Hunters Spring suspect blames ants

AMANDA MIMS
Chronicle

A 65-year-old Crystal River man was arrested Friday after two women claimed he exposed himself and performed a sexual act while watching them and their two young children at Hunters Spring Park in Crystal River.

The suspect, 65-year-old James Watkins, of 316 N.E. Second St., Lot 7, denied the accusations.

One of the alleged victims, a 22-year-old Beverly Hills resident, said they were in the beach area at around 10 a.m. when she looked over and saw him performing a sexual act while sitting on the ground about 15 feet away.

"You could see right up his shorts. He had no shame," she said. The woman, who had her 2-year-old child with her, told her friend, who also had a 2-year-old child there, to get the children out of the water immediately and they called authorities.

A sheriff's deputy arrested Watkins at the park shortly after the women reported the incident. When the deputy approached Watkins and asked him what went on at the park, Watkins said he had an ant in his shorts biting his genitals and he had to get the ant out, according to his arrest affidavit. Later, Watkins told the deputy he exposed his genitals and brushed the ants off, but said he never performed a sexual act.

Key Training Center consumers join the runners on Saturday to finish the six-day, 28th annual Run for the Money.

Chronicle

A group of runners smiled as they made the final steps in a 180-mile journey that ended Saturday at the Key Training Center. It wasn't a large group, but there were hundreds of people waiting for them at the finish line with applause, cheers and lots of hugs.

Saturday marked the end of the Run for the Money fundraiser for the Key Training Center, a nonprofit organization that serves adults with developmental disabilities. The Key serves 300 clients and the event raises scholarship money for 56 clients who do not have the financial assistance they need to receive care.

By the time Run for the Money fundraising ended at 6 p.m. Saturday, the Key had nearly $224,000 for those clients. Run for the Money usually brings in about $200,000 for the organization each year.

"We didn't have a goal set" for this year's Run for the Money, said Key spokeswoman Iris Whittaker. "We knew the people of Citrus County would come through for us and they did with God's blessing. We are very, very happy and we thank everyone who made it possible."

In addition to the run, fundraising activities included a telethon that lasted all day Saturday. Numerous community organizations helped by having their own fundraisers for the Key.

Saturday's festivities included the Run for the Money Arts and Crafts Fair and indoor games and entertainment at the Key's Chet Cole Life Enrichment Center.

Chris Moling, president of the Citrus Road Runners club, has been participating in the event for more than 10 years and ran 28 miles during Run for the Money this week.

"The Key is fantastic, absolutely great," he said. "The community's really lucky to have it."

Crews hurry to plug oil well

Bonnie breezes by

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Crews hurried to get back to work on plugging BP's leaky oil well Saturday after Tropical Storm Bonnie fizzled, and engineers hoped for a window of clear weather long enough to stop the gusher for good.

But with peak hurricane season starting in early August, chances are the next big storm is right on Bonnie's heels.

"We're going to be playing a cat-and-mouse game for the remainder of the hurricane season," retired Coast Guard Admiral Thad Allen said Saturday. Sure enough, another disturbance already was brewing in the Caribbean, although forecasters said it wasn't likely to strengthen into a tropical storm.

In the past 10 years, an average of five named storms have hit the Gulf each hurricane season. This year, two have struck already — Bonnie and Hurricane Alex at the end of June, which delayed cleanup of BP's massive oil spill for a week even though it didn't get closer than 500 miles from the well.

"Usually you don't see the first hurricane statistically until Aug. 10," said Dennis Feltgen, a spokesman for the National Hurricane Center in Miami. "The 2010 hurricane season is running just ahead of a typical pace."

Bonnie pushed back efforts to solidly seal the well by at least a week, said Allen, the government's point man on the spill and a veteran of the Coast Guard's rescue mission after Hurricane Katrina.

Jerry Fout and Karen Burns have reunited after years apart. Fout, under Hospice care for a progressive lung disease, says the two will get married Friday.

Couple plan for happily ever after

According to statistics from the Agency for Health Care Administration (ACHA), an average of 684 people in Florida are under hospice care on any given day. Most often, hospice connotes the end of a person's life.

However, for some people, like Jerry Fout of Crystal River, in many ways hospice means life has just begun.

On Friday, Fout, currently under the care of HPH Hospice for end-stage COPD, will marry the woman he let slip away 40 years ago. He plans to live happily ever after with her by his side.

NANCY KENNEDY
Chronicle

Theirs is a wild and crazy, convoluted, confusing, tragic and hope-filled tale that began 40 years ago in South Florida.

Jerry Fout, a 21-year-old Navy sailor from Ohio, was on maneuvers off the coast of Fort Lauderdale. At night, they pulled into the pier and went on shore leave.

Karen Burns was a high school senior in Fort Lauderdale, just 17 years old. One night she hopped on board a Navy ship docked at the pier, just to take a look.

"She came walking on the ship to see it, and as I was walking up some stairs our eyes met and they were glued on each other," Fout said. "We ended up going out that night."

by mid-August, but Allen said he wouldn't hesitate to order another evacuation based on similar forecasts.

"We have no choice but to start well ahead of time if we think the storm track is going to bring gale force winds, which are 39 mph or above, anywhere close to well site," Allen said.

Hurricane season ends Nov. 30.

Even though the evacuation turned out to be short-lived, it revealed one important fact: BP and the federal government are very confident in the temporary plug that has mostly contained the oil for eight days.

They didn't loosen the cap even when they thought they'd lose sight of it during the evacuation, although in the end, the real-time cameras that have given the world a constant view of the ruptured well apparently never stopped rolling.

Ironically, the storm may even have a positive effect. Churning waters could actually help dissipate oil in the water, spreading out the surface slick and breaking up tar balls, said Jane Lubchenco, leader of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

worthwhile, said Moling, one of about 20 runners who participated in the relay.

"Once you get here and hear the sirens and the cheering, it makes it all worth it. The clients get very excited about it and it gets our excitement level up. It's not about us - it's about what this represents."

Inside the center, Key clients danced, socialized and enjoyed time with family and friends.

"Today, for me, is a celebration," Whittaker said. "It's a celebration of the support the citizens of Citrus County give us and of the accomplishments of the consumers - that's what this is all about."

Some who attended the celebration Saturday described exactly what the Key represents to clients and their parents and loved ones. Mostly, it's support, friendship and quality of life.

For 79-year-old Joan Verity of Inverness, "It's a place of miracles." Verity and her husband John moved to Inverness 19 years ago to be near the center for the sake of their son David, now 41, who has Down syndrome and is physically disabled.

"It's a life saver."

Without the Key, she said, David would sit at home all day with nothing to do. Now he's taking a computer course at the local college and he's teaching her about computers.

"My husband's 81. I'll be 80 soon enough, so we have to have someplace we feel confident that he's going to be taken care of, which I think is a concern of most of the older parents."

During the celebration Saturday, David Verity moved around freely on the Key property, something he doesn't get to do in most places.

"Today is a good fun day for the kids," she said. "They can dance, they can see the runners come in and they have activities out here. It's sort of a community day where everybody comes together. It's also a good day for everybody in Citrus County to learn about what's going on at the Key, because a lot of people don't know."

Another parent, Cybil Souls, of St. Petersburg, was moved to tears while sitting with her husband Edward and their son, Dorian, who recently became a Key resident. Dorian Souls is one of the Key's unfunded clients.

"It's just overwhelming," she said about the atmosphere at the Key Training Center.

"We're always trying to impress each other (in society). When you come here, it's just love, kindness, dignity and compassion. You don't see all of this other stuff that's out there that's really unimportant. This is about life."

Tim Robb, a 36-year-old Homosassa resident and Key client, said he used to spend much of his time at home before he started working with the center. Now he has a job and that makes him happy.

Key clients "are people who face remarkable challenges every day of their lives and they just keep going," Whittaker said. "It's amazing to work at the Key Training Center and to be with individuals and meet them when they first come and over the years watch them grow, develop and become more independent through the work that is done here."

"The work that we do could not happen without the support of the citizens of Citrus County through their direct donations, through wills and bequests, through their support at the (Key's) thrift stores and garden center. All these things make it possible for us to provide the essential services to these precious individuals that are thriving because of it."

Love struck, Fout decided to "miss the ship's movement" and stay on shore a bit longer to be with Burns. In other words, he went AWOL, no money, just the clothes he was wearing, sleeping on the beach.

Early one morning a couple of sheriff's deputies patrolling the beach found him and the next thing Fout knew he was in jail. Eighteen days later, someone from the Navy came to get him out and he was on a plane to Charleston, S.C.

Fout and Burns started writing to each other, making plans to get married when Burns graduated high school and turned 18 on July 29, 1971. Meanwhile, Fout had gotten out of the Navy and moved to Tujunga, Calif., where his family had relocated.

He also got himself a new girlfriend.

Under the impression Fout was still intent on marrying her, Burns sold her car, packed up everything and moved to California to join her soul mate.

"His family loved me," she said. "I was heartbroken."

After a couple of weeks of staying with Fout's family while he was seeing someone else, she called her parents to send her money so she could come back to Florida.

"He took me to the airport

- with his girlfriend - so the two of them could see me off," Burns said. "I loved him still, every day of my life."

"I went on with my life," she said, "but I still thought about him every single day."

Over the years she had wanted to contact him, but thought he didn't love her and would not want to hear from her. However, as she found out many years later, the opposite was true.

"After I left California in 1971 he went and got my picture tattooed on his arm, so I guess he really did love me," Burns said.

Jerry Fout worked for the forestry service in Northern California and as a state park ranger in Arizona. He married several times, one marriage lasted a day and an evening, one lasted 15 years.

He moved from Arizona, back to Ohio, to Florida, back to Ohio again. Burns stayed in Florida, but she didn't stay single. She, too, married several times.

But she never stopped loving and wanting Jerry Fout.

In October 2004, she searched for him online and called the Jerry Fout listed in Ohio, hoping it was him. She recognized his voice on the answering machine and left him a message: "If this is the Jerry Fout that got out of the Navy in 1971 and lived in Tujunga, Calif., this is Karen."

Because she was married, although unhappily, she left

HOSPICE FACTS

- The first hospice in the country was established in 1973. In 1982, Congress established the Medicare Hospice Benefit.
- Hospice care focuses on maximizing the quality of remaining life for patients with end-stage illnesses.
- In 2006, nearly 1.3 million patients in the United States received hospice care.
- There are now more than 4,500 certified hospice providers in the country.
- The number of providers has more than doubled in the past 6 years.

her work number - and waited.

Two weeks later, he called.

In January 2005, Fout sold his house in Ohio, packed up his truck with pots and pans and clothes and drove to Florida in 16 hours. He wasn't going back.

Ten years earlier, he had been diagnosed with COPD, a progressive lung disease, and his doctor had told him the cold Ohio winters were bad for him.

He got himself a motel room and the next day Burns called in sick at her job.

"It was fantastic seeing him again," Burns said. "We picked up right where we had left off more than 30 years before."

Fout said, "I was at the motel and she said, 'You can't go back. I'm not going to lose you a second time.'"

Burns told her husband she was in love with someone else and said she wanted a divorce. She and Fout found a place to live and have been together ever since.

In 2006, they moved to Citrus County and currently live in Crystal River.

All these years they had put marriage on the back burner. They were together and that was all that mattered.

But then Fout's COPD started getting worse and nearly every other month he was in the hospital, unable to breathe.

"With his last time in the hospital, I said, 'That's it! We're getting married,'" Burns said.

His doctor recommended he be put on hospice care.

According to Wendy Hall, community liaison for HPH Hospice, being placed on hospice care isn't an automatic death sentence.

"A doctor has said he falls within the qualifications of hospice, but we don't know what's going to happen with them," she said. "But their quality of life is such a blessing to them right now."

"Mentally, I feel so much better, because of the care I'm getting from hospice," Fout said.

Nurses visit him at home and see that he gets the correct and necessary medications. A chaplain sees to his spiritual needs, such as performing his marriage to Burns on Friday.

Oxygen is Fout's constant companion. He tires easily and has trouble breathing sometimes when he walks across the room. But he has good days, too. He helps Burns with the cooking and dish washing when he can.

"We know that one day I might not wake up, and we've talked about that quite a bit," Fout said. "We've talked about me going somewhere else and her moving back down where her family is, but we both don't want that. We want to stay together for as long as we can."

"After all we went through," Burns said, "with different marriages and all the problems and then to meet again - we were meant to be together."

"We're happy," Fout said. "We have each other."

Deadline nears for voter registration

Citrus County Supervisor of Elections Susan Gill has announced that the deadline to register to vote or change party affiliation for the Aug. 24 primary election is Monday, July 26. Anyone who is not registered by that date will be unable to vote in this election. In accordance with Chapter 97.055 F.S., the registration books must be closed on the 29th day before each election and must remain closed until after that election. Voter registration and party changes will be accepted but only for subsequent elections.

People often fail to register to vote because they do not want to be called for jury duty. This law has been changed and jury lists are now selected from driver's license records.

If you have any questions regarding your voter registration status, contact the elections office at (352) 341-6740.

New ballot envelope to save postage costs

Due to the increase in postage costs for flat mail, the Citrus County Supervisor of Elections Office has changed the size of the mail ballot envelope.

This change will save the elections office on the cost of mailing the ballot to voters and saves voters postage costs when returning the ballot. The cost to return the primary election ballot is 44 cents. Postage is determined by the size and weight of the ballot.

Voters who have requested mail ballots need to expect the smaller, standard-size envelope in place of the larger envelope. The steps to return the ballot by mail will be the same: Return the ballot by mail, bring it to an early vote site or deliver it to the elections office in Inverness or Crystal River. Per Florida statute, mail ballots cannot be accepted at the polling place on Election Day. Voters with questions or concerns can contact the elections office.

The elections office will begin mailing mail ballots after Monday, the last day to register or change party for the primary election. The deadline to request a mail ballot is Aug. 18. Request a mail ballot by calling 341-6740 or go online at www.vote.citrus.com.

Mandatory sewer rule on table for BOCC

On the Citrus County Commission agenda for the regular Tuesday meeting is a public hearing for consideration of an ordinance that would require mandatory hook-up to county sewer lines within 365 days when county lines become available to improved residential and business lots.

The public hearing will be at 4:15 p.m. during the regular commission meeting. The commission meetings, which begin at 1 p.m., are in the commission chambers in the county courthouse in Inverness.

The meeting agenda can be seen at the county website: www.bocc.citrus.fl.us. It is the first subject under "Most Requested" in the left-hand column.

Award for efficiency

DAVE SIGLER/Chronicle

Walt Stachowicz from Conservation Plus blows smoke into the vent system of a house being built to Energy Star standards in Heritage, a development near the intersection of County Road 486 and Forest Ridge Boulevard in Hernando. Builder John Osborne of Pinecrest Building Corp., Tom Chancey, developer of Heritage, and Richard from the Big Brothers Big Sisters program look on. All the vents are sealed up and the entire system is filled with smoke to check for leaks in the cooling system. The house received an Exceptional Energy Award from the Florida Public Utility and Central Florida Gas in the Spring 2010 Parade of Homes.

Local developer revitalizes project with green building

CHERI HARRIS
Chronicle

A local developer hopes to revitalize his latest project by anticipating what customer needs will be when the new home market turns around. His efforts have already received accolades.

Tom Chancey said he opened Heritage in Hernando about four years ago — just in time for the end of the housing boom and the beginning of the downturn.

So far, Chancey said, he has sold about 20 of the 70 homesites in the gated community for adults age 55 and older.

After watching a number of his friends being forced to leave the area in recent years to pursue opportunities elsewhere as the market stagnated, the 64-year-old developer, whose projects include Arbor Lakes, decided he needed to take a different approach.

Instead of selling homes up North for $500,000 to $600,000 and shopping for Florida homes in the $400,000 to $500,000 price range, Chancey believes the next wave of home buyers will sell their homes for less and also expect to pay less.

"These people who will be in the market have struggled, too," Chancey said.

In addition to lower price tags, Chancey believes homebuyers will be looking for smaller, more efficient houses that result in lower energy bills.

That's why Chancey has decided to relaunch Heritage, hiring Pinecrest Homes to build a smaller model home to Energy Star requirements and following green building practices to meet the standards of the Florida Green Building Coalition. After the model is finished, he plans to have a ribbon cutting and other festivities to relaunch the community.

"We're bringing it back to life," Chancey said. "We're trying to get people to see Heritage in a different way, as something that's new and innovative."

Chancey said last week he was slated to receive an Aurora Award for design for Heritage on Saturday during the Southeast Building Conference in Orlando. (For more information, visit www.seeheritage.com.)

John Osborne, president of Pinecrest Homes, said winning an Aurora Award is an important accomplishment.

He won an Aurora last year in the "Energy Efficient Home" category for a home he built in Beverly Hills.

Osborne said Traditions, the new model home in Heritage, belongs to two different worlds because it has a traditional look but features energy-saving technology of today and is expected to use about 15 percent less energy than a comparable home.

Features in the model include mastic sealant on all joints and connections for the air conditioning duct system to prevent leaks. It also has a tankless water heater, additional insulation and more efficient windows.

Chancey said creating a more energy-efficient home has been a collaborative process with him, Osborne, Mitch Underwood, who is the other builder in Heritage, Progress Energy and Central Florida Gas.

"We just really felt like this was the right thing to do," Chancey said.

Josh Wooten, CEO of the Citrus County Chamber of Commerce, said if Chancey is successful it would help other businesses, help build the property tax base and create jobs.

At a recent economic summit, Wooten said a guest speaker urged business owners struggling in the current economy to find another niche and branch out in order to enhance their business models.

"I think that's what this project is doing. It has so many benefits," Wooten said, "and that's what they're looking to do is to brand themselves as new and exciting and visionary, and I think it's going to pay big dividends for them."

Concert choir slates show to help folks relive '60s

Special to the Chronicle

There is a saying that if you remember the 1960s, then you didn't experience the '60s. Well, Citrus Community Concert Choir (CCCC) wants to help your recall of that decade.

CCCC will be presenting a show of folk and popular music from the '50s, '60s and '70s — music that will bring many back to when they were teens and just starting to make their mark on the world.

The concerts will take place at 3 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 1, at Our Lady of Grace Catholic Church, Beverly Hills; 7:30 p.m. Friday, Aug. 6, at Crystal River United Methodist Church, Citrus Avenue, Crystal River; and 2 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 8, at Faith Lutheran Church, Crystal Glen Drive, Lecanto. Donation is $10 for adults and children 12 and younger are admitted for free.

The concert will feature hits of many of artists who are still having a major impact on popular music, such as Paul Simon, with several popular pieces including "Sounds of Silence," "Scarborough Fair," and a gospel rendition of "Bridge over Troubled Waters."

Perhaps John Denver's "Take Me Home, Country

Special to the Chronicle

Citrus Community Concert Choir members rehearse for their upcoming performances of tunes from the 1950s, '60s and '70s.

Roads" or "Leaving on a Jet Plane" brings back a magic moment, or maybe you like to just sing out "Thank God, I'm a Country Boy!"

The CCCC will perform a medley called Sixties With a Twist that brings back the entire decade with a variety of hits from "Big Girls Don't Cry" through "Downtown" and on to the late '60s iconic anthem "Born to Be Wild."

Maybe the West Coast surfing scene had you "California Dreamin'." Hits including "Surfin' USA," "Monday, Monday," and a "Happy Together," will be performed.

The more serious, contemplative side of the 1960s will be highlighted with songs including "If I Had a Hammer," "Both Sides Now," "People Get Ready" and Louis Armstrong's moving "What a Wonderful World."

CCCC is a chorale group of approximately 40 singers that takes a break from its traditional classical roots in the summer. It will be back to its regular repertoire in the fall preparing for Handel's "Messiah" in November. Those interested in joining can contact Jacki Doxey at (352) 212-1746.

In the summer of 2009, CCCC had the opportunity to participate in the International Haydn Festival at the world renowned Konzerthaus in Vienna, Austria. Members of CCCC joined other choral groups from California, New Jersey, Connecticut, Illinois and Australia to form a 150-person chorus that performed Ed Lojeski's "Missa Americana and Psalms for Passover" — a new composition that had only been performed once before this concert.

While the concert was the crown of the trip, it was wonderful opportunity for CCCC members to work with Ed Lojeski, one of the Hollywood's top arrangers and composers, and to work and tour with talented singers from around the country. For its part, the Citrus County contingent was and vital part of the chorus, having been invited to join Lojeski's next trip to Hawaii for an armed services tribute in 2011.

Even with daily scheduled rehearsals for the chorus, there was still ample time for sightseeing in one of Europe's most beautiful and historic cities, including Schönbrunn Palace, Mozarthaus, and the Prater wheel, and for sampling Vienna's wide assortment of pastries.

The Vienna trip fit in well with CCCC's central mission

"... dedicated to spreading the love of classical music" according to founder and music director Jacki Doxey. Citrus Community Concert Choir was founded in 2003 with its first concert of a presentation of Handel's Messiah — which CCCC will again perform in late 2010. Since its inception, CCCC has performed a varied repertoire of classical music, such as older works like Handel's "Messiah" or Mozart's "Requiem" to newer pieces like Lojeski's "Missa Americana."

During the summer, CCCC performs more popular music. Last year's Beatle's concert had the audience singing along, and 2008's Cole Porter tribute had them swaying to his popular standards. This year's '50s, '60s and '70s theme will reach many delightful memories for the audience.

Though CCCC's main goal is promote the love of music, there is also another important aspect to its mission. CCCC promotes continuing education in music by providing a scholarship to students heading off to college. "So far, we have provided five scholarships to deserving students in the amount of between $1,000 and $1,500," said CCCC president John Mau.

New PSC commissioner 'big into problem-solving'

KEITH LAING
The News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — Some might be intimidated by the complex matters before the Florida Public Service Commission, which regulates electric and telephone companies in the state.

Not newly appointed Commissioner Art Graham.

Graham, a former Jacksonville City Council member and wastewater engineer by trade, told the News Service of Florida this week that he relishes digging into the PSC's sometimes-dense subject matter.

"I'm big into problem-solving. That's what drew me into politics," he said in a telephone interview in between meetings with PSC staff. "The solution doesn't always walk through the door. Sometimes you have to hammer it out."

As a member of the five-member PSC, which comes under intense scrutiny when it weighs requests from the state's investor-owned-utilities, there will be plenty for Graham to hammer out. One thing he is not trying to nail down, however, is the circumstances that led Gov. Charlie Crist to appoint him and former state Rep. Ronald Brisé to the panel earlier this month.

Crist appeared to bow to concerns raised by some lawmakers about a lack of diversity on the PSC by tapping Graham and Brisé, both black, to replace former PSC Commissioners David Klement and Benjamin Stevens.

"It's a lot of inside baseball stuff that was beyond me," Graham said. "I try to keep myself away from all that. I thought about going back and watching the tapes (of Klement and Stevens confirmation hearings), but I decided not to."

What he missed was Klement and Stevens being voted off the panel by lawmakers. While race was mentioned — Klement and Stevens are white and the panel was all white at the time — others also noted that Klement and Stevens were part of a commission that voted to reduce rate increases for the state's largest power companies. Consumer advocates howled that lawmakers had sided with influential utilities and Klement and Stevens became ratepayer-friendly martyrs.

Graham, who was praised by Crist upon his selection for being consumer-friendly too, vowed to be neither pro nor anti-ratepayer.

Jacksonville has a municipal utility that's not regulated by the PSC in the way the investor-owned power companies are. That means Graham isn't a consumer of the companies he will regulate.

"I'm not fighting rate increases or pushing rate increases because they don't affect me personally. I don't worry about having to answer to constituents and I don't worry about having to answer to utilities," Graham said. "I just look at the facts and do what the facts say."

Graham is a native of suburban Atlanta, Ga. A full-time job at the PSC, which pays $130,036 a year, will be a sharp departure from elected offices he has held, but Graham said he would keep paying his electric bills on the First Coast.

"I'll definitely be here during the week, but I don't plan on moving my homestead from Jacksonville," he said.

Graham said the possibility that he was appointed to the PSC because of his race did not bother him, especially since Brisé, a Haitian-American, was selected, too.

"People (sometimes) want to be PC and pick somebody because they're a woman or black or Hispanic, but then somebody can say you were just trying to fulfill a quota," he said. "But if it's not just one (selection), the governor just thought we were good choices."

Graham also pointed out he has worked in the industries he will now regulate. Lawmakers had also criticized Klement and Stevens for not having backgrounds in the fields the PSC oversees.

Graham said the maelstrom of controversy that enveloped the PSC in 2009, in which staff and commissioners were accused of communicating improperly with utility officials, wasn't something he thought much about.

"I try to come in with an open mind," he said. "I don't know what happened in the past."

Week in state government: Adjourn? Did we even start?

DAVID ROYSE
The News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — It's only a rumor that some lawmakers missed this week's special session because they were in the elevator on their way to the floor.

In case you, too, missed it, there was a special session during the lunch hour on Tuesday.

OK, joking aside, technically the session lasted well past lunch because the Senate — the more deliberative body — deliberated for what must have seemed like an eternity to the House, taking two hours and 21 minutes to essentially tell Gov. Charlie Crist to take his proposed ban on oil rigs and put a cap in it.

But by the time the Senate finished rejecting the governor's proposal to ask voters to put in the constitution a ban on oil drilling, the well was already dry anyway, with the House having voted to go home after less than an hour. Speaker Larry Cretul hit the gavel to start the special session a few seconds after noon, and by 1 p.m., the chamber was empty, the work done. It takes longer to get a sandwich at Po Boys.

The Senate appeared to actually consider whether it ought to debate the actual proposed amendment and the vote was actually close — with a motion to adjourn without taking it up passing 18-16. With a few Democrats who likely would have been in favor of continuing the debate absent, one might even surmise that if everyone had been here, the Senate would have actually taken a vote on the governor's proposal.

But it would have been irrelevant, of course, in that there was no House to pass

With a strength of rhetoric unheard in his previous two years as speaker, Cretul, an Ocala Republican who is finishing out his legislative career with no coming election to worry about, called it like he saw it, saying that the governor's proposal wouldn't really do anything. It was symbolic, Cretul said, and political, by which he meant Crist was asking legislators to come out strong against oil drilling when drilling is already banned in Florida waters for the sake of pandering to voters in the U.S. Senate race.

There are issues that the Gulf of Mexico oil spill has raised — things having to do with compensating those who have lost wages, or with dropping property values in the Panhandle, that lawmakers just might tackle, said Cretul and Senate President Jeff Atwater. But they'd like to do it on their own time — in a couple months. They argued that's real help for people hit by the oil spill, not a feel good response that doesn't do much.

Oil is unpopular at the moment in Florida.

Crist has never liked much that was unpopular — and tends to like things that are popular. He's unapologetic about that populism, saying the people are the boss, and if their feelings shift, then so might his. "Things change," Crist has said on more than one occasion on which he has either "grown" or "flip flopped," depending on your point of view.

But Crist's populist prospecting on oil this week failed miserably — or so the Legislature would have us believe.

Sure, lawmakers failed to even consider the governor's proposal, but very few politicians have ever been hurt complaining about the do-nothing people in power — even if they're one of them. The ultimate irony here might end up being that a near lifetime politician, Charlie Crist, who served in the state Senate, had two different Cabinet posts, and has been on the ballot more often than probably anyone in the Legislature, is going to run against "those politicians" in Tallahassee — a "do-nothing Legislature" he called them this week. In an anti-incumbent year, the senator-turned education commissioner-turned attorney general-turned governor is running as an outsider, an independent even, and he's going to take on the Legislature for ignoring the people's will.

"And I'm going to give them hell for it," Crist promised. Brilliant politics, some might say.

It's not quite off into the hazy sunset for this Legislature, however. The current crop of lawmakers will likely return in August or September to take up those other post-spill related issues, Cretul and Atwater said this week. Atwater ordered a Senate committee to begin going through what, exactly, the state might be able to do.

All this came as BP was getting its first good news about the spill since the Deepwater Horizon rig exploded April 20. The latest effort to stop the flow of oil appeared to be working this week, and entire Panhandle beach communities were heard to rejoice. The containment cap doesn't definitively "kill the well," as they say in the business, and it's leaky, and there is still oil to be cleaned up. But Florida officials were breathing a little easier this week for the first time in a couple of months.

Call the printers and tell them to hold the voter guides. Heck, while you're at it, tell them to hold off on printing the ballots, too.

As of a few weeks ago there were nine ballot issues set to go before voters in November, but this week they started dropping off. By Friday, there were court challenges to six of them. Take notes here: two of the amendments — Amendment 3 dealing with homestead exemptions and Amendment 7 dealing with redistricting have been stricken from the ballot, although appeals to higher courts are ongoing.

Four other ballot issues remain on the ballot for now but are in question. Amendments 5 and 6, also dealing with redistricting, are pending a review by the Supreme Court, which stayed a lower court case in order to make the decision itself.

On Friday — stay with me here — the state's teachers union filed a lawsuit saying Amendment 8, dealing with school class size restrictions, should be thrown out. And Amendment 9, a response to the new federal health care law, goes before a judge in Tallahassee next week.

Medical marijuana to be OK in some VA clinics

Directive clarifies current policy

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Patients treated at Veterans Affairs hospitals and clinics will be able to use medical marijuana in the 14 states where it's legal, according to new federal guidelines.

The directive from the Veterans Affairs Department in the coming week is intended to clarify current policy that says veterans can be denied pain medication if they use illegal drugs. Veterans groups have complained for years that this could bar veterans from VA benefits if they were caught using medical marijuana. The new guidance does not authorize VA doctors to begin prescribing medical marijuana, which is considered an illegal drug under federal law. But it will now make clear that in the 14 states where state and federal law are in conflict, VA clinics generally will allow the use of medical marijuana for veterans already taking it under other clinicians.

"For years, there have been veterans coming back from the Iraq war who needed medical marijuana and had to decide whether they were willing to cut down on their VA medications," John Targowski, a legal adviser to the group Veterans for Medical Marijuana Access, which worked with the VA on the issue.

Targowski in an interview Saturday that confusion over the government's policy might have led some veterans to distrust their doctors or avoid the VA system.

Dr. Robert A. Petzel, the VA's undersecretary for health, sent a letter to Veterans for Medical Marijuana Access this month that spells out the department's policy. The guidelines will be distributed to the VA's 900 care facilities around the country in the next week.

Petzel makes clear that a VA doctor could reserve the right to modify a veteran's treatment plan if there were risks of a bad interaction with other drugs.

"If a veteran obtains and uses medical marijuana in a manner consistent with state law, testing positive for marijuana would not preclude the veteran from receiving opioids for pain management" in a VA facility, Petzel wrote. "The discretion to prescribe, or not prescribe, opioids in conjunction with medical marijuana, should be determined on clinical grounds."

Opioids are narcotic painkillers, and include morphine, oxycodone and methadone.

Under the previous policy, local VA clinics in some of the 14 states, such as Michigan, had opted to allow the use of medical marijuana because there no rule explicitly prohibiting them from doing so.

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, there are 14 states and the District of Columbia with medical marijuana laws. They are: Alaska, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont and Washington. New Jersey also recently passed a medical marijuana law, which is scheduled to be implemented next January.

Looking For Oil

Crews are cleaning Gulf Coast beaches 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. When oil is spotted, the Response Command Center is notified, a Shore Cleanup Assessment Team (SCAT) is mobilized and cleanup begins immediately. Cleanup efforts are being coordinated from 17 staging areas in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. Over 33,000 people are involved in the cleanup operation.

If you see oil on the beach, please call 1-866-448-5816 and we'll send a team to clean it up.

Cleaning Up the Beaches

The number of people mobilized to clean up the beaches depends on the size of the affected area. Individual teams can number in the hundreds, and thousands of additional workers remain on-call. Working with the Coast Guard, our teams continue cleaning up until the last bit of oil has been removed. As a result, in most cases when oil reaches a beach, it is even possible to keep it open.

Our Responsibility

Our beach cleanup operations will continue until the last of the oil has been skimmed from the sea, the beaches and estuaries have been cleaned up, and the region has been pronounced oil-free. And none of the costs of our efforts will be paid by taxpayers.

Our commitment is that we'll be here for as long as it takes. We may not always be perfect, but we will make this right.

Nation BRIEF

Associated Press

A car is parked in a flooded lot Saturday in Freeport, Ill., after a second day of harsh storms in the area.

Rains wreak havoc in Midwest

CHICAGO — Heavy rains have drenched swaths of the Midwest, leaving interstates under water, residents stranded and a dam in Iowa on the verge of collapse. In Chicago, officials said more than 7 inches of rain fell early Saturday. Standing water closed a portion of Interstate 290 and the commuter train tracks that run along the expressway just west of Chicago's downtown. Crews in the western suburb of Westchester were using boats to search for residents trapped in their homes. In eastern Iowa, the National Weather Service said the Lake Delhi dam failed and small communities downstream could be severely flooded.

15 killed in panic at German Parade

DUISBURG, Germany — A stampede inside a tunnel crowded with techno music fans crushed 15 people to death and injured dozens at the Love Parade festival in western Germany on Saturday. Other revelers initially kept partying at the event in Duisburg, near Duesseldorf, unaware of the deadly panic that started when police tried to prevent thousands more people from entering the already-jammed parade grounds. Police are still trying to determine exactly what happened at the event that drew hundreds of thousands of people, but the situation was "very chaotic," police commissioner Juergen Kieskemper said.

He said just before the stampede occurred at about 5 p.m., police had closed off the area where the parade was being held because it was already overcrowded. They told revelers over loudspeakers to turn around and walk back in the other direction before the panic broke out, he said. Emergency workers had trouble getting to the victims in the large tunnel that leads to the grounds. —From wire reports

2 U.S. service members missing

Navy pair disappear in Afghanistan

Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — Two U.S. Navy service members disappeared in a dangerous area of eastern Afghanistan, prompting a massive air and ground search and appeals on local radio stations for their safe return, NATO and Afghan officials said Saturday. The two left their compound in the Afghan capital, Kabul, in a vehicle Friday afternoon, but never returned, NATO said in a statement. Vehicles and helicopters were dispatched to search for the two, who may have been killed or captured by the Taliban in Charkh district of southern Logar province — about a two-hour drive south of Kabul, said district chief Samer Gul. Elsewhere, five U.S. troops died in separate bombings in the south, setting July on course to become the deadliest month of the nearly 9-year war for Americans. Rising casualties are eroding support for the war even as President Barack Obama has sent thousands of reinforcements to try to turn back the Taliban, who would have a leg up in the propaganda war with the capture of two U.S. troops. A NATO official, speaking on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of search operations, confirmed the two were Navy personnel, but would not identify their unit to avoid jeopardizing search operations. The official said it was unclear what the two were doing or what would lead them to leave their compound. The official would not say whether the two were on official business. The Taliban have not contacted the coalition force to claim responsibility or make any demands for their release, the official said. Gul, the district chief in Charkh, said that a four-wheel drive armored sports utility vehicle was seen Friday night by a guard working for the district chief's office. The guard tried to flag down the vehicle, carrying a driver and a passenger, but it kept going, Gul said. "They stopped in the main bazaar of Charkh district. The Taliban saw them in the bazaar," Gul said. "They didn't touch them in the bazaar, but notified other Taliban that a four-wheel vehicle was coming their way." The second group of Taliban tried to stop the vehicle, but when it didn't, insurgents opened fire and the occupants in the vehicle shot back, he said. NATO said a search is under way for the missing service members. According to Gul, one may have been killed and the other taken hostage by the Taliban.

Eastern U.S. sizzles in summer heat; temps reach 100s

Associated Press

TOMS RIVER, N.J. — Another wave of oppressive heat clamped down on a broad swath of Eastern states on Saturday, with temperatures in the high 90s and 100s and residents scrambling for shade or just staying indoors. In the Mid-Atlantic, already the locus for brutal temperatures several times in July, weather experts warned of the dangerous conditions and residents resigned themselves to coping with the discomfort. "Oh, it's disgusting. It's already really hot," meteorologist Heather Sheffield of the National Weather Service said of morning temperatures in Washington, D.C. One possible weather-related death was reported in Maryland, where paramedics said the high temperatures and humidity likely played a role in the death of a 20-year-old man who was biking, went into cardiac arrest and hit his head on a tree as he fell. With the heat and humidity combining for a possible heat index of over 110 degrees, the weather service issued an excessive heat warning for the first time this year for an area stretching from south of Washington to north of Baltimore, along the Interstate 95 corridor. By midday Saturday, a wide band from lower New England to the Deep South was under a heat advisory. The thermometer hit 100 degrees in Washington and Baltimore by mid-afternoon, where the heat index was 109. In Norfolk, Va., it was 104 degrees and 108 degrees with the heat index. Elsewhere, record highs for July 24 of 97 degrees in New York and Philadelphia and 99 degrees in Newark, N.J., were reported. As temperatures soared toward 100 degrees in New Jersey, Harry Oliver was trying to make sense of it all as he waited to get sandwiches inside a Toms River convenience store. "When I complain about the heat and humidity, my wife reminds me that I was begging for this type of weather when I was shoveling all that snow this past winter," the 47-year-old Lakehurst resident said. "Now I'm looking forward to the snow again." Oliver said he and his wife didn't want to cook. "It's hot enough in the house already, even with my air conditioning running 24/7," he said. In New York City, the heat brought out the inner entrepreneur in one resident. A.J. Ousmane, 27, a native of the West African nation of Mali, sold ice-cold water bottles for $1 from a cooler on a Harlem sidewalk. He planned to stay out all afternoon, and hoped to make about $55 for the day, after expenses. "I keep moving with the shade," he said, as he positioned himself in the creeping shadow of a coin-operated laundry. Many hit the beach for relief, though not all were there to soak up the sun. Not much relief was in the forecast today. Highs were expected to reach into the low- to mid-90s, but heat indices should be slightly lower — in the high 90s, possibly as high as 101 in cities.

Bloody drug wars continue in Mexico

51 bodies found at dumping ground

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Investigators said Saturday they have found 51 corpses in two days of digging in a field near a trash dump outside the northern city of Monterrey, as excavations continued at one of the largest clandestine body dumping grounds in Mexico's bloody drug war. The attorney general of Nuevo Leon state, where Monterrey is located, said the victims included 48 men and 3 women. There were so many bodies that authorities were using refrigerated trucks to hold them, Alejandro Garza y Garza told local television. Investigators are still struggling to identify the remains but suspect drug traffickers are involved. "The majority of these bodies have tattoos of different types that could give us an indication about whether they belonged to one group or another and, among other things, determine whether they were linked to organized crime," Garza y Garza said. He added that investigators were nearing the end of their search. "We have practically covered all the area where we think there might be this sort of thing," Garza y Garza said. "In general terms, we are wrapping it up." A state government spokesman said the bodies have been found both whole and in parts, with some buried in pits and others on or near the surface. The spokesman, who was not authorized to be quoted by name, said an anonymous phone tip led authorities to the site on Thursday. Photographs showed charred spots on the ground — suggesting some bodies may have been partially burned. Mexico's drug cartels have been known to use corrosive liquids, fire, quicklime and other methods to dispose of their victims or make identification of their bodies harder. The largest mass grave found in recent years was discovered in May in the southern city of Taxco, where a total of 55 bodies were dumped in an abandoned mine shaft, apparently by a drug gang. Nearly 25,000 people have been killed in drug violence in Mexico since the government launched an offensive against cartels in late 2006.

Carrier readies for maneuvers

Associated Press

BUSAN, South Korea — A massive nuclear-powered U.S. supercarrier readied Saturday for maneuvers with ally South Korea in a potent show of force that North Korea has threatened could lead to "sacred war." The military drills, code-named "Invincible Spirit," are to run Sunday through Wednesday with about 8,000 U.S. and South Korean troops, 20 ships and submarines and 200 aircraft. The Nimitz-class USS George Washington, with several thousand sailors and dozens of fighters aboard, was deployed from Japan. The North routinely threatens attacks whenever South Korea and the U.S. hold joint military drills, which Pyongyang sees as a rehearsal for an invasion. The U.S. keeps 28,500 troops in South Korea and another 50,000 in Japan, but says it has no intention of invading the North. Still, the North's latest rhetoric threatening "nuclear deterrence" and "sacred war" carries extra weight following the sinking of a South Korean warship that killed 46 sailors. Seoul and Washington say a North Korean torpedo was responsible for the March sinking of the Cheonan, considered the worst military attack on the South since the 1950-53 Korean War.

The American and South Korean defense chiefs announced earlier in the week they would stage the military drills to send a clear message to North Korea to stop its "aggressive" behavior. The exercises will be the first in a series of U.S.-South Korean maneuvers to be conducted in the Sea of Japan off Korea's east coast and in the Yellow Sea closer to China's shores in international waters. The exercises also are the first to employ the F-22 stealth fighter — which can evade North Korean air defenses — in South Korea. South Korea was closely monitoring North Korea's military, but no unusual activity had been observed Saturday, South Korea's Yonhap news agency reported. North Korea, which denies any involvement in the sinking of the Cheonan warship, has warned the United States against attempting to punish it. Though the impoverished North has a large conventional military and the capability to build nuclear weapons, it is not believed to have the technology needed to use nuclear devices as warheads.

BETH J. HARPAZ
Associated Press

— NEW YORK

Before Disneyland and Six Flags, before steel coasters went 50 mph and rides were named for cartoons, movies and superheroes, there were trolley parks.

The parks were built by trolley companies at the end of the line in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, as a way to get workers and their families to ride streetcars and railways on weekends.

They had carousels, picnic grounds and live entertainment, and they were often located by lakes, rivers or beaches where visitors could take a boat ride or swim.

By 1919, just after World War I, there were 1,000 amusement parks around the country, and most of them were trolley parks, according to Jim Futrell, historian for the National Amusement Park Historical Association. But as cars replaced trolleys, the streetcars and their parks faded away.

Today, only 11 trolley parks remain in operation: Camden Park in Huntington, W.Va., which opened in 1903; Canobie Lake Park, in Salem, N.H., dating to 1902; Clementon Park in Clementon, N.J., which opened in 1907; Dorney Park in Allentown, Pa., 1884; Kennywood in West Mifflin, Pa., 1898; Lakemont Park in Altoona, Pa., 1894; Midway Park, in Maple Springs, N.Y., 1898; Oaks Amusement Park, in Portland, Ore., 1905; Quassy Amusement Park, in Middlebury, Conn., 1908; Seabreeze Amusement Park, in Rochester, N.Y., 1879; and Waldameer Park in Erie, Pa., 1896. (Clementon Park was not owned by a trolley company, but it was at the end of a trolley line, and some parks were recreation areas before trolley compa-

With a couple of exceptions, most of the surviving trolley parks are smaller, more family oriented and substantially cheaper than big modern theme parks with high-speed 20-story roller coasters. Some still let you pay by the ride, rather than charging hefty gate admissions that can add up to hundreds of dollars for a family. And many encourage visitors to bring picnics rather than banning outside food like some big parks do.

"As destination and regional parks try to outdo each other with huge rides that cost millions and as a result have to charge larger admissions, the value of local trolley parks remains family-friendly," said Tim O'Brien, editor-at-large for Funworld magazine, the official publication of the International Association of Amusement Parks and Attractions. "And they are every bit a part of a community as the local banks and mom and pop grocery stores. Trolley parks are true pieces of Americana."

North to Alaska

Special to the Chronicle

Helene and Edwin Graham of Inverness recently returned from a seven-day cruise aboard the Royal Caribbean cruise ship Rhapsody of the Seas for an inside passage trip to Alaska. They witnessed whales, seals and eagles, the Tracy Arm Fjord and an awe-inspiring, breathtaking view of Alaska's Mindenhall Glacier. They also had fun attempting to strike it rich by panning for gold in the Klondike River, even though they only made enough for a decent meal. They highly recommend the trip for anyone who has not seen Alaska.

Journey by the stars

ANNE WALLACE ALLEN
For The Associated Press

I'm signed up to use 10 vacation days at Christmas, and I'm trying to decide what to do with them.

Because I'm a Virgo, it seems I should probably go somewhere remote. At least that's what Tripbase.com tells me in its travel horoscope, a new feature that uses astrological readings to help would-be vacationers narrow down their choices.

Cancers who log on for August will be advised to travel with a group and do volunteer work. For Geminis, the horoscopes recommend a vacation off the grid. Sagittarius vacationers should just leave the family at home.

The feature, introduced in June, enhances a popular 3-year-old website that's devoted to helping travelers decide what they want to do, and where.

Tripbase, at www.tripbase.com, allows users to enter their travel preferences, such as cost, distance from home, and importance of amenities like dining and shopping, and returns with some destination suggestions.

For travelers who are still undecided, Tripbase has hired a pair of twin sister astrologers, one based in New York and the other in Seattle, to write customized travel horoscopes for every month.

The horoscopes don't make any recommendations about where to go, but they do suggest whom to bring, whom not to bring, what to avoid, and what to seek each month. Virgos in August are advised to travel solo or with a quiet companion only. That rules out my preadolescent children.

Capricorns traveling this month should start practicing phrases in foreign languages, and Cancers in August should digest the changes of two summer eclipses that touched on Cancer. For anyone who doesn't know what that means, it recommends rest and a spa.

You can go on Twitter every Tuesday at noon and the astrologers will give you a personal reading.

When it comes to vacation, there are just too many options, said Pamela Johnston, a spokeswoman for Tripbase. Horoscopes help narrow it down.

"A lot of people turn to the stars for inspiration and guidance," Johnston said. "Even for people who don't believe in horoscopes, let them disagree and have fun and let that inspire them."

"As long as it gets you thinking what's really right for you, we've done the right thing."

Special Recognition

Hunger and Homeless Coalition — Anyone who knows of a homeless veteran in need of food, haircut, voter ID, food stamps, medical assistance or more blankets is asked to call Ed Murphy at the Hunger and Homeless Coalition at 382-0876, or pass along this phone number to the veteran.

Citrus County Veterans Coalition (CCVC) does not meet in June, July or August. The next meeting will be in September. Members are encouraged to attend the board of directors meetings at 10 a.m. on the second Thursday monthly at the DAV in Inverness. CCVC invites all honorably discharged veterans, their spouses, widows and widowers along with other veterans' organizations to become members. If you feel you can assist in the "Veterans Helping Veterans" program, come on board as a member.

We are a service to needy veterans organizations providing food supplements and non-perishable food through our "Veterans Food Pantry." We are providing assistance to needy and disabled veterans and their families with minor repairs to their homes through the generosity of volunteers who are in the plumbing, electrical and construction industry. We also provide funds for annual scholarships to veterans' family members who apply through their school counseling services.

If you are looking for an organization that devotes all of its energy and fundraising to the philosophy of "Veterans Helping Veterans" then the Citrus County Veterans Coalition wants you. Annual membership donation is $10 for a calendar year or $25 for three years. We have life members and organizations from most of the veterans' organizations in Citrus County and we are not attempting to take you away from your parent organization. The CVCC is a nonprofit corporation, and your donations are tax deductible. Current members should check their membership card for expiration dates, and renew with John Ring, 746-0826 or at the meeting. Come on out and get involved. For further information, go to www.ccvcl.org.

Citrus County Veterans Coalition is looking for female veterans. Many functions go on where we would like to involve female veterans, but we don't know how to reach them. We are particularly looking for WW II Veterans to participate in the Parade this year, but all female veterans are encouraged to contact us. If you are a female veteran and would like to be involved, contact Cynthia Holden at 628-6481 or e-mail Cynthia@advocate4victims.org.

CCVC's sixth annual Veterans Forum is in the Works. If you would like an informational booth to participate or to help with the forum, call 628-6481. The Citrus County Veterans Coalition's (CCVC) sponsors the annual Veterans Forum with speakers providing information that is important to veterans' benefits, which is to be on Oct. 23 at the First Baptist Church of Inverness on Pleasant Grove Road from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. A luncheon will be provided by Heidi's Italian restaurant for the first 250 recipients and entertainment will be by Phantastic Sounds.

A Special Recognition Award was presented to Tom and Debbie Rogers, owners of Graphic Elite Printing in Inverness, by James G. Holland III, commander of the 2010 Military Order of The Purple Heart Department of Florida, at a banquet July 3 at the Gaylord Palms Resort Hotel in Orlando. The Rogers were recognized for their dedication and support by providing graphic design and printing services to the Department of Florida for the past several years.

For further information, go to www.ccvcl.org.

The Veterans Appreciation Week Ad Hoc Coordinating Committee will conduct its annual Veterans in the Classroom program, Nov. 1 through 12, as part of its 18th annual Veterans Appreciation Week activities.

Coordinated by the Citrus County Chapter of the Military Officers Association of America (MOAA), the Veterans in the Classroom program brings living history to the classrooms of the county's public and private schools, as well as home school groups. Veterans share with students their firsthand military experiences and travels while serving our country in uniform around the world in peace and war.

The model Veterans in the Classroom program was recognized in 2008 with a Florida Education Foundation award. The program's success has generated the need for additional veterans to share their experiences with students. Persian Gulf, Afghanistan, Iraq, Air Force, National Guard and women veterans are especially needed as participants.

All interested veterans are encouraged to contact Gary Runyon 563-5727, Mac McLeod 746-1384 or Bob Truax 860-1630.

Quassy Amusement Park /Associated Press

A crowd gathers around a horseback stunt show in the field at Quassy Amusement Park in Middlebury, Conn., in this undated photo. By 1919, just after World War I, there were 1,000 amusement parks around the country, and most of them were trolley parks. But as cars replaced trolleys, the streetcars and their parks faded away.

Four of the 11 trolley parks still in operation are located in Pennsylvania. Futrell says the parks are a holdover from the state's manufacturing era, when trolleys transported workers to factories and companies used the parks for annual picnics. Pennsylvania missed out when more modern theme parks were built elsewhere, so locals kept patronizing the older parks.

As with most other trolley parks, Futrell says Pennsylvania's parks owe their existence to family owners who bought them decades ago. "These family owners cared and shepherded the parks through challenges and were smart enough not to get in trouble with debt, and they kept the parks relevant to the communities," Futrell said. "It was more than a business to them; it was a family heirloom."

Waldameer is still under family ownership; Midway is now owned by the state, but was owned by the same family for years. Kennywood and Dorney Park are now both owned by large theme park companies, but Futrell credits previous family owners with keeping them alive and financially sound to the point where they attracted new business owners.

Oaks Park in Portland, Ore., is now run by a non-profit organization that was established by the family that once owned the park. But the park was built by the Portland Traction Co. at the end of a rail line on the Willamette River, just before the 1905 centennial celebration of the Lewis and Clark Expedition.

"It was a tough life then," said Mary Beth Coffey, Oaks' senior manager, explaining the park's appeal a century ago.

"People worked in factories or agriculture. They would come to the park on the weekend. You could show off your dress or hat on the boardwalk. Oaks Park had electric lights and people didn't have them in their houses — they called it the Great White City because of the lights. Ethnic groups — the Germans, Poles, Irish — would stay overnight."

Exotic entertainment included a roller-skating elephant and ostrich zoo, and John Philip Sousa performed at Oaks a dozen times. Then as now, a roller rink, one of the largest on the West Coast, was a park centerpiece, with live music from a Wurlitzer pipe organ.

Coffey says Oaks is thriving, with 750,000 guests from spring to early October and 800 corporate picnics annually. It's also affordable: Parking is free, and you pay by the ride.

DyAnne Wood visited Oaks on a recent summer day, one of seven in a three-generation family outing that included her 6-year-old grandson.

"I used to go when I was younger to the roller skating rink," she said. "The park is in a beautiful place by the river, and the kids don't understand how nostalgic it is. They just like it because it's an amusement park with rides. But it reminds me of when I was young."

Quassy, located on scenic Lake Quassapaug in Connecticut where visitors can cool off with a swim after the rides, is an easy day trip from New York City or Western Massachusetts. Rides are a mix of old and new, with kiddie rides dating back to the 1950s, a new family drop tower installed this year and a new wooden roller coaster planned for next year. Visitors who prefer a water park to the lake can try Quassy's "Saturation Station."

"We've been family-owned for 72 years now," said Quassy spokesman Ron Gustafson. "We still do 50-cent Friday nights and a $25 Saturday night carload special. That's incredible value."

Canobie Lake Park in New Hampshire, located 30 minutes north of Boston, also remains family-owned and attracts hundreds of thousands of visitors annually, according to marketing director Chris Nicoli. The park is three times its original size, and the old trolley station has been preserved as a Skee-ball building. A new exhibit at the park documents its dance hall, which through the years hosted Duke Ellington, Sonny and Cher and Frank Sinatra.

Canobie's rides are a trip through history, too: The carousel is a 19th century antique; the Yankee Cannonball wooden coaster is vintage 1930s, and the looping steel Canobie Corkscrew dates to the 1970s.

"We've got children coming on their eighth-grade field trip whose grandparents came on their eighth-grade field trip," said Nicoli.

Futrell says he's optimistic about the future of the remaining trolley parks. "They're all in good markets and they've all been growing over the past few decades," he said. "You never know what will happen, but I can't imagine any of these parks going away."

50th ANNIVERSARY

The Koonces

Sandra and Fred Koonce of Inverness celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary on June 5, 2010, at the Chart House in Daytona Beach with family and members of their wedding party.

They were married in her hometown, Moore Haven, Fla., at the First Methodist Church after their junior year of study at the University of Florida, and spent their honeymoon at Daytona Beach. Mr. Koonce's hometown was Dunnellon.

They graduated on their first anniversary, June 5, 1961, in the same class, he with a Bachelor of Science in mechanical engineering and she with a language arts/journalism degree. They left the next week to make their home in Alliance, Ohio, where he started his career with Babcock and Wilcox Research Center and she taught journalism and English at Alliance High School. Subsequent jobs took them to Lancaster, Ohio, where their two children were born, then to Baton Rouge, La., Houston, Texas, and Los Angeles, Calif. They retired to Inverness in 1999.

Their two children, Lt. Col. David F. Koonce III, presently assigned to Fort Benning, Ga., and C. Jill Koonce Godwin, a middle-school math teacher in Elk Grove, Calif., along with their spouses, Stefi Koonce and Robert Godwin, and three grandchildren, Ashlyn and Addilyn Koonce, and Christopher Godwin, spent the week prior to the celebration with them at Daytona Beach.

Those in the wedding party in attendance included Mrs. Koonce's two sisters, Sue Getch of Monticello, Fla., and Sally Barrow of Inverness and Alva, who were bridesmaids; Earl Getch of Bowdoinham, Maine, who was ring-bearer; Debra Howington Caraway of Leesburg, who was flowergirl, and Lewis Getch of Monticello, Ralph Howington of Titusville and Edd McLendon of Raleigh, N.C., who were groomsmen. Others in attendance included spouses, nieces and nephews.

On display was a gold vase that had been a gift to Mrs. Koonce's grandparents, Mollie and C.H. Settle, Florida pioneers, on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary, Oct. 16, 1936. The vase had also been on display at the 50th anniversary celebration of her sister and brother-in-law, Sue and Lewis Getch, on June 3, 2006.

Renewal OF VOWS

The Sloans

Sandra and Robert Sloan of Inverness will celebrate their 13th wedding anniversary Aug. 13, 2010, with a vows renewal ceremony at Crystal River United Methodist Church and a reception following at Citrus Hills Golf and Country Club. Dawn Blake-Burgess, a longtime friend, will officiate. They are having their closest friends join them in the ceremony: Tina Staton, maid of honor; Apryl White and Denise Flanagan, bridesmaids; Chris Purnell, best man; and Timothy White and Rich Sloan, groomsmen.

Mr. Sloan is a sergeant for the security team at Progress Energy. Mrs. Sloan has her bachelor's degree in psychology and has been able to stay home to raise her three children, Alyssa, 12; Tyler, 9; and Alanna, 8. The family keeps busy with softball and baseball with the children and Mr. Sloan runs 5K's with his oldest two whenever they have a local charity event.

50th ANNIVERSARY

The Landons

The Rev. Joseph Eugene (Gene) and Marilyn Arlene (Rausch) Landon were married July 3, 1960, at Jerome Methodist Church, Jerome, Ohio.

They recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a dinner reunion in Virginia Beach, Va., with their children: Laurence (Laurie) of Pickerington, Ohio; Brad (Beth) of Orlando; Elizabeth (Kevin) Stevenson of Virginia Beach, Va.; Amanda (Bernd) Geisler of Korbach, Germany; and Lang Le of Columbus, Ohio.

They have 12 grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

The Rev. Landon served as pastor of congregations in Ohio, Iowa and Florida and continues to serve as pastor emeritus at Crystal River United Methodist Church.

Arlene taught preschool children and first-graders, in addition to nurturing their children, and has been actively involved in assisting her husband in his church ministry.

Text to other woman causes wife's concern

Dear Annie: My 50-year-old husband and I have been married for 24 years. "Fred" is constantly texting a 35-year-old divorced woman he used to work with. He insists they are only friends who like to keep in touch. They start texting before 6 a.m. and continue until bedtime. Today, they exchanged 373 text messages. I don't know how either of them gets any work done.

We have had several conversations about the amount of contact he has with this former co-worker, but he just doesn't get it, which means it isn't going to stop anytime soon. Even our kids keep asking who Dad is texting all the time. I don't believe he has physically cheated on me, but I'm not sure how long this "friendship" can continue before it grows into a full-blown affair. Maybe if he were to see this in black and white it would finally sink in that he's on dangerous ground. It may only be a midlife crisis, but it scares me and I fear for our marriage. — Having a Nervous Breakdown in Tennessee

Dear Tennessee: Have a heart-to-heart with Fred. Explain that the constant texting indicates that this relationship is more important to him than mere friendship, even if he doesn't recognize it yet. Tell him that a loving, caring, faithful husband would not continue to behave in a way that undermines his marriage and worries his wife. Tell him it's time to knock it off. If he cannot do this, or is unwilling, the next step is marriage counseling. Don't wait.

Dear Annie: Now that school is out, my 9-year-old daughter, "Emily," has been pestering me to shave her head. She asked me to do this last year, and I said, "Maybe next summer," thinking she'd forget. But she's been asking for months and keeps saying I "promised."

Annie, I shave my head because I started going bald a few years ago. My 13-year-old son shaves his head in the summer because it's cooler. "Emily" has beautiful long hair, and I'm reluctant to cut it. I'm mildly flattered that she wants to look like me, but I'm not sure I want a Mini-Me for a daughter.

When I asked her why she wants to shave her head, she said she wants to donate her hair to Locks of Love. She also told me she's curious to see what kids with cancer go through when they lose their hair.

Emily is a very intelligent girl and a wonderful child. While I'm proud of her for wanting to contribute to a worthwhile organization, I wouldn't know how to answer people when they ask why my daughter is bald. What do you think? Should my wife and I let our daughter shave her head? — Father of Mini-Me

Dear Father: Yes. While we believe parents have the final say in such matters

(and it's OK to say no), shaving one's head is relatively harmless and the hair will grow back. Because other members of her family do this, Emily doesn't find it embarrassing. Plus, she is donating her hair to a worthy cause. If others ask, that is the response you should give.

Dear Annie: This is a response to "Sad Mom," whose daughter wasn't invited to a birthday party. The birthday girl should be able to invite whoever she wants to her party, not what "Sad" wants. The birthday girl should be with people she likes. It is not appropriate to talk to the principal or the girl's mother about it.

Maybe that birthday girl will resent having to invite someone she is not too fond of because the school made her do it. — Just Saying in D.C.

Dear Just Saying: Birthday parties are a problem when the birthday girl invites the entire class except for one child. It is amazingly rude, and her parents should teach her better manners. We hope you will teach yours that a gracious host makes sure not to exclude anyone this way.

Leaving it to the experts

Paul, the Genius German Octopus, correctly picked the last eight winners of the recent World Cup soccer finals. I am hoping that my stockbrokers will offer the cephalopod a job. Paul certainly couldn't do worse than their "experts," and they wouldn't have to pay him nearly so much. The only difference between Bernie Madoff and my broker is that Bernie Madoff was a crook. My guy loses the same amount of money; he just doesn't steal it. I was planning on using that money for food and medicine during my declining years, which have already started, according to my friends. I know that they are my friends because total strangers wouldn't say such hurtful things.

Paul the Octopus picked the winners by pulling food out of containers marked with the flags of one team or another. I have not figured out how my money managers pick the losers, but they have been on an uncanny streak for almost three years now. Maybe they hide random company logos in expensive Wall Street restaurants, and whichever one the stockbroker eats on his expensed lunch, that day becomes his pick. It replaces the system they used before, which was racing cockroaches. For this they take a 2 percent management fee.

It's not just stocks; experts who predict all manner of things fill up huge hunks of TV time. Like my stockbroker, they are usually wrong. Paul the Octopus could replace them and the thousands of people who make a career out of picking things before they happen. Who will win the best actress Oscar? Who will be the candidate pick for vice president? Who will win the World Series? Who will win the Super Bowl? Who will be the Bachelorette pick? Who will win the Kentucky Derby? Someone even prognosticated how many correct predictions Paul the Octopus would make. Can he do it one more time? Sure, we could just wait until these events happen and then we would know the results, but that seems to be out of fashion.

For months people will debate who will win the Oscars. The day after we know for sure who won, the discussion is over. We hear the predictions ten times more than we hear the facts. It's no wonder that some people probably still believe Barack Obama picked Hillary Clinton or Osama bin Laden to be his vice president, as it was often predicted that he would.

It's kind of odd that when a human predictor makes a mistake, he or she gets to keep predicting. Yet if Paul the Octopus missed his first two predictions, he'd be back in the tank where he came from, hiding in an ink cloud of shame. If an expert is always wrong, is he still an expert? Shouldn't there be some minimum standard for predicting — like getting something right every once in a while? Even a flipped coin can get things right five out of ten times, so if you're an expert and you can't get one out of ten things right, you lose your License to Predict and should stop making TV appearances. You should stop managing stock portfolios and stop talking about politics. If you have no track record, get off the track.

When a politician does something unsavory, when an actor is taped making a racist phone rant, when an athlete is caught cheating, they pay a price. Don't believe the old saying, because there is such a thing as bad publicity. Don't take my word for it? Then talk to Tiger Woods' accountant. But experts never pay a price for being wrong. Because who knows more about being wrong than the experts? They're experts at it.

Contador one ride away from Tour win

Associated Press

PAULLAC, France — Wiping away tears, Alberto Contador is ready for the champagne to flow.

After three daunting weeks of crashes, biting cold, fog and searing heat, he is set to become the Tour de France champion again.

The Spaniard all but captured his third title in four years Saturday by holding off a full-bore challenge from his main rival, Andy Schleck of Luxembourg, in a 32-mile individual time trial in the next-to-last stage. Today's ride into Paris is a mostly ceremonial affair.

"I am very moved ... It was a difficult Tour and I'm very happy," a tearful Contador said.

He took a deep breath and his hand trembled as he fired an index finger — the trademark gesture by the rider nicknamed "El Pistolero" — to fans after donning the yellow jersey one more time.

"I think it's the first Tour that has given me so much emotion, you can't imagine," he said.

Contador wasn't in top form, but did what he had to. The defending champion extended his lead over Schleck from eight seconds to 39 in a stage won by Fabian Cancellara of Switzerland.

Now Contador surely gets to wear yellow on the Champs-Elysees. And as the unquestioned leader of his sport at 27 years old, he remains on track for a possible challenge to Lance Armstrong's record of seven Tour wins.

Barring a wild turn of events, Contador awaits a coronation in the 20th and final stage today — a 64-mile ride from Longjumeau to the famed Paris thoroughfare. Any attempted attacks by riders would likely be quashed by Contador and his Astana teammates.

Contador will have won the Tour without winning a stage. He'll become the first champion to have done that since Greg LeMond of the U.S. won the last of his three titles in 1990 — not counting 2006 — when Oscar Pereiro of Spain inherited his title only after American Floyd Landis lost it for doping.

Associated Press

Overall leader Alberto Contador of Spain raises his arms in victory on the podium Saturday after the 19th stage of the Tour de France. The next-to-last stage was an individual time trial about 32.3 miles with the start in Bordeaux and finish in Paulliac, southwestern France.

Crystal River's Tiffany MacDonald delivers a pitch during Saturday's game against Goldenrod during the Florida Little League All-Stars Softball State Tournament in St. Cloud. Crystal River beat Goldenrod 7-5 in the morning. The rain-delayed afternoon game was in progress at press time.

ST. CLOUD — The Crystal River Senior All-Stars team, winners of District 15 and Section 7, took their rollercoaster-of-a-ride style of play with them to the Florida Little League Softball State Tournament.

Trailing 5-1 in its first contest of pool play to Goldenrod, Crystal River used a hit-and-run and flat-out hustle play from Jordan Martin to keep a two-out rally going long enough to finally get its bats going.

Crystal River would take a 7-5 win over Goldenrod to claim a berth in the state semifinals, then waited through a four-hour weather delay to erase Deltona's 6-1 lead and tie the game 6-6 through the top of the 11th.

The game against Deltona, however, was not over at press time.

The two top teams in each pool advanced to the semifinals at 11 a.m. today. Crystal River, because of the three-team pool, clinched a spot in the next round by defeating Goldenrod 7-5.

At that point, Goldenrod was 0-2, leaving Crystal River and Deltona at 1-0 and playing only for seeding.

The team from Section 1 pulled out of the tournament, leaving three teams in Crystal River's pool. After Crystal River and Deltona both defeated Goldenrod, the two teams advanced to the semis.

At press time, Crystal River's opponent was unknown because all of the South pool's games had yet to be completed.

Bridget Whitley began the Crystal River rally against Goldenrod in the top of the fourth inning when her two-run single SEMINOLE — What's the cure for a broken heart? Well if you're Crystal River's Tyler Humphreys, helping your team get one step closer to a Section 7 championship in the Little League Senior All-Stars baseball tournament is just what the doctor ordered.

The day before Humphreys and his team left for the big weekend, his serious girlfriend of more than a year broke up with him.

"It still hurts a lot," Humphreys said as he attempted to keep his emotions in check. "But today helps a lot. It doesn't fix it or make the hurt go away, but it helps."

What also helped was Humphreys' pit bull mentality on the mound as his pitching would, ironically enough, be a key component to Crystal River's 19-13 victory over Palma Cia on Saturday morning.

"It was football Saturday," Crystal River manager Mark Strifler said with a laugh as he reflected on the nearly 3 1/2 hour marathon game between the two teams. "It kind of seems crazy to talk about great pitching in a game that saw both teams combine for 32 runs, but Tyler came in after (Palma Cia) took a 13-12 lead and shut them completely down. That was huge for us, because we had let the game get away from us. And

Langer opens 3-shot lead

German poised to win British Senior Open

Associated Press

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland — Bernhard Langer took a three-shot lead in the Senior British Open after shooting a 2-under 69 in the third round at Carnoustie on Saturday.

The German has yet to win on the U.S. Champions Tour but is in position to change that after outplaying his nearest rival, Corey Pavin.

The pair set out as co-leaders at 4 under, but three bogeys dropped the American Ryder Cup team captain to a 1-over 72.

Despite his lead, Langer was wary of Carnoustie's fearsome reputation.

"I am aware that this golf course is one of the toughest links you will ever play," he said. "And I am aware that a three-shot lead is nothing if very little around here. I am going to have to play very solidly again in the final round if I am going to lift the trophy."

Langer's lead would have been even greater, but he drove into a bunker on the final hole and was forced to lay up short of the infamous Barry Burn with his recovery shot.

He then hit a wedge to five feet but missed the putt to save his par and had to settle for the three-shot lead with a 6-under 207.

After his round, Langer said he wished he had used a different club off the 18th tee to take the bunker out of play. "I hit a 3-wood," he said. "But my caddy and I also discussed hitting one less — a hybrid. I should have listened but I am a stubborn German."

Despite falling out of the lead, Pavin was upbeat about his performance.

"I played fairly well, and a lot of putts just missed. Sometimes you have days like that," Pavin said. "Bernhard played really solidly and I can't really expect him to come back and then again I can't be aggressive on Carnoustie and try to kill it, because it will kill you if you try to do that."

A group of six players go into the final round at 2 under, one shot behind Pavin and four off the lead.

Five of them are Americans, reflecting three days of domination at the top of the leaderboard.

Joining Larry Mize, Jay Haas, Russ Cochran, Jay Don Blake and Fred Funk is Welshman Ian Woosnam. Funk climbed more than 15 places after a bogey-free 4-under 67, the lowest round of the day.

Dean Wilson watches his tee shot on the 11th hole Saturday during the third round of the Canadian Open at St. Georges Golf and Country Club in Toronto. He is in the lead.

Three straight 65s

Wilson leads by 4 strokes

Associated Press

TORONTO — Dean Wilson shot his third straight 5-under 65 on Saturday to take a four-stroke lead over record-setting Carl Pettersson, Tim Clark and Bob Estes in the Canadian Open, pulling away with three straight birdies at rainy St. George's.

Before Wilson and Clark teed off, Pettersson shot a 10-under 60 in calm and dry morning conditions to break the tournament record, missing a 59 when his 30-foot birdie putt from the fringe grazed the left edge on the difficult par-4 18th.

"I hit a pretty good 6-iron in there, but the wind sort of got it," Pettersson said. "And you can't go past the hole because then you got no chance. And it was actually a difficult putt to get to the hole because it was very steep uphill.

"I hit a good putt. I told myself, 'You cannot leave this short. You got to give this a chance.' And I hit a solid putt and it was just hovering right on the left side. ... With 6 inches less pace it probably would have gone in."

Estes had a 66, and Clark shot a 69 to match Pettersson at 11 under. A day after matching the then-tournament record with a 62, Kevin Sutherland had a 65 to join Bryce Molder (63), Trevor Immelman (65) and Brock Mackenzie (68) at 10 under.

The 40-year-old Wilson, the 2006 International winner ranked 522nd in the world, got into the tournament on a sponsor exemption.

"I really appreciate that," Wilson said.

Tampa Bay Rays' Ben Zobrist catches a foul ball hit by Cleveland Indians' Asdrubal Cabrera in the third inning of Saturday's game in Cleveland. Cabrera was out.

Rays 6, Indians 3

CLEVELAND — David Price held it together after a rocky start, getting a three-run homer from Ben Zobrist and a solo shot from Carlos Pena that helped the Tampa Bay Rays end their 18-game losing streak in Cleveland with a 6-3 win over the Indians on Saturday night.

Price (13-5) trailed 3-0 in the second, but the AL's All-Star game starter settled in. He allowed three hits in seven-plus innings and tied CC Sabathia for the league lead in wins.

The Rays won in Cleveland for the first time since Sept. 28, 2005, when they were still the Devil Rays and three years from making the World Series. It was Tampa Bay manager Joe Maddon's first win at Progressive Field, snapping a 21-game slide he began as California's interim skipper in 1996.

Zobrist's replay-reversed homer off former Rays pitcher Mitch Talbot (8-9) tied it at 3 in the fifth, and Pena's shot put Tampa Bay ahead in the sixth.

Shelley Duncan hit a two-run homer for the Indians.

If the Rays were going to end their Cleveland curse, Price figured to be the guy to do it. But coming off his worst start of the season against the Yankees, the left-hander was in trouble and in a 3-0 hole after allowing Duncan's sixth homer of the season in the second inning.

But after giving up a one-out single in the fourth, he retired 11 straight before being pulled after a leadoff walk in the eighth. Joaquin Benoit gave up a two-out single to Shin-Soo Choo but struck out Carlos Santana on a 3-2 pitch to end the threat. Rafael Soriano worked the ninth for his 25th save in 27 tries. Pena hit his 21st homer in the sixth, when the Rays chased Talbot, who dominated them early but couldn't keep them down for long. Matt Joyce followed Pena's homer with a double, and with two outs, B.J. Upton's ground-rule RBI double gave the Rays a 5-3 lead and ended Talbot's night.

Royals 7, Yankees 4

NEW YORK — Jose Guillen homered and drove in two runs, Rick Ankiel also had a pair of RBIs and the Kansas City Royals pounded spot starter Sergio Mitre during a 7-4 victory over the New York Yankees on Saturday.

Kyle Davies (5-6) served up a pair of home runs to Mark Teixeira and another to Jorge Posada, but otherwise held the hot-hitting Yankees in check on a sweltering afternoon in the Bronx. Davies survived 5 1/3 innings to win for the first time since May 28.

Alex Rodriguez was 1 for 4 and remained stuck on 599 home runs for the second straight day. The Yankees slugger flew out in the first, singled in the fourth and grounded out in the fifth against Davies, who was responsible for Rodriguez's 500th home run Aug. 4, 2007.

The game was paused for a moment before each of A-Rod's at-bats so that plate umpire Mike Reilly could change out the balls for specially marked ones. A sellout crowd of 48,138 roared every time he stepped to the plate, then sighed when the ball stayed in the yard.

That the fans had any energy to cheer was impressive.

The temperature was 89 degrees at first pitch, though unofficial readings on the field put it well into triple digits by the third inning.

Athletics 10, White Sox 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jack Cust hit two home runs, Kurt Suzuki added a homer of his own and the Oakland Athletics beat the Chicago White Sox 10-2 Saturday.

Suzuki, who agreed to terms on a four-year deal with the A's Friday, helped the A's win for the eighth time in 10 games.

Daric Barton also drove in two runs, and Kevin Kouzmanoff doubled twice and drove in a run.

Freddy Garcia (9-4) lasted a career-low 1 2-3 innings and had his personal six-game winning streak snapped. He gave up five runs on six hits, walking three and striking out two as the White Sox lost for the fifth time in 17 games.

Vin Mazzaro (6-2) gave up Ramon Castro's two-run homer in the second. He allowed three hits over six innings, walking three and striking out five.

Mazzaro, who won his fourth straight decision, retired 14 of his final 16 batter, and did not allow a hit after Castro's home run.

Braves 10, Marlins 5

MIAMI — Brooks Conrad's second pinch-hit grand slam of the year put the Atlanta Braves ahead in an eight-run eighth inning, and they rallied past the Florida Marlins 10-5 Saturday night.

Six of the runs were unearned because of two errors by third baseman Jorge Cantu.

Nine of the first 10 batters reached, and the Braves scored against all three Florida pitchers — Taylor Tankersley, Jhan Marinze and Burke Badenhop.

Conrad's slam with one out put the Braves ahead 9-5. It was his fifth homer, and his third as a pinch-hitter. He hit a pinch-hit, walkoff slam to cap a seven-run ninth inning against Cincinnati on May 20.

Eight runs in an inning were a season high for Atlanta and the most allowed by Florida.

Atlanta's Martin Prado led off the game with his 13th home run. Justin Heyward went 3 for 3 with two walks and scored twice.

Tour de France Glimpse

PAUILLAC, France — A brief look at Saturday's 19th stage of the Tour de France:

- Stage: The 19th was a 32.3-mile time trial from Bordeaux north to Pauillac.
- Winner: Fabian Cancellara of Switzerland showed why he is the world time-trial champion, completing the race in 1 hour, 56 seconds. His only major competition came from Tony Martin of Germany, who was 17 seconds back. Third was Bert Grabsch of Germany, 1:48 behind Cancellara.
- Yellow Jersey: The battle between race leader Alberto Contador of Spain and Andy Schleck of Luxembourg was closer than most expected, but Contador eventually won out, extending his lead to 39 seconds and all but guaranteeing his third Tour title.
- Quote of the Day: "I think it's the first Tour that has given me so much emotion, you can't imagine" — Alberto Contador.
- Next stage: After taking a train from Bordeaux on Sunday morning, the riders take part in the final stage, a 63.7-mile race from Longjumeau ending on the Champs-Elysees in Paris. One jersey remains undetermined: the green jersey of sprint champion. It is currently on the shoulders of Alessandro Petacchi of Italy.

Sports BRIEFS

Kyle Busch rolls to 8th Nationwide win

CLERMONT, Ind. — Kyle Busch held off Carl Edwards in a two-lap sprint to the finish to win the NASCAR Nationwide race at O'Reilly Raceway Park on Saturday night.
 Busch used a perfectly timed restart to keep a hard-charging Edwards at bay and pick up his eighth win of the season and his fifth in his last six starts.
 Edwards, who was docked 60 points and fined $25,000 for taking out series points leader Brad Keselowski at the end of last week's race in St. Louis, kept things clean this time. He used a late gamble to take on tires to roar through the field but didn't have quite enough to track down Busch.

Aric Almirola finished third, followed by pole-sitter Trevor Bayne and Reed Sorenson. Keselowski faded late to finish eighth.

Mendoza and US roll at softball World Cup

OKLAHOMA CITY — Jessica Mendoza doubled twice and drove in four runs, Monica Abbott threw a one-hitter and the U.S. beat rival Japan 8-0 Saturday night at the World Cup of Softball.
 The Americans (4-0) have yet to allow a run or an extra-base hit in four victories at the World Cup, yielding only nine singles in 26 innings.

Natasha Watley had an RBI single and scored three times and Kaitlin Cochran homered for the third time in as many days to end the game after six innings because of the mercy rule.

Jennie Finch, playing in her final international tournament, also drove in a run.

TOUR

Contador acknowledged this wasn't his best Tour.

"Cycling is not like mathematics. There are moments when you are very well-prepared and everything runs smoothly. But this year, maybe I was not in the best shape really," he said.

"Today I was not feeling so well: I didn't sleep well, I had a stomachache," Contador said through a translator, before adding: "Eventually, things went pretty well."

Schleck, who is poised to finish second to Contador for the second straight year, had no regrets.

"Beating Contador is not easy, but I tried everything," Schleck said. "I am happy, and I'll come back next year to win."

"I think I did the best time-trial of my cycling life so far," he added.

During the race, Schleck was hindered by the withdrawal of his older brother and teammate. Frank Schleck broke his collarbone in a crash over the cobblestones in the third stage along the Belgian-French border.

The 39-second margin is exactly the time that Schleck lost to Contador in the controversial 15th stage on Monday. That's when the Luxembourg rider's bike chain became entangled in a final Pyrenean climb — and Contador sped on.

Some called it a breach of cycling's often-unclear etiquette, which calls for riders to respect the yellow jersey — Schleck was wearing it then — in times of uncontrollable mishaps like a crash.

That day, Contador took the jersey and has worn it since.

Schleck was at first angered over Contador's move to bolt ahead, but he later appealed to fans not to jeer the Spaniard. The two riders have vacationed together and Schleck calls him a friend.

scored teammates Danielle Gomez and Jordan Martin to cut Goldenrod's advantage to 5-3.

Neither team would score in the fifth inning. And the sixth rolled around with one runner on base and two outs for Crystal River.
 Jordan Martin, the runner, would be sent early on a hit-and-run. That would be crucial because Shay Huggins hit a hard grounder to the left side of the infield that should have resulted in a force out.

Jordan Martin, though, motored with a head-first slide into second base and was safe on the play. While that particular play didn't result in a run, Crystal River's newfound life from the play would.

Breanna Martin singled to score her twin sister Jordan. One batter later, Huggins crossed home on a delayed steal to tie the game at 5-5.

The eventual game-winning run would come off the bat of Crystal River center-fielder Maegan McMichen, who hit a rocket to dead center for a ground-rule double. That blast scored Breanna Martin and put Crystal River up 6-5.

Danielle Gomez added an insurance run in the top of the seventh after standing on third following a three-base error by Goldenrod's right fielder and then scoring on a passed ball.

Rachel Roe was the workhorse from the pitcher's circle Saturday, going her maximum of 10 innings over the two games.

Roe gave up two earned runs in a complete-game effort to pick up the win in the first game while tossing three scoreless innings of relief against Deltona with six strikeouts. Overall, Roe struck out 12 batters and walked four.

A weather delay that lasted more than four hours came immediately after Danielle Gomez cracked a three-run inside-the-park home run to put Crystal River back in the game.

After trailing 6-1 in the bottom of the fifth, Gomez's blast — a drive to left field that got under the Deltona defender's glove and rolled to the fence — plated teammates Breanna Martin and Amber Russo to cut Crystal River's deficit.

The weather delay, however, wouldn't cool Crystal River's bats. Shay Huggins singled to put runners on first and second. Whitley then cracked a double that brought home both Courtney Strifler and Huggins to knot the game at 6-all.

Crystal River would have chances to win the game in both the seventh and eighth innings (especially with bases loaded, no outs in the eighth) but couldn't plate the necessary run.

Tyler stopped the bleeding and kept them in check, throwing only 45 pitches in four innings of work. It was a great effort, especially with how hot it was out there."

Humphreys, however, was a big contributor with his bat as well. He joined three of his Crystal River teammates in delivering with the long ball for the District 15 champions. In fact, three, three-run home runs by Ross Obstfeld, Aaron Bertine and Humphreys and a solo shot by Skyler Hastings accounted for Crystal River's first 10 runs.

But in this crazy contest where no lead was safe, it was Palma Cia who scored first, taking a 3-0 lead in the top of the first inning. Crystal River, however, was quick to answer as Obstfeld's three-run blast scored Donnie Dewees, Humphreys and himself.

In the second inning, Crystal River opened a 9-3 lead when Bertine and Humphreys delivered their three-run homers. Hastings and Westen Pope scored on Bertine's four-bagger and Josh Howell and Dewees scored on Humphreys swing of the bat. By plating those six runs, it looked as if Crystal River was on its way to another mercy-rule decision.

That feeling would all change, however, when Palma Cia plated three runs in the top of the third inning. But again Crystal River was replied quickly when Hastings started the bottom of the frame with a solo home run. It would be the first of three runs for Crystal River who stretched the margin back to six with a 12-6 lead.

Things were looking great for the home team before Palma Cia unleashed seven runs in the top of the fourth to retake the lead.

Suddenly a game Crystal River seemed to have by the tail had slipped away. But in a game that had seen it all, things were just getting started.

Interestingly enough, while Crystal River used the home run to build the lead, the team would rely on the small ball over the course of the next two innings to retake the lead.

Hastings would open the fourth with a single and Bertine followed with a one-out single. Howell then drew a walk to load the bases. And two-RBI walks by Dewees and Humphreys plated Hastings and Bertine. Howell, Dewees and Humphreys would also score later in the inning thanks to aggressive base running.

Crystal River would tack on two more runs when Sheldon Baxter walked and scored in the fifth and Howell walked and scored in the sixth inning.

"We've been hitting the ball great the whole tournament and that continued today," Strifler said. "Our offense has been clicking for sure, but we're really going to have to step it up defensively and with our pitching if we expect to move on to the state tournament."

Despite Crystal River's rollercoaster victory Saturday morning, the Citrus County representatives still face a winner-take-all game against Seminole this morning. The winner of this contest will be crowned Section 7 Little League Senior champions and advance to next week's state tournament in Melbourne.

For Humphreys — a young man with a lot on his mind and in his heart these days — he exited the field at Seminole Park with a clear focus.

"We've got to come to play tomorrow," he said. "It's that simple. We've worked too hard for this. It's win or go home. And for this team, going home right now isn't an option."

Bayshore 4, Central Citrus 1

The Cardiac Kids from Central Citrus met their match Saturday morning as Bayshore jumped on them early with three runs in the first inning and a solo home run by Dean Herman in the fourth inning.

The gritty kids from Central Citrus, who have possessed a never-say-die attitude both in the district and now the sectional tournament, scraped one run across in the third inning when Mathew Lopes doubled and Zac Pattison hit an RBI single.

"We were in it the whole game," Central Citrus manager Dave Pattison said. "We had a few scoring chances, but we just couldn't get that big hit today when we had our chances. But I'm proud of the way our kids have fought. They just never give up and that says so much about their heart and character."

With the loss Central Citrus will need help to advance to next week's Little League Majors All-Stars state tournament in Crystal River. But they're not eliminated yet. The team's first order of business will be to win their game this morning.

Fastest at Brickyard track

Former Indy 500 winner claims pole for NASCAR race

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Juan Pablo Montoya is in a familiar spot at Indianapolis Motor Speedway — out front.

A year after a late speeding penalty denied him a victory at the Brickyard, he's hoping it sticks this time.

Montoya has steadfastly denied any lingering bitterness from last year's near-miss, or any notion that the Brickyard owes him one. Instead, the pole-sitter for today's race is treating this visit as an entirely new opportunity.

"It's given me a lot, so I don't complain," said Montoya, who won the Indianapolis 500 for team owner Chip Ganassi in 2000.

So far this weekend, he's had little to gripe about.

His No. 42 Chevrolet was the fastest of 13 cars at an April tire test here, and Montoya paced both of Friday's practice sessions. Then he turned a lap at 182.278 mph on Saturday morning to take the top starting spot at the Brickyard.

Four-time defending series champion Jimmie Johnson, who won his third Brickyard last season in part because of Montoya's gaffe, qualified second with a lap at 182.142. Hendrick Motorsports teammate Mark Martin qualified third and was followed by Jamie McMurray, Montoya's teammate, Ryan Newman and Clint Bowyer, as Chevrolets took the top six qualifying spots.

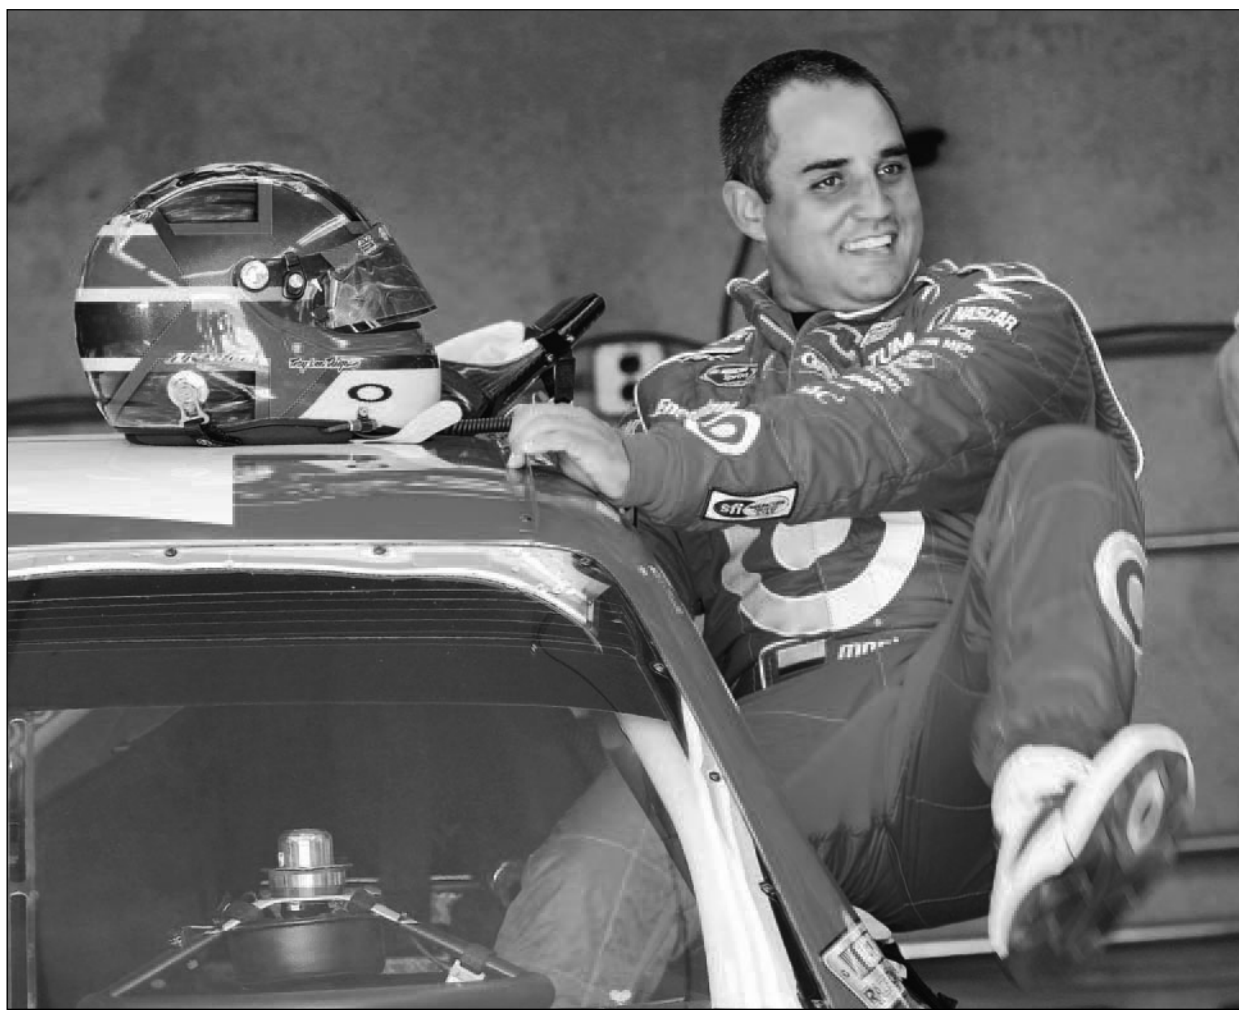

Greg Biffle was the highest qualifying Ford at seventh, Brad Keselowski was the best Dodge at 11th and Martin Truex Jr. led the Toyota effort at 12th.

Former Formula One champion Jacques Villeneuve, like Montoya also an Indianapolis 500 winner, qualified for his first Sprint Cup race since 2007 and will start last in the 43-car field. Four drivers failed to make the race: David Gilliland, Casey Mears — nephew of four-time Indy 500 winner Rick Mears — David Stremme and J.J. Yeley.

Attention will likely be on Montoya, who has already had a busy week. His wife, Connie, on Monday gave birth to the couple's third child, a daughter named Manuela, and Thursday was a trip to the emergency room for middle child Paulina.

"Her brother practiced his golf swing on her head," Montoya said with raised eyebrows.

So getting on track provided some relief from the madness, even though this weekend comes with raised expectations.

He led 116 laps last year in a bid to become the only driver to win both the IndyCar and NASCAR races at the Brickyard, only to be flagged for speeding on the final pit stop to drop to an 11th-place finish. Everyone expected a strong effort in his return, based solely on the assumption the No. 42 team wants to grab the victory it was denied last year.

But Johnson bristled Saturday at the suggestion that Montoya had the field covered last year.

"I think we were the best car last year," the winner argued. "I think Juan and the team did a great job getting up front and were in clean air. Yes, Juan was fast in clean air, but when he got mired in traffic, he couldn't go anywhere. Not taking a shot at Juan, but I'm really proud of what we did last year."

Montoya, of course, disagreed.

"If you think about it, I remember (Martin) nearly passed him with two laps to go," Montoya said. "So (Johnson) definitely didn't have the superior car; I think (Martin) was the second fastest car. (Johnson) probably had the third or fourth fastest car."

"He just had a good restart and that's it."

The back-and-forth set the stage for what should be a decent show Sunday at one of the most storied tracks in all of automobile racing. Montoya will be trying to give car owner Ganassi a rare "three-peat" in that he already this season won the Daytona 500 with McMurray and the Indianapolis 500 with Dario Franchitti.

Ganassi wants the sweep, but was cautiously optimistic.

"To be honest with you, if we weren't up near the front (in qualifying), I would have been pretty disappointed because we were up there during the test and in the practice session," Ganassi said. "So we'll see what happens. You know, it's a long day and we have a lot of things we have to do yet. This is just one step in a long flight of steep stairs for the weekend."

Filly captures second victory after two losses

Associated Press

OCEANPORT, N.J. — Rachel Alexandra defeated six rivals Saturday in the $400,000 Lady's Secret Stakes for fillies and mares at Monmouth Park.

It was the second straight win for the reigning Horse of the Year following a pair of losses to start the season.

Calvin Borel was aboard for trainer Steve Asmussen as Rachel Alexandra beat Queen Martha by three lengths with Ask the Moon third.

The 4-year-old paid $2.20 to win. The time was 1:49.78 for the 1 1/8 miles on an oppressively hot afternoon.

It was a triumphant return to Monmouth where Rachel Alexandra beat the boys last summer in the $1 million Haskell Invitational, one of the key victories that propelled her to the championship in an 8-0 campaign.

After a slow start this season with a pair of a narrow losses, Rachel Alexandra seems back to her old dominant self. She rolled to a 10½ length win in her previous outing, the Fleur De Lis Handicap at Churchill Downs.

That victory came on June 12, providing a six-week interval between starts. Her next start could come against fillies and mares in the Personal Ensign at Saratoga on Aug. 29. Another option might be a bid for a repeat win against the colts in Saratoga's Woodward Stakes on Sept. 4.

To lure Rachel Alexandra back to Monmouth, the Lady's Secret underwent a major overhaul. The race was originally slated for Aug. 1 with a purse of $150,000. The additional $250,000 was contingent on Rachel Alexandra competing in the race. The distance was also lengthened from 1 1/16 miles to 1 1/8.

The race comes a week before the Haskell, which will feature Kentucky Derby winner Super Saver and Preakness winner Lookin At Lucky.

Softball shutout streak continues for national team

National team beats Futures 1-0 Saturday

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Eileen Canney keeps accumulating fond memories when softball brings her to Oklahoma City.

A day after she accepted her boyfriend's marriage proposal, Canney struck out 14 in the U.S. national team's third straight shutout and Alissa Haber homered in a 1-0 victory against the USA Futures team at the World Cup of Softball on Saturday.

"It's been a great week, and it's nice because my family is here and friends are here to support us," Canney said. "I just love Oklahoma City. Really great memories here."

Canney (1-0) pitched the same field for Northwestern at the 2006 Women's College World Series, when the Wildcats made it all the way to the finals before losing to Arizona. She and her fiancé, Andrew, started dating shortly before that.

So Friday along the Bricktown canal near downtown, he dropped to one knee and popped the question.

"Oklahoma City is really special for us, so it was a perfect place for it," Canney said.

A day later, the U.S. national team rookie made her first start at the World Cup and put up zeros just as Monica Abbott and Jennie Finch had done for the Americans (3-0) in the first two games at the tournament.

Canney allowed only Megan Langenfeld's line single to lead off the fifth inning and Valerie Arioto's single down the left-field line in the seventh. Arioto was cut down at second as she tried to turn it into a double.

"It's tough as a rookie coming on this team because we've got such great veterans and such a tradition that they're stepping into. That can be a little intimidating at times and a little tough," U.S. coach Jay Miller said. "But I thought Eileen did a great job today and really settled in."

The game featured a squad of the nation's top players against the best players who didn't make the national team. Jordan Taylor (0-1) threw a three-hitter and retired 11 straight at one point for the Futures (1-2), but yielded Haber's leadoff home run in the third inning that ended up being the difference.

"It was a low ball. I usually don't swing at the low balls, but at that point in the at-bat I was swinging at anything but the change-up," said Haber, who set a record with 20 RBIs at the world championships three weeks ago.

"She kept us off balance a lot with that change-up, so if I saw anything hard that was around the zone, I was swinging."

Power wins 3rd pole for IRL race

EDMONTON, Alberta — Will Power, going for his third consecutive win in IndyCar, will start from the pole Sunday in the Honda Edmonton Indy.

Helio Castroneves, Power's teammate with Team Penske, will start beside him on the front row while Scott Dixon of Target Chip Ganassi will be third.

Power has been the class of the field in IndyCar this season. He leads the driver standings, has won four of 10 races and has six poles.

Danica Patrick did not make it out of the first round of the three-round qualifying process and will start 21st.

Racing BRIEFS

IRL puts struggling Duno on probation

EDMONTON, Alberta — The IRL has placed struggling driver Milka Duno on probation for the rest of the year for failing to consistently meet minimal performance standards.

Series officials say Duno needs to show "immediate and substantial improvement to her driving" by the end of the season. Officials cited her inability to be competitive and her on-track decision making as reasons for the decision.

The 38-year-old Venezuelan driver has been pulled by track officials from two races this year, including last week in Toronto, for driving so slowly she was deemed a hazard. She's also received sharp criticism from other drivers frustrated by her tactics.

Johnson earns top Pro Stock qualifier

MORRISON, Colo. — Pro Stock driver Allen Johnson earned the No. 1 qualifier spot while breaking the track speed record at the Mile-High Nationals on Saturday.

Johnson drove his Dodge Avenger in an elapsed time of 6.981 seconds at a record 198.64 mph at Bandimere Speedway. It will be the fourth top qualifier this season for the event's defending champion.

Antron Brown, the 2009 winner, was Top Fuel's No. 1 qualifier. Brown's 3.961 time run a day earlier held up and gained him his fifth top spot of the year and the 27th of his career.

Matt Hagan was atop Funny Car with a run of 4.161 seconds at 301.33.

KAPOLEI, Hawaii — More than 80 years after Mickey Mouse piloted "Steamboat Willie" and whistled his way into the hearts of children across the world, he has finally reached the shores of Hawaii.

The Walt Disney Co. on Friday gave a peek of its sprawling, beachside Hawaiian resort that is under construction and scheduled to open next year.

"Aulani" is Disney's first major standalone resort away from a theme park and could serve as a model for future projects as the company diversifies and expands its vacation offerings.

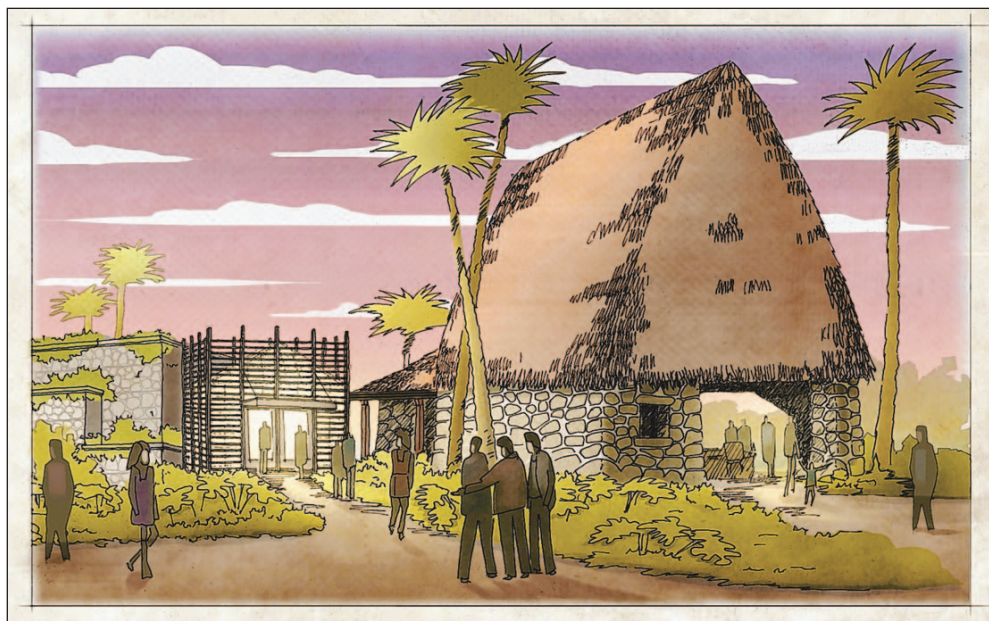

"This is a very special project for us," said Tom Staggs, chairman of Walt Disney Parks and Resorts. "It's unlike anything that Disney has done before; at the same time, it's very like many of the things we do."

Aulani will have 359 hotel rooms, 481 time-share units, restaurants, a convention center, a 15,000-square-foot spa and a massive water play area that includes a volcano tube slide and snorkel lagoon.

It sits on 21 acres on Oahu's Leeward Coast in the Ko Olina development, known for its white-sand lagoons, scenic golf course and colorful sunsets. Ko Olina is about an hour west of Waikiki, where most of the hotels and tourists are.

Jim Lewis, president of Disney's time-share component, said Hawaii makes "perfect sense" with its rich culture, traditions, warm greetings, family values, friendships and storytelling. "Those are also terms synonymous with Disney," he said. "And by the way, Hawaii also happens to be one of the most popular vacation destinations on the planet, and that's the business that we're in."

Most of the resort is currently a jungle of concrete, steel, wires and pipes with no Mickey and Minnie in sight. Aulani is scheduled to open Aug. 29, 2011, with hotel reservations to begin next month. Time-share sales started three weeks ago.

With the construction phase alone costing more than $600 million, Aulani represents a huge investment for Disney amid a sharp tourism downturn.

Staggs, who previously served as Disney's chief financial officer, wouldn't comment on the final cost.

"Are we nervous about this investment right now given this economy? The answer is we really aren't," he said. "We really do have a fundamental belief in this location and Hawaii in general."

Staggs called the project "a tremendous opportunity," giving Disney a permanent presence in the islands. He wouldn't say what other areas Disney was considering because "right now, our focus is right here and making sure we get this right."

According to an economic impact study commissioned by Disney, Aulani is expected to generate 4,800 jobs during construction. When completed, 2,400 jobs will be created, with about half working at the resort. More than $271 million annually in economic activity will be generated.

The largest units at Aulani are 3-bedroom "Grand Villas" — 2,300-square-foot timeshare units that are larger than most Hawaii homes, sleep 12 and have sweeping views of the Pacific.

All the hotel and time-share units have more of a traditional Hawaiian flair with touches of Disney that generally are subtle — other than the surfer Mickey lamp in each room.

David Uchiyama, of the Hawaii Tourism Authority, said Disney's arrival is a "validator" of the Aloha state as a family destination. He was impressed by Disney's efforts in trying to connect with Hawaiian culture.

"(Others) usually lay out a structure, put pictures up and put a canoe here. These guys went way beyond that," Uchiyama said.

"The extent that they took to connect with the host culture should be commended."

While this may be Disney's first big push into Hawaii, the company has had a long and growing relationship with Hawaii. One

Today's Highlight:

On July 25, 1960, a Woolworth's store in Greensboro, N.C., that had been the scene of a sit-in protest against its whites-only lunch counter dropped its segregation policy as it served three of its black employees at the counter.

In 1866, Ulysses S. Grant was named General of the Army of the United States, the first officer to hold the rank.

In 1868, Congress passed an act creating the Wyoming Territory.

In 1946, the United States detonated an atomic bomb near Bikini Atoll in the Pacific in the first underwater test of the device.

In 1952, Puerto Rico became a self-governing commonwealth of the United States.

In 1963, the United States, the Soviet Union and Britain initiated a treaty in Moscow prohibiting the testing of nuclear weapons in the atmosphere, in space or underwater.

In 1984, Soviet cosmonaut Svetlana Savitskaya became the first woman to walk in space as she carried out more than three hours of experiments outside the orbiting space station Salyut 7.

Today's HOROSCOPE

Birthday: The year ahead could be one in which Lady Luck will play a more active role in your affairs than she has in the past. A number of interventions on her part will be responsible for altering what hasn't been working well.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) — Although you may not take any spur-of-the-moment commitment you make seriously today, others will. Once the words are out of your mouth, you must stand by them or suffer the consequences.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Developments that can contribute to your well-being will be handled well today, however, a number of other situations might not receive the same thoughtful treatment. You'll pay the price.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — If you're inviting a few people over to your place today to participate in a fun activity, have second thoughts about including someone who rubs the others wrong. S/he could be a spoiler.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — Be as democratic as possible today when it comes to issues involving the family. Don't take it upon yourself to make all the decisions without consulting with the others.

Sagittarius (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) — You wouldn't consciously bring up issues that have always generated dissent, but today you could do so without thinking if you're not careful. Think before you open your mouth.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Remember it is never wise to take anything of a commercial nature for granted, but if you ignore this wisdom today, events will show you why. It'll be your loss if you get careless.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — An idea you think is pretty nifty might not appeal to your spouse or any of the others involved, so don't take it upon yourself to set it in motion without first conferring with the clan.

Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20) — A good opportunity that could better things for you might present itself today, but it will count for nothing if you don't take advantage of it. Don't rest your feet when you should be dancing.

Aries (March 21-April 19) — There is nothing wrong with expressing your independence when it is warranted. However, it should be done sparingly and only when you are truly being treaded upon.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) — If something truly nice happens for you today, try to include others or credit them for your good fortune if you can...

Gemini (May 21-June 20) — There's an excellent chance that lots of good things will be happening for you today, but a couple of bum things could get interwoven. Don't let them take away your upbeat spirit.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) — By keeping an even keel on the management of your funds today, you can offset the few losses you might experience. It's important not to be prudent one minute and unduly extravagant the next.

We really like our own stuff

Florida is filled with conservative Republicans who want less government spending until it comes to our own stuff.

We really like our own stuff.

We like it when government spends money on stuff in our own backyard. We like it when the feds give us money to build roads, purchase park property or subsidize our under-funded local school system.

At the same time we get seriously worked up about the federal government borrowing money from China to help fund the national debt.

In Citrus County we've seen millions of dollars pumped into county government so we could build or improve roads. We were proud when our county commission stepped right up and took advantage of President Obama's stimulus dollars so that roads could be improved and people could be put to work.

New and improved TRIM notice coming

Special to the Chronicle

Citrus County Property Appraiser Geoffrey Greene wants to prepare the public for a whole new look in the 2010 annual Truth In Millage (TRIM) Notice, scheduled to be mailed Friday, Aug. 13.

"During the 2009 regular legislative session, a bill (H.B. 701) was passed and took effect Jan. 1, 2010, mandating a substantially expanded format. The new TRIM applies statewide and these changes to state law are the sole reason for the substantial revision the public will see in the 2010 annual TRIM Notice sent to all property owners," said Greene, who is alerting the public early so the changes won't be a surprise.

"No matter how you slice it, whenever the public sees something new for the first time, it may be confusing," he said.

Greene encourages everyone to give the new TRIM a chance. The intent is to provide more clarity and transparency to better help the public understand the taxing process. One of the major purposes of the annual tax notice is to advise taxpayers of what their taxes would be for 2010. Those numbers come from proposed budgets and millage rates required for the two budget scenarios shown. The notice includes dates, times and telephone numbers for all budget hearings for Citrus County's taxing authorities. The above informa-

Pfc. Philip W. Ackley's Korean War dog tag — found in North Korea's Unsan battlefield area, where Ackley is believed to have been lost — was handed over to the United States by North Korea at the Panmunjom truce village in January. Since 2005, the U.S. government has refused to work with North Korea to recover the men of Unsan and others among more than 8,000 U.S. missing in action from the 1950-53 war.

Lost Korean War battalion awaits United States' MIA decision

CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Trapped by two Chinese divisions, troops of the 8th U.S. Cavalry Regiment were left to die in far northern Korea, abandoned by the U.S. command in a Korean War episode viewed as one of the most troubling in American military history.

Sixty years later those fallen soldiers, the lost battalion of Unsan, are stranded anew.

North Korea is offering fresh clues to their remains. American teams are ready to re-enter the north to dig for them. But for five years the U.S. government has refused to work with North Korea to recover the men of Unsan and others among more than 8,000 U.S. missing in action from the 1950-53 war.

Now, under pressure from MIA family groups, the Obama administration is said to be moving slowly to reverse the Bush administration's suspension of the joint recovery program, a step taken in 2005 as the North Korean nuclear crisis dragged on.

"If I had a direct line in to the president, I would say, 'Please reinstate this program. There are families that need closure,'" said Ruth Davis, 61, of Palestine, Texas, whose uncle, Sgt. 1st Class Benny Don Rogers, has been listed as MIA since Chinese attackers overran his company — I Company, 8th Cavalry — at Unsan in late 1950.

It was one of Rogers' I Company comrades, Pfc. Philip W. Ackley of Hillsboro, New Hampshire, whose identifying dog tag appeared in a photo the North Koreans handed over at Korea's Panmunjom truce village in January of this 60th year since the war started. The North Koreans also delivered photos of remains, a stark reminder that Unsan's dead still wait to come home.

The U.S. "has developed the humanitarian issue into a political problem," complained a North Korean statement urging resumption of the MIA search project, which earned hard currency for the Pyongyang government.

In this Oct. 15, 1950 file photo, 8th U.S. Cavalry Regiment soldiers advance through low brush in North Korea during the Korean War. Two weeks later, two Chinese divisions caught the 8th Cavalry in a trap at Unsan, North Korea, inflicting heavy casualties as the U.S. command abandoned efforts to rescue the regiment. Some 260 soldiers remain listed as missing in action at Unsan. Washington is evaluating whether to work again with North Korea to recover such remains, a program suspended by the Bush administration in 2005.

The devastating losses at Unsan, in early November 1950, came as China intervened to fend off a final North Korean defeat. In a last letter home, dated Oct. 30, Rogers told his parents, "It is a lot better over here, but it's not over yet."

The U.S. command had ignored intelligence reports that China's army was moving south, and Rogers and the 8th Cavalry had been sent too far north, just 50 miles from China, where they stumbled into a closing enemy vise.

Higher headquarters rejected requests for a pullback, then refused to send artillery forward to support a rescue effort. Finally, it ordered the rescue force withdrawn.

Two of the 8th Cavalry's three battalions managed to escape, with heavy losses. But only small bands from the five companies of the doomed 3rd Battalion made it out as waves of Chinese infantry attacked their 200-meter-wide (200-yard-wide) defense perimeter.

The 8th Cavalry's abandonment at Unsan became an infamous chapter in Army annals — "one of the most shameful and little-known incidents in U.S. military history," wrote Korean War historian Jack J. Gifford.

Make the right decision now

Citrus County residents continue to suffer the squeeze of an unrelenting national recession, facing joblessness, home foreclosures, plunging property values and more.

Add to this the effects of Amendment 1 still adversely impacting Florida's fiscal stability, and it's no wonder Citrus County commissioners are faced with a monumental revenue-deficient shortfall that's not only threatening the county's livelihood, but its quality of life as well.

Realistically, no one would question that public safety is government's primary responsibility. As the county's chief law enforcement officer, I know I walk a thin line when it comes to maintaining the public's safety 24/7 and securing the necessary funds to do so.

So let's start by taking a long, hard look at the current state of public safety in Citrus County. Despite an innovative agency-wide philosophy of intelligence-led policing, proactive patrolling and investigations, plus solid arrests, as of mid-July, the sheriff's office was looking at a 35 percent increase in property crimes in unincorporated Citrus County, when compared with 2009. Even though commercial burglaries and auto thefts dropped slightly, residential and vehicle burglaries still rose by 48 percent. (Numbers in the two municipalities fared slightly better.)

Total police actions increased from 229,000 in 2009, to a projected total of 260,000 for this year. Tracking the county-wide activity of my deputies shows convincingly that their unobligated time, or the time necessary for directed patrols, area checks and other proactive functions, dropped from 21.5 percent in 2009, to 19 percent in January to June 2010. The targeted figure I strive for is 30 percent.

Looking beyond, the county's Fire Rescue Division is currently operating in the red, with fewer than the minimum standard of working firefighters. And Nature Coast EMS hasn't added an ambulance since the early 2000s. Administrators are considering a move to tactical dispatching in order to maintain at least a handful of ambulances actively on call in

SIGN OF THE TIMES

Public safety a priority, but so is spending

While the economic downturn has been hurting private businesses for years, the decreased valuation of property is having a devastating impact on local government.

Property owners pay taxes on the assessed value of their homes and businesses. When that value goes down, fewer tax dollars are raised. In fact, the tax dollars available now are similar to those generated in 2004.

In Citrus County, that means government has to cut many millions of dollars from its budget or raise the tax rate to make up the difference. Elected officials will not raise taxes, so every government in Citrus County is busy finding ways to reduce spending.

The county commission asked the constitutional officers — the sheriff, elections supervisor, clerk of the court, property appraiser and tax collector — to reduce spending to the 2004 levels so that the cuts are shared across the board.

While most were able to comply, Sheriff Jeff Dawsey has been leery about cutting public safety too deeply because of the increased incidence of crime. The veteran sheriff is justly concerned that we don't want to give the streets back to the bad guys.

Sheriff Dawsey recently came to the Chronicle's editorial board and said he had worked out an agreement with County Administrator Brad Thorpe to cut yet another $1 million from his 2010-11 budget. That was a good step.

But that still leaves a big deficit in the amount of tax dollars that are going to be available and the amount of spending that is planned. In truth, the sheriff has reduced his spending each year since the 2007-08 budget year. And it's also true that the county commission keeps turning over additional responsibilities to the sheriff — such as the animal control — because he does such a good job in managing and leading the organization.

But it's also true that some of the new $1 million proposed by Sheriff Dawsey isn't really a savings; it is a delay of paying vacation salary to employees. According to the accountants, $600,000 would still be owed to employees and would have to be paid next year.

That's not really a savings. And the tax dollar shortage will most likely be more severe next year.

We don't want Sheriff Dawsey to cut back the number of deputies he has patrolling the streets of Citrus County. Our sheriff's office does an outstanding job of keeping this community safe.

But we've got to ask the sheriff to go back again and see if additional spending reductions can be found.

Capital spending projects can be delayed; administrative costs can be reduced; furlough days can be added; internal processes can be re-examined and savings found.

A concern with all county departments is that 11 holidays are enjoyed by all workers and paid for by the taxpayers. We doubt there are any businesses in Citrus County that have 11 paid holidays.

There are tough measures that must be taken at every level of government and Sheriff Dawsey is no exception. These are extraordinary times. The unemployment rate is more than 11 percent. Thousands of residents have lost their homes through foreclosure. Many businesses are suffering through the toughest economic downturn since the Depression.

Every elected official and agency must figure out how to do more with less. That's a challenge that all Americans face today. In the sheriff's case, the challenge is to keep the community safe by maintaining the road patrol yet still find enough cuts that meaningful reductions are possible.

From a county government viewpoint of public safety, the sheriff's office and emergency medical services should be the top priority. The county has placed one big toe into creating a paid firefighting force — but that's a strategy that cannot be funded with existing revenue sources.

We are continually disappointed that our county refuses to consider combining fire services with EMS and follow the more efficient format used by surrounding counties. We can't afford to drive away the volunteer firefighters and we certainly can't afford to create a new county fire bureaucracy that is independent of EMS.

Public safety and education are the two most important services offered by local government. They deserve to be the highest priority for spending. But at the same time, when tax dollars disappear during tough times, those areas need to also participate in the effort to reduce spending.

THE ISSUE:

Sheriff's budget.

OUR OPINION:

Additional cuts needed.

Making contact

As your July 18 editorial, "Citizens should urge compromise," suggested, I tried about six phone numbers and never could get the correct numbers to contact Dr. Uppender Rao or David Langer to offer my comments on why I hope they would get together and work out the hospital solution between Foundation directors and Board of Trustees.

If you want us to contact these organizations or individuals, why don't you include the contact addresses and/or phone numbers to make the contacting much easier for your readers? I finally gave up.

Karl Schulz
 Homosassa

Editor's note: We should have included "how to contact" info with that editorial.

For Foundation Board, contact Katie Myers, spokeswoman for Citrus Memorial hospital, 726-1551, ext. 1559, or e-mail kmyers@citrusmh.org.

For Board of Trustees, contact Vicki LaMarche, executive director of the hospital board, 726-5111, or e-mail v.lamarche@cchb.us. (Board of Trustees staff work out of the Grant and Samargya law office in Inverness, so when you call that number, ask for the Citrus Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees staff or, specifically, Ms. LaMarche.)

CMHS care

I know that Citrus Memorial is having some issues at the present time, but it has not interfered with the care the nurses are giving the patients. Last week, I was in the out-patient clinic for a medical procedure, which lasted a total of about eight hours before I could go home. The nurses were so wonderful, kind, caring and considerate. They could not have been nicer to me. They checked on me every 10 minutes to make sure I was OK and comfortable. I cannot say enough good things about the staff; no hint of any discord. I want to thank everyone, especially nurse Donna. What a wonderful person. Thanks again for your care and professionalism.

Golden opportunity

Dear Gov. Crist:

It would take courage that is not often seen in these politically charged times for you to dissolve the Nominating Council as advocated by Nancy Argenziano. Certainly such courage would be welcomed by the mass of voters who are fed up with the misconduct and arrogance of the GOP. I say this as a registered Republican who does not simply vote party lines.

Power corrupts; absolute power corrupts absolutely. Never in my life have I seen power abused so openly than it is currently in my home state of Florida by so many of those who are elected to serve the public's best interests.

Someone once said that to not choose is actually a choice. If you choose to let this opportunity to correct a great wrong pass you by, it is my opinion that you will suffer for it in your bid for the Senate. Looked at correctly, it is a golden opportunity for you, tea parties be damned.

Guest COLUMN

In response to the recent Chronicle editorial, "Push leaders to the bargaining table," the government Board of Trustees is in absolute agreement and wholeheartedly supports the idea of a workshop without lawyers, mediators or consultants. In fact, the Trustees have passed numerous resolutions and forwarded multiple letters to the corporate directors, essentially begging them to work together for the well-being of the hospital. Sadly, our efforts to reach out to the corporate directors are consistently rejected with numerous controversial demands and pre-conditions, which must be satisfied prior to any joint negotiations or workshop.

The pre-conditions imposed by the corporation have concerned their demand the Trustees return to status quo prior to any future discussions, the 2009 indigent care and capital improvement funding and 2010 indigent care funding. The Trustees believe to return to status quo in the hopes of some future discussions would not prove tenable and would only result in continued divisive controversies; the challenges need to be addressed presently. Moreover, as a majority of the Trustees do not believe additional funding is due the corporation for FYE 2009 and the 2010 corporate indigent care requests need to be reviewed for policy compliance, it would not be responsible to transfer contested monies so demanded.

Based upon the recent press article submitted by Citrus Memorial Health Foundation Board Chairman David Langer, it seems the corporation's current demand primarily concerns the 2009 tax funding, which the corporation believes to be outstanding. Although the corporation, as a negotiation pre-condition, demands an additional $1,200,000 to allegedly fund its 2009 charity and capital costs, a review of the FYE 2009 corporate financial documents reveals not only has the Board fully funded all FYE 2009 corporate indigent care costs and all non-bond financed capital expenditures but demonstrates the Board has, in fact, overpaid the corporation approximately $3,815,476 for such services actually rendered.

Specifically, the FYE 2009 CMHF Inc. Audited Financial Statements and 2009 Citrus Memorial Health System Capital Disbursements Statement document $4,623,153 as the actual cost of charity care provided and $2,461,371 as the actual cost of all non-bond financed capital expenditures with a combined total expenditure of $7,084,524. To date, the Trustees have made 2009 tax contributions of $10,900,000 and accordingly have overpaid the corporation $3,815,476. Even were the public Board of Trustees to double fund all 2009 projects, previously financed by the Trustees' revenue notes, no significant funding amount is outstanding.

Moreover, to support the 2009 tax appropriation, the corporation represented $8,327,000 of departmental capital improvements were preliminarily projected and these capital projects, together with indigent care necessitated the demanded tax appropriation. Unfortunately, although the corporation received taxpayer funding of $10,900,000 only $2,461,371 of the represented improvements were actually undertaken by the corporation.

To resolve the 2009 funding controversy and to implore the corporation to move forward with the workshop negotiation, the Trustees have proposed placing the contested 2009 funding in a restricted fund dedicated to capital improvements.

It should be noted that the Trustees, seeking to develop oversight sufficient to protect the hospital's sovereign immunity status, have consistently offered compromises. Although the doctrine of governmental immunity — which limits the recovery of damages for negligence of the hospital or the hospital's employed physicians to $100,000 per claim with a maximum of $200,000 per occurrence — by definition requires "operative control" by a governmental entity, the Trustees have agreed to sit in equality with the private directors.

The equal representation of public directors and private directors (with the chief of the medical staff as an additional member) was supported by both board's mediation committees, the Executive Committee of the CMH Medical Staff, some 200 physicians of the Florida Well-care Alliance and Citrus County Medical Society, the Chronicle Editorial Board and all members of the local legislative delegation including the state Sens. Charles Dean and Mike Fasano and state Rep. Ron Schultz. Hundreds of citizens have signed petitions regarding proper governance.

In spite of an outpouring of public support, the Foundation has withdrawn from the equal representation agreement and has presented controversial pre-conditions and demands which must be unilaterally satisfied prior to further negotiations.

On behalf of the Citrus County Hospital Board of Trustees, whose only mission is to protect the public hospital and preserve quality health care for all people of Citrus County, our message is simple: please withdraw the contested pre-conditions regarding payment of taxpayer funds the public Board of Trustees does not in good faith believe is owed and meet with us as soon as possible in hopes of coming together to succeed in our dedicated purpose to serve the health care needs of our community.

Happy birthday dear Becky, happy 40th to you!

Twenty-five years ago, I had to face my 40th birthday. Honestly, the only one I've ever dreaded and wanted to avoid was the big 4-0.

I had a plan. My birthday follows middle child Becky's by four days — hers is on July 28th and mine is on Aug. 1st.

The plan was to take my family to Daytona Beach for a five-day stay beginning on Becky's 15th birthday, then the days would just slip lazily by like the ebb and flow of the tide and no one would even notice when my b-day came and went, we'd finish our vacation, return home and my 40th birthday would be over and done with without me ever having to acknowledge it.

Wrong. I followed through with the plan and thought everything was working fine.

I blissfully went to sleep as a 39-year-old on July 31, 1985, but when I awoke on Aug. 1, 1985, I was not only 40 years old, but Cheryl's three children — mine, too, but at that moment I didn't want to claim any of 'em — were singing to me, emphasizing that it was not only my birthday, but it was my 40th birthday.

As I recall, the most vocally vivacious member of the trio was Becky.

What goes around, comes around.

Wednesday, next, is July 28, 2010.

So, guess who's having her 40th birthday?

That's right. Rebecca Eve "Becky" Brannen Lasse.

Our children made me suffer throughout the entire day, it wasn't over after the opening song — they told everyone we came in contact with it was their Dad's birthday and he was now 40 years old.

On July 28th, Cheryl and I are scheduled to be in Scotland, so I cannot be with Becky on her birthday to torment her in person, but I'm taking great pleasure in telling all of you folks, thousands of you, that Wednesday is her 40th birthday.

One of the things our children and their mother did on that day was to drag me to the boardwalk, where they insisted we have a family picture made at a novelty photo gallery to commemorate the event; and, since I was feeling old, we were dressed in Civil War-era garb. A copy of the subject photograph is at left for your viewing pleasure.

Happy birthday, Becky. I love you, and yes, I'm fully aware that if you are 40 on Wednesday, on Sunday, I'll be running headlong into 6-5!

Thanks, Hospice

The family of Louise O'Dwyer would like to express our extreme gratitude to the wonderful folks at HPH Hospice, both Critical Care in Inverness and Hospice House in Lecanto. The outstanding doctors, nurses, aides and wonderful volunteers made the final days of my mom's life comfortable and home-like. You all showed her compassion and friendship during her many months in your facilities. Our hats are off to you for providing her with the very best of care available and for going out of your way to make sure she was comfortable during those difficult times for our family. Thank you!

Their own worst problems

I just read the column "Their own worst problems," by Carl Hiaasen of the Miami Herald (July 15). It was dead-on accurate. How can these two idiots think that they could be governor of Florida? One is just so boring and the other is a crook. Alex Sink is just letting the other two fight it out for "idiot of the year."

Sound OFF

Two points

This is in response to Dr. Dixon's column of July 18. Point No. 1: Requiring people to pay for their own health care by purchasing insurance does not constitute a massive redistribution of wealth from the rich to the poor. As it is now, there is a rather large number on my property tax bill labeled Citrus Memorial Health Systems for indigent care. Under the health care bill, I will no longer have to pay that — neither will you. Point No. 2: Tax increases are enacted by Congress. If you want to call the scheduled termination of the disastrous tax cuts for the very rich, which have brought our nation to the point of bankruptcy, a "tax increase," at least give credit where credit is due. This tax increase was enacted by the Bush administration. If the present Congress does not pass a bill, then they will not have increased taxes.

Poor everyone

Seepage in the Gulf is now detected and said to be from another well, not from the leaking well that's been spewing all that oil into the Gulf. Twenty-seven thousand abandoned wells in the Gulf and nobody's monitoring any of them for leakage. That's pretty darn scary. I think something should be changed. Where's the law? Wow, poor animal life, poor wildlife, poor us.

Where're the teens?

As a person who frequents the public library often, I rarely see children or teens there. Don't school-age youngsters read anymore? Even in these days of computers, it's still necessary to be able to have good reading comprehension to interpret what is on the computer screen and in manuals. Computers do not vocalize what is on the screen. The only way to develop good reading comprehension is by frequently reading books from an early age on. Hopefully, parents will encourage their children to visit the public library. Besides learning, reading can be very enjoyable.

Get thrifty

In these difficult economic times, there's a source to shop that many people overlook — thrift shops. Many churches have them, there's Hospice, Goodwill and the Key Training Center shops. These thrift shops often have beautiful clothes, shoes, for unbelievable low prices. They also sell appliances, china, cookware, furniture, etc. Besides saving yourself a tremendous amount of money, your purchasing dollars are helping truly worthy charities. Give it some thought.

Kind deed

I would like to thank the good, honest person who turned my purse in at Walmart after finding it in the shopping cart. I really appreciate that and I want to thank you so much.

Hunt in Spring Hill

This message is for "Hunt for deals," the person who wrote in saying that they lived in Spring Hill and the gas was just as expensive there. I've got news for them; the gas is 15 cents a gallon cheaper in Spring Hill, because I was just there today and I go there quite often. So I don't know where they were buying their gas, but it definitely is cheaper in Spring Hill.

Everyone loses

Every time you see or hear on the news about the 10 million illegal aliens in the United States, there is always someone who speaks out to say they are only here to work and make a better life for their families, and they also put in that they are only doing jobs that Americans wouldn't do anyway. I was born and raised in Florida. I've worked my entire life in the construction industry, but today illegal aliens have taken over the workforce and employers can't take out taxes for them and can't pay workman's comp on them. They pay them $5 an hour cash and everybody loses. The only way you can compete with other employers is to do the same thing.

Volunteer economy

To the person who called in and said that volunteers are taking all the jobs away from those who need to work for a living, all I can say is, I'd like to see you be a patient at a local hospital. I'd like to see how you feel then about volunteers when you sit for three hours waiting for someone to take you back to your room from X-ray but the nurses and aides are all too busy doing serious work on the floor and there are no more volunteers there. Or who will be doing fingerprints and other chores at the sheriff's office? Or who will clean up Main Street of garbage after a parade? Or who will take school kids on tours through the Old Courthouse Museum and plenty of other chores nobody's paid to do? Wake up, Mister. Citrus County would be lost without volunteers.

Thanks, CCSO

The sheriff's office received a national recognition and award for the curriculum taught in local schools by school resource officers. This county should take pride in the sheriff and personnel we have in our sheriff's department. Thank you to all of them for their dedication and the work they do.

Some 600 of the 3rd Battalion's 800 men were lost, about half believed killed and half captured, many of whom died in Chinese-run prison camps.

The U.S. and North Korea established the MIA search in 1996 after lengthy negotiations. Over nine years, working across North Korea, the joint teams recovered 229 sets of remains believed to be those of Americans, including 14 subsequently identified as 3rd Battalion men.

But an estimated 260 U.S. dead are still unaccounted for at Unsan, among almost 4,600 U.S. MIAs in North Korea, the Pentagon's Defense POW/MIA Office says.

When then-Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld suspended the program in 2005, officials cited what they said were concerns about the security of American personnel working on the territory of a longtime U.S. adversary.

Richard Lawless, the former Pentagon official who recommended the move, defends it today, telling The Associated Press it was a "prudent decision" because the U.S. field teams "were potential high-value hostages as the North Korean nuclear crisis deepened."

The MIA support groups rejected that rationale, saying they suspected President George W. Bush's administration instead wanted to break the lone working link with North Korea and pressure Pyongyang in the nuclear showdown.

"This safety aspect from the Pentagon sounds like so much hogwash," said former 3rd Battalion sergeant Robert J. Earl, 82, of Federal Way, Washington. Earl was not at Unsan, having been wounded earlier, and for years he has sought information on his 8th Cavalry mortar platoon, all of whom may have perished.

Stepping up their lobbying in Washington last year, the MIA families appear to have made headway with the new administration.

"I'm in touch with everyone there, and they all support restoring the program," said Frank Metersky, 77, a Marine veteran of the war and longtime MIA campaigner.

Larry Greer, spokesman for the Defense POW/MIA Office, said officials are "evaluating" a possible resumption. Other administration officials have pointedly referred to the recovery program as a humanitarian mission unrelated to political considerations. But the recent furor over North Korea's alleged torpedoing of a South Korean warship "has stopped everything in its tracks for now," Metersky said.

Nevertheless, U.S. specialists sound ready.

"We are prepared to resume operations (in North Korea) and will request access to the Unsan area," the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command in Hawaii, home to the field teams, said in its latest annual report.

Its forensic experts, meanwhile, continue the laborious work of DNA identification of remains returned years ago, like those of Master Sgt. Roy Earl Head of the 7th Infantry Division, finally identified, brought home and buried June 5 in a family cemetery in Grit Hill, Virginia.

"It's remarkable, after 59 years," said brother David Head, 71, of Kingsport, Tennessee.

All his life he thought daily about Roy, he said. His mind turned sympathetically to others.

"There are still a lot more families out there who might not ever find out, or get the closure we will get," Head said.

The bottom line? It would mean a start to reshaping public safety services as a function that not only benefits us all, but is everyone's responsibility.

I feel as though the working relationship I have with the current county administrator and board is a good one, and the budget cuts of about $2 million I agreed to make for the upcoming fiscal year still manage to avoid "cutting into the core of what the sheriff's office does," something I'm simply not ready or willing to do.

Personnel are being significantly moved within the organization, and by banking my deputies' holiday pay instead of paying it out to them during the year, I'm saving close to $600,000.

However, if I'm unable to chip away at that sum by periodically paying it out before I end my tenure as sheriff, then the next sheriff of Citrus County will face a huge liability.

In short, if alternate funding fails to become a reality, then I foresee changes that could potentially put the public's safety at risk. I already envision eliminating public security at the courthouse (not a statutory requirement of mine), and downsizing my deputies there to provide security for courtrooms and judges only. As a result, the extra deputies could be assigned elsewhere, and the liability for the public's safety in the courthouse would revert back to the county commission as the local taxing authority.

Additionally, I would disband my traffic unit and allow an already understaffed Florida Highway Patrol to handle all vehicle crashes in the county. Other potential cuts in services could also come under consideration.

Although I certainly don't want to take such drastic actions as these, they surely would mean a significant cost savings for the Citrus County Sheriff's Office, and at least allow enough deputies to continue patrolling the streets.

I'm really asking the community to remain open-minded and supportive when talks turn to the future of public safety in Citrus County. Citizens who are anticipating the same level of law enforcement, Fire Rescue and EMS response and service in the years ahead need to realize that their expectations may, in fact, be in serious jeopardy.

Jeffrey J. Dawsy is sheriff of Citrus County.

Property value information expanded in new TRIM

Note: Refer to the Side 2 portion of the new TRIM relating to property values.

Special to the Chronicle

This page focuses exclusively on values, exemptions and classifications administered by the Property Appraiser's Office, in accordance with current laws. The details on valuation are significantly expanded.

Historically, the old TRIM Notice relegated value information to a double row of the various values and exemptions underneath the old reported taxes. "This is a definite step forward in the new TRIM Notice," Citrus County Property Appraiser Geoffrey Greene said, adding, "Now, the public will be able to see more easily their property values."

With the new TRIM Notice, one can more readily see the second $25,000 homestead exemption, which took effect in 2008 after the passage of Amendment 1. This second $25,000 exemption can only reduce non-school assessed value. "I can't tell you how many people had trouble understanding the second $25,000 exemption with the old TRIM Notion," Greene said. With the new TRIM Notice there is a section specifically for exemptions.

Greene also calls the public's attention to a brand new feature, identified as "assessment reductions," resulting from "Save Our Homes." This is the value amount shielded from taxation. In the example provided with this article, approximately $5,746 of value is shielded from taxation in 2010.

"The property owner saved almost $330 on their 2009 taxes last year alone because of 'Save Our Homes,'" Greene said.

Market Value: Market (also called "just") value is the most probable sale price for your property in a competitive, open market. It is based on a willing buyer and a willing seller.

Assessed Value: Assessed value is the market value of your property minus any assessment reductions. The assessed value may be different for levies made by different taxing authorities.

Assessment Reductions: Properties can receive an assessment reduction for a number of reasons. Some of the common reasons are below:
- There are limits on how much the assessment of your property can increase each year. The Save Our Homes program and the limitation for non-homestead property are examples.
- Certain types of property, such as agricultural land and land used for conservation, are valued on their current use rather than their market value.
- Some reductions lower the assessed value only for levies of certain taxing authorities.

If your assessed value is lower than your market value because limits on increases apply to your property or because your property is valued based on its current use, the amount of the difference and reason for the difference is listed in the box titled "Assessment Reductions".

Exemptions: Exemptions that apply to your property are listed in this section along with its corresponding exemption value. Specific dollar or percentage reductions in assessed value may be applicable to a property based upon certain qualifications of the property or property owner. In some cases, an exemption's value may vary depending on the taxing authority. The tax impact of an exemption may also vary for the same taxing authority, depending on the levy (e.g., operating mileage vs. debt service mileage).

Taxable Value: Taxable value is the value used to calculate the tax due on your property. Taxable value is the assessed value minus the value of your exemptions and discounts.

tion is on side one. The TRIM Notice also provides individual property values as of Jan. 1, 2010, from the Property Appraiser's Office on side two. Be sure to look at both sides of the new TRIM.

Most simply put, the old TRIM Notice was a single page of data and one page of notes, while the new TRIM Notice contains two pages of data with notes on both sides. The public is encouraged to now pay close attention to both sides. The information on Side 1 is the responsibility of the taxing authorities and Side 2 is the property appraiser's responsibility.

(Accompanying this article are examples of the new TRIM Notice as applied to a typical residential property in Citrus County.)

The property used in the example has a market value of approximately $100,000± for ease of understanding. In the example, a homestead exemption of $50,000 applies in this case, since the property's assessed value exceeds $75,000. Because this homestead was established in 1998, the owner enjoys assessment reductions as a result of "Save Our Homes." So, our example will not reflect every possible exemption or classification that is available to properties in Citrus County. The new TRIM Notice will be used for all properties.

Letters to THE EDITOR

Media and religion

Most church people believe that the church in the United States is not under any persecution compared to countries where Christians are put in prison. They don't realize that pastors may be jailed or fined if they preach against sexual immorality from Romans Chapter 1, because of hate-crime legislation.

What they do not understand is that the media and other elites in this country believe that the morality of Judeo-Christian values places their faith in moral relativism in jeopardy. They are defending their moral relativism by discounting any positive contributions of traditional moral values. They have the bully pulpit of their media outlets to attack traditional moral values to justify their do-your-own-thing beliefs. In 2009, the Dallas Morning News was the last major paper to reassign their religious writer. By purposely silencing moral views, the media's opinion on issues such as abortion, embryonic stem cell research, abstinence education, prayer in school, gay marriage, origin of life and the environment goes unchallenged.

To the press, saying "Merry Christmas" is part of a religious rebellion, saying "God Bless America" is an aggressive declaration, and wearing a cross is a bold act of tyranny. Their goal, which has worked quite well, is to shame people of faith back into their churches and homes railing against any reference to faith in God, traditional moral values, and being your brother's keeper. If they can ridicule President Bush for his religious beliefs and any vocal religious leaders, they will surely target average Americans who try to defend traditional moral values.

Pastoral associations need to speak out through local media and teach the faithful under their care the Bible truths that the media fear and criticize. The church has been in the forefront of protecting moral values throughout history. The leadership of the church must resist the political correctness and attacks of irrelevancy from the media if they hope to reach the multitude, save religious freedom granted by the founders in the Declaration of Independence and Constitution and avoid irrelevancy. Every church needs a group to study social issues and social justice according to God's word.

Defining socialism

A reader recently asked the question, "What is socialism?" and then proceeded to answer his own question with a jumble of opinions, most of which have little bearing on the question. If he had but turned to his computer and consulted Wikipedia, he would know the answer. Wikipedia says, "Socialism is an economic and political theory based on public ownership or common ownership and cooperative management of the means of production and allocation of resources." It evolved in the early 19th century as an alternative to capitalism, but has not had the success its early founders predicted. The fall of communism is its latest failure, and the Social Democratic states of Western Europe appear to be heading in the same direction.

The reader points out that Social Security, Medicare, the new health plan, and unemployment insurance are socialistic, and that's true to some extent. They are owned and run by the government and the government distributes the benefits. My generation tends to think of Social Security as a social program started by FDR instead of socialism in government. We look at it as taking care of citizens who need our help, and at least some of it was funded by the people receiving benefits.

Where we draw the line is when government takes ownership positions in the financial, automobile, energy and health care industries. That's socialism and that's dead wrong. We draw the line at redistribution of income schemes that are clearly an attempt to buy votes.

Great celebration

Independence Day was celebrated at the Red Level Baptist Church by having the privilege of the Honor Guard of the American Legion Post 155 of Crystal River Honor Guard open the service with prayer, a remembrance to our veterans and a rifle volley to recognize the 50 states.

The congregation was then asked to join in the continuing service inside the church, where the Young Marines marched in, presenting the colors and leading in the Pledge of Allegiance.

A short video was shown as God Bless the USA was sung. Pastor Matt's sermon was based on the story of David slaying Goliath, representing a hero in biblical times.

Amazing Grace was the closing song and was done on the bagpipes played by Kathy Garlock.

Everyone was invited to stay for a short concert by the Sunshine Quartet as well as food and fellowship in our educational building.

What a wonderful way to begin this Independence Day at the Red Level Baptist Church.

The thing we liked the best about the stimulus dollars was that they were paying for infrastructure improvements that local tax dollars would have had to be used for if the federal dollars were not available.

Yet, while we were cashing those very federal checks, most county residents were moaning and groaning about our federal government's budget deficit. In fact, many of the tea party members who attended local rallies to protest federal spending did so by driving on roads that were recently improved with federal stimulus dollars.

Irony is what makes the world go 'round. Dozens of Citrus County teachers would be out of work if it were not for the new federal dollars that have flowed to our county over the last two years.

And Inverness City Manager Frank DiGiovanni wins great praise for his successful efforts to secure state and federal grants to renovate the downtown city area. Over the last decade, DiGiovanni has secured millions of grant dollars that have been used to com-

We are proud of what Inverness looks like today. Gosh, we love our stuff.

And let's admit it; this newspaper led the charge over the last few years to put together a $10.5 million package to purchase Three Sisters Springs in Crystal River. The package includes money from lots of private donors and foundations, but it also includes millions of dollars from the federal and state government along with the water management district.

We really love our stuff when it comes to Three Sisters Springs.

We like it when our government extends unemployment benefits. Most folks really like it when we spend hundreds of millions of dollars to build a huge wall between Mexico and our southern border.

We like the effort in Afghanistan to track down Osama bin Laden, but we do wonder why the heck we're coming up on the 10th anniversary of his attack on our country and we still haven't squashed him like a bug.

We are probably less happy that the federal government spent $6,430,000 last year to fund Demonstration Projects for Indian Health, but if we had more Indians living here we might even like that.

Most every dollar that is spent by the federal government has some group of people in some local area that proclaims, "We really love this stuff."

But our current national budget deficit is like being addicted to Big Macs and trying to go on a diet at the same time. Everyone wants to consume fewer calories, but no one wants to give up the Big Macs.

If we really want to get the federal deficit straightened out — there are really only two answers. We can pay higher taxes — and gosh we don't like that. Or, we can stop asking government to solve all our darned problems.

Every time government solves a problem it spends millions upon millions of our dollars. Government is doing what we ask, because we really like our stuff. But we have pushed government into every aspect of our lives and the out-of-control spending won't stop until we go on a diet.

But gosh, we really like our stuff.

Sound OFF

Sorry, Baldners

Hey, regarding a comment in the Sound Off for Saturday (July 17), "Big hearts," in regards to Citrus County Little League, Ron and Dan Baldner: I would like to clear up that it's Dan and Russ Baldner and Ron is one of their children.

Don't touch funds

I am hearing that the politicians are thinking about raising the Social Security retirement age to 70 years old. I will be in favor of this only if the politicians put the monies in a lockbox where they cannot get their greedy hands on it. If they do not do this, we will be in the same fix as we are in now.

Gouging defined

This is in regards to the article in the Sunday paper (July 18) about price gouging. Price gouging is, for example, is when like a hurricane comes in and knocks everything out of business except for one gas station and they're charging $5 and up for gas. That's what's considered price gouging.

Keeping in contact

Thank you so much for the editorial in Sunday's Opinion column (July 18) about the "Citizens should urge compromise," in connection with the hospital dispute. I would love to do that. However, I would appreciate very much if you could list in one of your future issues the address or e-mail addresses or both of the board of directors and board of trustees so that we could respond.

Look away

edStein'10-UFS
EDSTEINIANK.COM

sports media going to start giving Tiger Woods the lack of attention he so richly deserves?

Unclean teens

To the person who wrote in saying that the Valerie Theater in Inverness should be made into some kind of facility for the teens: All we can say to that suggestion is no, no, no. Do you have any idea what the grounds around the Old Courthouse would look like if teens hung around across the street? If you don't have any idea what it would look like, just drive down Main Street after a parade and take a look around. And this is just what you want in the center of Inverness? Tell you what; you be the one to go and clean up the garbage every day and we'll make it a place for the teens. Fair enough?

Pay up

Here in Citrus County there is probably a church for every 20 or 25 people. And some of these monstrosity churches on prime property, they should absolutely be forced to pay property tax like the rest of us. This here should go on for the rest of the whole country. Can you imagine all of that money coming in and all the things that it could do with infrastructure and with people unemployed and all of that? They cannot even fill the churches that they're building. They are so huge, it would be like starting a new ballpark and trying to get 55,000 people in there to watch a ballgame. Now this has got to stop. They have got to pay property taxes like the rest of us or else.

Maritime law

I've been reading the stories in the newspaper about the "Bait Lady," Miss Bonnie, and it seems strange that no one has brought up the fact that maritime law says that you are responsible for the wake of your boat, legally. Those three people operating those larger crafts know what they did by now. One of them's got to read the newspaper. They need to cut a check.

Cash-strapped seniors

Shame on the government and the banks for charging $8.95 for a paper statement and to use a teller. All these changes that they propose will hurt the seniors. Many do not have computers. They will hurt low-income and unemployed (people) who have to use banks to cash unemployment checks.

Breaks repealed

There are two ways to judge Mr. William Dixon's free political advertisement in the July 18 Chronicle. His accusation is that the massive tax increases set for January 2011 for the rich are tax increases. The truth is that the Bush tax breaks for the rich are finally being repealed. We've seen what the Bush tax cuts cost us in bringing us the current recession. Obama is not causing taxes or is not raising taxes on the rich, just taking what Bush gave away back. I have little pity for the ultra-rich. And I'm sure if Dixon wants, he can afford a consultant also.

Bank rules

Why is it banks are permitted to establish escrow accounts for mortgage holders for the real estate taxes and homeowners insurance without notifying mortgage owners prior to doing so? I paid my real estate taxes and mortgage months prior and changed my homeowners policy to another company offering better coverage and a much lower rate. The bank renewed with the old homeowners insurance company at the higher rate. It took numerous phone calls and constant expense in transfers, hold, etc., to the number on the letter innumerable times with no result. Finally after half a dozen visits to the local branch office, things finally got straightened out. Talk about inefficiency.

Is seafood safe?

All across the country, restaurant-goers want to know

Michael Hill
 Associated Press

Distance doesn't seem to matter. No matter how far they are from the Gulf, waiters and waitresses around the nation are getting the same grilling by diners.

Is your seafood clean?

After months of watching news coverage of tar balls washing up on beaches and oil-soaked wildlife, customers are asking questions about where their food was fished from, especially items closely associated with the Gulf, like shrimp and oysters.

"We have two oyster dishes on our menu and people want to know where they are from," said Bryce Statham, owner of the Blue Moon Fish Co., in Lauderdale-by-the-Sea.

For some restaurants, the solution has been to add new items to the menu (alligator at one New Orleans eatery). Others have sought out the same seafood with a different geography (New Zealand grouper over Gulf Coast, for example).

Still others take a more blunt approach. While Dallas-area restaurants hung up "God Bless the Gulf" signs, another in upstate New York tweeted that they do NOT serve Gulf seafood.

The Associated Press contacted more than a dozen restaurants nationwide and many said the increased curiosity from customers hasn't necessarily cost them business. Rather, restaurateurs say a portion of their customers seek reassurance before ordering. It's the same sort of squeamishness lampooned recently in Doonesbury when Zonker, working as a waiter, assured a customer the crabs are "petroleum-free" and points out the latest satellite image of the spill on the man's placemat.

In reality, waiters and waitresses around the nation are getting pointers on ways to assure customers that their seafood is coming from either clean waters in the Gulf or from another part of the world.

This can be a balancing act. Restaurants typically want to support the devastated Gulf fishing industry but also want to make clear they're steering clear of product from polluted water. Ken Vaughan, director of operations for Flying Fish restaurants, said his restaurants in the Dallas area and in Little Rock, Ark., and Memphis, Tenn., put up "God Bless the Gulf" signs, but they also tell customers who ask that their shrimp comes from reputable sources.

Jack's Oyster House in Albany, N.Y., recently told customers on Twitter and Facebook that "Jack's is NOT sourced from the Gulf."

In Florida, Stratham said staff members check tags on the oysters so they can tell customers where they are from. Brad Lomax, owner of Water Street Restaurants in Corpus Christi, Texas, said they're training servers to explain that the shrimp is safe.

In Miami, the River Oyster Bar changed the look of its menu to show customers specifically where the oysters are coming from, said David Bracha, chef and owner. He also tells his staff to assure customers that the restaurant tries to buy fish locally when possible.

"I try to educate them on where the fish comes from," he said. "If a guest asks them or is concerned, they can speak about it intelligently."

Gulf seafood accounts for a bit more than 2 percent of the seafood consumed by Americans, according to industry estimates. Chefs tend to promote local products — think Maine lobsters or Seattle salmon — meaning restaurants beyond the South may serve few or no menu items from Gulf.

For instance, Mike Earp of Saltwater Seafood Market and Fry Shack in Raleigh says 95 percent of his product is from North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia. The Baltimore-based Phillips Seafood chain relies on crabmeat from a plant in Maryland, as well as facilities overseas, a spokeswoman said.

For Gulf items that have become hard to come by — or too costly — many restaurants have replaced them with new items. Faced with a shortage of oysters, Cafe Adelaide in New Orleans started serving alligator sopo (a traditional Mexican dish) and "it's selling pretty good" said sous chef Orlando Harris.

The Hillstone Restaurant Group, which runs Gulfstream restaurants in Los Angeles and Orange County, Calif., replaced its Florida black grouper Gulf sandwich with the newly named Crispy Fish Fillet made with New Zealand grouper.

Miami's River Oyster Bar switched to oysters from Seattle after prices for Gulf oysters "went through the roof," Bracha said. Similarly, Denver's Max Gill & Grill, said the restaurant stopped buying oysters from the Gulf soon after the spill and now only buys oysters from the west and northeast coasts, said general manager Eric Tittmann.

"A lot of people definitely ask about it," he said.

It's still not clear if that customer concern has translated into a nationwide drop in seafood restaurant business. Some Gulf state businesses are clearly affected. Vaughan of Flying Fish said the effects of the oil spill have cost them about 15 percent of their profits. A New Orleans restaurant, Bayona, filed a class action lawsuit against the companies involved with the ill-fated Deepwater Horizon rig for the loss of customers and revenue.

But other restaurants around the country say business is fine. Tittmann also said his Denver restaurant has actually gotten busier in the last eight months. Bracha in Miami said business has yet to be affected, though that could change with the currents.

"If the oil comes to Florida ... if it comes to the Keys ... people are going to be just freaked out," Bracha said. "You are going to see a lot less tourism and less people interested in eating seafood."

The Wall Street Journal, www.online.wsj.com, suggests the first step in retaining employees is to hire the best candidates. Sounds simple, but might not be the easiest thing to do when you have to pick through a few hundred applications and resumes for a single job opening in a very competitive job market.

Hiring Employees

Stretching the truth about job history, education or credentials is a factor riddling hiring managers. U.S. Small Business Administration, www.sba.gov, notes that you should ask specific questions during the interviewing process about a school. If you question the glowing credentials, ask specific questions about skills, or better yet, have them take a test. Ask a technical question related to the duties of the position you are hiring for. Call all references and see if they even know the job candidate. Many employers can only confirm if someone worked at their company. If that's the case, find another source such as someone who has left the company or retired and is willing to talk. If you hire a less than qualified employee, you might have the difficult task of letting that same employee go.

Retaining Employees

If you have the right person on your team, keeping them on board is the next step. The Great Place To Work Institute, www.greatplacetowork.com, has a model for creating a workplace community based on, "A great place to work is one in which you trust the people you work for, have pride in what you do, and enjoy the people you work with."

The institute breaks down the elements for a great work place by credibility, respect, fairness, pride and camaraderie.

■ Credibility at the workplace includes open communication. Competence is key in human and material resources, along with integrity in carrying out vision with consistency. If an employee does not think they are receiving information in a timely matter, employees will question their stability at their present employer and start looking for a new job.

■ Respect for supporting professional development and showing appreciation is considered vital for the workplace. Collaboration with employees on relevant decisions and caring for individuals are factors that are important to employees.

■ Fairness on the job includes equity, the balanced treatment for all in terms of rewards. Impartiality, meaning the absence of favoritism in hiring and promotions and justice, lack of discrimination and process for appeals, are needed for a healthy job site.

■ Pride in your job and personal contributions, along with a work team is important. Knowing the or-

Big tax hike on the horizon

Bush cuts expire in Jan.; extensions may be temporary

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Many Americans could be hit with a big tax increase in the next two or three years despite President Barack Obama's repeated promises to shield the middle class from higher rates.

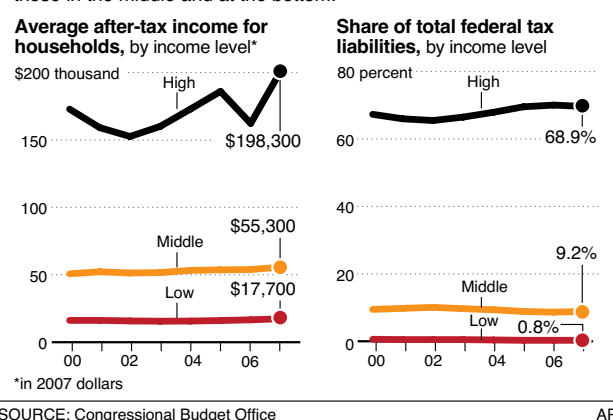

Democrats are hedging about making Obama's pledge stick for more than a year or two, setting up a major battle on a super-sensitive subject just before the November elections.

With the most sweeping tax cuts in a generation due to expire in January, the Democrats are divided over whether the government can afford to make any of them permanent — especially with voters increasingly upset over the fast-rising federal budget deficit.

Party lines are clear on

for the wealthiest Americans expire.

Faraway Inn

The Faraway Inn, at Third and G Street in Cedar Key, has submitted its Environmental Performance Data Report to the Florida Department of Environmental Protection's "Florida Green Lodging Program." The inn has been approved for the second year to continue with its Green Lodging commitment to conserve energy and natural resources.

Faraway Inn also has volunteered to be the collection site for spent inkjet cartridges, used cell phones, iPods, digital cameras and laptops.

These items, whether working or not, are mailed to a company that recycles or properly disposes of them. Based on what is sent in, Faraway Inn receives a check made out to its favorite not-for-profit organization. To date, we have received $150.

We chose The Humane Society of Inverness to be the recipient of the money because they have helped us to neuter/spay 608 of our island feral/stray cats. Faraway Inn also sponsors and heads the volunteer Trap-Neuter-Return program for cat overpopulation. Our island cats are spayed/neutered/vaccinated and given a clean bill of health before being released back into their environment to live out their lives kitten free. Remember to drop your used inkjet cartridges, cell phones, etcetera off at the Faraway Inn.

Call (352) 543-5330 for more information on our volunteer recycling program or for mentoring to become a State of Florida Certified Green Lodging, or for information on how you can help your neighborhood cats through TNR.

One more time: Everybody needs a will

DEAR BRUCE: My husband thinks an estate will is not necessary if all property, financial accounts, etc. are in both of our names; I disagree. Can you enlighten him on this subject? — R.S., via e-mail

DEAR R.S.: Your husband is dead wrong! There are many circumstances where a will would be necessary even if you have taken all the steps you're talking about. A will is a very inexpensive document that protects the people who are left behind. Tell your husband that it would make you a lot more comfortable if you had simple reciprocal wills. The cost is modest. I would not use Internet or store-bought wills. Use a licensed attorney in your state to prepare one.

SMART MONEY

DEAR BRUCE: A friend is going through a divorce and moving to Florida for her business.

Her husband is keeping custody of their three children. She is moving at the end of the school year. Her husband has had numerous affairs and is supposed to move into the family home when she leaves. He has decided to buy another house and let their family home, which is upside down, go into foreclosure. How ethical is that, and how does that effect my friend? — Diane, via e-mail

DEAR DIANE: Your friend has some big problems. She is making her husband the custodial parent and is moving to another state, both personal decisions. If the home goes into foreclosure, it will clearly affect her credit environment. If the lender feels she has assets, it may very well decide to bring action against her for the deficiency. I am also wondering how the husband at the same time is allowing a home to go into foreclosure while buying another house. He may have to rethink that. In her own best interest, she should consult with an attorney and determine exactly how much money is owed and what her best recourse would be.

DEAR BRUCE: Can a nursing home take your own home after they have taken all your money? — J.H., via e-mail

DEAR J.H.: I think what you are asking is under Medicaid. If someone is receiving services in a nursing home, then their assets have to be almost completely depleted for the state to recover the monies they spent on that individual's behalf. Can they go after the home? Not until after you pass away. They can get a lien against the home. Where it becomes a little dicey is whether the person involved is clearly never going to leave the nursing home. For example, a person with advanced Alzheimer's may never go back to that home. Whether Medicaid can start a foreclosure under those circumstances is a little fuzzy. Generally, Medicaid would not be able to, but once the individual passes away and there is no spouse living in that home, then the state has a responsibility to try to recover the public money by taking the proceeds of the sale.

DEAR BRUCE: If a person has $19,000 in a TSA, tax-sheltered annuity (not a Roth), is there a way to find out how much the annual distribution would be when that person begins taking them at age 70? The TSA will be worth

$19,000 when the person turns 70. She wants to take the annual distribution just once each year and knows it will go down as she ages and they refigure it. — Sandi, via e-mail

DEAR SANDI: The individual involved should contact the original agent who sold them the annuity. If that person is no longer available — out of business, passed away, etc. — then she can contact the insurance company directly. They may not be able to give an exact amount depending on how far away 70 is and what interest rates are applicable then, but the insurance company can give a range, depending upon the variables that I have noted.

TAX CUTS

the rising red ink. That's where Democratic lawmakers are struggling to find agreement.

"There are various options — permanent, two years, one year — and I think a decision on that should be made expeditiously," says Rep. Sander Levin, D-Mich., chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee. "It's under active consideration," he said in an interview.

Passing only a temporary extension would open majority Democrats to claims they are planning middle class tax hikes in the future — after the extension expires. Making any of the tax cuts permanent could increase complaints about a national debt that already exceeds $13 trillion.

"It's one of the problems that needs to be taken into consideration," said Levin.

The tax cuts were enacted in 2001 and 2003 after Bush made them the centerpiece of his election campaign. They provided help for rich and poor alike, reducing the lowest marginal rates, as well as the top ones and several in between. They provided a wide range of income tax breaks for education, families with children and married couples.

Taxes on capital gains and dividends were reduced, while the federal estate tax was gradually repealed, though only for this year.

Obama wants to make the tax cuts permanent for middle- and lower-income taxpayers, allowing the top rates to increase next year for individuals making more than $200,000 and couples making more than $250,000.

Obama's plan would cost $2.5 trillion over the next

- Income tax rates were reduced, to a bottom rate of 10 percent and a top marginal rate of 35 percent. If the cuts expire, the bottom rate would increase to 15 percent, the top rate would rise to 39.6 percent, and several rates in between would increase as well.
- The child tax credit was increased from $500 per child to $1,000 per child.
- Marriage penalty relief. The standard deduction for married couples was increased, eas-

decade, including the cost of an annual fix that spares the middle class from being hit with the Alternative Minimum — a hit of about $3,700 a year.

It would cost $2.9 trillion over the next decade to extend all the tax cuts, including AMT relief, according to estimates from the Tax Policy Center, a Washington think tank.

House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer, D-Md., first raised the possibility of a temporary extension during a speech in June about the budget deficit. In the Senate, Finance Committee Chairman Max Baucus, D-Mont., favors a permanent extension of the middle-class tax cuts, but the issue is not settled.

Some rank-and-file Democrats are arguing to extend all the tax cuts, including those for high earners, for a year or two, until the economy recovers. But House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said Thursday she won't consider extending the tax cuts for the wealthy.

Pelosi and other Democratic leaders argue that the nation's top earners have fared well since 2000, with incomes for the top 10 percent of households rising almost twice as much as those in the middle, according to the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

Republican leaders have opposed much smaller spending bills that would add to the national debt — most recently a $34 billion extension of unemployment benefits, approved by Congress on Thursday, for millions of people who have been laid off for long stretches. But they endorse more federal borrowing to make all the tax cuts permanent.

The debate is playing out as lawmakers move toward an election that will determine whether Democrats keep their majorities in the House and Senate.

Democratic leaders believe they have a winning message of fiscal responsibility while making the rich pay more after years of relative prosperity. GOP lawmakers say it's a familiar debate: Democrats favor tax increases while Republicans oppose them.

"I think we're ready to do battle on that issue," Levin said.

Rep. Dave Camp of Michigan, the top Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, said, "We should not allow the Democrats' 2011 tax hikes to take effect."

Republicans say any tax increases — even those affecting only high-income taxpayers — would hit small business owners struggling to create jobs in a down economy.

Tax cuts that are expiring

- Capital gains taxes were cut, with the top rate dropping from 20 percent to 15 percent.
- Taxes on dividends were cut. Instead of taxing dividends at the same rate as earned income, with a top marginal rate of 39.6 percent, the top rate was set at 15 percent.
- The federal estate tax, which had a top rate of 55 percent, was gradually reduced, then repealed for 2010. It is scheduled to return to 55 percent next year, with a $1 million exemption.

- The Alternative Minimum Tax is adjusted each year to spare more than 30 million middle-income families from tax increases averaging $3,700. The tax was enacted in 1969 to make sure wealthy people couldn't avoid taxes altogether, but it wasn't indexed for inflation. The cost of patching it over the next decade: up to $1.2 trillion, depending on how it is structured.

Those taxpayers, however, account for half the business income reported on individual returns, according to the nonpartisan Joint Committee on Taxation.

"If you want a jobs bill, the fastest way to create jobs would be to extend the tax cuts," Sen. Chuck Grassley of Iowa, the top Republican on the Senate Finance Committee, said in an interview. "One of the reasons people aren't being hired is there's so much uncertainty."

Some Democrats have suggested dealing with the tax cuts after the congressional elections, in a lame duck session in November or December. The legislative calendar is getting short, with Congress scheduled to take a monthlong vacation in August. But Democratic leaders in both the House and Senate say they intend to address the tax cuts before the elections. "We need to face up to it," Levin said. "You just can't kick the can down the road forever."

Some Democrats like the idea of forcing Republicans to vote on a bill that would extend tax cuts for middle- and low-income families while leaving the tax rates to increase for high earners.

GOP lawmakers say they will try to amend the bills to extend all the tax cuts.

whether the spot is gone. If not, treat again. The spot usually disappears. I also have used Fels-naptha soap on grass stains and blood. — Merlene H., e-mail

LAUNDRY TIP: If you take the lint filter from your dryer and fill it with water, chances are very little will run through the screen. Fabric softeners coat the threads on the screen as much as they do on towels and clothing. Regular washing is imperative for fire safety and will also allow the dryer to use much less electricity. Over soaping and poor rinsing leave a lot of "stuff" on the fibers of towels and linens that can cause yellowing. If you wash them periodically in hot water with only Borax or washing soda, the dried-in soap and softener will be removed with no loss of cleanliness. — Sandy, Florida

SAVE ENERGY: I enjoyed your "Quirky but profitable" article, which ran in the Atlanta J&C. But you left off my favorite and biggest energy waster: "CLOSE THE DOOR." I've been an engineer working in the energy conservation field for more than 30 years, and it is astounding that most people don't realize how much energy is wasted by holding the door open when the outside temp is over 10 F different than the thermostat setting. Much larger waste than unplugging the coffee pot to save a little LED burning! — Ted, e-mail

DEAR SARA: Please help me! I need a way to keep my spices and salt from turning into one big hard ball when it gets humid out. I have tried putting grains of rice in the salt and other spices because I heard that would take the moisture out of them but have yet to find anything that works. I hope you can help me save my spices. Thanks so much. — Aaron D., e-mail

DEAR AARON: You can try a food-safe desiccant such as silica gel packets. Visit www.silicagelpackets.com or www.dryspice.com.

It's nontoxic, but if you'd rather not place it inside containers, you can set it near where you store your spices. Some humidity can enter the spice container if you shake the spice container directly over the food while it's cooking because of the steam. Try to avoid storing spices near the stove and aim for a cool, dry, dark place. You said you tried rice and it didn't work. You can try dry beans. Add two or three dry beans to each container. You can also slip a small piece of plastic wrap over the top and then put the lid on tightly.

DEAR SARA: What's the best inexpensive contact lens solution? I finally broke down and got contacts again. With my need for bifocals and wanting no-line bifocal glasses, I realized I could get contacts for the same amount. I do not have any eye care insurance. So now I am looking at all the different types of contact lens solutions out there. I have soft contact lenses. What type of solution do you use? I realize I need to use coupons and match with sales. — Shoiji, New Jersey

DEAR SHOIJI: I haven't worn contacts in awhile, but when I did, I used Wal-Mart,

Target and pharmacy store-brand solutions when I didn't have coupons for name brand. Keep checking for sales and coupons in inserts, store fliers, on or inside actual packages of lens solution or check online. You'll have to try different solutions and find out what works best for you. Go to websites and sign up for their newsletter or rewards clubs. For example, www.renu.com/coupons.html and www.opti-free.com/contact-solution-coupon.aspx offer coupons, as well as most pharmacies.

glass to make them easier for their little hands to grab. How have you reused them? The first reader tip shares another idea.

RUBBER BAND USE: I use them to help hold down lightweight items in the dishwasher. I use little plastic cups for my three kids, and at least one or two get turned over and end up with water and "gunk" in them, meaning they have to get re-washed.

By attaching one end of the rubber band to one bar on the rack and then stretching the band across the tops of the cups and attaching the other end to another bar, it holds the cups down and keeps them from moving around. I have also used them to hold down leftover containers when washing them. — C.L., Jordan, Illinois

BANANA-BREAD TIP: I find that less experienced

bakers often put in too much flour because of the way they measure the flour, and this leads to a dry cake. It's important not to scoop out the flour with your measuring cup. That will compact the flour, and you could end up with up to 25 percent more flour than you need.

Instead, spoon the flour lightly into your measuring cup. Don't jiggle or shake to level it off. Overfill the cup, and then run the straight edge of a knife over the top to remove the excess. — Saule, Illinois

STAIN-REMOVING TIP: I have on several occasions used the hand cleaner Goop as a spot remover. I have used it on T-shirts that have gone through the washer and dryer with oil/grease spots. Put the Goop on the dry, stained material and rub it in.

Leave it on for five minutes to a few days before washing. I usually hang the item to dry to check to see

The most familiar is the tall, annual, common sunflower, H. annuus, used to make edible oil and popular for bird feeding. Flower-heads can reach 12 inches in diameter atop 10 foot tall, rough-textured stalks. Broad leaves are hairy and sticky. Smaller cultivars have been developed for use in small home gardens and for long-lasting cut flowers.

Florida has 14 native sunflower species. Beach or Dune Sunflower, H. dibilis, has weak fleshy stems that usually flop over on the ground. It will root down at leaf nodes in contact with dry, well-drained, sandy soil. Treat this frost-sensitive native as a self-seeding annual locally. Further south, in Zones 10 and 11 it will be a short-lived perennial. New seedlings dominate old plants, so the colony is continually replenished.

Dune sunflower tolerates Florida's heat and heavy summer rains as long as the soil dries out quickly. It will rot or develop a fungus if planted in wet situations. Dune sunflower is an ideal summer annual in Zones 8 and 9. It provides plenty of bright yellow flowers with dark brown centers all summer and fall locally. Self-sown seeds germinate in spring for next summer's display. Prick out tiny seedlings in April or May to transplant in full sun where you would like to see them in your garden.

Excellent as a colorful, low-maintenance ground cover, one plant will form a 4-foot-wide clump over a single summer season. In South Florida, dune sunflower makes a shrubby perennial ground cover that even has some flowers in winter.

Pull off dry, tan-colored seedheads and crush them between the palms of your hand to separate seed from chaff. Dry seed can be stored in a paper envelope in a cool, dark, dry place until spring. Plant seeds outdoors, scattering directly in prepared beds or along the roadsides in April, three to four weeks after the last frost. There is no need to cover the tiny

Arborist can advise during construction

When selecting a site to build on, whether a homeowner or business, the treed landscape is a valuable asset to the property. However, if proper precautions are not considered, trees could be damaged. The average builder, site prep crew and homeowner have very little understanding about the damage that can occur to trees during construction.

Arborists are most effective when they are proactive in construction projects early stages. The project team should be educated on the requirements for tree preservation for that project. Most workers on a construction project have good intentions. They want to retain part of the nature

Dune Sunflowers make gardens glow

The July 1 to 4 holiday stretched into a two-week vacation. I apologize for not having a garden column in last Sunday's Home-Front. Thanks for all the messages, calls and letters from readers while I was away. Bright yellow beach sunflowers, pretty pink sunshine mimosa, red "Knock Out" roses, vibrant purple "In-cense" passion vine and orange trumpet creeper provided a welcome home as my grandson Elliot and a helpful friend unloaded the van.

Jane Weber
JANE'S GARDEN

There are about 70 species, mostly frost-tender annuals. Typical flower petals are some shade of yellow around a central dark center. The few perennial species can be cut to the ground as soon as flowering stops. Do not pull them out: leave the roots to sprout new plants next season. I let perennial narrow-leaf sunflowers go to seed to attract migratory fall birds. Carefully cut off brown scapes, dead stalks to add to your compost pile. Chop them up with a lawn mower for faster decomposition.

Sunflowers in the Helianthus genus are all native to the Americas.

JANE WEBER/Special to the Chronicle

The beach sunflower, or dune sunflower, is one of 14 species of sunflower native to Florida. Dune sunflower tolerates heat and heavy rains as long as the soil dries out quickly. Sunflowers add a delightful splash of bright yellow to any garden.

Watering restrictions eased, but be prudent

On July 1, 2010, new watering restrictions went into effect for the Southwest Florida Water Management District, which includes Citrus County. The new watering restrictions now allow lawn watering up to twice per week.

Even-numbered addresses may water on Thursday and/or Sunday before 10 a.m. or after 4 p.m. Odd-numbered addresses may water on Wednesday and/or Saturday before 10 a.m. or after 4 p.m.

The restrictions still allow hand watering and micro-irrigation of plants (other than lawns) to be done on any day and at any time. New lawns and plants have a 30-30 establishment period, which allows any-day watering during the first 30 days. During the second 30 days, watering is allowed three days per week: even-numbered addresses may water on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday; odd-numbered addresses may water Monday, Wednesday and Saturday.

But just because we can water twice a week now doesn't mean that we always have to. Watering just because it's "our day" can result in higher water bills and fungal diseases and root rots if that extra water wasn't necessary.

There are two major ways to keep water bills low and plants healthy: using "smart" irrigation technologies, such as soil moisture sensors, and choosing drought-tolerant exotic and native plants.

A soil moisture sensor measures moisture before each scheduled irrigation and prevents the system from turning on when there is enough soil moisture.

The device will not cause the system to operate on an un-scheduled day — it simply prevents irrigation from occurring when the soil cannot hold any more water and there would be no benefit to plants. UF researchers have found potential water savings without a decrease in plant quality of 70 to 90 percent using technology such as soil moisture sensors.

Vase boasts Art Deco pedigree; ballot boxes need authentication

Dear John: I was wondering if you could help me identify an item I have. I have researched it for months and still do not have a clue. This was my grandmother's, and has been in the family for at least 75 years or so. It weighs almost 7 pounds and is highly glazed. On the bottom, in green, is written "8332," with a line under it, then "France," with a line under France. It is also incised on the bottom with the number 571. The inside of the item seems to have a brown metal-like finish. I have attached a couple of pictures. If you can tell me anything, what it is, value, age, etc., it would be greatly appreciated. — R.G., internet

Dear R.G.: You have a bud vase made in France of stoneware, with a beautiful metallic cobalt blue glaze. The style of the vase is Ruba Rombic. Consolidated Lamp & Glass Company introduced a line of glassware in 1928 called Ruba Rombic, designed for them by Reuben Haley. It was a Cubist creation with strong severe triangular and rhomboidal planes. It is considered classic Art Deco and highly sought after by Art Deco collectors.

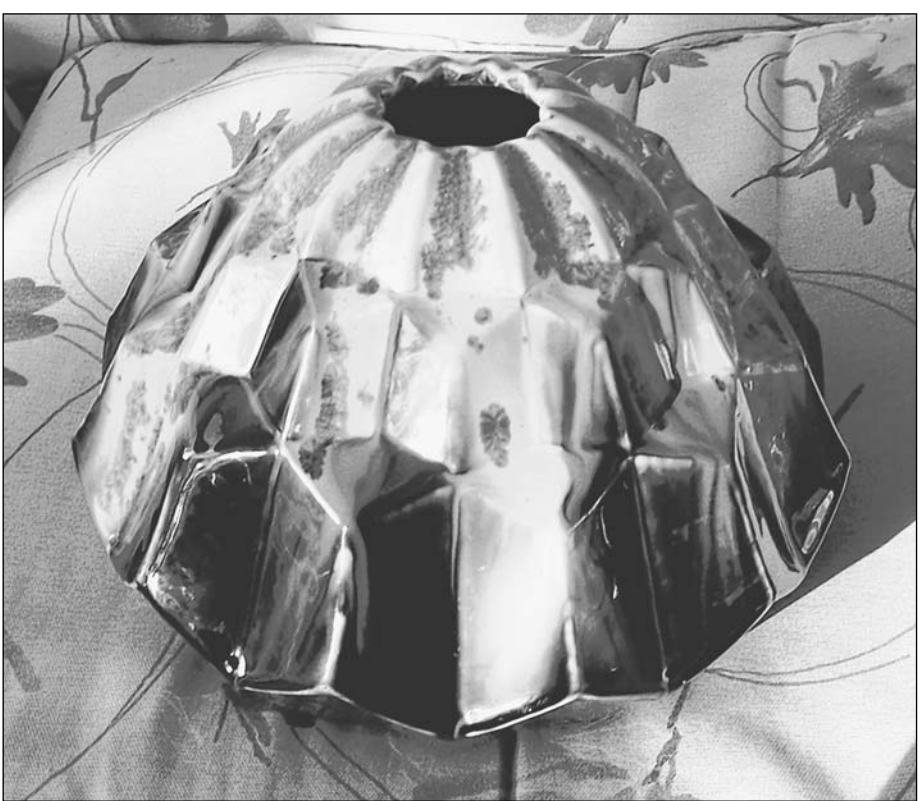

Ruba Rombic style was very popular between World War I and II and produced in glass and pottery by numerous companies in the United States and France. I think your vase would sell in the $500 range, perhaps more on a good day.

Dear John: I have a pair of wooden voting ballot boxes that I purchased in the mid-1980s from an auction. Handwritten on one box is "Colored" and on the other box is "White." Handwritten on each box is Precinct 44, Madison County, Arkansas. I have not been able to find any information online regarding their history, nor any other ballot boxes to compare them to. I am definitely interested in their history, as well as their value. Any help you might offer would be greatly appreciated.

See ATTIC/Page E10

them the biological realities of what can occur. We must stress that successful tree preservation can only occur if we can keep an adequate amount of space between construction and our trees.

ment. Generally, the more that is done to the tree, the more severe the impact. Sometimes man can be a tree's worst enemy.

Preservation of our trees can be assured if a few precautions are taken. This is something we can accomplish with teamwork. Arborists don't know all aspects about construction projects, and vice-versa. That is why a site meeting should be coordinated between the site supervisor and arborist before a construction project is scheduled to begin. During this meeting, an evaluation will determine what precautions need to be taken to ensure a healthy outcome for the trees.

Next to the arborist, the on-site superintendent may be the single most important person to preserving your trees during the construction phase. Before construction projects unfold, we must not overlook the significance of a qualified arborist.

Kerry Kreider is a practicing arborist, a member of the International Society of Arboriculture, and president of Action Tree Service. He can be reached at 302-2815 or email actionproarborist@yahoo.com.

Dear S.N.: Yes, I need photographs to help you. There is huge interest in collecting black memorabilia. If your voting ballot boxes are genuine, there will be considerable collector interest. Due to the interest in black memorabilia over the last two to three decades, reproductions, fantasy items, and fakes have flooded the market. For your sake, we hope your ballot boxes are genuine. Make sure your photos are clear and include front, side, inside, and underside.

Dear John: I love your column and read it faithfully in the Chronicle. Every once in a while I can make a contribution, I think. On Sunday, you answered BJK's question by telling him that his little object was an ice cube grabber; not so, it is a sugar cube server. My grandmother always had one on the table for coffee gossip sessions with her Norwegian lady friends. Think about it, it is too little to serve ice. —M.S., Internet

Dear M.S.: Thank you for the kind words. As always, comments regarding any subject matter covered here in the Attic are welcome and appreciated. I am glad the item in the July 11 article triggered a Remember When moment for you.

Technically, the item is a grabber as you call it. They were and are used and referred to as ice, sugar, olive and pickle grabbers. So for your aunt it was a sugar cube grabber; for others, an ice cube grabber.

Money can be placed into empty containers, such as shampoo bottles, under a candy bar wrapper, in an egg carton (you can reuse plastic Easter eggs) or a picture frame, etc. Another reader, Vail from Washington, shares: "I gave my daughter her birthday money once by going to yard sales and buying every lame CD I could find. I don't think I paid more than about 10 cents for any of them. Then I put a $10 bill inside each CD

■■■ Rubber bands can be reused easily. Use wide produce rubber bands to grip and open jars or hard-to-open plastic soda pop bottles. You could also place one around your TV remote to keep it from sliding off the table and to keep the battery cover attached. If you have young children, you can wrap wide rubber bands around their cup or

There are also plenty of "Florida-friendly" plants, both exotic and native, that are well adapted to Florida's extended dry periods. We have plenty of plants in our Florida-friendly Learning Landscape (behind the Extension office at 3650 W. Sovereign Path, Lecanto) that have required little or no irrigation since they were established. Perennial peanut, Chinese fringe bush, firebush and pentas are just a few options. Visit www.FloridaYards.org to use the interactive plant database.

GARDENING FOR THE AGES

DEAN FOSDICK
For The Associated Press

Sydney Eddison believes you can weed out loads of demanding yard work as you age without reducing the enjoyment of gardening. The 78-year-old author says it's simply a matter of gardening more wisely.

"I knew so many friends older than myself who drove themselves away from the land they loved and then promptly died," said Eddison, who opted to remain alone on her secluded but celebrated four-acres-plus in Connecticut after her husband's death, rather than move to smaller surroundings.

She has shaped the wooded property, with house and barn, into a country showcase over the last half-century, giving tours and writing a half-dozen books about her experiences. Yet something had to give, and that something was painstaking garden maintenance.

"I threw my body at the garden over the years and got away with it, but I have to watch it now," Eddison said.

First, she had to have a hip replaced, and then she developed a cyst on her back, leaving her bedridden for a time. "I had a horrendous winter, but it made me realize there's nowhere I'd rather be but here," she said.

at least stake tall plants and weed."

She gets the job done with some help from friends, and by applying many of the shortcuts described in her most recent book, "Gardening for a Lifetime: How to Garden Wiser as You Grow Older" (Timber Press, 2010).

A few of her "gleanings":

■ Reject perfection. "Nature does not clean up every dead leaf in the fall and gardeners don't have to either. Dead leaves left under shrubs serve as a mulch, which eventually breaks down and contributes nutrients to the soil."

■ Thin the perennials. "In my garden, the square footage devoted to flowering perennials demands more time and energy than the rest of the acre and a half under cultivation. The greater the variety of perennials you grow,

■ Switch to shrubs. "Shrubs afford more value for less work. Some rarely need pruning."

■ Shade gardens are good. "Shade-tolerant plants are easier to maintain than sun lovers. One of the reasons is that weeds are also sun lovers. In the shade, they become feeble and can be controlled by a layer of mulch."

■ Incorporate your surroundings: "If you own even a scrap of woodland, you can make it an extension of your garden by edging it with a few berried and flowering shrubs. Naturalize daffodils on the forest floor."

■ Miniaturize. "There is nothing fake about a container garden. It is the real thing. And for anyone who can't do the heavy labor of in-the-ground gardening, gardening in containers can provide much of the same pleasure."

Gardening can be physically and emotionally rewarding as you grow older, and there are many ways to overcome the challenges of a deteriorating body.

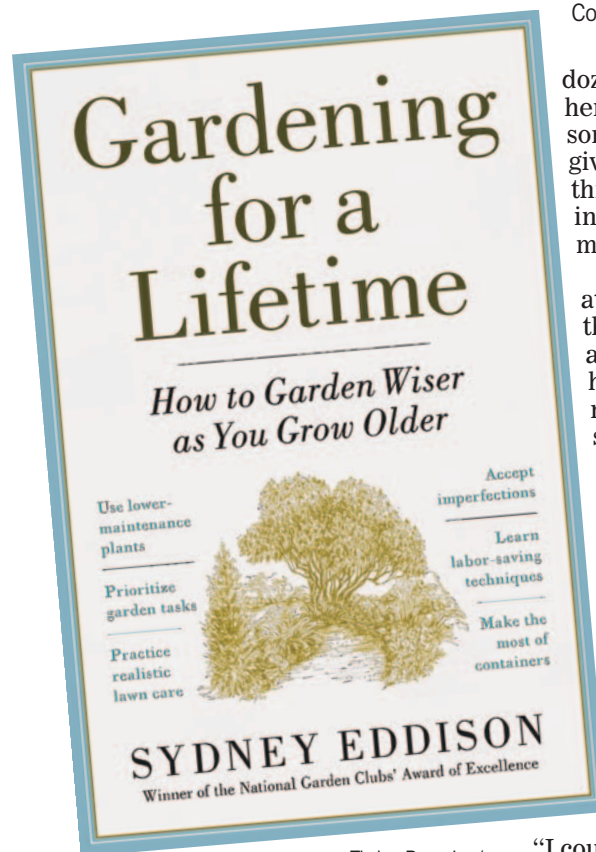

"If your vision is failing, choose tools with bright handles," said Rebecca Haller, director of the Horticultural Therapy Institute in Denver. "Be more careful with trip hazards — uneven paving stones or hoses lying across a path. Grow vertical so you don't have to stoop. Put things on wheels rather than pushing or pulling. Garden closer to the house so you don't tire so much coming and going. Have a spot where you can rest. Pace yourself."

Making the most of the time you have left is one of the older gardener's primary tasks, Eddison said.

"How beautiful can you make your garden with the resources you still have at your command?" she said. "This is the question I keep asking myself. I don't have the answer, but I'm working on it."

For The Associated Press

Sydney Eddison believes you can weed out loads of demanding yard work as you age without reducing the enjoyment of gardening. The 78-year-old author says it's simply a matter of gardening more wisely.

"I knew so many friends older than myself who drove themselves away from the land they loved and then promptly died," said Eddison, who opted to remain alone on her secluded but celebrated four-acres-plus in Connecticut after her husband's death, rather than move to smaller surroundings.

She has shaped the wooded property, with house and barn, into a country showcase over the last half-century, giving tours and writing a half-dozen books about her experiences. Yet something had to give, and that something was painstaking garden maintenance.

"I threw my body at the garden over the years and got away with it, but I have to watch it now," Eddison said.

First, she had to have a hip replaced, and then she developed a cyst on her back, leaving her bedridden for a time. "I had a horrendous winter, but it made me realize there's nowhere I'd rather be but here," she said.

"I couldn't do anything last year, but now I can

at least stake tall plants and weed."

She gets the job done with some help from friends, and by applying many of the shortcuts described in her most recent book, "Gardening for a Lifetime: How to Garden Wiser as You Grow Older" (Timber Press, 2010).

A few of her "gleanings":

■ Reject perfection. "Nature does not clean up every dead leaf in the fall and gardeners don't have to either. Dead leaves left under shrubs serve as a mulch, which eventually breaks down and contributes nutrients to the soil."

■ Thin the perennials. "In my garden, the square footage devoted to flowering perennials demands more time and energy than the rest of the acre and a half under cultivation. The greater the variety of perennials you grow,

■ Switch to shrubs. "Shrubs afford more value for less work. Some rarely need pruning."

■ Shade gardens are good. "Shade-tolerant plants are easier to maintain than sun lovers. One of the reasons is that weeds are also sun lovers. In the shade, they become feeble and can be controlled by a layer of mulch."

■ Incorporate your surroundings: "If you own even a scrap of woodland, you can make it an extension of your garden by edging it with a few berried and flowering shrubs. Naturalize daffodils on the forest floor."

them the biological realities of what can occur. We must stress that successful tree preservation can only occur if we can keep an adequate amount of space between construction and our trees.

Some typical construction impact on trees includes soil alterations, digging in the root zone, overpruning for clearance, chemical spills, machines leaking petroleum products and mechanical injuries to roots, trunk or branches caused by equipment. Generally, the more that is done to the tree, the more severe the impact. Sometimes man can be a tree's worst enemy.

Preservation of our trees can be assured if a few precautions are taken. This is something we can accomplish with teamwork. Arborists don't know all aspects about construction projects, and vice-versa. That is why a site meeting should be coordinated between the site supervisor and arborist before a construction project is scheduled to begin. During this meeting, an evaluation will determine what precautions need to be taken to ensure a healthy outcome for the trees.

Next to the arborist, the on-site superintendent may be the single most important person to preserving your trees during the construction phase. Before construction projects unfold, we must not overlook the significance of a qualified arborist.

Kerry Kreider is a practicing arborist, a member of the International Society of Arboriculture, and president of Action Tree Service. He can be reached at 302-2815 or email actionproarborist@yahoo.com.

Dear S.N.: Yes, I need photographs to help you. There is huge interest in collecting black memorabilia. If your voting ballot boxes are genuine, there will be considerable collector interest. Due to the interest in black memorabilia over the last two to three decades, reproductions, fantasy items, and fakes have flooded the market. For your sake, we hope your ballot boxes are genuine. Make sure your photos are clear and include front, side, inside, and underside.

Dear John: I love your column and read it faithfully in the Chronicle. Every once in a while I can make a contribution, I think. On Sunday, you answered BJK's question by telling him that his little object was an ice cube grabber; not so, it is a sugar cube server. My grandmother always had one on the table for coffee gossip sessions with her Norwegian lady friends. Think about it, it is too little to serve ice. —M.S., Internet

Dear M.S.: Thank you for the kind words. As always, comments regarding any subject matter covered here in the Attic are welcome and appreciated. I am glad the item in the July 11 article triggered a Remember When moment for you.

Technically, the item is a grabber as you call it. They were and are used and referred to as ice, sugar, olive and pickle grabbers. So for your aunt it was a sugar cube grabber; for others, an ice cube grabber.

Money can be placed into empty containers, such as shampoo bottles, under a candy bar wrapper, in an egg carton (you can reuse plastic Easter eggs) or a picture frame, etc. Another reader, Vail from Washington, shares: "I gave my daughter her birthday money once by going to yard sales and buying every lame CD I could find. I don't think I paid more than about 10 cents for any of them. Then I put a $10 bill inside each CD case. Watching her struggle to find something nice to say about the Dean Martin Christmas album was priceless."

■■■ Rubber bands can be reused easily. Use wide produce rubber bands to grip and open jars or hard-to-open plastic soda pop bottles. You could also place one around your TV remote to keep it from sliding off the table and to keep the battery cover attached. If you have young children, you can wrap wide rubber bands around their cup or

There are also plenty of "Florida-friendly" plants, both exotic and native, that are well adapted to Florida's extended dry periods. We have plenty of plants in our Florida-friendly Learning Landscape (behind the Extension office at 3650 W. Sovereign Path, Lecanto) that have required little or no irrigation since they were established. Perennial peanut, Chinese fringe bush, firebush and pentas are just a few options. Visit www.FloridaYards.org to use the interactive plant database.

Watering restrictions eased, but be prudent

On July 1, 2010, new watering restrictions went into effect for the Southwest Florida Water Management District, which includes Citrus County. The new watering restrictions now allow lawn watering up to twice per week.

Even-numbered addresses may water on Thursday and/or Sunday before 10 a.m. or after 4 p.m. Odd-numbered addresses may water on Wednesday and/or Saturday before 10 a.m. or after 4 p.m.

The restrictions still allow hand watering and micro-irrigation of plants (other than lawns) to be done on any day and at any time. New lawns and plants have a 30-30 establishment period, which allows any-day watering during the first 30 days. During the second 30 days, watering is allowed three days per week: even-numbered addresses may water on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday; odd-numbered addresses may water Monday, Wednesday and Saturday.

But just because we can water twice a week now doesn't mean that we always have to. Watering just because it's "our day" can result in higher water bills and fungal diseases and root rots if that extra water wasn't necessary.

Audrey Durr FYN

There are two major ways to keep water bills low and plants healthy: using "smart" irrigation technologies, such as soil moisture sensors, and choosing drought-tolerant exotic and native plants.

A soil moisture sensor measures moisture before each scheduled irrigation and prevents the system from turning on when there is enough soil moisture.

The device will not cause the system to operate on an un-scheduled day — it simply prevents irrigation from occurring when the soil cannot hold any more water and there would be no benefit to plants. UF researchers have found potential water savings without a decrease in plant quality of 70 to 90 percent using technology such as soil moisture sensors.

Vase boasts Art Deco pedigree; ballot boxes need authentication

Dear John: I was wondering if you could help me identify an item I have. I have researched it for months and still do not have a clue. This was my grandmother's, and has been in the family for at least 75 years or so. It weighs almost 7 pounds and is highly glazed. On the bottom, in green, is written "8332," with a line under it, then "France," with a line under France. It is also incised on the bottom with the number 571. The inside of the item seems to have a brown metal-like finish. I have attached a couple of pictures. If you can tell me anything, what it is, value, age, etc., it would be greatly appreciated. — R.G., internet

Dear R.G.: You have a bud vase made in France of stoneware, with a beautiful metallic cobalt blue glaze. The style of the vase is Ruba Rombic. Consolidated Lamp & Glass Company introduced a line of glassware in 1928 called Ruba Rombic, designed for them by Reuben Haley. It was a Cubist creation with strong severe triangular and rhomboidal planes. It is considered classic Art Deco and highly sought after by Art Deco collectors.

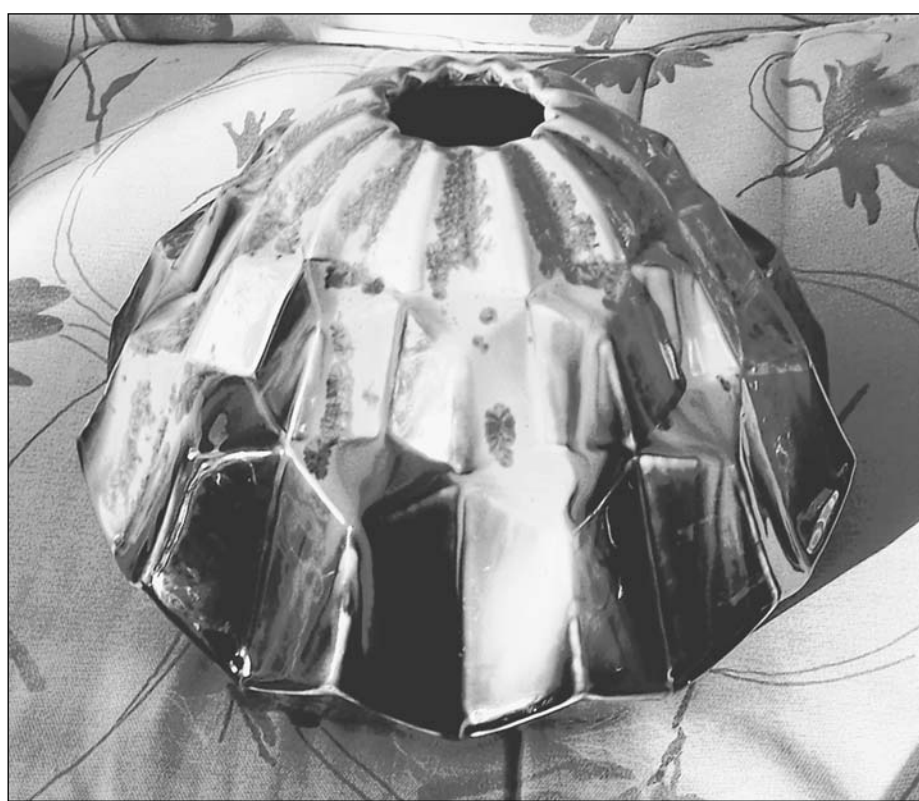

Ruba Rombic style was very popular between World War I and II and produced in glass and pottery by numerous companies in the United States and France. I think your vase would sell in the $500 range, perhaps more on a good day.

Dear John: I have a pair of wooden voting ballot boxes that I purchased in the mid-1980s from an auction. Handwritten on one box is "Colored" and on the other box is "White." Handwritten on each box is Precinct 44, Madison County, Arkansas. I have not been able to find any information online regarding their history, nor any other ballot boxes to compare them to. I am definitely interested in their history, as well as their value. Any help you might offer would be greatly appreciated.

See ATTIC/Page E10

This unusual bud vase is in a French style called "Ruba Rombic." The art deco style was inspired by cubism and features strong rhomboidal planes. The style is very popular with collectors; this example could potentially sell for $500, or possibly more.

Arborist can advise during construction

When selecting a site to build on, whether a homeowner or business, the treed landscape is a valuable asset to the property. However, if proper precautions are not considered, trees could be damaged. The average builder, site prep crew and homeowner have very little understanding about the damage that can occur to trees during construction.

Arborists are most effective when they are proactive in construction projects early stages. The project team should be educated on the requirements for tree preservation for that project. Most workers on a construction project have good intentions. They want to retain part of the nature

Trees are biological and structural systems that need certain requirements in order to stay upright and alive. Trees that have been altered

Dune Sunflowers make gardens glow

The July 1 to 4 holiday stretched into a two-week vacation. I apologize for not having a garden column in last Sunday's Home-Front. Thanks for all the messages, calls and letters from readers while I was away. Bright yellow beach sunflowers, pretty pink sunshine mimosa, red "Knock Out" roses, vibrant purple "In-cense" passion vine and orange trumpet creeper provided a welcome home as my grandson Elliot and a helpful friend unloaded the van.

Jane Weber
JANE'S GARDEN

There are about 70 species, mostly frost-tender annuals. Typical flower petals are some shade of yellow around a central dark center. The few perennial species can be cut to the ground as soon as flowering stops. Do not pull them out: leave the roots to sprout new plants next season. I let perennial narrow-leaf sunflowers go to seed to attract migratory fall birds. Carefully cut off brown scapes, dead stalks to add to your compost pile. Chop them up with a lawn mower for faster decomposition.

JANE WEBER/Special to the Chronicle

glass to make them easier for their little hands to grab. How have you reused them? The first reader tip shares another idea.

RUBBER BAND USE: I use them to help hold down lightweight items in the dishwasher. I use little plastic cups for my three kids, and at least one or two get turned over and end up with water and "gunk" in them, meaning they have to get re-washed.

By attaching one end of the rubber band to one bar on the rack and then stretching the band across the tops of the cups and attaching the other end to another bar, it holds the cups down and keeps them from moving around. I have also used them to hold down leftover containers when washing them. — C.L., Jordan, Illinois

bakers often put in too much flour because of the way they measure the flour, and this leads to a dry cake. It's important not to scoop out the flour with your measuring cup. That will compact the flour, and you could end up with up to 25 percent more flour than you need.

Instead, spoon the flour lightly into your measuring cup. Don't jiggle or shake to level it off. Overfill the cup, and then run the straight edge of a knife over the top to remove the excess. — Saule, Illinois

STAIN-REMOVING TIP: I have on several occasions used the hand cleaner Goop as a spot remover. I have used it on T-shirts that have gone through the washer and dryer with oil/grease spots. Put the Goop on the dry, stained material and rub it in.

Leave it on for five minutes to a few days before washing. I usually hang the item to dry to check to see

The most familiar is the tall, annual, common sunflower, H. annuus, used to make edible oil and popular for bird feeding. Flower-heads can reach 12 inches in diameter atop 10 foot tall, rough-textured stalks. Broad leaves are hairy and sticky. Smaller cultivars have been developed for use in small home gardens and for long-lasting cut flowers.

Florida has 14 native sunflower species. Beach or Dune Sunflower, H. dibilis, has weak fleshy stems that usually flop over on the ground. It will root down at leaf nodes in contact with dry, well-drained, sandy soil. Treat this frost-sensitive native as a self-seeding annual locally. Further south, in Zones 10 and 11 it will be a short-lived perennial. New seedlings dominate old plants, so the colony is continually replenished.

Dune sunflower tolerates Florida's heat and heavy summer rains as long as the soil dries out quickly. It will rot or develop a fungus if planted in wet situations. Dune sunflower is an ideal summer annual in Zones 8 and 9. It provides plenty of bright yellow flowers with dark brown centers all summer and fall locally. Self-sown seeds germinate in spring for next summer's display. Prick out tiny seedlings in April or May to transplant in full sun where you would like to see them in your garden.

Excellent as a colorful, low-maintenance ground cover, one plant will form a 4-foot-wide clump over a single summer season. In South Florida, dune sunflower makes a shrubby perennial ground cover that even has some flowers in winter.

Pull off dry, tan-colored seedheads and crush them between the palms of your hand to separate seed from chaff. Dry seed can be stored in a paper envelope in a cool, dark, dry place until spring. Plant seeds outdoors, scattering directly in prepared beds or along the roadsides in April, three to four weeks after the last frost. There is no need to cover the tiny seed with soil. They will fall between the soil particles naturally, absorb moisture and germinate when soil temperature warms above 70 degrees.

whether the spot is gone. If not, treat again. The spot usually disappears. I also have used Fels-naptha soap on grass stains and blood. — Merlene H., e-mail

LAUNDRY TIP: If you take the lint filter from your dryer and fill it with water, chances are very little will run through the screen. Fabric softeners coat the threads on the screen as much as they do on towels and clothing. Regular washing is imperative for fire safety and will also allow the dryer to use much less electricity. Over soaping and poor rinsing leave a lot of "stuff" on the fibers of towels and linens that can cause yellowing. If you wash them periodically in hot water with only Borax or washing soda, the dried-in soap and softener will be removed with no loss of cleanliness. — Sandy, Florida

SAVE ENERGY: I enjoyed your "Quirky but profitable" article, which ran in the Atlanta J&C. But you left off my favorite and biggest energy waster: "CLOSE THE DOOR." I've been an engineer working in the energy conservation field for more than 30 years, and it is astounding that most people don't realize how much energy is wasted by holding the door open when the outside temp is over 10 F different than the thermostat setting. Much larger waste than unplugging the coffee pot to save a little LED burning! — Ted, e-mail

DEAR SARA: Please help me! I need a way to keep my spices and salt from turning into one big hard ball when it gets humid out. I have tried putting grains of rice in the salt and other spices because I heard that would take the moisture out of them but have yet to find anything that works. I hope you can help me save my spices. Thanks so much. — Aaron D., e-mail

DEAR AARON: You can try a food-safe desiccant such as silica gel packets. Visit www.silicagelpackets.com or www.dryspice.com.

It's nontoxic, but if you'd rather not place it inside containers, you can set it near where you store your spices. Some humidity can enter the spice container if you shake the spice container directly over the food while it's cooking because of the steam. Try to avoid storing spices near the stove and aim for a cool, dry, dark place. You said you tried rice and it didn't work. You can try dry beans. Add two or three dry beans to each container. You can also slip a small piece of plastic wrap over the top and then put the lid on tightly.

DEAR SARA: What's the best inexpensive contact lens solution? I finally broke down and got contacts again. With my need for bifocals and wanting no-line bifocal glasses, I realized I could get contacts for the same amount. I do not have any eye care insurance. So now I am looking at all the different types of contact lens solutions out there. I have soft contact lenses. What type of solution do you use? I realize I need to use coupons and match with sales. — Shoiji, New Jersey

DEAR SHOIJI: I haven't worn contacts in awhile, but when I did, I used Wal-Mart,

Target and pharmacy store-brand solutions when I didn't have coupons for name brand. Keep checking for sales and coupons in inserts, store fliers, on or inside actual packages of lens solution or check online. You'll have to try different solutions and find out what works best for you. Go to websites and sign up for their newsletter or rewards clubs. For example, www.renu.com/coupons.html and www.opti-free.com/contact-solution-coupon.aspx offer coupons, as well as most pharmacies.

Fox serves up 'MasterChef'

'MasterChef' serves up tantalizing reality fare

JACQUELINE CUTLER

Thousands of amateur chefs in a dozen cities competed to become one of 30 contestants on Fox's "MasterChef," premiering Tuesday, July 27.

"They all think, 'Wow! I am a kitchen god. I had the most amazing dinner party on my 33rd birthday,'" explains Gordon Ramsay, chef, restaurateur, cookbook author and cooking show mainstay. "How many times do you see a Grand Prix or football thing and think 'Oh, I can do it?'"

That's the problem with cooking — because mostly everyone does it, they assume they are good. But not so fast, say those who know. And few know better than Ramsay and his fellow "MasterChef" judges, four-star chef Graham Elliot Bowles and restaurateur and vintner Joe Bastianich. They're seeking a wonderful amateur chef who will so impress them by cooking for a formal wedding and an army (literally), and by identifying the ingredients in a blind taste test of chili, that he or she will win $250,000 and get the chance to publish a cookbook.

Relaxing at the bar of the Greenwich Village restaurant he owns with Mario Batali, Bastianich says he knows what he seeks in a master chef: "everything you are looking for in a great cook - talent, passion, intuitiveness."

"It is nice not being the Mr. Nasty for once on the show," Ramsay says. "It is fun."

The third host, Bowles, is encouraging to each contestant. And yes, he's already been compared to Paula Abdul. (They don't look alike, but contestants will quickly sense he's their cheerleader.)

Zap2it

"That carries over into who I am as a person," Bowles says from Chicago, where his eponymous restaurant has earned highest accolades. "In my kitchen, we don't have recipes. Everything is very spontaneous."

Even when a dish is horrific, Bowles says he'll first compliment the person and say, "I totally love what you went after. I love the idea behind it."

He will then suggest ways to improve it. "My biggest thing is passion," Bowles says. "You can teach somebody technique. At the end of the day, cooking is taking something from a raw state to a cooked state.

"There's not a lot to it. You cook it, you season correctly, and you are there. Desire, finesse and passion are what I look for."

The pilot does exactly what it should: introduces the hopefuls, some of whom we wish were cooking for us, and others who should be wired to emit a warning siren if they near a kitchen.

Chris, from Texas, made a beer and cheese soup, which Bowles says, "he could eat a bowl of"; Bastianich says "is a bad dish"; and Ramsay declares, "The most disgusting soup I have ever f—ing tasted in my life."

Contestants explain why they're cooking, and they make their signature dishes.

One woman, apparently a chef groupie, explains that she always dates chefs. Ramsay advises her to "continue dating chefs. You are never going to be one."

All concur that one man's "funeral potatoes" was among the foulest things to have crossed their lips.

Randy explains that his mom used to make this dish to bring to the house of someone in mourning. Though by the looks of it, this casserole could have been named as a cause of death on cholesterol alone.

Later, the judges, in separate interviews, marvel at how nasty this dish was.

Even Bowles says it was the worst thing he's tasted so far. "It was a loaded baked potato in liquid form."

Bastianich, whose wit is as dry as his white wine, considers what has been the worst dish. "That's a very full category," he says. "The funeral potatoes was one of the worst things I've ever eaten."

Some wonderful dishes happen as well. Ramsay says "a sublime panna cotta" and a healthy BLT have been favorites. Bastianich is impressed by homemade pasta and Mediterranean-inspired food such as a lamb dish with risotto.

What makes the show compelling for viewers is getting enmeshed in the lives of the contestants. Tracy, a physician from Georgia, honors the memory of her mom by cooking her dishes. She brings her mom's cookbook with her and prepares smothered chicken with Brussels sprouts.

This show has already been a huge hit in its native U.K. and Australia and has the feel of a series that could run many seasons.

'MasterChef' serves up tantalizing reality fare

They're doctors, farmers, clerks and everything but professional chefs, yet they want to be known for their cooking.

Thousands of amateur chefs in a dozen cities competed to become one of 30 contestants on Fox's "MasterChef," premiering Tuesday, July 27.

"They all think, 'Wow! I am a kitchen god. I had the most amazing dinner party on my 33rd birthday,'" explains Gordon Ramsay, chef, restaurateur, cookbook author and cooking show mainstay. "How many times do you see a Grand Prix or football thing and think 'Oh, I can do it?'"

That's the problem with cooking — because mostly everyone does it, they assume they are good. But not so fast, say those who know. And few know better than Ramsay and his fellow "MasterChef" judges, four-star chef Graham Elliot Bowles and restaurateur and vintner Joe Bastianich. They're seeking a wonderful amateur chef who will so impress them by cooking for a formal wedding and an army (literally), and by identifying the ingredients in a blind taste test of chili, that he or she will win $250,000 and get the chance to publish a cookbook.

Relaxing at the bar of the Greenwich Village restaurant he owns with Mario Batali, Bastianich says he knows what he seeks in a master chef: "everything you are looking for in a great cook - talent, passion, intuitiveness."

The food represents "a little piece of who they are," he says.

Bastianich, who doesn't tolerate bad food, makes Ramsay look warm and cuddly.

"It is nice not being the Mr. Nasty for once on the show," Ramsay says. "It is fun."

"That carries over into who I am as a person," Bowles says from Chicago, where his eponymous restaurant has earned highest accolades. "In my kitchen, we don't have recipes. Everything is very spontaneous."

Even when a dish is horrific, Bowles says he'll first compliment the person and say, "I totally love what you went after. I love the idea behind it."

He will then suggest ways to improve it. "My biggest thing is passion," Bowles says. "You can teach somebody technique. At the end of the day, cooking is taking something from a raw state to a cooked state.

"There's not a lot to it. You cook it, you season correctly, and you are there. Desire, finesse and passion are what I look for."

The pilot does exactly what it should: introduces the hopefuls, some of whom we wish were cooking for us, and others who should be wired to emit a warning siren if they near a kitchen.

Chris, from Texas, made a beer and cheese soup, which Bowles says, "he could eat a bowl of"; Bastianich says "is a bad dish"; and Ramsay declares, "The most disgusting soup I have ever f—ing tasted in my life."

Contestants explain why they're cooking, and they make their signature dishes.

One woman, apparently a chef groupie, explains that she always dates chefs. Ramsay advises her to "continue dating chefs. You are never going to be one."

All concur that one man's "funeral potatoes" was among the foulest things to have crossed their lips.

Randy explains that his mom used to make this dish to bring to the house of someone in mourning. Though by the looks of it, this casserole could have been named as a cause of death on cholesterol alone.

Later, the judges, in separate interviews, marvel at how nasty this dish was.

baked potato in liquid form."

Bastianich, whose wit is as dry as his white wine, considers what has been the worst dish. "That's a very full category," he says. "The funeral potatoes was one of the worst things I've ever eaten."

Some wonderful dishes happen as well. Ramsay says "a sublime panna cotta" and a healthy BLT have been favorites. Bastianich is impressed by homemade pasta and Mediterranean-inspired food such as a lamb dish with risotto.

What makes the show compelling for viewers is getting enmeshed in the lives of the contestants. Tracy, a physician from Georgia, honors the memory of her mom by cooking her dishes. She brings her mom's cookbook with her and prepares smothered chicken with Brussels sprouts.

This show has already been a huge hit in its native U.K. and Australia and has the feel of a series that could run many seasons.
