Farmers win regional Tree Farmers of the Year

VERNON — The scenic views at the 3,100-foot high bluff over the Choc-tawhatchee River, the stories of the stage coach and 1830's public ferry on its Lassiter Lake and the fact that Gould Tree Farms has proven itself a conservationist of an endangered pine are some reasons that the property was chosen from among 73,000 tree farms to represent the southeastern region at a national forestry competition.

Owners of the tree farm Jon and Carol Gould have been awarded the Southern Regional Outstanding Tree Farmers of the Year Award from the American Tree Farm System (ATFS). The Goulds tracts are one of four competing for the National Outstanding Tree Farmer of the Year Award, to be announced next month.

The Goulds maintain special measures to ensure water, wildlife and tree farm sustain their integrity and follow regulations. In doing so, the couple has found a vast space to share the recreational and educational opportunities, and history with groups local and abroad.

"What we had really had wanted to do is have the state of Florida's industry and the private landowners recognized," Jon Gould said, noting other southern states such as Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi have been awarded several times for showcasing forestry and Florida, though known of many things, but has only once been recognized on a grander scale for its viability in developing sustainable forests.

Until this year with Gould Tree Farms, the state has never won a regional ATFS award.

"So, this way there's definitely going to be more recognition for Florida forestry in general."

as involved in competition forestry, the Goulds now own four tree farm tracts totaling 655 acres across the Panhandle. Their commitment to sustainability in the forestry industry also led them to be the 2006 recipients of the Florida Outstanding Tree Farmers of the Year Award.

"We were totally thrilled to have gone this far," Carol Gould said, speaking of the regional award. "It was totally unexpected."

One of the ATFS's goals, she added, "is to educate people about the private landowner and about how we are managing our forestry for sustainability of the water, recreational, the product .. and the wildlife."

Former commission candidate sues over pamphlet

PANAMA CITY — A former candidate for a county commission seat has sued the town of Wausau and its volunteer fire chief, claiming her freedom of speech was suppressed when her campaign advertisement was singled out to not be published in a Funday & Possum Festival pamphlet, according to court records.

Patricia Lynn Gothard recently filed a First Amendment lawsuit in the U.S. District of Northwest Florida against Wausau and Samuel Rudd, chief of the town's volunteer fire department. In the lawsuit, Gothard claims that while she was campaigning in 2016 for the Washington County Commission, she was refused participation in a political pamphlet made available by the fire department to the thousands of attendees of the Wausau Possum Festival.

Gothard did not win the election for the commission seat but does not explicitly blame the loss on the lack of publicity.

What happened to the accused Sunny Hills Nazi?

By Eryn Dion

SUNNY HILLS — The recent deportation of 95-year-old Jakiw Palij, a Nazi concentration camp guard, reminded a local woman of a similar story that played out in nearby Sunny Hills, a quiet, rural community in Washington County.

It involved a suspected Nazi collaborator living in the area for years, until Office of Special Investigation agents showed up wanting to speak with him.

The woman, who didn't want to be named in the article but did say she has a lot of Jewish friends who keep up with these stories, wanted to know if the man living in Sunny Hills was Palij — who is coincidentally about the same age as the man in question — and if not, what happened to the supposed Nazi war criminal living in Sunny Hills?

It's a story that might start in the small town of Sunny Hills, but stretches to reach halfway across the globe, to Pensacola, Chicago, Lithuania, Belarus and beyond. It's a story that spans from jail cells to the Supreme Court.

And it's a story that has helped form the foundation of case law, shaping cases like it ever since.

Vytautas Gecas

The man in question, Vytautas Klobas Gecas, was a Lithuanian immigrant. Born on Sept. 25, 1922, Gecas left Lithuania after the war, first immigrating to England in 1947, where he worked for 15 years as a miner, according to Justice Department documents, before moving to Chicago in 1962.

Understandably, being a war criminal or associated

Accused Sunny Hills Nazi deported

The Justice Department ended a four-year stalemate with an accused Nazi from Sunny Hills when it deported him to Lithuania.

Vytautas Gecas, 81, arrived in Vilnius, Lithuania, on Sunday, Justice Department officials said in Miami Thursday.

Gecas told authorities in 1999 that he preferred the comforts of a U.S. prison cell to what could happen to him if he answered questions about his participation in war crimes during World War II.

U.S. District Judge Roger Vinson in Pensacola ordered Gecas incarcerated until he agreed to answer the questions.

During the war, Gecas was an armed member of a Nazi-sponsored unit that murdered thousands of Jews and others in German-occupied Byelorussia, now Belarus, and Lithuania, said U.S. Attorney Michael Patterson and the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations, citing wartime documents.

After the Office of Special Investigations subpoenaed him in 1991, Gecas invoked the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination and refused to answer investigators' questions. He cited his fear of prosecution in his homeland, Germany and Israel.

"The departure of Vytautas Gecas from this country is another important step in the Justice Department's continuing efforts to deny sanctuary in the United States to those who participated in the perpetration of Nazi crimes," said Eli Rosenblum, the director of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations.

Gecas immigrated to England in 1947, working as a miner, until 1962 when he moved to Chicago where he was an electrician, officials said. Later, he moved to Sunny Hills, Washington County. But he never became a U.S. citizen.

Since the Office of Special Investigations was created in 1979, 72 suspected Nazis have been stripped of U.S. citizenship, 58 removed from the country and more than 160 stopped from entering.

The Justice Department also pursued a suspected Nazi in Panama City two years ago. In the midst of the investigation, Michael Gorski, then 78, sold his house in The Woods subdivision and left the area.

with the Nazi regime would preclude someone from being able to immigrate, both to England and the United States. On his immigration and naturalization documents, Gecas claimed to have been a "pupil" during the war years, from 1938 to about 1944, saying he attended a trade school in Kaunas, Lithuania, at the time.

He was given a four-month visa and went to live with a cousin in Chicago, eventually obtaining a green card and becoming a resident alien.

A 1972 telephone directory lists his address as 1826 49th Ave. in Cicero, a Chicago suburb, and his name appears in several obituaries that would suggest he had a large family in the area.

At some point in the 1980s, Gecas packed up and moved from a busy Chicago suburb to the borderline rural Sunny Hills. It's not clear when this move occurred — Washington County official records show Gecas purchasing property in the Oak Hill area in 1981 and 1985 with a Eugenija Gecas, but some sources don't have him actually moving to the area until 1989.

The investigation begins

It's about this time that Gecas' name starts popping up in places that a Nazi collaborator and war criminal wouldn't want to have their name pop up.

A declassified document from 1983 addressed to the Office of the General Counsel lists Gecas with 24 individuals under investigation by the Department of Justice for Nazi war crimes.

Gecas is given the designation OSI (Office of Special Investigations) #639. Under his name, it states that OSI, at the time, had "no identifiable information" — meaning they had documents linking him to war crimes, but could not definitively link him to the Vytautas Gecas in those documents.

Also named on that particular list, OSI #630, is Istvan Eszterhas, who published vicious anti-Semitic propaganda in his native Hungary before and during the war. Eszterhas is the father of famous Hollywood screenwriter Joe Eszterhas, who wrote a screenplay about a woman discovering and coming to terms with her father's Nazi past.

According to OSI documents, the agency had evidence that Gecas was a member of the notorious 2nd Battalion of the Lithuanian Auxiliary Police, which was later redesignated as the 12th Battalion.

The 12th Battalion

Lithuania occupies the rather unenviable space in Europe between Germany and the Soviet Union, meaning every few years, the country would change hands as part of the inevitable east vs. west power struggle.

Originally a part of the Soviet Union, the country was invaded by the Germans in 1941 as part of their ill-fated campaign against the Soviets. By most accounts, the German army encountered little resistance and in Lithuania, where there already had been an anti-Soviet uprising, many welcomed the Germans as heroes.

As part of their occupation, the Germans transformed already existing Lithuanian military units and blocks of volunteers into auxiliary police units known as Schutzmannschaften.

These units took orders from German officers, were paid in German marks and helped carry out deportations and massacres against enemies of the Nazi regime, namely Jews, Roma and communists, in their native countries.

Similar Schutzmannschaften were formed throughout the Baltic countries of Estonia and Latvia, as well as in Ukraine and what would become Belarus.

Among the various auxiliary police units operating in Lithuania, the 2nd Battalion — later to become the 12th Battalion — was notorious in its cruelty. The unit was so brutal that the local Nazi commander once wrote a report back to his superiors protesting the unit's violent means during a massacre of 5,000 Jewish residents in the Belorussian city of Slutsk.

But the events that truly cemented the members of the 12th Battalion as war criminals occurred in Minsk in 1941. The unit, based in Kaunas, moved to Minsk, in what would become Belarus, to meet up with the German 11th Reserve Police Battalion.

During the last few months of 1941, the two battalions participated in the murder of more than 19,000 civilians, including the liquidation of the Minsk ghetto — killing its 6,600 Jewish residents — to make room for Jewish deportees coming from Germany and Western Europe.

The battalion was so notorious that, according to OSI documents, the courts already had ruled that simply being a member and serving in the battalion opened grounds for persecution.

The investigation heats up

Agents with the Office of Special Investigations had obtained documents linking Gecas to the notorious 2nd/12th Battalion, but could find no definitive proof that the Vytautas Gecas in Chicago/Sunny Hills was the same Vytautas Gecas listed in the military documents, as they lacked a date or location of birth. The government, the documents state, couldn't be sure they had the right person.

So the OSI needed to speak with Gecas in person. It's important to note here that at no point was the government trying to charge Gecas with a war crime. Its case revolved around him lying on his naturalization forms to obtain entry into the country, and for that he would face deportation. What other countries did with him after wasn't really its concern, but it would become a factor in the looming court case.

In July 1991, the OSI issued a subpoena, calling Gecas in to answer questions, under oath, about his time in Lithuania during the war.

On Sept. 12, 1991, Gecas and his attorney appeared in federal court in Tallahassee. Under oath, Gecas gave his name, his address and produced for the court a copy of his green card. He refused to answer any questions related to his birth date, information on his immigration forms, his residences during the war, his associations during the war or any military activities he participated in during the war, invoking his right to remain silent under the Fifth Amendment, arguing that answering such questions could implicate him in crimes for which he could be persecuted in Germany, Israel and Lithuania and the punishment for said crimes was, in certain circumstances, death.

Gecas' silence kicked off a legal firestorm and raised the question — when exactly could a person under oath plead the Fifth? His case, and the very similar case of Aloyzas Balsys, helped set the precedent of whether a person could plead the Fifth to avoid implicating themselves in crimes

Legal precedence

for which they could be prosecuted in other countries. Both are cases that continue to be cited to this day.

Not accepting Gecas' silence, OSI attempted to force him to comply with the subpoena by holding him in contempt of court. Gecas fought the motion and the ensuing legal battle stretched on for almost a decade, until finally, in 1997, the courts ruled in Balsys' case that he could be found in contempt of court for refusing to comply with investigators. Faced with the decision of going to jail or answering questions from the OSI, Balsys chose neither and voluntarily left the country in 1999.

The ruling in the Balsys case meant that time was up for Gecas as well. Faced with the choice of complying with the subpoena or being held in contempt of court and going to jail, Gecas chose jail and was sentenced to 18 months — the maximum amount of time allowed — or however long it took him to cooperate, whichever occurred first.

According to Department of Justice records, he was housed in the Santa Rosa County Jail for the duration of his sentence.

On May 5, 1999, in his 70s, Gecas began his jail term.

Prison time

Gecas was in prison, but OSI investigators were faced with a problem — they still didn't have enough evidence to prove Gecas was a member of the 2nd/12th Battalion and have him deported.

Digging for clues, OSI agents and attorneys began interviewing Gecas' roommates and other inmates he came in contact with. They listened to all of his recorded telephone conversations, hoping somewhere he would slip up and implicate himself.

He never did. In November 2000, he was released, and the OSI still didn't have a case.

The big break

Finally, according to agency documents, in 2002 OSI historians began searching the records of all the vocational schools in Kaunas to find a lead.

Of the seven vocational schools active at the time, only three were still running, and their records were largely incomplete.

However, the historians were able to find information on Gecas in the records and located his 1941 graduation certificate. For a second, it seemed like they had the wrong person.

That is, until they dug just a little deeper. Tucked into Gecas' file was a letter written by his father.

The letter actually was concerning Gecas' younger brother, who also attended the school, and in it, his father was requesting a stipend for the younger brother as the elder brother, Gecas, no longer was providing for the family, having run off to join the 2nd Battalion.

Aftermath

For OSI investigators, it was a jackpot and they filed their deportation case against Gecas. Faced with the possibility of going through a trial or leaving the country, Gecas agreed to admit he served in the battalion and agreed to leave the U.S., flying back to Lithuania in August 2003.

From there, the trail goes cold, but several websites had information from the Social Security Office in Illinois showing a Vytautas K. Gecas, born on Sept. 25, 1922, dying on Dec. 13, 2005.

After doing the research (it was a lot of research) we called our question asker back and told her the tale of the accused Sunny Hills Nazi war criminal. So, what did she think of the story?

"What an amazing story!" she exclaimed. "Gee whiz, I cannot believe he was living in Sunny Hills all that time."

Patriot's farewell, in his own words

Before his death, Sen. John McCain wrote this farewell message to the nation he served for most of his life. Today, we offer our editorial space for him to speak his mind one more time.

My fellow Americans, whom I have gratefully served for 60 years, and especially my fellow Arizonans,

Thank you for the privilege of serving you and for the rewarding life that service in uniform and in public office has allowed me to lead. I have tried to serve our country honorably. I have made mistakes, but I hope my love for America will be weighed favorably against them.

I have often observed that I am the luckiest person on earth. I feel that way even now as I prepare for the end of my life. I have loved my life — all of it. I have had experiences, adventures and friendships enough for 10 satisfying lives, and I am so thankful. Like most people, I have regrets. But I would not trade a day of my life, in good or bad times, for the best day of anyone else's.

I owe that satisfaction to the love of my family. No man ever had a more loving wife, or children, he was prouder of than I am of mine. And I owe it to America. To be connected to America's causes — liberty, equal justice, respect for the dignity of all people — brings happiness more sublime than life's fleeting pleasures. Our identities and sense of worth are not circumscribed but enlarged by serving good causes bigger than ourselves.

"Fellow Americans" — that association has meant more to me than any other. I lived and died a proud American. We are citizens of the world's greatest republic, a nation of ideals, not blood and soil. We are blessed and are a blessing to humanity when we uphold and advance those ideals at home and in the world. We have helped liberate more people from tyranny and poverty than ever before in history. We have acquired great wealth and power in the process.

We weaken our greatness when we confuse our patriotism with tribal rivalries that have sown resentment and hatred and violence in all the corners of the globe. We weaken it when we hide behind walls, rather than tear them down, when we doubt the power of our ideals, rather than trust them to be the great force for change they have always been.

We are 325 million opinionated, vociferous individuals. We argue and compete and sometimes even vilify each other in our raucous public debates, but we have always had so much more in common with each other than in disagreement. If only we remember that and give each other the benefit of the presumption that we all love our country, we will get through these challenging times. We will come through them stronger than before. We always do.

Do not despair of our present difficulties, but believe always in the promise and greatness of America, because nothing is inevitable here. Americans never quit. We never surrender. We never hide from history. We make history.

Farewell, fellow Americans. God bless you, and God bless America.

A funeral service for McCain was held August 22 in Arizona, and he laid in state in the Capitol on what would have been his 82nd birthday. He lay in state in the U.S. Capitol on Friday, and was buried Sunday in a private ceremony in Annapolis.

Teens, would it kill you to open a book

Danny Tyree

Call me a nuanced curmudgeon. I'm not so bothered by the AMOUNT of time that teenagers spend with the internet and/or digital devices as by the lack of QUALITY of their pursuits.

I'm reacting to the recent Drudge Report headline "A third of teens haven't read a single book in past year." Researchers from San Diego State University, analyzing four decades' worth of data and publishing the results in the journal "Psychology of Popular Media Culture," show traditional reading devastated by texting, social networking, aimless web surfing and addictive video games.

For instance, in the late Seventies, 60 percent of 12th graders read a book or magazine almost daily; by 2016, even with the availability of Kindle and similar devices, only 16 percent did.

Printer John Peter Zenger risked prosecution for seditious libel in order to hold the colonial governor of New York accountable. Abraham Lincoln read by firelight. Sequoyah painstakingly developed a symbol for each syllable in the Cherokee language. Today's kids? "Wash...hands... after...using...restroom. Do those 25-year-old fossils think we have all day to read these interminable instructions???"

Sure, my generation had shortcuts such as "Classics Illustrated Comics" and Cliff's Notes; but some of us were glad that Shakespeare's immortal words were more complex than "just hanging out. You?"

Yes, we had to learn a lot of things the hard way; but we also benefitted from the accumulated knowledge of prime ministers and explorers and inventors. We pondered the commandments brought down from the mountaintop on two tablets. That's a far cry from hanging on every word of some nitwit who brings out two Tide pods on YouTube.

We used to be able to take lifelong lessons from even the driest literature. I direct you to the movie "Dead Poets Society." But now we're more likely to hear, "Seize the day? I can't even seize my car keys. I've got carpal tunnel syndrome from texting."

Older Americans share a priceless common bond when we can remember where we were when we first saw newspaper photographs of the Kent State riots or John F. Kennedy Jr. saluting his fallen father. Fifty years from now, today's adolescents will probably reminisce, "Remember that girl who sent a topless photo to that boy she sort of liked, and it went viral? Should've won a Pulitzer! Should've won a Pulitzer!"

Sometimes you need something substantive that makes you THINK. And I don't mean like "Your post on Snapchat made me think...that I'd better get a catheter, so I don't miss one minute of the big videogame tournament!"

Don't get me wrong. A number of teens (including my son the sophomore) do share my passion for reading. They learn something from essays and sermons and manuals and investigative pieces and manifestos.

And herein lies the real division of "haves" and "have nots" in our country in the coming years. Youngsters who "get" reading will have life more abundantly. The willfully ignorant will miss out on all the jokes and literary allusions that zoom over their heads. They'll be blindsided when history repeats itself and throw a hissy-fit when no one tells them about the town hall meeting to discuss zoning ordinances.

Maybe they'll really get a comeuppance in the ROMANCE department.

"Want me to play the Naughty Librarian, handsome?"

"What's a librarian?"
"Never mind. Sigh
What's the Cherokee phrase for 'Get lost, loser?'"

A call to preserve judicial independence

Matthew Mangino

James Madison wrote that the "accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary in the same hands ... may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny."

James Madison wrote that the "accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary in the same hands ... may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny."

In America we have three separate but co-equal branches of government — executive, legislative and judicial. The founding fathers created a system of checks and balances that require a certain level of mutual respect.

The judicial branch must be independent and not be influenced by bias or politics. To suggest otherwise undermines the court's independence. Unfortunately, the courts are under attack in this country.

In June 2016, then-U.S. District Judge Gonzalo Curiel of the Southern District of California could not be impartial when deciding the highly contested future of Trump University because of his "Mexican heritage." His vitriol toward the judiciary has been nonstop ever since.

Charles Geyh, an Indiana University law professor and expert on judicial conduct and ethics, told the Washington Post that such bravado is sending a dangerous message, "As the leader of the free world, I should be able to do what I choose. The court shouldn't be able to get involved."

Geyh said Trump's attitude shows a lack of understanding of the equal roles of the three branches of government, specifically of the judiciary's job to serve as a check on the executive branch.

Such attacks upon judges and judicial decisions undermines the legitimacy of the courts. The attacks are not limited to Trump. Recently, Pennsylvania Governor Tom Wolf asked the state's Judicial Conduct Board to review a decision by a county judge who let a father have unsupervised visits with his child before the father beat the child to death and killed himself.

The child's relatives are calling for the judge's removal, and have a petition with 37,000 signatures to bolster their efforts. Not unlike the successful effort of Californians who voted to recall the judge who sentenced a former Stanford University swimmer convicted of sexual assault.

Santa Clara County, California Judge Aaron Persky was removed from office after he sentenced Brock Turner to six months in jail, after prosecutors argued for a 7-year prison sentence, for sexually assaulting a young woman on campus.

Jules Epstein a law professor at Temple University Law School recently wrote in the Philadelphia Inquirer, "We live in a country where the judiciary is under attack ... Americans want and need judges to make tough decisions without looking over their shoulders."

Samuel Stretton, an ethics lawyer told the Inquirer, "You don't get judicial discipline just because a judge makes a decision that turns out to be wrong, as long as it was made fairly, honestly and based on the record."

The sad truth is that we have let politicians put their own personal interests before the interests of the nation. I'm not suggesting blind adherence to the courts. There is always room to challenge an unjust decision.

LAWSUIT

Wausau “and ... Rudd’s actions in concert with one another to ban Gothard’s ad from the town’s Possum Day book violated Gothard’s First Amendment protections of Free Speech,” the lawsuit states.

“By allowing some ads to be included in the town’s Possum Day book, but prohibiting Gothard’s, (Wausau and Rudd) have arbitrarily and without statutory or other authority, suppressed one of the most sacred forms of free speech – political speech.”

In their response, the town argued that Gothard simply did not make the deadline to have an ad published in the pamphlet. Gothard is now asking the court to award compensatory and punitive damages to deter such discrimination of political speech in the future, court records stated.

But as part of Gothard’s lawsuit, she claims that she was the only political candidate excluded from the pamphlet. She pointed to several other candidates, who had not paid for an ad when she did, and still were publicized.

Wausau’s legal representatives did acknowledge many political candidates had not paid for their ads by the time it was sent off for publication. The difference, the town responded, was that those candidates previously had submitted an application.

Gothard had not, court records show.

“On or about May 16, 2016, and more than two weeks after the deadline for submission of an application for ad space in the program had passed, (Gothard) submitted her application and payment,” Wausau’s response to the lawsuit stated. “... (Gothard’s) check for her ad submission was returned to her as her application was untimely.”

According to the lawsuit, the series of events began in May 2016 after Gothard had announced her candidacy for the District 5 seat on the Washington County Commission. She learned then that Wausau’s volunteer fire department solicits advertisements from businesses and local candidates for political office that is available for the thousands of attendees to the town’s annual Possum Festival. Gothard submitted her application and paid $120 days before it was sent off for printing, the lawsuit states.

In July, Gothard’s check was mailed back to her and she was made aware that she would not be included in the Possum Festival pamphlet, she stated.

“When (Gothard) inquired as to the reason her check was returned, she was informed that Chief Sam Rudd refused to allow her ad to be printed in his book,” the lawsuit states. Gothard “was the only District 5 candidate who was denied the ability to place an ad in the program book.”

The lawsuit does not state the reason Gothard was told her ad would not be published. She still claimed that the exclusion was “arbitrary,” had no legal basis and that was a violation of the First Amendment protection of political speech.

Wausau has denied the allegations.

The case is scheduled to go before U.S. District Judge Robert Hinkle in October for mediation.

“We just want people who are in forestry to have a vision of what it’s like to be involved in forestry,” she said.

Jon’s journey into the industry began when he was a young boy who farmed trees with his father A. Harvey Gould at a plantation on Merritt Island, which is located in Brevard County, and where they hand planted 10,000 slash pine. Through three separate occasions, the property would later become imminent domain in the 1950’s for an expanded U.S. Space Program.

“So just by chance he fell in love with this (property),” Jon Gould said of his father after listing a number of other tracts he bought and sold. “He ended up settling down here in this little house over here.”

Jon said his father purchased some other land off of Creek Road where he and Jon planted 50,000 trees. And in 1994, Jon and Carol purchased it.

Throughout the span of his life, from serving in Vietnam as an engineer officer in 1970 to fulfilling a 47-year career as a geotechnical engineer, Jon continued to planting in his father’s honor, purchasing another of his father’s Panhandle tracts in 2003 and 2010. The Goulds went on to purchase two additional timber tracts in 1997 and 2001 – 312 acres total.

The couple has invested heavily into growing longleaf pine, a type of pine that is well known for its resistance to the impacts of climate and pests. Its lumber is exceptional and was once used to build ships and railroads, according to the National Wildlife Federation. The official Alabama tree used to cover 90 million acres, but now it covers less than three-percent of that original acreage.

Several groups and private landowners have collaborated to restore longleaf pine forests, including the Goulds, who are original and long time members of Longleaf Alliance, which works to secure a sustainable for the longleaf ecosystem.

“When you bring back the longleaf, you have prescribed burns and that brings back natural grasses and that brings back the quail – we’re starting to see quail on our land again, which we hadn’t seen in 20 years maybe,” Carol Gould said.

The fire-resistant longleaf takes five to 10 years longer to do the first thinning compared to other pines, Jon Gould said. But foresters can burn out the competition from the very planting, as opposed to other trees that would burn during the early stages.

Along with longleaf, loblolly, slash, shortleaf, Choctawhatchee sand and spruce pines are native to the Gould Tree Farms. According to ATFS, more than 60 species of trees have been identified on the tracks.

“Forests across the U.S. are facing a wide array of challenges – wildfires, insects, invasive weed species, the rising costs of forest management and more. Yet, Tree Farmers take on these challenges and work incredibly hard each and every day to keep their forests healthy and sustainable,” Tom Martin, president and CEO of the American Tree Farm System, said in a statement.

More than one-third of U.S. forests are owned by family forest owners. Altogether, about 20 million forested acres are within ATFS.

The program provides small and private forest owners with the support they need to keep their properties healthy and sustainable. The programs also incorporates a third-party assessment process to certify land management practices.

“Our Regional Outstanding Tree Farmers of the Year take this duty above and beyond. They not only have outstanding properties to show for it, but are spreading the word in their communities about the benefits of stewardship,” Martin stated. “We are proud to honor them and share their stories and accomplishments.”

Caldwell won 43 counties, key urban areas

News Service Florida

TALLAHASSEE — State Rep. Matt Caldwell, who topped three opponents in Tuesday's Republican primary for agriculture commissioner, won 43 of the state's 67 counties, including his home county of Lee and urban centers of Miami-Dade, Palm Beach, Broward and Orange counties.

Caldwell, a real-estate appraiser from North Fort Myers, received 34.6 percent of the 1.5 million votes cast statewide in the primary, enough for a nearly 8 percentage-point victory. In a review of county-by-county numbers, Caldwell also won in Volusia County, swept the Treasure Coast counties of Indian River, Martin and St. Lucie and carried numerous rural counties across the northern part of the state, according to figures posted by the state Division of Elections. Caldwell also finished second in 18 other counties, including Escambia, Duval and Hillsborough.

State Sen. Denise

Grimsley, a Sebring Republican who finished second Tuesday with 26.63 percent of the vote, was the top vote-getter in nine counties: Glades, Calhoun, DeSoto, Hendry, Gulf, Okeechobee, Hardee, Highlands and Bay.

Former state Rep. Baxter Troutman, who heavily self-financed his campaign and finished just behind Grimsley in the statewide vote with 26 percent, won in 15 counties, including Pinellas, Hillsborough, Duval and Polk.

But Troutman, a businessman from Winter Haven, placed second in just 10 counties, including Lee, Collier and Santa Rosa. Grimsley took second in 39 counties, including Miami-Dade, Pinellas, Brevard, Orlando, Palm Beach, Broward, Polk, Volusia, Marion, Sarasota and Seminole. Mike McCaister, a palm-tree farmer and retired Army colonel from Plant City who mustered 12.77 percent of the vote, had his best showings, finishing in third place, in 31 counties, including Palm Beach, Miami-Dade, Broward, Sumter and St. Lucie.

In the Democratic primary Tuesday for agriculture commissioner, attorney and medical marijuana lobbyist Nikki Fried won all but one county --- Dixie --- as she received 58.65 percent of the 1.4 million votes cast in a three-way contest.

Roy David Walker, an environmental scientist from Fort Lauderdale who finished second with 25.5 percent of the vote, topped Fried by 16 votes in Dixie, where 856 votes were cast. Walker finished second in all but nine counties. Homestead Mayor Jeff Porter, who received 15.85 percent of the vote, took second in Columbia, DeSoto, Duval, Glades, Hamilton, Hardee, Jackson and Suwannee counties.

Gordon could drive up gasoline prices

News Service Florida

As Tropical Storm Gordon headed toward making landfall as a hurricane late Tuesday on the northern Gulf Coast, it also threatened to affect motorists' pocketbooks.

The auto club AAA said Gordon could lead to quick increases in gasoline prices if refineries are damaged or forced to go offline. The storm is expected to strengthen into a hurricane before making landfall somewhere between Mobile, Ala., and New Orleans. Last year, when Hurricane Harvey caused refinery outages as it made landfall in Texas, gas prices spiked nearly 50 cents in two weeks due to a decrease in production.

AAA spokesman W. D. Williams said prices could become volatile, as the Gulf of Mexico is home to nearly half of America's gas-refining capacity. "We're going to take a 'wait and see' approach," Williams said. "Fuel prices are up on the stock market today. We haven't seen fuel prices increase because of this, but they certainly have the potential to do so." Even without the impacts of Gordon, fuel prices are up 17 cents a gallon from a year ago. Gas in Florida currently averages $2.80 per gallon.

County Council on Aging to discuss this and other volunteer opportunities.

Labor of love

Time to bottle up summer's bounty for later use

By Ari LeVaux
More Content Now

Labor Day is unique among holidays in that nobody really celebrates it. It lacks the excitement of New Year's, the virtues of MLK Day, the mystery of Easter, the love of Mother's Day, the sorrow of Memorial Day, the unity of the Fourth, the excesses of Thanksgiving and the baggage of Christmas.

A few politicians and advocacy organizations take advantage of a fat, slow pitch to their agenda, which they attempt to further with statements about the importance of labor, and fair compensation for that labor. Then, we cut to school shopping, and the last three-day weekend of summer.

To me, a crowded campground sounds a whole lot more like work than spending some time in the kitchen, putting in some labor to make sure there is yummy food to eat in winter.

It's too bad Labor Day doesn't get more love, because labor is a concept that truly should be celebrated, elevated and appreciated. Good labor makes the world a better place, and makes the laborer a better person. In the kitchen, good labor makes good food. What's not to love about that?

I was at the hardware store recently, and the seasonal aisle was packed with canning jars on both sides. Canning jar sales are booming, because this kind of lovely labor is catching on.

Salsa basics

This Labor Day I made salsa. It's a jar of all trades, the joker in the deck, and the most versatile and valuable component of my pantry. If I need to grab something quick for a potluck or a road trip, or if I have company, a sack of chips and a jar of my own salsa fixes the problem, with extra points for your labor.

If you pour canned salsa on eggs, you have huevos rancheros. Blended with cucumbers, it's gazpacho. With avocado it's guacamole. Mixed with gin and clam juice, it's a drink. By itself, canned salsa is a spicy marinara that goes on eggplant, pasta or pizza.

This recipe assumes basic canning knowledge on your part, and requires basic canning gear. And it requires a food processor, blender or similar way to liquify tomatoes. This liquefaction unit will also serve as a measuring unit, as the quantities are large.

The best tomatoes for this are high-acid slicing or canning tomatoes. Normal tomatoes, that is. Tomatoes that

Salsa is the most versatile and valuable component of the pantry. [ARI LEVAUX]

Canned Salsa

- 10 cups chopped tomatoes (two blender loads)
- 10 cups chopped peppers, seeded as necessary
- 5 cups chopped onions
- 2 cups carrots
- 2 cups cilantro
- 1 cup chopped garlic
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 1 tablespoon garlic powder
- 1 teaspoon black pepper

- 1 cup cider vinegar (to ensure the whole business is acidic and safe)

Puree all vegetables to the max. Add all of the loads to a large pot, stir it all together, and bring to a boil. As it heats, use corn chips to sample the salsa, adjusting salt, black pepper and chile pepper if necessary. Turn off the heat and immediately transfer the hot salsa into warm sterile jars and screw on sterile lids. They will seal as they cool on the counter.

are red and round. The pepper component is where we really personalize the salsa. Any kind of pepper, in virtually any form, can be used, including both hot and sweet. But it's the hot ones that determine not only the heat, but much of the flavor. Dried peppers, pickled peppers, smoked peppers, green peppers, red peppers ... the more the merrier. Diversity is flavor. Just remember to wash your hands before you use the bathroom, as well as after.

All year long, you will enjoy the canned fruits of your labors of love. Give the gift of love in a jar, trade the gift of love in a jar. Heck, if it's legal where you are, go ahead and sell it. After all, Labor Day is about getting paid for your labor.

NASCAR THIS WEEK

The Daytona Beach News-Journal's Godwin Kelly & Ken Willis have covered NASCAR for nearly 60 years combined. godwin.kelly@news-jrnl.com ken.willis@news-jrnl.com

SPEED FREAKS

A few questions we had to ask ourselves

Last year it was Kasey Kahne. Who could be this year's surprise Brickyard winner?

GODSPEAK: Daniel Suarez is my pick to upend the NASCAR apple cart at Indianapolis.

KEN'S CALL: Jamie McMurray showed some life at Darlington and he's racing for his future ... but I'll say Paul Menard. He's done it before.

Jimmie Johnson suggests he can do well if he just makes sure he's in the playoffs. Believe him?

GODSPEAK: Yes, but that ESP voice in my head is saying Johnson will somehow fall out of the playoffs Sunday. It's just been that kind of season for ol' J.J.

KEN'S CALL: Like golfers, racers often think they're just one tweak away from "finding it." In this case, I think they should focus on 2019.

FEUD OF THE WEEK

CLINT BOWYER VS. RYAN NEWMAN

NEWMAN: Newman was slowing to get to pit road and Bowyer, who just got new tires, came flying up and hit Newman, sending both into the wall.

GODWIN KELLY'S TAKE: No comment from Newman. Bowyer blamed it all on lapped cars. "There are lapped cars that are 50 laps down all over the damn place," he said. "That's pretty frustrating."

GODWIN'S PICKS FOR INDIANAPOLIS

WINNER: Martin Truex Jr.
REST OF TOP 5: Kyle Busch, Kevin Harvick, Aric Almirola, Chase Elliott

FIRST ONE OUT: Ricky Stenhouse Jr.

DARK HORSE: Daniel Suarez
DON'T BE SURPRISED IF: This is a "Big 3" race and Truex is next in line for a big race victory.

INDIANAPOLIS

THREE THINGS TO WATCH

1. One and done

The 26-race NASCAR Cup Series regular season comes to a conclusion with the Brickyard 400 at Indianapolis Motor Speedway on Sunday and there could be a surprise ending. There is a mathematical chance that seven-time NASCAR champion Jimmie Johnson won't make the playoffs. "I don't want to be in this position," Johnson said. "We have been around this spot for a while. We have seen it coming."

2. The Indy Open

There are only two playoff spots left in the 16-driver field. If Johnson crashed out early at Indy, it could mean big trouble. "It's just about cleaning things up," Johnson said at Darlington. "I didn't have a great lap in that second round of qualifying that put us back. Unfortunately, we had a loose wheel; and then I missed the commitment line coming in. We've just got to clean those things up."

If everything goes terribly wrong at Indianapolis, Jimmie Johnson (right) might become just a cheerleader for Chase Elliott (left) in the NASCAR playoffs. Johnson has made every playoff field since 2004. [AP/RALPH FRESO]

3. Plates, anyone?

The Indianapolis Xfinity Series race saw a sizeable competition jump from 2016 to 2017 after NASCAR ordered the stock cars outfitted with restrictor plates.

In 2016 there were two lead changes. Running with plates last year the race produced 16 lead changes. The plates were used in the Cup Series for the All-Star Race with great success. Connecting the dots — the 2019 Indy Cup Series race may become a plate race.

DARLINGTON

THREE THINGS WE LEARNED

1. Perfect timing

Brad Keselowski beat race dominator Kyle Larson off of pit road on Lap 346 (of 367) and was able to pull away in clean air for his first NASCAR "crown jewel" victory. "We were running second and that last stop [the pit crew] nailed it and got us out in the lead," Keselowski said.

2. Three cautions

Three quick yellow flags, sandwiched into Laps 312 to 344, determined the outcome of the Southern 500. Keselowski should send Jeffrey Earnhardt (Dale Jr.'s nephew) a thank-you note for spinning on Lap 344 and bringing out the final and decisive caution period and restart.

3. 11th-hour sponsor

Richard Petty Motorsports started slapping STP decals on the No. 43 Sunday morning after STP decided to sponsor the car in an 11th-hour

Brad Keselowski led only 24 laps to Kyle Larson's 284 but got to Victory Lane thanks to a series of quick late-race caution periods. [AP/TERRY RENNA] agreement with "The King." Petty and STP struck their first sponsorship deal in 1972 and have enjoyed a fruitful relationship.

Permanent State School Fund Increases $226,000
Tallahassee, Aug. 31st—Florida's permanent state school fund has increased nearly a quarter million dollars since April 1, 1937, according to a report submitted by J. Edwin Larsen, state treasurer, at the request of Colin English, superintendent of education.

Businesses Should Be Registered With Clerk In New Law
At the last session of the Florida legislature, a new law was passed, House Bill 1175, Chapter No. 20953, known as the "Fictitious Name Law". Certain provisions were set out in the law to protect individuals or partners in business where they operate under any name other than their proper or known called names.

AmVets move toward new building

CHIPLEY - Veterans and volunteers alike didn't shy away from hard work on Labor Day. Post 7 held a fundraiser to raise funds toward acquiring a new building.

"It turned out pretty good - it could have been better, we expected more people," said Bill Arndt, noting the $7 per plate fish fry generated about $370. "Maybe it had something to do with the holidays, maybe a lot of people were out of town."

However, the cause was worthy. The post currently rents the building it operates out of and is in search of a permanent home. Other than a budding VFW in Vernon, AmVets Post 7 is the only other military nonprofit organization in the county.

"We're here to help the community, and the veterans more than anything else," said Arndt, who is an army veteran and second in command at the post and a past commander of the post. "If they need help, with anything - mental health services - we help."

All-in-all, the event served a pertinent part of its purpose: to support veterans.

"We had a real good time," Arndt said. "Sometimes it's easier to talk to another veteran, instead of group therapy. Events like this opens up to another event or another mind to think about other things."

DES MOINES, IOWA Protesters begin march against Dakota Access

About two dozen environmental demonstrators are undertaking a 100-mile march in Iowa to protest the Dakota Access oil pipeline. The Des Moines Register reports that they began their eight-day trek Saturday in Des Moines.

Advocacy groups Bold Iowa and Indigenous Iowa organized the march to show unity against the $3.8 billion, four-state pipeline.

Protesters plan to walk 10-15 miles a day, completing the march Saturday in Fort Dodge.

BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA Argentina: New taxes, ministry cuts amid turmoil

Argentina's President Mauricio Macri announced new taxes on exports and the elimination of several ministries on Monday in a bid to halt economic turmoil that has sent the peso to record lows.

Macri said in a televised statement that he will also allocate more economic aid and strengthen food plans for Argentines who suffer from poverty and have been affected by skyrocketing inflation running at more than 30 percent this year.

"To start building the country we want, we have to balance our accounts with a state that spends less than what it receives," he said.

Tech worries: Parents fret through the ages

By Barbara Ortutay
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — When Stephen Dennis was raising his two sons in the 1980s, he never heard the phrase "screen time," nor did he worry much about the hours his kids spent with technology. When he bought an Apple II Plus computer, he considered it an investment in their future and encouraged them to use it as much as possible.

Boy, have things changed with his grandkids and their phones and their Snapchat, Instagram and Twitter.

"It almost seems like an addiction," said Dennis, a retired homebuilder who lives in Bellevue, Washington. "In the old days you had a computer and you had a TV and you had a phone but none of them were linked to the outside world but the phone. You didn't have this omnipresence of technology."

Today's grandparents may have fond memories of the "good old days," but history tells us that adults have worried about their kids' fascination with new-fangled entertainment and technology since the days of dime novels, radio, the first comic books and rock n' roll.

"This whole idea that we even worry about what kids are doing is pretty much a 20th century thing," said Katie Foss, a media studies professor at Middle Tennessee State University. But when it comes to screen time, she added, "all we are doing is reinventing the same concern we were having back in the '50s."

True, the anxieties these days seem particularly acute — as, of course, they always have. Smartphones have a highly customized, 24/7 presence in our lives that feeds parental fears of antisocial behavior and stranger danger.

What hasn't changed, though, is a general parental dread of what kids are doing out of sight. In previous generations, this often meant kids wandering around on their own or sneaking out at night to drink. These days, it might mean hiding in their bedroom, chatting with strangers online.

Less than a century ago, the radio sparked similar fears.

In the early 1930s a group of mothers from Scarsdale, New York, pushed radio broadcasters to change programs they thought were too "overstimulating, frightening and emotionally overwhelming" for kids, said Margaret Cassidy, a media historian at Adelphi University in New York who authored a chronicle of American kids and media.

Then television burst into the public consciousness with unrivaled speed. By 1955, more than half of all U.S. homes had a black and white set, according to Mitchell Stephens, a media historian at New York University.

The hand-wringing started almost as quickly. A 1961 Stanford University study on 6,000 children, 2,000 parents and 100 teachers found that more than half of the kids studied watched "adult" programs such as Westerns, crime shows and shows that featured "emotional problems." Researchers were aghast at the TV violence present even in children's programming.

Video games presented a different challenge. Decades of study have failed to validate the most prevalent fear, that violent games encourage violent behavior. But from the moment the games emerged as a cultural force in the early 1980s, parents fretted about the way kids could lose themselves in games as simple and repetitive as "Pac-Man," "Asteroids" and "Space Invaders."

Initially, the internet — touted as an "information superhighway" that could connect kids to the world's knowledge — got a similar pass for helping with homework and research. Yet as the internet began linking people together, often in ways that connected previously isolated people, familiar concerns soon resurfaced.

Sheila Azzara, a grandmother of 12 in Fallbrook, California, remembers learning about AOL chatrooms in the early 1990s and finding them "kind of a hostile place." Teens with more permissive parents who came of age in the '90s might remember these chatrooms as places a 17-year-old girl could pretend to be a 40-year-old man (and vice versa), and talk about sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll (or more mundane topics such as current events).

Shares mixed amid US-Canada concerns

TOKYO — European stock markets mostly rose on Monday, after Asia closed lower, amid worries about trade friction between the U.S. and Canada and subdued investor activity due to a U.S. holiday.

KEEPING SCORE: France's CAC 40 was up 0.1 percent to 5,410, while Germany's DAX lost 0.2 percent to 12,338. Britain's FTSE 100 gained 0.9 percent to 7,498.

ASIA'S DAY: Earlier, Japan's benchmark Nikkei 225 lost 0.7 percent to finish at 22,707.38. South Korea's Kospi shed 0.7 percent to 2,307.03. Hong Kong's Hang Seng fell 0.6 percent to 27,712.54, while the Shanghai Composite index was down 0.2 percent at 2,720.73.

TRADE WORRIES: Investors had hoped the U.S. and Canada would finish the outlines of a revamped NAFTA pact after the U.S. and Mexico announced a preliminary agreement. U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer said last week that talks will resume Wednesday.

Coast into a new job

Beach towns are where opportunity is high

By Jeffery Marino
ZipRecruiter.com

As the labor market continues to contract, employers everywhere are having a tough time finding the talent they need, even in some of the most desirable beachside cities in America.

Lots of people want to live on the coast, which is perhaps one reason why the median home price in San Francisco is currently pushing $1.4 million. Though San Francisco is an extreme example, the cost of living by any beach is certainly a barrier to entry, and that barrier is typically relative to the quality of the local job market. The median household income in San Francisco, for instance, is more than $100,000 a year, which is why people are able to sustain living in one of America's most expensive cities.

Based on data from the ZipRecruiter Job Market Index — which calculates the level of job opportunity, median income, housing affordability, public health and access to public transit — the ability to live and thrive in a beach town is becoming more accessible to workers who were once limited to mere California dreamin'.

The West Coast dominates our list of the best beachside job markets, with only Jacksonville, North Carolina, and Bangor, Maine, representing the Eastern Seaboard. San Francisco ranked highest in the index for beachside job markets and has one of the most favorable job-to-applicant ratios among all of the coastal markets featured.

Opportunity is even higher on California's Central Coast, where there are three jobs for every applicant and competition is lowest within the well-paying health care and technology industries.

One caveat to keep in mind, and something employers in these communities ought to heed, is that labor shortages in the top California markets may be the result of migratory patterns.

According to the Census Bureau's latest estimates, California had a net migration loss of about 1,000,000 residents from 2007 to 2016.

recession and ensuing recovery as the cost of living continued to increase and wages remained stagnant. As of June, California was the only state on this list where wages grew at a slower pace than the national average.

However, the state government's move to increase the minimum wage to $15 per hour by 2022, and the fact that competition for talent has risen greatly, should cause wages to start growing again.

Healthy habits for a great school year

By Melissa Erickson

Gearing up for a great year? A key factor in school success is making smart and healthy choices a habit in the household, said Dr. Mary Gavin, a pediatrician and senior medical editor at KidsHealth.org. She recommends a routine each day that includes time for:

- A healthy breakfast.
- Physical activity and exercise after school, so that kids have a chance to let off steam before settling down to do homework.
- Homework.
- A regular bedtime that allows for enough sleep depending on a child's age and needs.

Plan meals ahead

The change in schedule doesn't just affect kids. "Planning ahead is really the key to getting meals on the table during the busy back-to-school season," Gavin said. "Plan your meals before the start of the week so that you know what's for dinner each night. Grocery-shop for everything on your list the weekend before." Prepping food on the

"A parent is a child's best advocate. So it's important for parents to meet with teachers at the beginning of the school year to share important information about their child. weekend can help save time during the busy week.

"Wash salad greens and cut up veggies and fruit. Store healthy snacks or lunch items like cheese and crackers in small containers or individual baggies so that all the kids have to do is grab and go," Gavin said.

Communicate with teachers

"A parent is a child's best advocate. So it's important for parents to meet with teachers at the beginning of the school year to share important information about their child," Gavin said. "Tell teachers about any health problems, food allergies or special needs that your child has — especially those that may affect learning."

If your child needs special accommodations, parents should set those up for a child ahead of time.

"For example, some kids with vision problems need to sit closer to the chalkboard, others may need more time for tests. If your child needs accommodations such as these, you may need to request a 504 Plan. If your child is struggling in school, talk to your teacher about an educational evaluation," Gavin said.

Parents can work with educators to design customized 504 educational plans that legally ensure students with physical or mental impairments are treated fairly at school.

If you need help explaining a child's situation, KidsHealth.org has Special Needs Factsheets for educators that explain how certain health problems may affect learning.

"These are great for parents to give to teachers. We have many health conditions including asthma, diabetes, ADHD, food allergies," Gavin said.

Visit kidshealth.org/en/parents/classroom/factsheet.

"Share anything about your child's personality that you think would be helpful to know, such as your child's preferred learning style, individual strengths or challenges. Also, ask the teacher about expectations for the class so that you can support and reinforce those messages at home," Gavin said.

Immunize on time

Children entering kindergarten need to have their immunizations up to date to begin school while older kids who've missed any vaccines should get them before school starts, Gavin said.

"If your child has an ongoing health problem like asthma, be sure to get all prescription medicines refilled before school starts. If any medicines or devices like an inhaler need to be taken at school or remain with your child during school hours, get a doctor's note. Make sure the school nurse or anyone else who might be giving medicines or administering an inhaler or EpiPen knows how to use it," Gavin said.
