Planning approves land use designations

By Diane M. Robinson
The News | @HCTA_Diane

CHIPLEY – Washington County Planning Commission approved land use changes and a development review application when they met in regular session on October 2.

Ron Novonglosky and Samuel Miller each requested to change portions of their land from agriculture to Low Density Residential. Novonglosky's 12.7 acre tract is located at 1159 Mockingbird Lane and Miller's 7 acre tract is located at 1170 Mockingbird Lane.

Novonglosky says his request for the change is due to the possibility of building a home in the future on the site. Miller asks to change his for possible home building as well.

Both requests were unanimously approved.

Courts of Praise Church, located at 1720 Clayton Road, submitted a request for a development review application for a 2,276 square foot addition to their existing site. The church plans to expand on their fellowship hall and improve their parking lot.

Commissioner John Gay asked about the stormwater runoff and how that would be handled.

County Planner Steve Cramer stated it had been approved by engineers.

"Engineers have approved the stormwater management plan on our end," said Cramer. "Everything is set to move ahead."

Nestle Waters of North America is expected to be on the agenda at the next regular session of the planning commission to request land use changes to tracts of land at Cypress Spring.

Washington County Planning Commission will meet again in regular session at 5 p.m. on November 6.

WCSO deploys taser, man charged with multiple crimes

By Staff Report

WASHINGTON COUNTY – Washington County Sheriff's Office released dashcam footage of a WCSO deputy, who conducted a traffic stop involving 28-year-old Charles Nicholas McNeil on September 28.

McNeil is facing felony charges in Washington County, which includes battery on a law enforcement officer after he became violent and attempted to flee during the stop according to a report from WCSO.

Just after noon, a WCSO deputy observed a man operating a tractor on Douglas Ferry Road. The deputy became concerned after witnessing the tractor leave the roadway several times and conducted a traffic stop.

According to the official release from WCSO, during initial contact with the driver, the deputy was provided a false name. The driver, who was later identified as McNeil, advised he did not have any identification on him at the time and his driver's license was not valid.

As the deputy asked him to step down from the tractor, he performed a pat search of McNeil. During the search, a knife and a partially labeled prescription medication bottle, containing pills, were located in his pocket, stated the report.

When the deputy began to detain McNeil, he turned away and aggressively attempted to flee.

As the deputy continued to apprehend McNeil, the suspect violently struggled with the deputy, hitting the deputy as he attempted to pick the deputy up and slam him to the

Putnam says trade deal falls short for Florida farmers

By Jim Turner
News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE - Florida Agriculture Commissioner Adam Putnam would like the renegotiated and rebranded North American Free Trade Agreement to do more to help the state's farmers.

And he's not alone, as U.S. Sen. Marco Rubio, R-Fla., also expressed concerns about the absence of relief for Florida agriculture in the revamped trade pact announced late Sunday.

Putnam, who has long been a critic of the 24-year-old NAFTA, pointed to a need for more work to help Florida farmers who compete with growers in Mexico.

"I am disappointed that this new agreement has no new protections for Florida fruit and vegetable producers, who for too long have suffered from Mexico's unfair trade practices despite our best efforts," Putnam said in an email Tuesday.

"Our department, Florida's congressional delegation and industry groups have fought hard to protect our specialty crop industry since the inception of NAFTA, and we will continue to do so as this new agreement moves forward," Putnam added.

Putnam has argued for years that pepper and tomato growers and other Florida farmers have struggled against Mexican counterparts who swamp the U.S. market each winter with low-cost produce.

Officials from the U.S., Mexico and Canada announced the new deal late Sunday, after President Donald Trump made revamping NAFTA one of his priorities.

The deal, which needs congressional approval, includes numerous issues, ranging from auto manufacturing and Canadian dairy imports to a dispute-settlement system. Trump, who campaigned in 2016 arguing that NAFTA was poorly negotiated and hurting American workers and manufacturers, has proposed naming the revised pact as the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement.

Rubio spokeswoman Olivia Perez-Cubas said in an email Tuesday that "our concerns for Florida fruit and vegetables remain."

A little more than a year ago, Rubio and U.S. Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., were among Florida lawmakers who urged U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer to push for measures to help the state's agriculture industry.

Last week, after initial details of a deal with Mexico were announced, Rubio and Nelson introduced legislation intended to help Florida farmer growers bring trade cases against Mexican growers. Under the proposal, farmers could initiate cases with the Department of Commerce and the U.S. International Trade Commission if they can prove dumping happens seasonally rather than year-round, according to a news release from the senators.

Rubio said in a statement that the bill is aimed at preventing dumping of Mexican winter produce into U.S. markets and is needed because of the absence of "a memorandum of understanding or suspension agreements with the Mexican government covering seasonal and perishable produce imports."

In April, Putnam sent a letter to Lighthizer urging him to consider Florida's agriculture industry in negotiating changes to NAFTA.

Putnam told Lighthizer that "family farms in Florida and other states have found no relief from these unfair practices in our current trade laws or the current NAFTA agreement."

In 2016, as the business-recruitment agency Enterprise Florida talked about expanding Florida's role in international trade, Putnam said it was already too late to undo damage to the state's growers from NAFTA.

"The entire tomato industry has realigned and very much is a shadow of its former self," Putnam said in November 2016.

At the time, Putnam said the most helpful thing Trump could do would be to enforce protections in the trade agreement that are supposed to keep American producers from being undercut by such things as product dumping and currency manipulation.

"Prior administrations just didn't enforce the letter of the treaty to begin with," Putnam said. "Gosh, just that alone would be a step in the right direction."

ground. During the altercation, McNeil fled again, at which time the deputy deployed his taser, striking McNeil. McNeil then fell to the ground, hitting his head on the roadway, losing consciousness.

Emergency Medical Services were called to treat McNeil immediately.

The release states that before EMS arrived, McNeil regained consciousness and provided his correct name and date of birth to law enforcement.

Once McNeil was transported to a nearby hospital, WCSO was informed that he would need to be transported to another facility for further medical treatment. WCSO states that at this time, McNeil was issued a Notice to Appear for felony court on the charges of battery on a law enforcement officer, resisting arrest with violence, providing a false name to law enforcement, and possession of a new legend drug.

After further investigation, WCSO found the Massey Ferguson tractor driven by McNeil was stolen from a 71-year-old man. WCSO says they have obtained a felony arrest warrant on additional charges of grand theft pertaining to the theft of the tractor.

McNeil was released from prison earlier this year and is currently out on bond on unrelated felony drug charges out of Bay County.

Washington County Sheriff Kevin Crews says WCSO operates with professionalism and integrity in order to protect the communities from safety risks.

"We operate the Washington County Sheriff's Office with the highest level of professionalism and integrity," said Crews. "More than 99% of our arrests are without incident or injury. When a suspect chooses to violently attack or attempt to overpower one of our deputies, it is our responsibility as law enforcement to react in such a way that protects our communities from further safety risks."

Judge blocks medical marijuana license process

By Dara Kam
News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE --- In what could be another delay for Florida's burgeoning medical-marijuana industry, a Tallahassee judge agreed Wednesday to block state health officials from moving forward with the application process for highly sought-after medical marijuana licenses.

Leon County Circuit Judge Charles Dodson's verbal order during a hearing came nearly two months after he found that a state law, passed during a special legislative session last year, runs afoul of a constitutional amendment broadly legalizing medical marijuana.

In August, Dodson ruled that a cap on the number of medical marijuana operators included in the law "directly contradicts" the amendment, which was overwhelmingly approved by voters in 2016.

Dodson also decided that the 2017 law is unconstitutional because it requires marijuana operators licensed by the state to cultivate, process, and dispense medical marijuana --- something known as "vertical integration" --- as opposed to breaking the activities into separate parts for licensure.

And the judge ruled that the state improperly restricted who could get licenses. The law ordered health officials to grant licenses to operators who were already up and running in Florida or who were involved in litigation as of

Jan. 1, 2017. The law also required a license for a black farmer who meets certain conditions and set aside a preference for applicants with certain ties to the citrus industry.

The citrus and black-farmer provisions amounted to what is known as a "special" law, Dodson ruled in August. The judge found the 2017 law restricts rights granted under the Constitution and that plaintiff Florigrown LLC "has a substantial likelihood of success" in its claim that the law conflicts with the amendment.

Despite multiple findings in his August decision that the statute is unconstitutional, Dodson waited until Wednesday to issue the temporary injunction sought by Florigrown, a company that was turned down for a license. Florigrown is partly owned by Tampa strip-club operator Joe Redner, who recently won another ruling against state health officials in a case in which he is seeking to grow his own marijuana to "juice," something the 77-year-old's doctors recommend to prevent a recurrence of lung cancer. The state has appealed the ruling in the earlier case.

"It's good news for me. It's good news for Florigrown. It's good news for the patients and the Constitution of the state of Florida," Redner said in an interview following Wednesday's hearing.

In August, the judge set a Wednesday deadline for health officials or the Legislature to resolve the deficiencies with the law. Wednesday marked one year after a deadline imposed by the constitutional amendment for health officials to begin issuing identification cards to patients who qualify for medical marijuana.

"Another two months has passed, and I do believe now we're at the point where Florigrown will suffer irreparable harm absent the entry of a temporary injunction and that, given the public interest that can't be more clearly stated than the public stated in the medical marijuana amendment, that allowing this process and procedures going through by the department is not in the public interest," Dodson said Wednesday.

Luke Lirot, a lawyer representing Florigrown, accused health officials of having "ignored this court's observations ... with impunity."

"It's quite candidly shocking that the court would issue an order and it would be so robustly ignored by the Department of Health after there was a clear indication that they needed to do something," he said.

But Dodson appeared to sympathize with the predicament of state health officials, saying they were in an "unusual situation" trying to follow an unconstitutional statute.

In a video recording of an August rules hearing played by Florigrown's lawyers Wednesday, state Office of Medical Marijuana Use Director Courtney Coppola said she was "following the law" by moving forward with the application process for four new licenses.

"What Miss Coppola was saying was, we're following the statute, which is what agencies normally are required to do, but the statute is just unconstitutional," the judge said. "I'm sure the Legislature was trying its best to comply with the Constitution, but they just didn't do that in this circumstance."

Dodson said he would issue a written order granting the temporary injunction by Friday and set a Nov. 19 hearing to consider summary judgment in the case.

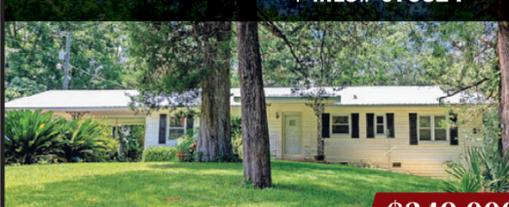

Health officials said they will review Dodson's order when it is issued.

"This ruling does not impact the availability of medical marijuana in Florida. Low-THC and medical marijuana has been and continues to be available to the more than 160,000 qualified patients by more than 1,500 qualified physicians through 14 approved medical marijuana treatment centers in 55 locations," agency spokesman Nick Van Der Linden said in an email.

But Dodson's ruling "blocks the Florida Department of Health from proceeding forward with the application process for additional medical marijuana treatment center licenses, over the 14 that have already been issued," Ari Gerstin, a lawyer who represents Florigrown and who participated in Wednesday's hearing by telephone, told The News Service of Florida.

Supreme Court opens its latest term with only 8 justices

For the second time in three years, the U.S. Supreme Court begins a term shorthanded. The high court opened a new session Monday with only eight justices, as the Brett Kavanaugh nuclear conflagration continues.

When the justices were in a similar situation in 2016, they indicated a preference for taking on less divisive cases. That cautious approach is likely to be duplicated today, given the heated emotions currently raging over the panel.

"It's a little bit of a fraught period for the court," Justice Elena Kagan admitted during a September conference in New York. "We should be aware of the environment and not unnecessarily exacerbate the divisions that unfortunately exist."

That's all well and good, but the justices mustn't ignore their duty for fear of inflaming passions. The court is charged with ensuring the executive and legislative branches operate within their constitutional authority — and that shouldn't change simply because the Trump presidency has disrupted the body politic.

In fact, the court at this point has more than three dozen cases on its docket, and the justices heard a potentially significant dispute right out of the gate. The first case argued Monday involved the Endangered Species Act, a rare frog and property rights. The decision will have ramifications for how far the administrative and regulatory states can go to limit a private landowner's use of his own property.

Other cases set for this term address the constitutionality of civil forfeiture against a backdrop of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition on excessive fines, the extent of a defendant's protections against double jeopardy, conflicts between state laws and federal land restrictions and efforts to punish sex offenders even after they've served their time.

In addition, the cases already accepted will have a bearing on the separation of powers, the Fifth Amendment's takings clause, the Fourth Amendment's protections against unreasonable government searches and seizures and the scope of class-action lawsuits. It's also a good bet the justices will eventually decide to hear appeals involving the president's immigration policies, including the DACA controversy, and the partisan battle over state redistricting and gerrymandering.

Regardless of whether Judge Kavanaugh survives the attempted auto-da-fe or some other jurist is eventually selected, the justices this term should avoid compromising their principles in an effort to appease the Trump resistance and instead simply stay true to the ideals of freedom and individual liberty enshrined in our nation's founding document.

ANOTHER VIEW

Public servants and the public good

Arthur Cyr

General George C. Marshall is what people used to call a dedicated public servant. As Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army, he did essential work to get a dangerously unprepared America at least partially ready for World War II, and then led the mammoth organizational effort required for victory.

Later, he served as Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense during the trying post-war years, as the Cold War began. The Marshall Plan, the comprehensive aid and reconstruction program for Europe, began implementation in 1948 — 70 years ago. That year governments created the Organization for European Economic Cooperation to distribute aid, succeeded in 1960 by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, a global organization.

Marshall wanted to lead the Allied invasion of Europe at Normandy, but that mission went to protégé Dwight Eisenhower. President Franklin Roosevelt considered Marshall indispensable, and said he could not sleep at night if the general were not in Washington.

Along with remarkable executive ability, Marshall had great diplomatic and political skill. Soon after the attack on Pearl Harbor, Japanese land forces trapped U.S. troops in the Philippines under the command of General Douglas MacArthur. President Roosevelt was emphatic that MacArthur should not become a Japanese prisoner of war, and ordered an evacuation to Australia.

Despite personal dislike and mistrust of MacArthur, a view widely shared, Marshall followed up thoroughly to ensure MacArthur's escape, that media and public knew this was not MacArthur's decision, and the government of Australia welcomed him. Marshall also decided MacArthur should receive the Medal of Honor.

We do not discuss Marshall much today. He put little personal information in the public record, and never wrote memoirs. He feared inadvertently revealing details best kept private.

Also — incredibly from a contemporary perspective — he felt strongly that patriotic citizens should not benefit financially from government office. For him, public service was literally just that. Fortunately, Forrest Pogue authored a masterful comprehensive biography of this great leader.

Another such public servant is Charles Bowsher, who 10 years ago this month, visited Carthage College in Wisconsin. For 16 years starting in 1981, he was Comptroller General of the United States, a low-profile but enormously important post that oversees budget management on behalf of the Congress.

Earlier, Bowsher spent a total of a quarter century with top accounting firm Arthur Andersen. In public remarks, he provided a detailed tour of the government horizon. He gave high marks to Presidents George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton for impressive budgetary discipline, even in the face of harsh criticism, which probably cost the former leader reelection.

In comments echoing Eisenhower, he emphasized that wars are easy to begin but often hard to end, using Iraq as an example. His presentation was an informative, inspiring history lesson on the vital role of government in averting as well as handling crises, from the economy to war, and the great difficulty of instituting change in the public sector at any time.

Carthage this month hosts former Governor John Baldacci of Maine, a leader who emphasizes bipartisan collaboration. Currently, he chairs the Northeast-Midwest institute, a nonprofit working to improve environment and infrastructure among the eighteen states in the Midwest and Northeast of the U.S.

Jokes abound, but political divide no laughing matter

Tom Purcell

With all the vitriol in our politics — with all the disagreement that is tearing our country apart — we could all use some levity about now.

Here's one joke I think we can all agree with:

A man wearing a ski mask jumped into the path of a well-dressed man and stuck a gun against his ribs.

"Give me your money," said the mugger.

"You can't do this," said the well-dressed man. "I'm a U.S. congressman!"

"In that case," said the mugger, "give me MY money!"

"Being a parent is more challenging than ever. We live in a time when parents must censor C-SPAN!"

Which reminds me of the one about the father who used the never-ending shenanigans in Washington to teach his son an important lesson.

"Son, you should never steal, lie or cheat."

"Why, Dad?"

"Because the government hates competition!"

The U.S. Senate is agitating millions of Americans. The allegedly august body of distinguished minds is supposed to give thoughtful pause to our political process — but is giving us a Jerry Springer show instead.

That's why the words of legendary humorist Will Rogers are truer today than when he spoke them during the Great Depression:

"The Senate just sits and waits till they find out what the president wants, so they know how to vote against him."

"About all I can say for the United States Senate is that it opens with a prayer and closes with an investigation."

"Senators are a never-ending source of amusement, amazement and discouragement."

With our senators being held in such low regard, this joke will resonate with many:

A minister goes to a barbershop on Capitol Hill.

The barber, thanking him for his service, says "No charge." The next morning, the barber finds a thank-you note from the minister.

A few days later a police officer gets his hair cut. The barber, thanking the officer for his service, says "No charge." The next morning, the barber finds a thank-you note from the police officer.

A few days after that, a senator gets his hair cut. The barber, thanking the senator for his service, says "No charge." The next morning, as he arrives at his shop, a dozen senators are waiting on the stoop.

Public discourse is suffering in our country right now — one could argue it is non-existent, which is a dangerous turn for our country.

According to dictionary.com, "discourse" is "communication of thought by words; talk; conversation."

Thoughtful conversation is how we arrive at political consensus — how we vote for political leaders, make our laws, pick our judges.

Know Your Classmates™

Mini Fact:
Know Your Classmates Day is Friday, Oct. 26.

October is National Bullying Prevention Month. The Mini Page talked with experts at Beyond Differences, an organization that works to stop bullying before it happens, about a program called Know Your Classmates™.

Although Know Your Classmates is a program for middle schoolers, its messages are important for elementary students to learn, too.

What is social isolation?

Some kids feel left out or invisible when they're at school. They might feel lonely and different from everyone else. This is called social isolation.

When you think about it, we're all different from each other!

What makes you, you?

- Your family's traditions _____
- Your race _____
- Your gender _____
- The things you like to do _____
- Your religion _____
- What else? _____

If you make a list of these and other parts of your identity, then compare it to another student's, they might be very different. Or you might have a lot in common. But instead of being afraid of or mean to people who seem different, we can get to know them and learn about their backgrounds and traditions.

Who belongs? Who doesn't?

Have you ever been left out? How did that make you feel? The Know Your Classmates program asks kids to think about what it means to "belong."

For example:

- Would you rather be part of the "in" group or be an outsider?
- Do you go along with others who exclude certain classmates?
- How would you feel after a week, a month or a whole school year of being isolated from others in your class?

What are stereotypes?

A stereotype is an idea that people have about a group or thing that may not be true. For example, some people think all kids with Asian ancestors are really smart.

But sometimes stereotypes are hurtful. Sometimes people judge others unfairly based on race, gender or other characteristics before they even know the person. These judgments are called biases.

- Do you think you've ever been stereotyped by others? Were the stereotypes positive or negative?
- Do you have biases against certain people or groups?
- How can you overcome your biases?

Our American society

You have probably already learned that some families have more money than others. Some people worship in a church, others in a mosque, and some not at all. Some kids in your school may have dark skin, or eyes shaped differently than yours.

In the United States, we have a pluralistic (pler-al-IS-tic) society, where people from many different backgrounds live among one another. For some people, this causes conflicts.

But people who have different identities can also share values, or beliefs, such as equality and freedom.

- What positive or negative experiences have you and your family had living in your community?
- Do some of those experiences make you feel excluded? Do others make you feel included?
- Why should we talk about those experiences with other people? How can we learn from them?

Eco Note

We're still in hurricane season. Hurricanes are the most violent storms on Earth. They form near the equator over warm waters of the Atlantic or eastern Pacific Oceans. When the wind speeds reach 74 mph, the storm is officially a hurricane. These storms are at least 50,000 feet high and around 125 miles across. The eye is around 5 to 30 miles wide.

KEN'S CALL: The ending was so crazy and dramatic, it's easy to say yes. But without the playoff drama, would it still be great? I say yes, let's take the plunge and do one or two more.

What does Ryan Blaney's win do for him going forward?

GODSPEAK: Hey, he is the first Roval race winner. That's something. Lee Petty won the first Daytona 500. I forget who won the sixth 500. If nothing else, a confidence builder for young Ryan.

KEN'S CALL: Not much, since we're now out of Rovals and, presumably, Blaney won't get that big of a break again. But the trophy is nice.

FEUD OF THE WEEK

MARTIN TRUOX JR. VS. JIMMIE JOHNSON

Johnson made a desperate passing attempt for a last-lap win but instead got into Truex, spinning both and springing Ryan Blaney to an unexpected victory.

GODWIN KELLY'S TAKE: Johnson is so hungry for a win, he didn't think about points, and it cost him. "Took myself out of a shot at the championship," he said. Truex spun Johnson on the cool-down lap.

GODWIN'S PICKS FOR DOVER

WINNER: Martin Truex Jr.
REST OF TOP 5: Kyle Busch, Kevin Harvick, Joey Logano, Chase Elliott

FIRST ONE OUT: Matt DiBenedetto
DARK HORSE: Jimmie Johnson
DON'T BE SURPRISED IF: The "Big 3" go back to their dominating ways at the "Monster Mile."

DOVER

THREE THINGS TO WATCH

1. Round of 12

A dozen drivers advanced into the NASCAR Round of 12 playoff segment. The four left behind were Jimmie Johnson, Austin Dillon, Denny Hamlin and Erik Jones. Of the 12, seven are from the Ford camp, including all four Stewart-Haas Racing drivers, counting Clint Bowyer, who jumped over the cut line. "Pretty crazy," Bowyer said. "I didn't expect that to happen, but I knew it was gonna be wild."

2. Roval hangover

Dover International Speedway is a pretty tough track, but after drivers got their first taste of the Charlotte Roval, the "Monster Mile" should be a breeze. The inaugural Roval race produced two late-race cautions, which helped determine the outcome. The Roval even offered up a "Big One" crash like you will see at Talladega in a few weeks. A total of 15 cars piled up in Turn 1 just five laps from the dramatic finish.

3. "Big 3" again

NASCAR's "Big 3" all made it through to the Round of 12 and sit atop the points standings, which were recalculated for the next three-race playoff segment. Kyle Busch leads, with Kevin Harvick only five points off his rear bumper. Martin Truex Jr. is a mere 17 points behind Busch in third place. Busch limps in after crashing out on the Roval. "That kind of sucked, but guess it's a good thing it didn't matter for us," Busch said.

CHARLOTTE

THREE THINGS WE LEARNED

1. Never over, until

NASCAR proved again that it's never over until the checkered flag falls (and sometimes, beyond that). Ryan Blaney was third on the final lap when he watched Jimmie Johnson wreck into leader Martin Truex Jr. in the final turn. "That's not the way I'd want to do it," Blaney said.

2. Pinball wizard

Kyle Larson's No. 42 Chevy was torn up, but he completed his final lap while hitting the wall twice, passed Jeffrey Earnhardt, got just enough points to forge a three-way tie for 11th place in the standings and got into the next playoff round on a tiebreaker. "Pretty hectic last lap for me," Larson said.

Ryan Blaney (12) drives past the wrecked cars of Jimmie Johnson (48) and Martin Truex Jr. (78) to conquer Charlotte's infamous Roval course. [AP/CHUCK BURTON]

3. Titan falls

Johnson is a seven-time NASCAR champion who has fallen on hard times. He is riding a 52-race losing streak stretching back to June 2017. When he saw a chance for a win, he overdrove his car and wrecked. "I wish I wouldn't have been so focused on a race win," he sighed.

QUESTIONS & ATTITUDE

Compelling questions ... and maybe a few actual answers

Your Roval review?

All's well that ends well, right? Or, if not "well," at least in chaos. The closing three laps were the best drama NASCAR has seen in a long, long time — Kyle Larson's rattletrap, Jimmie Johnson's dive-bomb, and finally the wait to see who's in and out of the playoffs. As Steve Phelps takes over as NASCAR president this week, you have to believe he might ask, "Should we consider more of this?"

Who's Hailie Deegan?

She's a 17-year-old Californian who won in Idaho Saturday night in NASCAR's K&N West Series, becoming that series' first female race winner. K&N is a NASCAR feeder series considered one step below the top three national circuits (Trucks, Xfinity, Cup). Deegan not only won, but won with a bump-and-run on her teammate in the final turn. That's racin', they say, so keep an eye on her.

IN BRIEF

LISBON, PORTUGAL Ronaldo left off Portugal squad for matches

Cristiano Ronaldo was left off Portugal's national team squad for a pair of upcoming matches, the decision coming Thursday as the soccer great fights a rape allegation in the United States.

Ronaldo has been accused of rape by Kathryn Mayorga, who says the player assaulted her in Las Vegas in 2009. He has denied the accusation.

Ronaldo was left off the squad for Portugal's second game in the UEFA Nations League at Poland on Oct. 11 and a friendly match in Glasgow against Scotland three days later.

Portugal coach Fernando Santos said Ronaldo also will not be called up for the next round of international games in November.

MOSCOW Russia accused of hacking sports world

In Russia, sports and the government are closely intertwined.

Top athletes hold military ranks, Olympic medals are a matter of national pride, and champions receive luxury cars in Kremlin ceremonies.

So when Russia was accused of doping its way to the top, the Russian state hit the sports world with a wave of hacker attacks, says an indictment unsealed Thursday by the U.S. Department of Justice and the FBI.

More than 250 athletes' medical records were published and confidential data from some of the world's biggest sports organizations — the Olympics, world track and field, FIFA — was published as Russia prepared to host this year's soccer World Cup.

Scott Brady, U.S. attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania, said Russia was seeking revenge for some of its team being barred from the 2016 Summer Olympics over widespread drug use and cover-ups.

"This began with a disclosure of Russian state-sponsored doping programs for its athletes. In other words, Russia cheated," Brady said. "They cheated, they got caught, they were banned from the Olympics, they were mad, and they retaliated. And in retaliating, they broke the law, so they are criminals."

ST. ANDREWS, SCOTLAND Hatton in contention despite hitting spectator

Tyrrell Hatton bounced back from a poor start, including a wayward tee shot that struck a spectator on the head, to register a 2-under 70 and move within two strokes of the first-round lead at the Dunhill Links Championship on Thursday.

A female fan was pictured bleeding from a head wound after being hit by a drive from defending champion Hatton on the 15th hole at Kingsbarns, one of three courses staging the event.

New depths

Former coaches, foes stunned by winless start by once-proud Nebraska program

By Eric Olson
The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska's descent from the top of the college football hierarchy is going on two decades, yet those white helmets with the red block "N" remain an iconic piece of the sport's lore.

That might be why the Cornhuskers' 0-4 start is so jarring, and not just to people inside the program and a fan base that has sold out Memorial Stadium every game since 1962.

Nebraska's worst start since 1945 has been a major story line this season, especially after the splashy hire of 2017 national coach of the year Scott Frost, who completed Central Florida's two-year turnaround with a 13-0 record before he returned to his home state and the program he quarterbacked to a share of the 1997 national championship.

The Huskers have lost 14 of their last 18 games, and last weekend they dropped an eighth in a row for the first time in the program's 129-year history. They're listed as 17.5-point underdogs for their game at Wisconsin on Saturday night.

Even the coaches who used to get beaten badly and regularly by the Huskers are having difficulty grasping the current state of the Nebraska program.

"I never thought I'd see the day," said Glen Mason, 0-9 against the Huskers as Kansas coach from 1988-96 and now a Big Ten network analyst. "I would have thought they would have been better. Not great, but I thought he would make them better right away."

"Unthinkable. Shocking, really," said R.C. Slocum, whose Texas A&M teams went 1-3 against the Huskers, including a 39-point loss in the 1997 Big 12 championship game.

"It just breaks my heart," said Jim Walden, who was an assistant at Nebraska under Bob Devaney in the early 1970s and went 1-7 against the Huskers as Iowa State coach from 1987-94.

Nebraska ranks fifth all-time in wins, and no team won more from the 1970s through the '90s under Devaney and Tom Osborne. The Huskers went 309-56-5 for an .842 winning percentage over the three decades, and won all or part of five national championships and 17 conference titles.

Nebraska is 150-87 (.633) since, hasn't won a conference championship since 1999 and hasn't appeared in the final Top 25 in six years.

"Look at every program in the country, they went through some dog days, so to speak," said Kansas State coach Bill Snyder, 5-14 against Nebraska over two stints from 1989-2010. "They'll build their way out of it, and I have great confidence in that. It doesn't surprise me a bit. College football, it's hard to be surprised by anything."

Schools such as Alabama, Michigan, Notre Dame, Penn State and Southern California have endured lean times, but Nebraska's down cycle has been lingering.

Mason, Slocum and Walden said the turning point was the decision by former athletic director Steve Pederson to fire Frank Solich after a 9-3 season in 2003. Solich had played for Devaney, was an Osborne assistant and went 58-19 in six years. Bill Callahan, Bo Pelini and Mike Riley followed.

"I don't think Bill understood the Nebraska program," Mason said. "Right away he talked about changing the recruiting and doing away with the walk-on program. Being a guy who had to compete with Nebraska back in my Kansas days, I was thinking, 'Are you crazy?' That walk-on program was the envy of every program in the country."

Osborne's triple-option offense also gave the Huskers a unique identity that attracted top running backs, and his teams played what Mason called "suffocating" defense. Those days are long gone. Offensive coordinators on the previous three staffs had a penchant for the pass, and since joining the Big Ten in 2011 the Huskers have allowed more than 50 points in nine conference games, including five of the last seven.

"We need Nebraska to be good," Walden said. "We need teams that are not just the sparkling Ohio States and Alabamas of the world. You need that good ol' Midwest hard-core Nebraska-type mentality to be good. I always felt we were leaders to show the way you could get things done, and not necessarily in a glamorous city or a big school. Nebraska was what we used to call a blue-collar college, a blue-collar football team, and we loved the fact it was a farming community and people loved the school and this team and it was everything to them. I still do believe that's important."

Father: College programs offered son pay

By Tom Hays
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The father of a top-rated college basketball prospect testified Thursday that his son was offered thousands of dollars on the sly to play at major programs before a corruption scandal derailed the promising player's collegiate career.

At a federal trial over allegations about dirty money in college hoops, Brian Bowen Sr. said that an aspiring agent, Christian Dawkins, told the father he could pocket $50,000 if his son played at the University of Arizona, $150,000 at Oklahoma State or $100,000 at Creighton. Bowen said there was some interest from Oregon but didn't recall cash offer.

Bowen told a Manhattan jury it was his understanding the offers were being made by assistant coaches at the schools, though he never spoke to them directly about money. He said the Oklahoma offer, which included an additional $8,000 for a car, came from then-assistant coach Lamont Evans, a defendant in the investigation who's pleaded not guilty.

Dawkins, former amateur coach Merle Code and former Adidas executive James Gatto, have pleaded not guilty to they committed fraud by secretly funneling money from Adidas to families of prospects to get them to attend colleges sponsored by the athletic wear company. The son, Brian Bowen Jr., eventually landed at Louisville, an Adidas school, after the defendants engineered a promise of $100,000 for his family.

Gatto's attorney and a taped conversation in evidence at the trial have suggested the deal to sign with Louisville had to compete with an undisclosed offer to lure Brian Bowen Jr. to Oregon, which is sponsored by Nike. Oregon has denied it knew of any deal.

The criminal case announced last year charging the three men with fraud resulted in the school pulling the son's scholarship before he could ever play and firing its legendary coach, Rick Pitino.

Before his testimony about the alleged offers, the elder Bowen grew emotional when a prosecutor first brought up his son, who goes by the nickname "Tugs."

"Is Tugs in college?" asked Assistant U.S. Attorney Edward Diskant.

"No, he's not," Bowen responded.

When the prosecutor asked why not, Bowen dropped his head into his hands and wept, prompting the judge to call a recess.

Brian Bowen Jr. now plays professionally in Australia.

In good faith: No parking zone

By Rev. Tim Schenck
More Content Now

I spend a lot of time wandering aimlessly through the church parking lot. It never used to be this way. My general philosophy had always been that parking lots were designed for cars, not people. But then we got a new puppy, and suddenly I find myself walking around the parking lot like a lost itinerant preacher holding a leash rather than circuit riding atop a horse.

Cooper is now 5-months-old, a curiously adorable mix of basenji, German shepherd and chihuahua. We've been doing puppy classes (which, apparently, are no longer referred to as "obedience school"), but in the months before figuring out leash walking, Cooper and I have spent a lot of time strolling through the church grounds, with particular emphasis on the parking lot. For some reason, he has an affinity for it.

One lesson this has revealed, besides the fact that he's no longer motivated by the cheap training treats, is the joy of exploring familiar spaces in new ways. I mean, if someone had asked me a few months ago about the church parking lot, I would have been able to sketch it out on a napkin. I know its basic shape, the upward slope of the driveway, the proximity of the church, the Memorial Garden and playground.

But I didn't really know it. I never paid attention to the way the light hit the pavement through the trees at different times of the day or how particular angles of church architecture stand out from different vantage points or the beauty of the wild vegetation that forms a natural barrier around it. Forced intimacy with the familiar brings new perspective, opening fresh insights and inviting wonder.

That's an unexpected gift that can arise even through someone as seemingly mundane as walking a dog through a parking lot.

And it leads to reflection upon what other newly revealed joys we may be missing that exist in our midst. It may be someone in our lives with whom we're familiar but never really taken the time to truly know. Or a daily ritual like a commute or a walk around the neighborhood that we no longer fully see because we're too distracted or we find ourselves staring at our phones or it's just become too familiar.

People often have this experience with the Lord's Prayer — it has become so rote, so familiar, that we fail to hear the power behind it. When we put it in context, we recall that Jesus teaches it to the disciples after they ask him how to pray. Think about that. If you were allowed to ask Jesus one question, this might not be at the top of your list, but it would likely make the top five. And he gives us a simple, poignant, direct, example of how to converse with the divine.

Fall is a wonderful time to open your heart and mind to the wonders of the familiar. Unlocking the potential beauty of that which surrounds us, invites us into the world that exists beyond first impressions.

It gives us the opportunity to break through the familiar in order to experience things with fresh eyes. I encourage you to discover your own parking lot moment

Leadership class charged to be stewards of growth

By Brandon Lovering

LEAD Washington County
Steering Chair

Leadership... it may mean different things to different people, but the common theme is direction. Without direction, there is no plan. Without a plan, there is no growth.

Lovering

The LEAD Washington County Steering Committee has spent the past year developing a new leadership program designed especially for Washington County. The inaugural LEAD Washington County Class came together

Meet LEAD Washington County Class #1 on PAGE 11

Sept. 6 to begin a journey of personal leadership development, community exploration and purposeful, positive influence on our County's evolving environment.

The program's 10-month curriculum includes days focused on key areas of: health care and human services, business and industry, agribusiness, infrastructure, courts and government, education,

Last week, I got in a “tizzy” (aka stressed out). I had a huge district-wide program coming up where people weren’t pulling their weight, the end of the budget year was looming, I had just participated in a webinar taught by people who have no clue about what I do on the county level, there were interviews going on for a critical role in our organization and my son just called to tell me that he needed a new mouth-guard because the one I bought him the week before had been taken.

There are just some things we can’t control, but in my work life, I’ve worked purposefully to control those stressors that negatively impact my attitude and productivity.

Do you ever feel the need to just disconnect with technology? With cell phones practically attached to our hands, smart watches becoming the latest must-have gadget and fully functional laptops you can tuck in your purse or under your arm, it’s difficult to get away from technology.

But I’ll wager that it’s also a choice that we can control with some self-discipline.

One of the most important things I’ve learned is that an email or text doesn’t necessarily warrant an immediate answer.

Take some time to actually think through an answer or solution or whatever’s being asked of you. Don’t be afraid to tell someone that you need to think about it before you give an answer. And if you have a colleague that is constantly asking, “Did you read that email I send you?” get in the habit of telling them “No, but when I do, I’ll have a well-thought out response to whatever it is that you need.” Turn off email notifications and minimize the program; setting times to check and respond to emails will help control the flood of information that can drown you.

Another thing that has kept me sane is set a “pretend my door is closed” policy. Unless I’m on a long phone call or participating in a web meeting, my door is usually wide-open. But that doesn’t mean that every time something pops into your head that I’m going to stop what I’m doing to talk.

I’m not going to stop working if you just need to chat. I may sound harsh, but once my train of thought is interrupted, it’s difficult for me to

How many of you know what a Chamber of Commerce is really about and what it does for a community? Chambers vary in size and make-up in countries throughout the world. Still, the Chamber of Commerce is first and foremost a business that supports and advocates for businesses, like yours.

Almost every tax dollar collected, has, as its root, a business that caused that dollar to happen. It is through businesses and commerce that our society thrives. So, it begs the question, who looks out for your businesses? Your Chamber of Commerce.

Let me give you an example. Workman’s comp is a big issue with all businesses, and one of the biggest insurance concerns in Florida with which businesses struggle. This issue has been discussed during Florida’s legislative sessions many times.

So, who talks to our legislators on behalf of our businesses? Your Chamber of Commerce does.

When it comes to overregulation, it is the Chamber that raises this matter with our local legislators. After all, they are the ones that vote on legislated bills, so it is important that they hear from us – the Chamber and their member businesses.

Locally, we do our best to help all businesses. As you may know, the Chamber administers the Chipley Redevelopment Agency (CRA) which is always trying to improve on ways we can help businesses within the CRA designated area both physically and legislatively.

The Economic Development Council focuses on growth throughout the County by working with

WestPoint Home, Inc. invests in e-commerce delivery system

By Steve Alford
Senior Vice President
Global Manufacturing &
Lean Implementation

Starting from a click of your mouse while sitting at home, to delivery of product at your doorstep the next day is now an every day occurrence. In order to meet the fast-paced demands of the American consumer, WestPoint Home has totally revamped the way we do business with a multi-year investment of capital into our facility in Chipley, Florida. Utilizing advanced

Lean manufacturing methodology, WestPoint Home has designed a World Class E-Commerce delivery system, which can reliably ship nearly "100% on time delivery" with zero mis-shipment within 24 hours of the receipt of the order. The Grand Reveal was

Sept. 18 with fantastic results. WestPoint Home Chipley facility is set up to exceed the approximate doubling of demand for the 2018 holiday peak season.

OUR STORY

In 2013, WestPoint Home celebrated 200

years of its heritage as a home fashion pioneer. Our legacy can be traced to Stevens, established in 1813, with the manufacture of woolen broadcloth.

Throughout the past 200 years, WestPoint Home and the companies that represent our heritage have been leaders in the innovation, sale and (of course) fashion of home textiles, experimenting with new fabrics to meet our customers' ever-changing needs. Our legacy is simple: quality, affordable, and fashionable products for every customer. And we still lead the way.

Technical assistance grant to study best sewer, water sites

By Ted Everett
Economic Development Officer

Recently, Washington County was awarded a technical assistance grant of $35,000 for a comprehensive sewer and water study. The award was made by the Department of Economic Opportunity (DEO), Florida's agency for economic development.

The Chamber's Economic Development Council put this grant opportunity forth to the county.

This grant piggybacks on a previous study funded by Enterprise Florida, a sub agency of DEO.

Everett

The study, authorized and paid for by Enterprise Florida, was designed to look at every rural county in Florida and determine suitable sites for economic activities.

Leotta Location and Designs LLC performed this study. Victor Leotta's firm has been involved in identifying sites and working with companies looking to expand or set up throughout the Southeast.

Leotta's firm identified 13 possible sites in Washington County and those sites were then ranked by the EDC in order of best to worse. Using this information, the EDC then wrote a grant that would seek to study ways to get water and sewer to the optimal sites as well as a study for possible new spray fields and/or a central site that in the future could be used by several of our municipalities.

Discharging treated water is a big concern for the county and the City of Chipley.

Look at it this way, if you cannot discharge effluent, you cannot have additional businesses hook up to water lines thus limiting growth opportunities.

We all want more job opportunities, new businesses that will help the County's tax base.

With this grant, we can start to develop a longer-term plan for addressing these issues that can and will have an impact on future growth. I will write a follow up article after the study is complete and we have a better picture of what will need to be done to grow our future.

Gov. Scott meets Chamber during campaign stop

CHIPLEY — Knocking on a million doors across the state, Florida Governor Rick Scott visited Washington and Holmes counties Monday, Aug. 13, to remind voters of his track record and why they should open the door for him to represent the state as Senator at the nation's Capitol in the November elections. In these photos, the governor mingles at Hard Labor Creek with Washington County Chamber of Commerce members and local residents.

re-focus.

I prioritize my most taxing tasks for mornings because that's when I'm most productive. I've made that clear in my office to the people I work with on a daily basis, but they also know that I will happily set up times to talk when we can both focus and work on a goal together.

I feel pretty confident making this generalization: we are all juggling multiple balls in the air or spinning multiple plates regardless of our industry or place of employment. My best advice is to take control of the things that negatively affect you and clearly articulate to people you work with how you are going to positively work to change them to create a less-stress work life.

LEAD Washington County announces first class

The Washington County Chamber of Commerce has launched the first class of its new leadership development program. LEAD Washington County will provide a diverse group of emerging and existing leaders with opportunities to enhance their community knowledge, civic engagement and leadership skills so they may affect positive change in Washington County.

Over the 10-month program, the Class will learn about all aspects of industry, health and human services and government in Washington County through in-field visits, trips and contact with current leadership. Class members also participate in programs that develop their personal leadership development, and, working as a team, have the opportunity to address a real-time need or problem in Washington County.

For more information about LEAD Washington County contact the Chamber at 850-638-4157. The inaugural LEAD Washington County class members are as follows:

Jennifer Adkison is the QA manager with Metric Engineering, and is on the LEAD WC Steering Committee.

Tracy Lynette Andrews is the local manager with Gulf Power Company in Chipley.

Marisa Clark Everett is vice president and Financial Center manager with First Federal Bank in Chipley.

Ted Everett is the executive director of the Washington County Chamber of Commerce.

Nicole Barefield is publisher of the Washington County News and Holmes-County Times-Advertiser.

Philip Horvath is the lead pastor at Rivertown Community Church in Chipley.

Heather Lopez is the tourism director for the Washington County Tourist Development Council.

Brandon Lovering is vice-president of One South Bank.
