers top the list of violating nations. About 40 percent of visa holders overstay, and they're a major contributor to illegal immigration.

While the 1.33 percent indicates that the overwhelming majority depart pursuant to their visas' expiration date, the raw 701,900 number tells a different story. Three quarters of a million is roughly the equivalent to the employment-based guest workers who come to the U.S. annually. The logical conclusion is that most overstays are either illegally employed off the books, have submitted falsified I-9s or will eventually find a job to sustain themselves.

For more than three decades, the U.S. has failed to fix the not-too-difficult-to-correct overstay problem - staggering ineptitude that foreign nationals have taken advantage of.

Entry-exit verification was first included in the 1996 Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act, and subsequently reiterated various times in Congress. The 2002 visa tracking law required that an integrated biometric database be established so that the State Department and the Department of Homeland Security would have real-time access to law enforcement, immigration and intelligence information on every alien who seeks admission to the U.S.

Congress and DHS have renewed demands for action in various forms in 2004, 2007, 2008 and 2009. Yet only nominal progress has been made on biometric identification, an essential security component.

Abu Dhabi, for example, installed its biometric border entry/exit system more than a decade ago to ensure that those removed from the country could not reenter under a new identity and with falsified passports. More than 9,400 passengers have been identified traveling into or out of Abu Dhabi with forged identities. Earlier this year at Florida's Orlando International Airport, U.S. Customs and Border Protection began facial recognition technology for all international arriving and departing passengers, a process that takes less than two seconds.

The feds' repeated failures are discouraging, to say the least, to frustrated Americans who demand border security. In an era when Costco can identify the exact location of every gallon of milk in its 750 worldwide warehouses, the flimsy excuses that DHS offers, mostly related to costs, a red herring since the expenses could be recouped through higher visa fees, and the tourism industry's self-serving objections, don't wash.

Through its failure to pursue overstays, DHS tacitly condones the practice, and therefore encourages more of the same. But biometrics would deny visa overstays future entry, effectively deter more visa violations and encourage timely departures.

Ending overstays protects the homeland, the government's first duty. Greater entry/exit diligence helps U.S. workers who otherwise would compete for jobs with visa holders whose permission has expired, but nevertheless illegally take American jobs.

Are You Ready For Your Face Tattoos?

Danny Tyree

Like many kids, I had a dalliance with washable temporary tattoos.

As a teen, I tried (unsuccessfully) to market a comic strip about a tattoo artist named Tat McGrat.

But, as I entered adulthood, some combination of nature and nurture distracted me from making permanent tattoos a priority.

Other people DID have an interaction of DNA and Life Experience that made them exercise their right as Americans to embellish their skin with inconspicuous hearts, skulls, marijuanas leaves -- or even dragons, unicorns, honest politicians and OTHER mythical creatures.

Alas, tattoos on chests, arms and legs are Yesterday's News. According to the New York Times, tattoos on the FACE are going mainstream.

One rapper joked that he wears face tattoos to make his momma mad. A piece of advice from a squeamish old guy: "Drink milk straight from the jug. Air condition the whole neighborhood. Who needs needles and pigment?"

Hipsters tout face tattoos as a cool way to announce, "This is who I am!" (Yeah, "This is who I am - the guy with 200 fewer bucks to donate to your charity.")

The pioneers of face tattoos seem themselves as "free spirits." This is especially true if they have an out-of-body experience from an allergic reaction to pigments.

Face tattoos can build confidence, we are told. Excuse me, but when someone has "I'm dying and taking everyone here with me" emblazoned on his cheek, I would just as soon he NOT be self-confident. Maybe a sheepish "...unless that would interfere with anyone's plans" would be a nice corollary.

Let's talk preconceived notions. No matter how intellectual or kind-hearted individual tattoo aficionados may be, it's understandable that "normals" see a Freddy-Krueger-on-the-forehead restaurant server and expect to hear, "The bearded lady is fetching the wine list, the human cannonball is bringing the bread and I see you're having the chicken cordon bleu. Excellent! I bit the chicken's head off myself."

Although reputable tattoo artists advise, "Think before you ink," some advocates of face tattoos hope their giddiness will be infectious, gushing, "Wouldn't it be cool to have a piece of artwork you could carry with you everywhere for the rest of your life?" Yeah, I THOUGHT those stuffy old museums had it wrong. Art should be exposed to UV radiation, concussions, zits, razor burn, broken noses...

I have seen tattoos that are true masterpieces, but others are drearily unimaginative renderings of random words or the name of This Week's Soulmate. Can you imagine Michelangelo applying modern standards to his projects? ("There! I wrote 'Darlene' in John Deere on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel. Booyah! Where's my money, pope?")

When Rick Hoyt was 15 years old, he wanted to take part in a 5-mile (8-kilometer) benefit run to help a young person who had been in an accident. Rick shared his wish with his dad, who agreed to do everything he could to help Rick make it happen.

For many teenagers, a run like this wouldn't be such a big deal. But Rick was born with cerebral palsy. Cerebral palsy is a brain disorder that affects muscles and the way people move. Rick couldn't walk or speak.

But that didn't stop Rick and his dad, Dick, from dreaming big. Dick would serve as his son's legs in the 5-mile run, pushing Rick to the finish line in a wheelchair.

Beating expectations

Facing challenges head-on was nothing new to the Hoyts. Rick has cerebral palsy because he didn't get enough oxygen to his brain during birth. The reduced airflow injured his brain.

Many people doubted that Rick would ever live a productive life. Doctors advised Dick and his wife, Judy, to put Rick into a long-term care facility.

But his parents always knew that an intelligent, capable person was living inside a body that was holding him back.

Dick and Judy fought to make it possible for Rick to attend public school. They had a special computer made that allowed Rick to communicate, unlocking the smart boy inside.

Rick went on to graduate from high school before attending Boston University. He graduated in 1993 with a degree in special education.

Taking off

Their spirit of accomplishment and tenacity* kept Rick and his dad going when they completed their first 5-mile run. At the time, they had no idea that they were beginning a long, inspiring journey. They became known as Team Hoyt, and YES YOU CAN! became their motto.

Over the next few decades, Team Hoyt competed in more than 1,000 races, including marathons, duathlons and triathlons. They even completed six Ironman competitions!

Rick and his dad finished 32 Boston Marathons, one of America's most famous races. In 1992, they even tackled a trip all the way across the United States that covered 3,735 miles in 45 days!

Rick says: "When I'm running, it feels like I'm not handicapped."

Inspiring others

Team Hoyt was honored in 2013 with a special ESPN award called the Jimmy V Perseverance Award. This award is given to someone who has overcome great challenges.

The Hoyts' story has inspired others with disabilities to say, "Yes I can!" Your challenge is to learn about other athletes like Team Hoyt and then share their stories with your friends and family.

What about in your school and community? Are there individuals who have overcome handicaps to reach athletic achievements that seemed impossible?

What about outside of sports? Can you find people in the performing arts, such as music, dance and acting, who aren't held back by their disabilities? Don't forget the visual arts, such as painting and sculpting.

IN BRIEF

COLUMBUS, OHIO Feds to review Ohio State response to abuse claims

Federal officials are investigating Ohio State University's response to allegations against a team doctor now accused of sexual misconduct against scores of athletes and other male students in the 1980s and 1990s.

The U.S. Department of Education Office for Civil Rights will examine whether Ohio State has responded "promptly and equitably" to students' complaints, including claims that school officials knew about misconduct by Dr. Richard Strauss but didn't stop him, the school said Thursday. That office oversees enforcement of a federal law that bars sex discrimination in education.

Advocacy groups including the National Women's Law Center had urged the department to conduct such a review, as was done with headline-making allegations of recurrent sexual misconduct by doctors at Michigan State University and the University of Southern California.

Ohio State's chief compliance officer, Gates Garrity-Rokous, said the school has responded appropriately since allegations were made this spring about Strauss, who killed himself in 2005.

COLLEGE PARK, MD. McNair's dad: Maryland should fire football coach

The parents of offensive lineman Jordan McNair say suspended University of Maryland coach DJ Durkin should be fired.

McNair collapsed during a preseason conditioning drill May 29 and died two weeks later. Durkin was placed on administrative leave Saturday after ESPN reported that coaches had been bullying the players.

On Tuesday, the university said it takes "legal and moral responsibility" for the death.

Tanya Wilson and Martin McNair told ABC's "Good Morning America" on Thursday that Durkin should be more than suspended — he should be fired. McNair says Durkin "shouldn't be able to work with anyone else's kid."

MOSCOW Olympic gymnastics champ Shushunova dies

Elena Shushunova, a Soviet gymnast who won the women's all-around gold medal at the 1988 Seoul Olympics, has died. She was 49.

The Russian Gymnastics Federation said Shushunova "died suddenly" on Thursday. Russian media reported she had complications from pneumonia.

Shushunova scored perfect 10s in the vault and the floor exercise to beat Romanian rival Daniela Silivas by only 0.025 points to win the all-around gold.

Shushunova also won gold in the team event, silver on the balance beam and bronze on the uneven bars, as well as five gold medals at the world championships.

Keeping cool in camp

Titans, Saints use new ways to help players battle scorching heat

By Teresa M. Walker
The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee Titans running back Dion Lewis has been so focused on football with his new team that he didn't realize until a few days into training camp just how special the benches on each sideline really are.

Now he takes a couple of minutes whenever possible during practice to sit and cool off.

Literally. "It's great," said Lewis, who spent the past three years with New England. "It's real hot ... so whenever you use anything to make you cool down a little bit, I think it's a great tool. It's been here for the whole time, but I just realized it like probably last week. So definitely take advantage of that whenever I get a chance."

Keeping football players cool during the sweltering days of training camp is critical, especially in the wake of the heat-related death of Minnesota offensive tackle Korey Stringer in August 2001 and the June death of Maryland offensive lineman Jordan McNair. An attorney for the McNair family says a preliminary death certificate indicates the cause of death was heatstroke.

Old-fashioned tubs filled with water and bags of ice await NFL players, even for teams staying at their headquarters this time of year. A few minutes provides a quick, but very wet, recovery once practice is over.

The Titans and New Orleans Saints both decided to give players a chance to cool off during practice, improving both safety and the workouts.

With a new coach in Mike Vrabel, the Titans put a bench on each side of their three practice fields, giving players a chance to recover when the temperature during morning practices can feel like 90 degrees.

"I don't think our players have done a good enough job of taking advantage of it, but, we're trying it out," Vrabel said.

"Going to Miami and Jacksonville in the early games here, if there's anything we can do to keep our guys as fresh as possible on the sideline, we're going to try."

In hot and humid Jacksonville, the Jaguars have had such cooling benches for years in the shade and near huge fans to use during breaks.

The New Orleans Saints have used a cooling tent for years, even when holding training camp at Millsaps College in Jackson, Mississippi. With the tent kept off to the side of the football fields, it wound up too far away for the Saints to slip over during practices.

This August, an 18-wheeler dropped off what looks like a massive storage trailer. Inside, it's actually a chilly 25 degrees featuring dim lighting and black padded folding chairs.

The Saints can walk in for a quick refresher or sit down to drop the body temperature. If needed, coach Sean Payton can put a whole position group inside at once, especially effective for big men such as offensive or defensive linemen.

"As bodies go in there, it goes to 28," Payton said. "But it's almost three times colder than a tent."

Payton said colleges such as LSU and Alabama are among those already using the cooling trailer. Being in muggy Louisiana, the Saints didn't have to go far to find a company that could help them out.

Payton said when the temperatures soar, teams can't cool players down enough. The trailer allows New Orleans to keep the Saints refreshed enough to practice, not just survive until the final horn signals a blissful end.

"You want to not just be running plays, and then you also have an answer if someone is going through a second-level heat illness or God forbid something more serious," Payton said.

"But, the first thing we want to be able to do is cool the core temperatures down. We've always taken a lot of breaks, so we've handled the heat well. We've had to. But if you went back to Millsaps even, we had a cool tent. This is just much colder."

Browns' Taylor faces Bills; Mayfield, Allen meet

The Associated Press

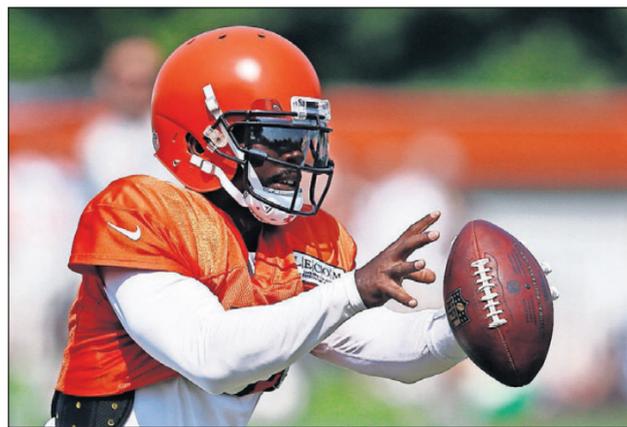

Cleveland has no quarterback competition. The Browns have made it clear that the starting job is Tyrod Taylor's, but that hasn't quieted the buzz around Baker Mayfield, who had a dazzling preseason debut last week.

The No. 1 overall pick will follow Taylor on Friday night and play up to two quarters against Buffalo in his first game action in front of Cleveland fans hoping he can lead them to a brighter future — just not yet.

Browns coach Hue Jackson is adamant about Mayfield learning behind Taylor and said the Heisman Trophy winner is going along with the plan.

"Baker wants to play — we all know that — but I think Baker also understands that when his time comes, the organization and myself will make the best decision when that is, and he gets that," Jackson said. "Right now, Tyrod is our starting quarterback."

Taylor, who went 5 for 5 in two series in last week's win over the Giants, will get a chance to play against his former team. He said part of his drive this season comes from the Bills trading him in March despite him helping end their 17-year playoff drought last year.

"Definitely, how I think it ended there, it's motivation for this year," Taylor said. "Not necessarily for this game, but this year."

Meanwhile, Bills coach Sean McDermott won't say who's starting for his team, but the expectation is AJ McCarron will get his turn after Nathan Peterman started in the preseason opener against Carolina last week. What's intriguing is when Josh Allen, the No. 7 overall pick, will enter the game.

McDermott has insisted that he's being very cautious in not wanting to rush Allen's development. Allen went 9 of 19 for 116 yards and a touchdown in playing the entire second half against Carolina.

For Bills receiver Corey Coleman, Friday's game will be a quick return to a place he couldn't wait to leave. The 2016 first-round pick had two disappointing seasons with the Browns and asked to be traded when he was dropped to second-string. Browns general manager John Dorsey dealt Coleman to the Bills two weeks ago for a seventh-round pick in 2020.

Speaking of receivers, could the Browns have a new one on their roster by kickoff?

Dez Bryant was visiting the team's headquarters in Berea, Ohio, on Thursday and there was a chance the meeting could lead to the three-time Pro Bowl selection signing with Cleveland. The 29-year-old receiver was released by the Dallas Cowboys after eight seasons in April and has been waiting to latch on with another team. He turned down a three-year contract offer from Baltimore, which may still have interest in him.

Elsewhere on Friday night, the Giants are at Detroit, Kansas City is at Atlanta, Miami is at Carolina and Arizona is at New Orleans.

My walk with the Lord

Kalynn Brazeal

I have found over the years that my walk with the Lord has taken me so long to get to where I am... it's a wonder that he hasn't washed his hands of me and moved on to another person.

I discovered the Lord long before a could put a real name to him. When I was younger, there were often times that I would be confused and upset but in my weakness, I would feel the comfort of a great "Father." In my youthfulness and naiveté, I didn't question it... I just accepted it.

I would put a name to that comfort later on in a tiny little Southern church at a 4-way stop in rural Louisiana where my family would all gather. The wide graceful wooden pews of old, the simple décor and the faithful that brought that building to life would make an impact on me that would take years to fully mature.

Through the little kids classes where I learned crafts and simple Bible stories to the sermons that I sat through... trying hard not to wiggle or talk so I would get that church candy. The basic seeds of the gospel were planted.

I remember a few preachers that blurred together in my memories but the farmer that baptized me was missing a finger and used to revel in telling us kids about the gory details. As I got older and started to glean some of the messages that were taught from the pulpit, I came away with one powerful message... you had to live in complete knowledge that you were saved. You had to accept Jesus Christ as your Lord and Savior or you wouldn't see the gates of Heaven.

Maybe it was my faulty memories but I don't remember many other themes or topics in that little church. I remember really hot summer days, the occasional pinch from an aunt for nodding off, and the potato salad from the popular potlucks but not much else.

I knew that I was saved. I knew as I grew older and starting adulting on my own that my salvation was secured... but I didn't know what came next. I was looking for more, deeper and it turns out that my heart was thirsty. My very soul was looking for food.

It would be years before I really understood what I was seeking. I wanted to know the real Jesus. I wanted to learn from the stories in the Bible, even though when I read them myself... they seemed stifled and distance.

My better half and I began the process of trying to find a church that would satisfy this need for more. We learned very quickly that churches are full of people, led by people and that people are fallible. We turned away from organized settings and began searching for lessons and teachings that could give us that insight we wanted.

I was reading a lecture by a teaching preacher that was like a bucket of cold water to my face and my spirit... he noted that we are to remember that those called to teach us are not to be boastful or worshipped... but we are to look at them and their deeds as it points us to Christ.

While I was looking for someone, something to lead me where I wanted to go, the way has been there all along. No preacher or pastor is going to give us what we need. They are simply people called to present the gospel, the Word and through deed and word, point us to Christ. I began to take the materials and the lessons, taking notes and working towards figuring out in layman's terms how each part pointed me towards Christ. The more I worked, the more I hunted... the more I wanted.

One day I realized that I knew none of the "current" songs my kid was singing, because the stations on my radio were set to worship. The romance novels I once collected by the crates were gone and replaced by study guides and spirit food. My walk, faulty in the start, has turned into a run.
