14 dead after truck crashes in Texas

McALLEN, Texas — A pickup truck overloaded with illegal immigrants veered off a highway and crashed into trees in rural South Texas, killing at least 14 people and leaving nine injured, authorities said Monday.

Federal immigration agents were looking into the human smuggling aspect of the case, while public safety authorities investigated the cause of the Sunday evening crash in Goliad County, about 150 miles northeast of the border with Mexico.

The pickup crammed with 23 immigrants from Mexico and Central America crashed less than an hour's drive from the site of the nation's most deadly immigrant smuggling case, where 19 immigrants died in 2003 after being placed in a sweltering trailer.

The driver was among the 11 found dead at the scene. Investigators were trying to confirm his name.

Age at issue in sex case sentencing

Nineteen-year-old to be labeled sex offender for life; witnesses said girl lied about age

Anthony Coimbre sentenced to 15 months in prison.

A.B. SIDIBE
Staff Writer

INVERNESS — Depending on your perch on the legal scale, the case of Anthony Coimbre is pretty open and closed.

Circuit Judge Ric Howard sentenced Coimbre, 19, to 15 months in prison and two years sex-offender probation Monday for lewd and lascivious conduct with a 13-year-old highly inebriated girl he met at a "loco-fueled" house party when he was 18. Loco is teen vernacular for a mix of liquor, juice and sometimes energy drinks.

He is now a sex offender for life.

The state dropped the more serious charge of sexual battery with a person incapacitated in a plea deal with Coimbre, who reportedly had a clean background until his arrest in June 2011.

Prosecutor Brian Trehy left it to the discretion of Howard for the "appropriate" sentence. The deal was for no more than three years in prison and two years probation.

Defense attorney Dale Merrill said the girl lied to Coimbre about her age, telling him she was 16 and getting ready to turn 17. Merrill also presented a teen witness who was at the party who said he heard the girl say she was 16 and that the girl freely flirted and participated in consensual sex with Coimbre.

Another friend of the victim reportedly corroborated the girl's assertion that she was 16 to Coimbre, who was in charge of door duties at the party. The party organizers did not want anyone younger than 16 at the party.

The typical homeowner should pay $20.49 less in property taxes in the new budget year, according to county figures.

"We reduced the budget this year by $12 million," said County Administrator Brad Thorpe, when he released the proposed budget last week.

The Citrus County Board of County Commissioners (BOCC) will meet at 9 a.m. Wednesday for a preliminary budget hearing. Thorpe said the purpose of the meeting is for the board to plug in the millage rate so Citrus County Property Appraiser Geoffrey Greene can calculate TRIM notices.

NCAA hammers Penn State

14 years erased from record books

Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — A potential exodus of star athletes. No hope of playing in the postseason. More than a decade of accomplishments erased from the record books. And Joe Paterno's legacy in shreds.

Joe Paterno NCAA took away 111 wins, ending his status as winningest coach.

Penn State football, a longtime powerhouse that was once one of the cleanest, most admired programs in college sports, escaped the so-called death penalty from the NCAA on Monday but was dealt a heavy blow that will cripple it for years to come.

The university agreed to an unprecedented $60 million fine, a four-year ban from postseason

EPA agrees to air pollution limits

It is subject to approval by a federal court in Washington, D.C. It requires EPA to finalize cleanup steps in two phases with the last due July 15, 2013.

State error gives CRPS an 'A'

MIKE WRIGHT
Staff Writer

CRYSTAL RIVER — A state miscalculation is good news for Crystal River Primary School.

CRPS and more than 100 other Florida public schools were bumped from a "B" to an "A" late Friday by the state Department of Education.

"It just validates the hard work and effort from the staff to make sure every child is on the right track," new CRPS Principal Donnie Brown said Monday.

State officials had warned school districts to expect lower grades, which are based on Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test (FCAT) scores. FCAT scores dropped because the state raised passing standards.

When grades for elementary and middle schools were announced earlier this month, CRPS and Inverness Middle School had dropped from an "A" to a "B" while other schools retained "A" grades. High school grades will be released later this year.

Brown said CRPS was just six points away from an "A" prior to Friday's announcement.

The miscalculation occurred because the state failed to give schools credit for students who moved up from failing or near-failing scores to passing scores, said Patrick Simon, director of research and accountability for the Citrus County School District.

Simon said Inverness Middle School's grade remained a "B," though its total score increased.

The new calculation also increased the number of "A" school districts from 14 to 17. Citrus County was named an "A" school district for the seventh straight year even before the new calculation.

Friday's recalculation brought more attention to a state testing program under increased scrutiny.

"It's great for Crystal River, it really is," Simon said, and then added: "There are good things with accountability, but the process definitely needs to be re-evaluated."

Kristy Belcher, a nurse at Citrus Memorial Health System in Inverness, performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation in May on a 3-year-old boy pulled from a swimming pool at a resort in Kissimmee, getting him breathing again. This month, Belcher was presented the American Heart Association HeartSaver Hero Award.

Inverness nurse recognized for using CPR to save youngster

CHRIS VAN ORMER
Staff Writer

Hearing the words "He's not breathing" sent the critical care unit nurse into action.

Only Kristy Belcher was not at her workplace: Citrus Memorial Health Foundation in Inverness. Instead, she was getting refreshments for her children poolside at a Kissimmee resort.

"So I ran over and they pulled out this little boy who I later found out was 3 years old," Belcher said. "He was blue and unresponsive. His eyes were fixed and staring."

This month, Belcher received an award for her good work.

As a nurse, Belcher was well trained in how to respond to such an emergency, and was the subject of a Chronicle story in June because she encouraged people to learn CPR in case they, too, are faced with a potential drowning, particularly during the warmer months when many swimming pools will be used at private homes.

According to the Florida Department of Health, 495 people drowned in Florida in 2009, with the highest rates of drowning occurring in the 1- to 4-year-old age group.

At the Kissimmee resort swimming pool, Belcher found that no one among the two dozen adults present seemed to know what to do. She laid the child on his back and started breathing for him.

"I did the first breath and there was no response and the second breath and he started coughing," Belcher said. "So I turned him on his side and started patting his back. He coughed a little bit more and a big gush of water came out. It took about 30 seconds, but it seemed like three hours. He started screaming violently."

The boy's scream was a good sign. When the emergency medical team arrived, the boy was responsive.

For her work, Belcher has been honored with the American Heart Association HeartSaver Hero Award, which the nonprofit organization that fosters appropriate cardiac care presents to people who have performed CPR in the community to help save the life of another person who went into sudden cardiac arrest.

Anyone seeking to learn CPR is asked to contact Nature Coast Emergency Medical Service. Go online to www.naturecoastems.org or contact Jane Bedford, education director at 352-249-4751 or email janeb@naturecoastems.org.

Water authority awards grants

Special to the Chronicle

LECANTO — The board of directors for the Withlacoochee Regional Water Supply Authority, representing Citrus, Hernando, Marion and Sumter counties, awarded $130,000 for its 2013 water conservation grant program.

Citrus, Hernando and Marion counties will each receive matching grants to increase water-use efficiency and reduce demands on local water resources, in order to attain the Southwest Florida Water Management District per capita rate of consumption goal of 150 gallons per person per day.

"The Authority's matching grants serve as an excellent opportunity for member governments to leverage limited budgets for carrying out water conservation programs," said Richard Owen, the authority's new executive director.

Board members expressed support for the grant awards, which will include rebates, irrigation audits, indoor and outdoor retrofits and other incentives for citizens to upgrade outdated fixtures.

"Partnering with the authority to improve water-use efficiency can help delay the need for building costly water treatment plants," said Chairman Dennis Damato.

The next WRWSA board of directors meeting will be at 4:30 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 19, at in the Lecanto Government Building, room 166, 3600 Sovereign Path, Lecanto.

Economists predict foreign tourist lull

The News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — Economic woes in Europe will trickle across the Atlantic over the next few years as potential international guests stay home or see their native currency buy less once they arrive, a panel of economists estimated Monday.

Meeting to recalibrate earlier estimates on a host of indices from housing starts to unemployment, economists from the Legislature and the governor's office made only minor changes to a forecast last revised in December.

The bigger economic picture remains largely unchanged, said Amy Baker, coordinator of the Legislature's Office of Economic and Demographic Research. Florida is expected to avoid another recession, but the climb back remains slow.

"We are not expecting any dramatic changes in our previous forecast," Baker said. "We are making some minor adjustments, but that's about it."

Job growth will remain sluggish as the state continues to claw its way back following a real estate and housing crash that began in 2007. Even the most optimistic projection has Florida's unemployment rate above 6 percent until 2016.

Groups sue over algae blooms

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE — Three environmental groups sued the Army Corps of Engineers, the state and a water management district Monday over smelly, slimy green algae blooms that have been polluting the Caloosahatchee River in southwest Florida.

The lawsuit in U.S. District Court here alleges the corps is violating state and South Florida Water Management District regulations by diverting water that should be going into the river to 500,000 acres of sugar cane fields instead.

"The Corps' refusal to supply enough water from Lake Okeechobee is wrecking the Caloosahatchee," said David Guest, a lawyer for the environmental legal group Earthjustice. "It's an environmental crisis, and it's also an economic one."

Earthjustice sued on behalf of the Florida Wildlife Federation, Conservancy of Southwest Florida and Environmental Confederation of Southwest Florida.

Corps spokesman John Campbell said he had nothing to say, citing a policy against commenting on pending litigation.

The water management district issued a statement saying officials had not yet reviewed the complaint but defended its efforts to balance the area's water needs. It also said the district is exploring ways to increase the lake's storage capability and provide supplemental flows to Caloosahatchee.

The suit seeks a court order declaring that the corps' operation of water control structures violates state laws and regulations and directing it to comply with those requirements.

The environmentalists said algae outbreaks in eight of the past 11 years, including one last week, have resulted in health department warnings against touching or drinking the water or eating fish caught in the river.

Tourism has suffered because the green slime has caused a stench and fish kills on Gulf of Mexico beaches near the mouth of the river, they said.

"We are lucky to live in one of the most beautiful places in the country, but how many tourists will keep coming here when the river is covered with stinking slime?" said Andrew McElwaine, president of the Conservancy of Southwest Florida.

Florida Wildlife Federation President Manley Fuller said marine and estuarine habitats vital to recreational and commercial fishing are being harmed.

"The polluted water is killing the sea grass nurseries at the estuary where fish and shellfish spawn," Fuller said.

uncovered by defense investigator Steve Burch, all the participants at the party observed that the girl willingly engaged in the sexual encounter and that Coimbre was among the people helping her when she started throwing up at the party. The homeowner was reportedly at work during the party.

The girl reportedly testified later at a deposition that she does remember the encounter and therefore does not remember saying no to Coimbre.

The case did not qualify for Florida's so-called "Romeo and Juliet" law because the victim in this case was 13. "Romeo and Juliet" offers judges a little flexibility when deciding sex-crime cases involving teens 14 and older who are separated by a four-year age gap. The age of consent, which is traditionally 16, drops to 14 in a consensual encounter. In Florida, consensual sex is allowed between 16-year-olds and adults not older than 24.

Meanwhile, Merrill argued that Howard should invalidate a state statute which does not allow ignorance based on being lied to about age as a defense.

She implored Howard to withhold adjudication for Coimbre and only sentence him to probation.

Merrill also said it will be cruel and unusual punishment to subject Coimbre to register as a sex offender for life.

"He never would have had sex with her if he knew she was 13 years old," Merrill said.

She said she is going to spearhead efforts in the legislature to change "this incredibly unfair law."

Merrill said she would like to see a tiered sex-offender system similar to the system in place in Massachusetts, where depending on where a crime falls on the rung, a convicted person will not be subject to lifelong registration as a sex offender.

"Some of the crimes could be misdemeanors," Merrill said after the sentencing.

Howard, however, declined the defense's effort for the court to invalidate the law.

"That is up to the legislature. But when you go to the legislature, let me know because I will be watching that," Howard said.

Howard said he was unsure if the current six years of elementary, two years of middle school and four years of high school set up may be a culprit in cases like this, but he empathized with today's teens.

"What you have is, you are putting a bunch of 14-and-a-half-year-olds with a bunch of 18-and-a-half-year olds," he said.

Howard said in the1960s when he was growing up, the school setup was the 6-3-3 configuration and coaches, starting in middle school, were keen about telling boys about the legal consequences of sex with underage girls. He said in the 1960s when a girl became pregnant in high school, she would surreptitiously disappear and conversely, the father would be escorted away by police the next day, never to be seen again.

"Clearly, some things have changed. It is tougher now to be a young person," he said.

Robert Goocher, got on the ballot.

Dostal then said in June that if he wins the Democratic primary, he would step aside to "run interference" for Argenziano, a former legislator and Public Service Commission member, to help her defeat incumbent Republican Jimmie T. Smith.

Dostal now says he is reconsidering that plan.

> "All of a sudden I've got people coming out of the woodwork to help me."
> Lynn Dostal
> on why he's backing off earlier comments which suggested he'd quit his campaign to support Nancy Argenziano.

"All of a sudden I've got people coming out of the woodwork to help me," Dostal told the Chronicle Editorial Board last week.

Dostal believes Republicans planted Goocher in the race after Dostal told Democrats in late spring he was suspending his campaign. A Democrat on the November ballot, Dostal said, would pull votes from Argenziano.

"The only thing I can conclude is he's a shill," Dostal said.

Goocher could not be reached for comment and has been unavailable except for a two-minute interview in early June.

Dostal said the key is beating Smith in the November election.

Dostal is a retired human resources manager who now teaches special education part-time in Hernando County.

He is highly critical of Smith and Gov. Rick Scott, particularly for passing laws that are being challenged in the courts.

For example, Dostal said he agrees on principle with Smith that welfare recipients and state employees should be drug-free. But requiring random drug tests, which are now under constitutional challenge, is not the answer.

NOTE

Numerous attempts by Chronicle staff to reach candidate Robert Raymond Goocher were unsuccessful.

"I told him face to face he needs to follow the rule of law," Dostal said.

Dostal also said Smith supports state vouchers for private schools and supported a law — also under court challenge — that requires teachers and other government employees to pay 3 percent of their salary for the Florida Retirement System.

And Dostal is incredulous that Smith supports privatizing school bus service to save money.

"He wants to outsource bus drivers," Dostal said. "What the heck is he thinking? These are the people he's supposed to be representing."

RIDE

Ride rode into space on the space shuttle Challenger in 1983 when she was 32. After her flight, more than 42 other American women flew in space, NASA said.

"Sally was a national hero and a powerful role model. She inspired generations of young girls to reach for the stars," President Barack Obama said in a statement.

NASA Administrator Charles Bolden, a former astronaut, said Ride "broke barriers with grace and professionalism — and literally changed the face of America's space program."

"The nation has lost one of its finest leaders, teachers and explorers," he said in a statement.

Ride was a physicist, writer of five science books for children and president of her own company. She had also been a professor of physics at the University of California in San Diego.

She was selected as an astronaut candidate in 1978, the same year she earned her doctorate in physics from Stanford University. She beat out five women to be the first American female in space. Her first flight came two decades after the Soviets sent a woman into space

"On launch day, there was so much excitement and so much happening around us in crew quarters, even on the way to the launch pad," Ride recalled in a NASA interview for the 25th anniversary of her flight in 2008. "I didn't really think about it that much at the time — but I came to appreciate what an honor it was to be selected to be the first to get a chance to go into space."

Associated Press

In this June 1983 file photo, astronaut Sally K. Ride, STS-7 mission specialist, communicates with ground controllers from the Space Shuttle Challenger. Ride, the first American woman in space, died Monday after a 17-month battle with pancreatic cancer. She was 61.

Ride flew in space twice, both times on Challenger in 1983 and in 1984, logging 343 hours in space. A third flight was cancelled when Challenger exploded in 1986. She was on the commission investigating that accident and later served on the panel for the 2003 Columbia shuttle accident, the only person on both boards.

She also was on the president's committee of science advisers.

PENN STATE

play and a cut in the number of football scholarships it can award — the price it will pay for having looked the other way while Jerry Sandusky brought boys onto campus and molested them.

The NCAA also erased 14 years of victories, wiping out 111 of Paterno's wins and stripping him of his standing as the most successful coach in the history of big-time college football.

"Football will never again be placed ahead of educating, nurturing and protecting young people," NCAA President Mark Emmert declared.

Penn State meekly accepted its punishment, pledging to hold itself to high standards of honesty and integrity.

Penn State spokesman David La Torre said university President Rodney Erickson had no choice but to acquiesce, given the threat of a total shutdown of the football program.

"It was clear Penn State faced an alternative — a long-term death penalty and additional sanctions for the program, university and whole community. Given the situation, he believed the sanctions offered and accepted was the appropriate and course of action," La Torre said.

At a student union on campus, several dozen alumni and students gasped, groaned and whistled as they watched Emmert's news conference. The news was a crushing blow to many students.

Nicole Lord, a senior, questioned why Penn State's student body, and especially its athletes, should be punished "for the wrongs of three men and a monster."

"They keep breaking our hearts and breaking our hearts and breaking our hearts," she said.

Sandusky, a former member of Paterno's coaching staff, was found guilty in June of sexually abusing 10 boys over 15 years, sometimes on campus. An investigation commissioned by the school and released July 12 found that Paterno, who died of lung cancer in January at age 85, and three other top officials at Penn State concealed accusations against Sandusky for fear of bad publicity.

The NCAA's punishment was announced a day after the school took down a statue of Paterno that stood outside Beaver Stadium.

The sanctions will make it difficult for the Nittany Lions to compete at the sport's highest level. Raising the specter of an exodus of athletes, the NCAA said current or incoming football players are free to immediately transfer and compete at another school.

For a university that always claimed to hold itself to a higher standard — for decades, Paterno preached "success with honor" — Monday's announcement completed a stunning fall from grace.

Paterno's family said in a statement that the sanctions "defame the legacy and contributions of a great coach and educator."

"This is not a fair or thoughtful action; it is a panicked response to the public's understandable revulsion at what Sandusky did," the family said.

Emmert said the penalties reflect "the magnitude of these terrible acts" and also "ensure that Penn State will rebuild an athletic culture that went horribly awry."

He said the NCAA considered imposing the death penalty, or a complete shutdown of football for a season or more, but worried about the collateral damage.

"Suspension of the football program would bring with it significant unintended harm to many who had nothing to do with this case," Emmert said. "The sanctions we have crafted are more focused and impactful than that blanket penalty."

Gov. Tom Corbett expressed gratitude that Penn State escaped the death penalty, saying it would have had a "severe detrimental impact on the citizens of State College, Centre County and the entire commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

A drop-off in attendance and revenue could damage both the university, where the football team is a moneymaker that subsidizes other sports, and much of central Pennsylvania, where Saturday afternoon football at Penn State is an important part of the economy.

But given Penn State's famously ardent fans and generous benefactors, the precise economic impact on Penn State and Happy Valley, as the surrounding area is known, remains unclear.

First-year coach Bill O'Brien, who was hired to replace Paterno, will have the daunting task of trying to keep players from fleeing the program while luring new recruits.

"I knew when I accepted the position that there would be tough times ahead," O'Brien said.

Already, at least one recruit, Ross Douglas, a defensive back from Avon, Ohio, backed out of his commitment. Douglas told Rivals.com on Monday: "We prepared ourselves for it, and today was just the icing on the cake. I love Penn State to death, but I have to do what's best for me, and I'm going to look elsewhere."

Separately, the Big Ten announced that Penn State will not be allowed to share in the conference's bowl revenue during the NCAA's postseason ban, an estimated loss of about $13 million.

Emmert fast-tracked the penalties rather than go through the usual circuitous series of investigations and hearings.

The NCAA said the $60 million fine is equivalent to the annual gross revenue of the football program. The money will go toward outside programs devoted to preventing child sexual abuse or assisting victims.

Penn State said it will pay the fine in five annual installments of $12 million. The governor demanded assurances from Penn State that taxpayer money will not be used to pay the fine; Penn State said it will cover it with its athletics reserve fund and capital maintenance budget and, if necessary, borrow money.

By throwing out all Penn State victories from 1998 to 2011, the NCAA stripped Paterno of the top spot in the record book. The governing body went all the way back to 1998 because, according to the investigative report, that is the year Paterno and other Penn State officials first learned of an allegation against Sandusky.

Former Florida State coach Bobby Bowden will replace Paterno with 377 major-college victories, while Paterno will be credited with 298.

"I didn't want it to happen like this," Bowden said. "Wish I could have earned it, but that's the way it is."

Penn State will also lose 20 scholarships a year for four years. Major college football programs are normally allowed 85 scholarship players per year.

The postseason ban is the longest handed out by the NCAA since it gave a four-year punishment to Indiana football in 1960.

Penn State players left a team meeting on campus in State College without talking to reporters. Penn State's season starts Sept. 1 at home against Ohio University.

"Our heritage, our legacy has been tainted and damaged," said Troy Cromwell, a wide receiver on the 1986 team that won the second of Paterno's two national championships. Cromwell said he felt bad for current and incoming players, "but at the end of the day, there were still those kids, those poor kids, and those victims, and we have to think about them first in everything that we do."

The harshest penalty handed out to a football program came in the 1980s, when the NCAA shut down Southern Methodist University's team for a year. SMU football has never gotten back to the level of success it had before getting the death penalty.

Jim Delany, commissioner of the Big Ten conference, said he believes Penn State is capable of bouncing back. "I do have a strong sense that many of the ingredients of success are still at Penn State and will be there in future years," he said.

U.S. donates extra $150M to AIDS fight

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Science now has the tools to slash the spread of HIV even without a vaccine — and the U.S. is donating an extra $150 million to help poor countries put them in place, the Obama administration told the world's largest AIDS conference Monday.

"We want to get to the end of AIDS," declared the top U.S. HIV researcher, Dr. Anthony Fauci of the National Institutes of Health.

How long it takes depends on how quickly the world can adopt those tools, he said — including getting more of the millions of untreated people onto life-saving drugs that come with the bonus of keeping them from infecting others.

"No promises, no dates, but we know it can happen," Fauci told the International AIDS Conference.

Part of the challenge will be overcoming the stigma that keeps high-risk populations from getting needed AIDS treatment and services.

"We have to replace the shame with love," singer Elton John told the conference. "We have to replace the stigma with compassion. No one should be left behind."

Associated Press

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton speaks Monday at the XIX International Aids Conference in Washington, D.C.

Some 34.2 million people worldwide are living with HIV, and 2.5 million were infected last year.

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton said the goal is an AIDS-free generation. That would mean no babies would be born infected, young people would have a much lower risk than today of becoming infected and people who already have HIV would receive life-saving drugs so they wouldn't develop AIDS or spread the virus.

"I am here today to make it absolutely clear the U.S. is committed and will remain committed to achieving an AIDS-free generation," Clinton told the more than 20,000 scientists, people living with HIV and policymakers assembled for the conference.

But it will require smart targeting of prevention tools where they can have the greatest effect. "If we want to save more lives, we need to go where the virus is," she said.

First, Clinton said it's possible to virtually eliminate the transmission of HIV from infected pregnant women to their babies by 2015, by getting the mothers onto anti-AIDS drugs. HIV-infected births are rare in the United States and are dropping steadily worldwide, although some 330,000 children became infected last year. Clinton said the U.S. has invested more than $1 billion toward that goal in recent years and is providing an extra $80 million to help poor countries finish the job.

Much of the AIDS conference is focused on how to get treatment to all people with HIV, because good treatment can cut by 96 percent their chances of spreading the virus to sexual partners. Fauci pointed to South Africa, where healthy people who live in a region that has increased medication now have a 38 percent lower risk of infection compared with neighbors in an area where HIV treatment is less common.

Scientists: Novel TB drug combo passes first test

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Scientists are hot on the trail of a new tuberculosis treatment that a small study suggests might one day offer an alternative to battle this deadly lung disease, even if it's resistant to today's two main drugs.

There haven't been new medications to treat TB in four decades. But the experimental three-drug combination, revealed Monday at the International AIDS Conference, is one of a list of promising compounds under intense testing around the world.

"We are cautiously optimistic that we are at the dawn of a new era for TB drugs," Dr. Diane Havlir of the University of California, San Francisco, who is co-chairing the meeting, told The Associated Press. She wasn't involved with the new research.

TB is one of the world's oldest killers, and every year it claims the lives of more than 1.5 million people, mostly in developing countries. It's also the leading killer of people with AIDS.

Standard first-line treatment requires taking four medications for six months. A frightening factor is that the bacteria that cause TB are fast becoming impervious to the two main drugs in that cocktail. The World Health Organization estimates there are more than 650,000 cases of multidrug-resistant TB a year. Treating drug-resistant TB can take more than two years, if it works at all.

Enter the new research.

Scientists in South Africa divided 85 newly diagnosed TB patients to take a variety of combinations of standard or experimental TB drugs.

Fifteen of the patients received a unique trio that emerged as the study's focus: An experimental antibiotic code-named PA-824, along with the pneumonia drug moxifloxacin and an older TB drug, pyrazinamide.

In a two-week test, the drug trio killed at least as much of the TB bacteria that patients coughed up as today's standard four-drug therapy, and possibly worked a bit faster, said Dr. Mel Spigelam of the nonprofit TB Alliance, the Global Alliance for TB Drug Development.

That doesn't mean patients were cured in two weeks, stressed lead researcher Dr. Andreas Diacon of South Africa's Stellenbosch University. It takes longer to get the last TB bugs lurking deep in the lungs — the reason TB therapy must be taken for months — but a two-week test is a standard first step in drug development.

It is noteworthy that the experimental combination doesn't include either of the two standard TB drugs — isoniazid and rifampicin — that today cause most problems of drug resistance. If additional research proves the drug trio really works, it could offer a much-needed alternative for multidrug-resistant TB as well, Spigelman said. Plus, it might be helpful for HIV patients who have trouble with today's TB treatments interacting with their anti-AIDS medicines.

A larger study has begun in South Africa, Tanzania and Brazil that will test how patients fare over two months. Monday's study, funded by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and other groups, also was reported in the journal Lancet.

Gas line safety valves resisted

Investigation finds $15 device could have prevented hundreds of accidents over past four decades

Associated Press

The bulldozer was clearing land outside a day care center in Hapeville, Ga., when it broke open a buried 1-inch pipeline. The escaping gas ignited into a fireball that killed nine people, including seven children settling down for their afternoon naps.

That was 1968. Since then, there have been at least 270 similar accidents across the country that could have been prevented or made less dangerous by a valve that cuts off leaking gas and costs as little as $10 to $15 for homes and small businesses and $200 to $300 for larger buildings, an Associated Press investigation found.

Associated Press

Firefighters and volunteers dig through the wreckage of a daycare center on May 30, 1968, after a bulldozer broke open a buried 1-inch pipeline that caused an explosion and fire in Hapeville, Ga., killing nine people, including seven children.

Yet nearly 90 percent of the nation's gas service lines aren't fitted with the valves. Despite persistent government recommendations, the gas industry has argued that they are unreliable and cost too much to install — $207 million over 50 years in one industry-commissioned study, more than $1 billion in another estimate.

In the meantime, the accidents continued: Since Hapeville, at least 67 people have been killed and more than 350 hurt in accidents where the valves could have helped but weren't installed. Six people were killed in a Minnesota store blast in 1972. A 25-story Manhattan building was destroyed in 1974, injuring 70 people. Four people died and six buildings were leveled in an explosion in 1998 in St. Cloud, Minn.

"There were lives lost that did not need to be lost," said Robert Hall, deputy director of the National Transportation Safety Board, which is responsible for investigating pipeline accidents.

The NTSB recommended the valves 16 times, but only in 2009, under pressure from Congress, was a rule approved — to make the devices mandatory only on lines leading to new, single-family homes. Now, regulators are considering expanding that to new or replaced pipelines serving millions of multifamily homes and commercial buildings. And the utilities are objecting.

"NTSB has made excess-flow valves some kind of holy war where they think everything should have a valve on it," said Don Stursma, an official at the Iowa Utilities Board who sits on an advisory board to the Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration.

Pipeline agency officials said they will decide whether to push ahead with the new rules sometime next year.

The valves are designed to trip automatically when there is a break in a service line, the narrow-diameter pipes that serve individual homes and businesses. A sudden rush of escaping gas pushes a small, spring-loaded stopper inside the valve, plugging the line.

Without them, gas can leak unchecked into a building or house, pooling until an ignition source — turning on the stove, a pilot light in the water heater, even an electrical spark from a cellphone — triggers an explosion or fire.

The most complete government records, covering 2004 to the present, showed 187 accidents that potentially could have been avoided or mitigated, according to the AP's review.

That includes 148 cases the U.S. Transportation Department said could have been averted or diminished if valves were in place. The department released details on those accidents in response to a public records request from the AP. Applying the agency's criteria, the AP found 39 more. Another 84 cases were identified by NTSB investigators or mentioned in Transportation Department studies.

There are more than 66 million natural gas service lines in the U.S., but only about one in 10 had excess-flow valves, according to the government's most recent data. Almost 46 million new service lines have been installed since 1970 — about 39 million without excess-flow valves. That's about 39 million "missed opportunities," as Hall put it.

The federal pipeline safety agency, which sets pipeline rules, announced last year that it was considering requiring the valves for multifamily dwellings and commercial buildings. The agency believes the 2009 mandate for safety valves on single-family homes "only partially addressed" the NTSB's recommendations, agency spokeswoman Jeannie Layson said in a written statement.

Before the agency decides whether to go ahead with new rules, officials want to survey companies about how much it might cost them to place excess flow valves on service lines for buildings along with new, single-family homes, Layson said.

Government and industry estimates on overall costs have varied greatly:

■ In 1974, consultants to the Transportation Department said installing valves on new lines was not only economically and technically feasible, but would improve public safety. They recommended more study, however.

■ In 1991, an industry-commissioned study put the price tag at $207 million over 50 years to outfit new and renewed lines, an estimate that included the price of the device, its installation and the potential cost of digging up pipes to repair bad valves.

■ In 1995, when Congress was debating whether to mandate the valves, an industry executive estimated the cost would top $1 billion. The proposal was dropped.

All sides in the debate agree that installing the valves retroactively would be too expensive.

Citrus County's only heart surgery program has earned the highest 3 STAR quality rating for coronary artery bypass surgery from The Society of Thoracic Surgeons.
The Society of Thoracic Surgeons has developed a comprehensive rating system that allows for comparisons regarding the quality of cardiac surgery among hospitals across the country. Only about 14% of more than 1,000 hospitals nationally receive a 3 STAR rating, which denotes the highest category of quality. Based on current national data covering the period of January through December 2011, the cardiac surgery performance of Citrus Memorial's Heart and Vascular Center was determined to be in the highest quality tier thereby receiving the coveted 3 STAR rating.
The Society of Thoracic Surgeons is a not-for-profit organization representing more than 6,400 surgeons, researchers, and allied health professionals worldwide who are dedicated to ensuring the best possible heart, lung, esophageal, and other surgical procedures for the chest. Founded in 1964, the mission of STS is to enhance the ability of cardiothoracic surgeons to provide the highest quality patient care through education, research, and advocacy.

On Euro fears, Dow suffers second triple-digit loss in two days

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fear that Spain may need a bailout sent its borrowing costs soaring, the euro to a two-year low against the dollar and stocks around the world tumbling as investors pulled back Monday from all manner of risk.

The Dow Jones industrial average, after falling 239 points earlier in the day, ended down 101.11 at 12,721.46. Yields for U.S. government bonds sank to record lows as traders sought the safety of American debt.

Borrowing costs rose sharply for Spain and Italy after news that the Spanish economy contracted by 0.4 percent in the second quarter. Falling economic output makes it more difficult for Spain to deal with its debts.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 12.14 points to 1,350.52. The Nasdaq composite index dropped 35.15 points to 2,890.15.

"Increases in Spanish borrowing costs have brought back questions about the health of Europe," said Guy LeBas, chief fixed income strategist at Janney Montgomery Scott in Philadelphia. "That's driven a flight to safety."

The selling was widespread. All 10 industry groups within the S&P 500 were down, with materials and health care companies off more than 1 percent. Including Friday's drop, the Dow is down 222 points, the biggest back-to-back drop in more than a month.

In addition to Spain, investors are worried Greece might get cut off from emergency loans it needs to avoid default. On Tuesday, inspectors from its international creditors arrive in the country to check on its progress in cutting its budget and in meeting other conditions it had agreed to in exchange for aid.

The Greek government has repeatedly failed to hit targets required for the two bailouts it has received so far.

Adding to the jitters, a Chinese central bank adviser forecast that China's economic growth could slow from its second-quarter rate of 7.6 percent, which was already the slowest in three years.

Investors had hoped that the world's second-largest economy would compensate for slowdowns in the U.S. and Europe but now aren't so sure.

"I wish it were still the weekend," said Lawrence Creatura, a portfolio manager at Federated Investors, a mutual fund firm.

The prospect of bailing out Madrid is worrisome for Europe because the potential cost far exceeds what's available in existing emergency funds.

In a move that recalled the global financial crisis four years ago, Spain's market regulator on Monday said it was temporarily banning short selling of shares on its stock indexes. In a short sale, an investor seeks a profit by betting that the price of a certain stock will fall.

Treasury yields hit record low

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Renewed worries about Spain's economy sent traders into the safety of U.S. government debt Monday, knocking a key Treasury rate to a record low.

The surge in demand briefly pushed the 10-year Treasury yield to an all-time low of 1.40 percent in early Monday trading, according to the data provider FactSet. When bond prices climb, yields fall.

Spanish government borrowing costs shot up Monday following news over the weekend that many regional governments would likely need support from the central government. The Spanish government is already struggling to rescue the country's troubled banks as its economy shrinks.

Treasury yields slowly crept up throughout the day. By the end of regular trading, the 10-year yield was at 1.44 percent, down from 1.46 percent late Friday. Its price rose 21.8 cents for every $100 invested.

The early drop in the 10-year Treasury yield broke a mark set June 1, when a dismal U.S. jobs report rattled financial markets and knocked the yield as low as 1.44 percent.

In other trading Monday, the price of the 30-year Treasury bond rose 78.1 cents for every $100 invested. The yield fell to 2.51 percent, down from 2.55 percent late Friday. The yield on the two-year note edged up to 0.22 percent from 0.21 percent.

In the market for short-term Treasury bills, the three-month T-bill paid 0.10 percent.

LIMITED RIGHTS

Mobile home park living has drawbacks

When choosing to situate your house on property owned by another, the rules of homeowner rights grow complicated.

That is the case for many in Citrus County who live in manufactured and mobile home communities.

In recent weeks, residents in two separate local mobile home parks have found themselves uncertain about the best direction to take due to circumstances driven by the owners of the land they're situated on.

THE ISSUE:
Mobile home park residents' rights.

OUR OPINION:
Be informed and organized.

In one case, the mobile home park land was sold and some living there faced a need to relocate or abandon their homes, yet lacked financial wherewithal to do so.

In a more recent and separate case, a park's residents said the owner was raising rates, yet they claim the owner has failed to live up to the terms of an agreement to provide maintenance and repairs — an agreement reportedly tied to lot-rental hikes.

These instances represent only a fraction of similar situations faced by mobile homeowners — situations resulting from owning a home but not owning the property it sits on.

Circumstances vary, but those living in manufactured home communities are vulnerable.

The best way to combat that vulnerability is to be organized and informed. While area mobile home parks range from high-end to humble, there are common concerns. It's essential to know your legal rights, contractual and otherwise, to understand the risks and rights of being a park tenant.

The Citrus County Citizens Coalition — established to represent the residents of mobile and manufactured home parks — is a resource for those needing guidance, as is the Federation of Manufactured Home Owners of Florida.

There's no denying that park owners are entitled to a fair return on their investment. Land values fluctuate and economic factors come into play.

At the same time, when a considerable base of tenants rely on fixed, retirement income and that's the targeted group of residents, it's appropriate for park owners to foster understanding and general agreement with those being served when needing to make financial and policy changes that can adversely impact residents.

Residents do have legal rights. Contracts are to be adhered to. Regardless, mobile home owners are vulnerable, and through organization, advocacy and communication, a greater degree of security can be afforded.

OTHER VOICES

By now the script should be familiar. A bombing or a mass shooting occurs and the media immediately look for a simple cause. Invariably, they turn to talk radio or some other conservative pit of "intolerance."

Within recent memory are tragedies like the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing, the 1999 massacre at Columbine, the 2007 Virginia Tech shootings and the 2011 shooting of Rep. Gabrielle Giffords and others in Tucson. Some politicians and liberal interest groups have sought to link these and other violent incidents to the far right. There have also been incidents when some conservatives have tried to blame other tragedies on "liberals" "secularists" and abortion.

New York Times columnist Paul Krugman wrote on his blog that the "hate-mongers" Rush Limbaugh and Glenn Beck contributed to the Giffords shooting, despite later reports that the shooter, Jared Lee Loughner, had never listened to their programs. The discovery that Loughner liked "The Communist Manifesto" and "Mein Kampf" forced media types to quickly abandon that smear, but not retract their comments. They're running the same play again.

Within hours of the massacre of 12 people and the wounding of dozens more in a movie theater in Aurora, Colo., Brian Ross, an "investigative reporter" for ABC News, rushed on the air to say that he had found a name similar to that of the alleged shooter and that the Jim Holmes he had discovered with a quick Internet search was (gasp!) listed as a member of the tea party movement. In Ross' mind, as well as that of other "journalists," apparently, tea party equals guns, equals extremist, end of discussion. ABC and Ross later issued a limp apology, but the bias was exposed.

Ross was not alone in his rush to misjudgment. The New York Times sought the opinion of film critic Roger Ebert, who predictably argued for more gun control laws even while diagnosing the alleged shooter as "insane." How would more laws force an "insane" individual to act sanely and obey them, especially when that person is intent on committing murder? Ebert didn't say. Even if more gun laws could deter "insane" killers, there are other weapons to choose from — airplanes, homemade bombs containing fertilizer. Should fertilizer be outlawed?

The National Rifle Association, predictably, was denounced on MSNBC and in the Daily Kos, but the left's real endgame was expressed in a recent letter to the editor in The New York Times by Ellyn S. Roth, New York City: "What is it going to take to get rid of the handguns in this country?"

Our government is unlikely to confiscate every gun in America in violation not only of the Second Amendment, but also common sense.

What is always left out of this familiar scenario is an in-depth discussion of evil. Politicians and commentators almost never speak of evil as something that resides deep inside the human heart. All humans possess the capacity for evil. While it rarely rises to the level of mass murder, the capacity for doing great harm to other human beings lurks within each of us. This is what theologians mean when they speak of a "fallen" humanity.

Violent movies like "The Dark Knight Rises" do not make all people emulate the Colorado shooter, any more than a movie about love causes people to love one another.

Would an armed guard at the theater have helped stem the carnage? No one can say. The guard might have been the first one shot. Some have suggested that at least one armed movie patron could have stopped the shooter. That also is difficult to say. In a darkened theater, a gunfight might have killed just as many, or more.

Sometimes there are no "solutions" that can forestall an evil act. Both President Obama and Mitt Romney set the right tone, asking for prayers for the victims and their families. Calling on that Higher Authority is the proper and perhaps only counterforce to this and other expressions of true evil.

LETTERS to the Editor

When pigs drive

I just observed an amazing thing. A vehicle drove up South Boulevard in Inverness and driving it, the vehicle, was a pig. Sitting next to him on the driver's side was another pig.

The pig on the passenger side threw out a big white bag from Burger King on the grass on the side of the road. They drove on to their own little sty in the sky. Thank you, piggies.

Human behavior

Strange, we human beings. All week we gather our garbage. We put it in protected, covered containers to prevent animals such as mice, rats and birds from getting into it.

Then 24 hours before garbage pickup, we take this garbage from that covered container and we put it out street side in a plastic bag. Strange, we human beings.

If you build it...

I made the request for sidewalks and a beach for Homosassa. I know it's the Nature Coast. We don't need Clearwater Beach.

That's a gulf beach anyway. Though, so is Fort Island. We need one like Crystal River Nature Coast's Hunter's Spring. People, even if they didn't own a boat, could use it in warm weather. Manatees could use it in the winter. If we had sidewalks, locals and visitors could walk or bike to it. That's environmentally friendly.

Many decades ago, when this truly was a nature coast, there were places where people in Homosassa could go swimming.

Getting worse

I have lived in the Crystal River area for more than 30 years.

It always seemed to be an up-and-coming community. It was a fun place to live for the young and old, lots to do. But not now. Slowly this community has gone to the dogs. Sure the economy has hurt us, but why is it when going out of town, you don't see the situation anywhere else? Driving north on U.S. 19 to the mall, stores are empty on both sides of U.S. 19. And of course, you feel like you are in ghost town while shopping at the mall.

If you have a boat, go to bars or golf, there's plenty for you to go find to do. But after a while, the businesses that cater to these things also close up. Who's to blame for all this?

Well done, all

Congratulations to our Citrus County School District. I read in the paper that they received again another "A" grade for their excellence in teaching our students and educating them. Congratulations to all of you. Well deserved, and I'm so proud to be part. Citrus County has such a great school district.

No offer of help?

I just saw the front page photo of an elderly woman outside her car at a flooded intersection. What was the photographer, Matthew Beck, thinking? Instead of helping the woman, who obviously needed it, he takes this picture!

There is no doubt he was waiting at the intersection for someone to stall. I wonder if he would have taken the photo if it was his mother (who) was stuck in this intersection.

The newspaper was so proud of this photograph that it made the front page as well as being sold on their website for $16.98 for an 8 x 10 copy.

You even have no respect for the woman's identity by leaving the license plate visible in the picture. Maybe a little sensitivity training for the Chronicle employees might be appropriate after your newspaper issues an apology to the woman in the photo.

Sheltering animals

I am a volunteer at Citrus County Animal Shelter (CCAS), and I am a member of FOCCAS, a rescue group that works closely with the shelter in getting dogs and cats adopted by other rescue groups.

I am proud to be associated with CCAS. As a whole, the community there is caring and loving and working hard to do the best they can for the animals.

There is a small but effective medical staff that tends to the needs of the animals.

I think the term "no kill" has to be more defined. Without citing numbers, the adoption rate at CCAS is very good, probably one of the best in the state, "no kill" or not.

Some things to consider:

Space: At the present, most of the dogs are doubled up in fairly small kennels; do we want them to be tripled up?

We have to think about how kennel life affects some of these dogs. Some of them simply can't take the confinement without becoming "cagey," as we call it. They can become depressed, aggressive, etc., making them highly unadoptable, also making an impact on the dog that they are kenneled with.

Money: Until the county makes a financial commitment to improve the facilities (which are old and outdated), it is all just talk. For well over a year now, there has been a good deal of money sitting in the county coffers designated for a new additional building on the premises of CCAS. What's up with that?

In a perfect world, every dog would have a loving home, but when CCAS is required to accept all animals, euthanasia is an ugly fact of life.

Finally, I sympathize with those who "can't go there" because of the "kill" factor.

I chose to "go there" to help make life a little easier for the dogs, regardless of the "kill" factor.

BUDGET

In Millage, allows taxpayers to compare last year's assessed value and tax to this year's proposed values and taxes. Greene calculated there would be a 3.7 percent decrease in property values from 2011. Based on the current market conditions, this means that the county has less revenue to operate from.

"Since 2007, we've dropped 30.8 percent in property values over the last six years," Thorpe said. "If the millage rate stays the same, your tax bill goes down. And that's what's been happening."

The average homeowner's assessed value will decline from $106,950 to $101,700. This reduction in value will reduce the levy from $387.73 to $367.24. That means homeowners will pay $20.49 less on an average house, Thorpe said.

Some property values in the county have declined more than other properties.

"It's different areas of the county," said Cathy Taylor, director of the Management and Budget Department.

Some properties hold their value better than other properties, reflecting a difference in taxes, Thorpe said. He will recommend the rollback rate of 7.1033 mills to the board. The current rate is 6.8083 mills. One mill is equivalent to $1 of tax for each $1,000 of assessed, nonexempt real property.

"The rollback rate is an adjustment to make up for the decrease in property value," Thorpe said. "If you roll back, technically, if your value hasn't changed, you should pay the same amount as you did the year before. There will be no net increase in value or in taxes."

MATT BECK/Chronicle

Children enjoy a play session Monday at Citrus Springs Community Center. The county's proposed budget would move the center's litigation fund into its current spending.

Ad valorem taxes have declined from $82.2 million in 2008 to $63.4 million in 2013, representing a 22.9 percent reduction. But the county did add $49 million in new value, Taylor said.

"That was a little bit of a cushion for us," Thorpe said. "We're not going to get it from homes any more. We're going to get it from Wal-Marts. People make fun of Dollar Generals, but they pay taxes and we don't provide a lot of services to them. Every little Dollar General that goes up pays a tax. That's important right now because we're not getting it from homes."

Other points in the new budget include:

■ State mandates. These consume 35.3 percent of the county property tax levy.

Thorpe spoke of two such mandates of a medical nature, one being the Medicaid cost shift, where the county is catching a break.

As reported at the end of March, the state claimed Citrus County owed $1.1 million for past Medicaid billing. Citrus was among all 67 counties in disputing the alleged amounts owed. All counties have reviewed their billings with the state and now have certified amounts.

"We've just found out that our amount is $607,793," Taylor said. "That is the amount they have certified."

"We are at almost half of what we originally owed, which is great," Thorpe said.

On the second mandate, inmate medical expenses, the county is responsible for the expensive medical treatment of a Pine Ridge man who was shot and critically injured in February during an arrest by a deputy. This expense has increased.

"The current medical expenses are now up to about $796,000, which we're obligated to pay," Thorpe said. "We're trying to bring that number down to a little more than half."

The incident, Thorpe said, illustrated the importance of keeping a reserve fund.

■ Reserves. Revenue will include the Citrus Springs MSBU 2004 litigation fund, $3.3 million set aside for a challenge to the Municipal Service Benefit Unit (MSBU) fees in Citrus Springs that dates back to 2004 regarding assessments to build the Citrus Springs Community Center. The proposed budget will use the fund as a current financial resource, Thorpe said.

General fund reserves are funded at 7.02 percent or $4,721,455 and include a 1 percent or $650,000 reserve for contingency. The county's policy on fund balance established a range from 8 percent to 17 percent as unassigned fund balance. The policy defines a purpose of the reserve is for budget stabilization. The accumulated reserves are sufficient to stabilizing funding, Thorpe said.

■ Employee compensation. Thorpe said the merit program policy continues in suspension, meaning raises are not in the budget.

■ Florida retirement system. The proposed budget reflects an increase in the retirement rates in accordance with legislation adopted by the state, which requires a 3 percent contribution. It is the subject of litigation. The Florida Supreme Court will hear the state's appeal of the judge's ruling that struck down a requirement for public employees to contribute to their pensions. The outcome of the lawsuit, if the changes are not upheld, will have a significant financial impact, Thorpe said.

Two more meetings have been set for the budget. Both will start at 5:01 p.m., one on Sept. 13 and the final one on Sept. 25, during which the BOCC will take final public input and set the final millage rate. Whatever preliminary millage rate the BOCC sets on Wednesday, by Sept. 25 it can lower that rate but not raise it.

Jurors quizzed

Former Bolingbrook, Ill., police sergeant Drew Peterson arrives at the Will County Courthouse on May 8, 2009, in Joliet, Ill., for his arraignment on charges of first-degree murder in the 2004 death of his former wife Kathleen Savio. Jury selection began Monday in Peterson's long-delayed trial.

Navy radio might be crippling garage doors

HARTFORD, Conn. — A radio signal being transmitted out of a submarine base is likely behind reports of garage doors failing to open and close in southeastern Connecticut, the U.S. Navy said Monday.

The signal is part of the Enterprise Land Mobile Radio system, which is used by the military to coordinate responses with civil emergency workers, said Chris Zendan, a spokesman for submarine base in Groton.

The problem, first reported by The Day of New London, is that the same frequency is used at very low levels by the manufacturers of garage door openers. The signals from remote controls to open or close the doors are blocked by the signal from the base.

Sondra Tuchman, of Montville, told the newspaper she has to get out of her car, stand in front of the door and press the remote for the opener to work. She said an installation company told her she would have to pay about $300 to change her system to another frequency.

Anti-gay bill sparks outcry in Ukraine

KIEV, Ukraine — If a group of Ukrainian lawmakers succeeds in its mission, TV shows and movies sympathetically portraying homosexuals such as "Brokeback Mountain" will be banned. So will gay pride parades.

The recently introduced bill would impose prison terms of up to five years and unspecified fines for spreading "propaganda of homosexuality" — defined as positive public depiction of gays in public.

It has sparked an outcry from rights organizations in Ukraine and beyond, who condemn the bill as a throwback to Soviet times when homosexuality was a criminal offense. They also warn that harassing the gay community could lead to a spike in the HIV/AIDS epidemic by driving gays further underground.

No date has been set for a vote on the bill in parliament.

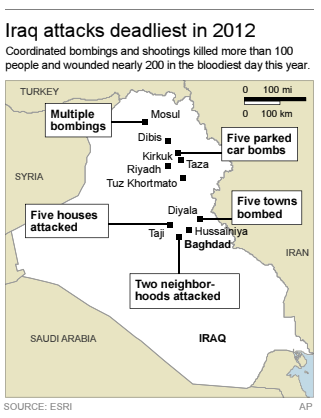
Over 100 killed in Iraq's deadliest day in years

Associated Press

BAGHDAD — A startling spasm of violence shook more than a dozen Iraqi cities Monday, killing over 100 people in coordinated bombings and shootings and wounding twice as many in the country's deadliest day in more than two years.

The attacks came only days after al-Qaida announced it would attempt a comeback with a new offensive against Iraq's weakened government.

With the U.S. military gone and the government mired in infighting, the Iraqi wing of al-Qaida has vowed to retake areas it once controlled and push the nation back toward civil war. Though there was no immediate claim of responsibility for Monday's attacks, nearly all of them struck in the capital and in northern Iraqi cities where al-Qaida can most easily regain a foothold.



"Terrorists are opening another gate of hell for us," said Kamiran Karim, a sweets seller in the northern city of Kirkuk, which was hit by five exploding cars throughout the morning. He suffered shrapnel wounds when one of the car bombs blew up about 200 yards from his cart.

So far this summer, militants linked to al-Qaida have claimed responsibility for a steady drumbeat of attacks designed to keep the government off-balance.

Associated Press

People inspect the aftermath of a car bomb attack Monday in Baghdad's Shiite enclave of Sadr City, Iraq. An onslaught of bombings and shootings killed scores of people across Iraq on Monday, in the nation's deadliest day so far this year. The attacks come days after the leader of al-Qaida in Iraq declared a new offensive seeking to re-assert its might in the security vacuum left by departing American troops.

Iraqi and U.S. officials insist al-Qaida is incapable of sowing the kind of widespread violence that would return Iraq to sectarian warfare. And indeed, Shiite militias so far have held back from returning fire. But Monday's attacks prove al-Qaida's continued ability to thwart security, undermine the government and create chaos in a fragile democracy.

Many of Monday's attacks were stunning in their scope and boldness. They bore the hallmarks of al-Qaida, happening within a few hours of each other and striking mainly at security forces, government officials and Shiite neighborhoods.

In one brazen assault, three carloads of gunmen pulled up at an Iraqi army base near the northeastern town of Udaim and opened fire, killing 13 soldiers before escaping, two senior police officials said.

In another, a car bomb exploded outside a government office in Sadr City, the poor, sprawling Shiite neighborhood in northeast Baghdad. Sixteen people died.

The deadliest attack, however, took place just north of Baghdad in the town of Taji, where a double bombing killed at least 41 people. The blasts were timed to hit as police rushed to help victims from a series of five explosions minutes earlier.

James E. Holmes, left, appears in Arapahoe County District Court, with defense attorney Tamara Brady, Monday in Centennial, Colo. Holmes is being held on suspicion of first-degree murder, and could face additional counts of aggravated assault and weapons violations stemming from a mass shooting on Friday, July 20, in a movie theater in Aurora, Colo., that killed 12 and injured dozens of others.

Shooting suspect has first day in court

Associated Press

CENTENNIAL, Colo. — His hair dyed a shocking comic-book shade of orange-red, James Holmes showed up in court for the first time, but didn't seem to be there at all.

The world's first look at the man accused of killing 12 moviegoers and injuring 58 others in a shooting rampage at a packed midnight screening of the new Batman film was that of a sleepy, seemingly inattentive suspect.

Holmes shuffled into court Monday in a maroon jailhouse jumpsuit with his hands cuffed. Unshaven and appearing dazed, Holmes sat virtually motionless, his eyes drooping as the judge advised him of the severity of the case. At one point, Holmes simply closed his eyes.

He never said a word.

Prosecutors said they didn't know if he was being medicated. His demeanor, however, angered victims' relatives. Tom Teves, whose son, Alex, was killed in the attack, watched Holmes intently throughout the roughly 12-minute hearing, sizing up the 24-year-old former doctoral student.

"I saw the coward in court today and Alex could have wiped the floor with him without breaking a sweat," Teves said. His son, a physical therapist, dove to protect his girlfriend during the shooting at a multiplex in nearby Aurora.

The court appearance gave millions the chance to scrutinize Holmes' every movement, every flutter of his heavy eyelids and form their opinions.

"It struck me that this is a person who's been through an emotional maelstrom and therefore might be totally wiped out emotionally," said Dr. Jeffrey Gardere, an assistant professor of behavioral medicine at Touro College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Gardere said there could be "a psychotic process going on and we see that being acted out there. Or there might be some sort of malingering going on. In other words, trying to make himself look worse than he actually is. Or maybe a combination of all of those things."

Holmes, who is being held in isolation, is refusing to cooperate, authorities said. They said it could take months to identify a motive.

At a news conference in San Diego, where Holmes' family lives, their lawyer, Lisa Damiani, refused to answer questions about him.

When asked if they stood by Holmes, Damiani said, "Yes they do. He's their son."

Holmes is expected to be formally charged next Monday. He is being held on suspicion of first-degree murder, and he could also face additional counts of aggravated assault and weapons violations. Holmes has been assigned a public defender.

For Holmes, Internet crucial in building arsenal

Associated Press

DENVER — In a world where Amazon can track your next book purchase and you must show ID to buy some allergy medicine, James Holmes spent months stockpiling thousands of bullets and head-to-toe ballistic gear without raising any red flags with authorities.

The suspect in the mass theater shooting availed himself of an unregulated online marketplace that allows consumers to acquire some of the tools of modern warfare as if they were pieces of a new wardrobe.

Chad Weinman runs TacticalGear.com. The site receives "thousands" of orders daily, Weinman said. On July 2, Holmes placed a $306 order with the site for a combat vest, magazine holders and a knife, paying extra for expedited two-day shipping to his Aurora apartment.

"There's a whole range of consumers who have an appetite for these products, and 99.9 percent of them are law-abiding citizens," Weinman said. But he said "it makes me sick" Holmes bought material from him. He added that he doesn't sell guns or ammunition and was "shocked" at the amount of bullets Holmes allegedly bought online. Authorities said all of Holmes' purchases were legal.

Syrian regime threatens chemical warfare

Associated Press

BEIRUT — Syria threatened Monday to unleash its chemical and biological weapons if the country faces a foreign attack, a desperate warning from a regime that has failed to crush a powerful and strengthening rebellion.

The statement — Syria's first-ever acknowledgement that the country possesses weapons of mass destruction — suggests President Bashar Assad will continue the fight to stay in power, regardless of the cost.

"It would be reprehensible if anybody in Syria is contemplating use of such weapons of mass destruction like chemical weapons," U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said during a trip to Belgrade, Serbia. "I sincerely hope the international community will keep an eye on this so that there will be no such things happening."

Syria is believed to have nerve agents as well as mustard gas, Scud missiles capable of delivering these lethal chemicals and a variety of advanced conventional arms, including anti-tank rockets and late-model portable anti-aircraft missiles.

During a televised news conference Monday, Foreign Ministry spokesman Jihad Makdissi stressed the weapons are secure and would only be used in the case of an external attack.

"No chemical or biological weapons will ever be used, and I repeat, will never be used, during the crisis in Syria no matter what the developments inside Syria," he said. "All of these types of weapons are in storage and under security and the direct supervision of the Syrian armed forces and will never be used unless Syria is exposed to external aggression."

The Syrian government later tried to back off from the announcement, sending journalists an amendment to the prepared statement read out by Makdissi. The amendment said "all of these types of weapons — IF ANY — are in storage and under security." It was an attempt to return to Damascus' position of neither confirming nor denying the existence of non-conventional weapons.

Israel and the U.S. are concerned Syria's stockpile of chemical weapons could fall into the hands of Islamist militants should the regime collapse.

Yankees acquire OF Ichiro Suzuki from Mariners

SEATTLE — Ichiro Suzuki is headed to a new team and, after all these years, maybe a shot at playing in the World Series.

Ichiro Suzuki

The New York Yankees acquired the star outfielder from the Seattle Mariners in a trade Monday for two young pitchers.

The Yankees, with the best record in the majors, also got cash in the deal that sent 25-year-old righties D.J. Mitchell and Danny Farquhar to the last-place Mariners. The trade was announced a few hours before the Yankees played at Seattle.

The 38-year-old Suzuki had spent his whole big-league career with Seattle. The 10-time All-Star and 10-time Gold Glove winner is batting .261 with four home runs, 28 RBIs and 15 stolen bases this year.

Suzuki is a career .322 hitter, a former AL MVP and holds the record for most hits in a season. He had batted over .300 in every season until dipping last year.

The only thing missing on Suzuki's resume is an appearance in the World Series, and he may get a chance with the Yankees. Suzuki was the AL MVP and rookie of the year in 2001 after a stellar career in Japan, and the Mariners reached the AL championship series that season before losing to the Yankees. Seattle has not been back to the playoffs since.

The Yankees made the trade a few days after learning that speedy outfielder Brett Gardner would likely miss the rest of the season because of an elbow problem.

The Yankees certainly hope this trade with the Mariners works out better than the last big deal between the teams. New York sent prized young catcher Jesus Montero to Seattle before the season for All-Star pitcher Michael Pineda, who was later injured and is out for the year.

Mitchell made his major-league debut this season and pitched four games for the Yankees. Farquhar made his big-league debut last year with Toronto and was claimed last month on waivers by the Yankees from Oakland.

Miami Dolphins' 'Ochocinco' changes name to Johnson

MIAMI — Chad Ochocinco is officially no more. The Miami Dolphins wide receiver has changed his name back to the original Chad Johnson.

Johnson legally changed his name Monday in an appearance at the Broward County Courthouse. The change he announced via Twitter quickly follows his July Fourth marriage to Evelyn Lozada of TV's "Basketball Wives" fame.

Chad Johnson

Johnson was known as "Ochocinco" for the past four seasons. The name was a playful reference to the No. 85 he wore on his jersey.

Johnson was a six-time Pro Bowl receiver for the Cincinnati Bengals. He signed a one-year deal with the Dolphins earlier this year after being cut by the New England Patriots.

What Penn State's vacated wins mean

Associated Press

One of the penalties the NCAA levied against Penn State was forcing the school to vacate all its wins from 1998, the year coach Joe Paterno and other top university officials became aware of an accusation that assistant coach Jerry Sandusky had showered with a young boy, through 2011.

Penn State lost 112 wins, and Paterno's major college football record 409 victories were reduced to 298, knocking him down the list.

In question-and-answer form, here is a look at what it means for victories to be "vacated."

Q: Does vacating a win mean the opponent won?

A: No. According to the NCAA, opposing teams are not granted wins, as in a forfeit. The penalized school simply can't claim credit for that victory. For instance, in 2009, Penn State opened the season with a 31-7 rout of Akron. Penn State will lose credit for that win, but Akron cannot claim it as a victory.

Q: What about individual player records? Does it have implications?

Ray takes second win of year

Special to the Chronicle

Karlin Ray's rookie season in the Citrus County Speedway Pure Stock division has been up and down. While the young driver has shown he has the speed to contend, he has lacked the consistency to run up front. Combine that with some midseason motor problems, and any other rookie may have let that shake their confidence.

Saturday night, Ray returned with his new power plant for the first time since his first feature win in May. After coming away victorious in his heat race, Ray (72) benefited from the two-row feature inversion, starting in the third position for the 20-lap Pure Stock feature.

Sheri Makula (27) jumped into the early lead from her pole position and looked to run away from the field. Ray wasted no time going to work on the leader, making the pass to take over the top spot by lap 4. Behind the two leaders, the battle for third was heated. Chris Ickes (20) held that position until a host of cars moved by in a few short laps. James Johnston (45) settled into the third position, but soon faced pressure from frontrunner Eugene Malverty (123). Malverty made contact with the rear of Johnston's car entering turn 1, sending Johnston into the wall, and the caution flying at lap 18. Malverty had been warned about his aggressive driving tactics earlier in the evening, and was disqualified for his part in the accident.

Johnston returned to the third position for the restart with only two laps remaining. Up front, Ray would have to survive a green-white-checkered finish to take the win on the restart. Ray got a good restart and pulled away immediately. Behind him, sparks were flying again. This time is was the younger Malverty, Nicholas (17), who made contact with Johnston. Johnston again saw his car sent into the turn 1 wall after being hit from behind by Malverty. Ray took an impressive victory, and picked up his second feature win of the 2012 season. Makula came home an unchallenged second, with Randy Spicer (22) crossing the line in third. After the dust settled, Nicholas Malverty was also disqualified for rough driving, like his father earlier in the race. Track officials awarded the third position to Johnston instead of Spicer. New York Jets quarterback Tim Tebow sits at his locker May 10 at the team's football training facility in Florham Park, N.J. Tebowmania has moved from the Rocky Mountains to the Meadowlands.

Tebowmania lives on in N.Y.

Peyton Manning has changed his ride, from a Colt to a Bronco.

Tebowmania has moved from the Rocky Mountains to the Meadowlands.

Randy Moss is back. So is Jeff Fisher.

Al Davis is gone.

As NFL training camps open from Mankato to Metairie, from Flagstaff to Flowery Branch, the spotlight will shine most brightly on Denver, and a certain No. 18 at quarterback.

The indestructible Manning proved very human last year, missing the entire season after neck surgery. Not only did his consecutive starts string end at 227 — merely every game he's been a pro — but the Colts collapsed without the four-time MVP.

Soon after, as Indianapolis was preparing to take Andrew Luck at the top of the draft to succeed Manning, the Peyton Tour of America began. Following layovers in Miami, Nashville and Phoenix, he landed with the Broncos.

But is he the same player at age 36 and coming off the first major injury of his sensational career?

That's the juiciest topic as the sweatboxes that are training camps get under way.

"We're going full speed ahead. We're being aggressive with everything we're doing," Broncos offensive coordinator Mike McCoy said. "He's fine. We have no concerns right now. We're not worrying about it. We're moving forward."

Actually, the Broncos began moving forward immediately after signing Manning to a five-year, $96 million deal in March. They sent Tim Tebow, one of the heroes of their AFC West title run and first-round playoff victory over Pittsburgh, to the Jets to make sure there was no clutter — and no controversy — in Denver.

If Manning is vintage Manning, there will be no questioning of that move

Miami Marlins starting pitcher Josh Johnson throws against the Atlanta Braves in the first inning Monday in Miami.

Marlins down Braves 2-1

Associated Press

MIAMI — Josh Johnson pitched six scoreless innings and Emilio Bonifacio homered to lead the Florida Marlins to a 2-1 win over the Atlanta Braves on Monday night.

Four relievers combined to pitch the final three innings, including Steve Cishek, who recorded his third save in six chances to help the Marlins snap a five-game losing streak.

Braves manager Fredi Gonzalez was ejected in the ninth for arguing with first base umpire Laz Diaz after Diaz called Jason Heyward out to complete a double play. Chipper Jones followed with an RBI single to pull the Braves within 2-1 before Scott Cousins made a sliding catch in center field to rob Freddie Freeman of a hit and end the game.

Johnson (6-7) retired the first 14 batters he faced before Brian McCann singled to right in the fifth. Johnson left as a precaution after the sixth because of some skin irritation on the middle finger of his throwing hand. He is not expected to miss his next start.

Johnson struck out nine, allowed one hit and did not walk a batter. He threw 53 of his 87 pitches for strikes.

Carlos Lee had an RBI single in the first inning and Bonifacio, starting in place of Omar Infante at second base, led off the second with his first homer since Sept. 25, 2011 at Milwaukee.

Prior to the start of the game, Miami traded Infante and Anibal Sanchez to the Detroit Tigers for three prospects, including former first-round draft pick Jacob Turner.

Braves starter Mike Minor (5-7) allowed two runs and six hits in seven innings.

Miami came into the season with high expectations after landing coveted free agents Jose Reyes, Mark Buehrle and Heath Bell, but they came in 11 1/2 games out of first place in the NL East and eight games behind the wild card-leading Braves.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Indians 3, Orioles 1

CLEVELAND — Justin Masterson, backed by three double plays, pitched 7 1-3 strong innings to help the Cleveland Indians beat the Baltimore Orioles 3-1 on Monday night and avoided a four-game sweep.

Masterson (7-8) struck out six as Cleveland broke a four-game losing streak. The right-hander gave up only one run and seven hits, improving to 5-2 over his last eight starts.

Chris Perez pitched the ninth for his 27th save in 29 chances.

Shin-Soo Choo put the Indians ahead 2-0 with a two-run homer in the third inning off Tommy Hunter (4-5).

The Orioles twice ran themselves out of innings with poor decisions on the basepaths as they had a five-game winning streak stopped.

White Sox 7, Twins 4

CHICAGO— Adam Dunn hit his majors-leading 29th homer, Gavin Floyd went six innings after coming off the disabled list and the Chicago White Sox ended a five-game losing streak with a 7-4 win over the Minnesota Twins on Monday night.

Paul Konerko and Alex Rios also homered off Twins left-hander Francisco Liriano to help the White Sox win in their first home game following a 3-7 road trip after the All-Star break that knocked them out of first place in the AL Central.

Floyd (8-8) wasn't sharp but benefited from four double plays. He walked six, gave up six hits and three runs — two earned.

Liriano (3-10) allowed seven hits — including the three homers — and a season-high seven runs in 2 2-3 innings.

Rangers 9, Red Sox 1

ARLINGTON, Texas — Scott Feldman, starting after Roy Oswalt was scratched with back tightness, threw seven strong innings to lead the Texas Rangers to a 9-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox on Monday night.

Feldman (4-6) won his fourth straight decision and pitched his longest outing since throwing eight innings on June 2, 2010. He gave up one earned run and seven hits with five strikeouts.

Just before the game started, it was learned Texas starting pitcher Colby Lewis will miss the rest of the season because of a torn flexor tendon in his right elbow that will require surgery. Martin Perez, who was called up on Monday after Lewis was placed on the disabled list, will start Tuesday's game against the Red Sox, but he would have been available out of the bullpen if Feldman had faltered early.

In three games against Boston this season, the Rangers have outscored the Red Sox 33-7.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Cubs 2, Pirates 0

PITTSBURGH — Jeff Samardzija gave up one hit over eight innings and Alfonso Soriano hit two run-scoring doubles as the Chicago Cubs cooled off the Pittsburgh Pirates 2-0 on Monday night.

Samardzija allowed only a fourth-inning infield single to Andrew McCutchen, the major leagues' leading hitter with a .373 average. The ball ricocheted off Samardzija.

Soriano provided two big one-out hits, scoring Starlin Castro both times, as Chicago ended its 28-inning scoreless streak that stretched to the second inning of last Friday's game at St. Louis. The Cardinal completed the sweep with two shutouts.

Samardzija (7-8) struck out five and walked one in ending Pittsburgh's five-game winning streak. He was pulled after throwing 99 pitches.

Nationals 8, Mets 2, 10 innings

NEW YORK — Bryce Harper homered his first time up in New York, then hit a tiebreaking single to key a six-run burst in the 10th inning Monday night that sent the Washington Nationals over the Mets 8-2.

Shortstop Ruben Tejada's error on a potential double-play ball set up the big 10th. Ryan Zimmerman hit a three-run double and Michael Morse added a two-run homer as the NL East-leading Nationals broke away.

The Mets lost for the 10th time in 11 games. A day earlier, they gave up five runs in the 12th inning and fell to the Los Angeles Dodgers 8-3.

It was 2-all on a rainy evening when Roger Bernadina opened the Washington 10th with a bloop single. Sandy Leon followed with an easy comebacker to Tim Byrdak (2-2), but Tejada dropped the throw and also appeared to get spiked by a sliding Bernadina.

Phillies 7, Brewers 6

PHILADELPHIA — Ty Wigginton hit a sacrifice fly to cap a four-run rally in the ninth inning against Francisco Rodriguez and lift the Philadelphia Phillies to a 7-6 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers on Monday night.

The Phillies were 0-42 when trailing after eight innings before coming back against Rodriguez, who replaced John Axford as the closer last week.

With one out, Jimmy Rollins walked, Juan Pierre singled and Chase Utley walked to load the bases. Ryan Howard ripped an 0-2 pitch up the middle to drive in a pair and cut it to 6-5. Carlos Ruiz followed with a line-drive hit to left-center to tie it at 6. Hunter Pence walked to load the bases again.

RAY

Kathy Ray, and it certainly seems that the apple did not fall far from the tree.

Sportsman saw Mark Peterson (73) and Patrick Thomas (25) battle side by side for the lead in the first five laps. Thomas took the high side, but couldn't quite clear Peterson to take the lead. As the leaders entered turn 3 on lap 5, Peterson got sideways inside of Thomas entering the corner. Peterson went go for a spin, and was sent to the rear for the restart. The race went back green with Thomas leading, Mike Bell (17) second and George Gorham Jr. (10) third. Lap 20 saw the next caution for contact between Bell and Gorham, which sent Bell's bright blue racer for a spin. Gorham ultimately took blame for the incident, giving Bell his spot back, and sending himself to the rear. Thomas drove away on the restart, and took his first feature win of 2012 at Citrus County Speedway. Bell came home in second, with Travis Hoefler having his best run of the year in third. Bell and Andy Nichols (66) were the heat race winners.

Twelve Open Wheel Modifieds spent the whole night chasing Josh Todd (289) in their 40-lap feature. Todd rocketed to the lead early from his outside front row starting position, and never looked back. Behind him, fourth place starter and defending track champion Doug Miller (53) battled hard on the outside for the first few laps of the event. Eventually Miller moved to the second spot and tried to run down the leader. A late-race caution bunched up the field, giving Miller and third runner Herb Neumann Jr. (01) a shot at the win. Todd left no doubt on the restart, and went on to take his first feature win of 2012 at Citrus. Miller came home a solo second, with Neumann in third. Miller and L.J. Grimm were heat race winners.

Special to the Chronicle

Karlin Ray (72) takes the checkered flag in the Pure Stock feature.

The Street Stock feature was the most competitive race of the night. Dora Thorne (48) lead them to green, but James Peters (5) made quick work of the early leader, moving to the top of the field. Peters brought Jason Garver (12) with him to the second position. Behind them, the battle for third raged between Bubba Martone (98) and Curtis Flanagan (33). Flanagan lost the motor in his usual No. 3 machine in the heat race, and jumped in Bill Ryan's No. 33 for the feature event. Flanagan made his way to third, and then by Garver for second. Flanagan then set his sights on the leader Peters, and went to work. Lap 14 saw the only caution of the event for debris on the track, which reset the field for the green. Peters lead, with Flanagan second and Garver third. Once back to green, Flanagan made his move on Peters and took over the top spot with only two laps left. His lead was short-lived, as his unfamiliar machine jumped sideways on the entry to turn 3. This allowed Peters to duck back underneath and run side by side for the lead. The top 4 cars ran side by side, nose to tail, for the final two laps, with Peters coming out on top of the firestorm. Garver slipped by Flanagan for second at the checkers. Kenny May (10) was heat race winner, but suffered a blown engine helping dry the track after a rain shower at intermission.

Jeff Eberly took the victory in a rain-shortened Mini Stock feature. Eberly moved to the lead early before the rain cut the Mini Stock feature short after 17 laps. Jeremy Sharrone came home second, with Shawn Jenkins (43) coming home third. Sharrone and Tim Scalise (24) were heat race winners.

Mike Endee (26) survived five cautions to take the victory in the Outlaw Modifed Mini feature. Following him to the line were Doug Hopper (15) in second and Cody Allen (6) in third.

This Saturday night, the Citrus County Speedway will be back in action with a full race card headlined by the Super Late Models. Joining them will be the Modified Mini Stock, Street Stock, Pure Stock, Figure 8s, Hornets and the Southeast Champ Kart Series. Gates open at 4 p.m., and racing starts at 6:30 p.m. sharp.

RECORDS

A: The NCAA specifically said that Paterno's career record will reflect the vacated records. As for players, the NCAA has said nothing, and no players were found at any fault in the case. When the NCAA has punished specific players, it has vacated individual records, and the NCAA bylaws provide for the removal of individual records and performances. No such actions have been taken against in this case.

Q: Are there financial implications? Do fans get their money back for games that, technically, never were? Do coaches lose pay?

A: Probably not. The NCAA has fined Penn State $60 million, roughly equivalent to a year of revenue from the football program. The Big Ten has said Penn State won't get its cut of bowl revenue for four years, a loss of about $13 million more on top of that. Nothing was said about refunds to fans or coaches returning their salaries from vacated games. Such actions have not been part of previous situations in which schools were forced to vacate wins.

Q: Who is now the winningest coach in major college football?

A: The record for most major college victories has reverted to Bobby Bowden, whose record at Florida State, West Virginia and Samford is officially 377-129-4. He had won 389 games, but 12 of them were — you guessed it — vacated in 2010 following an academic cheating scandal.

Q: When was the last "official" win for Penn State, now that all its wins since 1998 have been vacated?

A: The Nittany Lions lost the last two games of the 1997 season, so Penn State's last official win now was Nov. 22, 1997, when it beat Wisconsin 35-10. The quarterback that season was Mike McQueary, who later served as a graduate assistant and encountered Sandusky assaulting a boy in the shower at the football facility in 2001. The incident was the second time Penn State officials, including Paterno, had been informed of Sandusky's questionable dealings with boys and didn't do anything to stop him, according to the Freeh Report.

NCAA won't be nearly enough to buy back Penn State's self-respect.

Sure, the punishment was extreme. It guts a proud program, and makes Saturdays in the fall a lot less pleasurable for alumni and the millions of fans who bought into the facade Joe Paterno created and believed the football factory wasn't just about winning but "Success With Honor."

But there's only so much Mark Emmert — the suddenly empowered NCAA president — can do. There's only so much anybody can do.

He can't turn back the clock to a time before a sexual predator, who Paterno and others did nothing to stop, roamed the campus and raped young boys in the locker room. He can't somehow wave a magic wand and declare that all is well again in State College.

And he can't even begin to try to repair the damage that was done to so many lives because grown men were more interested in protecting themselves and their university than children who needed their protection.

That the punishment was accepted so meekly and quickly by Penn State was an indication of how desperate the university is to find some way — any way — to begin crawling out from the morass created by a monster and his eager enablers. There is no moving forward without falling on the sword, and the people who replaced the Paterno lemmings at Penn State seem to have figured that out.

The release of the Freeh report didn't just cement public opinion against the university; it sparked far greater outrage. Ultimately, it gave Emmert the backing he needed in the byzantine NCAA — where power is but a fleeting thought — to suspend the usual punishment process and level the draconian sanctions that do everything but shut down the program Paterno ran with impunity.

Let Penn State supporters howl all they want at the prospect of years of watching their team get pummeled every time it takes the field. What they forget when they say it is unfair to punish the program for the sins of Sandusky and others, is that the college community that will pay the price is the same one that for many years enjoyed all the benefits of a big-time college team.

Even the NCAA, which long ago abdicated control of college football to the television networks and big conferences, couldn't mess this one up. The outcry was too strong and, for most people, no punishment could be too great. I found that out last week when I urged Emmert to hit Penn State with at least six years of sanctions, only to be innundated with emails from people who claimed even that was not nearly enough.

Argue about the semantics of the so-called death penalty if you want, but this punishment is just as bad. The money is nothing — even with the additional loss of $13 million a year in bowl revenue-sharing from the Big 10 — because the coffers at Penn State are overflowing. Any shortage will surely be remedied by wealthy alumni. But the combination of a four-year bowl ban, scholarship losses and the waiver of transfer rules means the football team will find it awfully hard to win more than a few games a year with players who previously never would have gotten offers to play for the Nittany Lions.

west of New Jersey. Look for Manning to get more work than usual this summer, the most important preseason of his career.

Don't look for the same from Tebow, no matter how loudly his legion of followers protests that he should be on the field ahead of incumbent Mark Sanchez. The Jets are adamant that Tebow is a backup, an option for the wildcat, not to mention the protector on punts.

Nothing more.

That won't stop a mass of media from descending on the central New York college town of Cortland to chronicle the QB competition and controversy the Jets say doesn't and won't exist.

"I think we were the only people who never had a problem with it, it seemed like," coach Rex Ryan said. "We look at it as we're adding a good football player, which we did. Is he behind Sanchez on the depth chart? Yes. Just like every team has a guy behind their starting quarterback, but he brings so much more to the table."

Including Tebowmania, which won't subside even if Tebow messes up the many chances he gets to play in the preseason.

No surprise

The Olympic Stadium is visible beyond an installation of artificial wildflowers in the Olympic Park in London. The opening ceremonies of the Olympic Games are scheduled for Friday, July 27.

Olympic Games opener will be spectacular, but not secret

Associated Press

LONDON — The London Olympics opening ceremony will be a grand spectacle — but will it be a surprise?

In a word, no.

Director Danny Boyle wants the details to stay secret and games chief Sebastian Coe has pleaded for insiders to stop leaking details of the extravaganza. But in the age of camera phones and social media, with 10,000 performers in the ceremony, thousands of Olympic security and staff and more than 10,000 journalists already at the Olympic Park, not much can be kept out of the public domain.

"Part of the modern world means you can't really do that," Boyle acknowledged about keeping secrets as he showed journalists a mock-up of the set for the opening scene of the ceremony, weeks before the event.

Boyle has revealed only selected details about the show, But since the performers started rehearsals in June at the Olympic Stadium — and an army of journalists started arriving to cover the July 27 to Aug. 12 games — a trickle of details about the $42 million opening ceremony has become a torrent.

The leaks became too much for Coe, who tweeted: "Share the frustration of volunteer performers and the public at Opening Ceremony being unofficially trailed. Let's #savethesurprise."

His imploring hashtag fell on deaf ears. Still more information emerged.

The ceremony's theme is "Isles of Wonder," inspired by William Shakespeare's play about shipwrecked castaways, "The Tempest." An actor is due to recite Caliban's speech, the one that runs "Be not afeard; the isle is full of noises." Mark Rylance, who had been due to perform the lines, pulled out after the death of his stepdaughter. Kenneth Branagh is rumored to be his replacement.

Despite Boyle's enchanted-island inspiration, few expect the man who depicted Scottish heroin addicts in "Trainspotting" and Indian slum dwellers in "Slumdog Millionaire" to deliver a sanitized image of Britain.

Boyle has said the show is "trying to show the best of us, but we're also trying to show many, many different things about our country."

The ceremony will open at 9 p.m. with the sound of a 27-ton bell — the largest harmonically tuned bell in the world — forged at London's 442-year-old Whitechapel Bell Foundry, which made London's Big Ben and Philadelphia's Liberty Bell.

A prerecorded segment has been filmed inside Buckingham Palace, reportedly involving Queen Elizabeth II and Daniel Craig as secret agent James Bond. If rumor is to be believed, a stuntman dressed as 007 will parachute into the stadium.

The opening sequence will evoke a pastoral idyll, the "green and pleasant land" described in William Blake's poem 'Jerusalem," which has been set to music and is regarded as England's unofficial national anthem. There's a meadow, livestock, a farmer plowing his field, a cricket match — and, in a nod to Britain's plethora of rural summer music festivals, a mosh pit.

Boyle hasn't disclosed what comes next, but has said the ceremony will depict Britain's past, present and future for a global television audience estimated at 1 billion.

Aerial photographs of the set for the second section of the show depict dark buildings and smokestacks with the River Thames running through it. This is the other side of the country described in 'Jerusalem" — a land of "dark satanic mills."

A third act will tackle the regeneration of east London, where the Olympics are taking place, as parkland and a creative heartland, home to many artists, designers and Internet startups.

There will be vignettes drawing on British history — Boyle's people-power version of it — including Depression-era jobless protesters and nurses performing a tribute to the National Health Service, founded in 1948 to provide free health care for all Britons and now a much fought-over national institution.

Music heard coming from the stadium in recent days ranges from "Jerusalem" — of course — to songs by The Beatles, The Who, the Sex Pistols, and Vangelis' theme from "Chariots of Fire."

There are also songs by newer acts, including Dizzee Rascal and Tinie Tempah, two homegrown stars forged in the gritty London environment that Boyle is celebrating.

The final act will be former Beatle Paul McCartney — due to lead the audience in a sing-along of "Hey Jude," with thousands of voices urging "take a sad song and make it better."

Mariah Carey joins 'American Idol'

Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Mariah Carey will join "American Idol" as a judge next season, Fox announced Monday, bringing her star power to the show that remains a ratings leader but has seen its viewership and pop culture status diminish.

"I am so excited to be joining 'Idol,'" said Carey, addressing the Television Critics Association via Fox entertainment chief Kevin Reilly's cellphone, which he put on speakerphone for the hotel ballroom meeting.

She couldn't be on hand with the group because "this kind of all just happened really quickly," Carey said in her brief remarks. "I can't wait to get started in the fall ... and I will see you in January."

Associated Press

Singer, songwriter, record producer and actress, Mariah Carey will be a new judge on FOX's "American Idol" TV show.

The show, which saw judges Steven Tyler and Jennifer Lopez exit at the end of last season, will be back on the air for season 12 in January.

Reilly called Carey "the biggest recording artist that any of these (talent) shows has ever had," adding that she was the "artist that many of these contestants have tried to emulate, have tried some of the songs, have tried to hit the notes."

Playing the drama up, Reilly placed a call to Carey and put her on speaker.

"Hi Mariah. How are you? It's Kevin," he said. "We do have the deal, don't we?"

"Yes!" Carey replied.

Reilly said he was "thrilled" to confirm reports that Carey was being courted by Fox and said the deal was freshly signed within the last few hours. According to reports, the Grammy-winning pop star will earn at least $15 million a season.

Today's Highlight:

On July 24, 1862, Martin Van Buren, the eighth president of the United States, and the first to have been born a U.S. citizen, died at age 79 in Kinderhook, N.Y., the town where he was born in 1782.

On this date:

In 1847, Mormon leader Brigham Young and his followers arrived in the Great Salt Lake Valley in present-day Utah.

In 1911, Yale University history professor Hiram Bingham III found the "Lost City of the Incas," Machu Picchu, in Peru.

In 1923, the Treaty of Lausanne, which settled the boundaries of modern Turkey, was concluded in Switzerland.

In 1937, the state of Alabama dropped charges against four of the nine young black men accused of raping two white women in the "Scottsboro Case."

In 1959, during a visit to Moscow, Vice President Richard Nixon engaged in his famous "Kitchen Debate" with Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev.

In 1974, the Supreme Court unanimously ruled that President Richard Nixon had to turn over subpoenaed White House tape recordings to the Watergate special prosecutor.

In 1983, a two-run homer by George Brett of the Kansas City Royals was disallowed after New York Yankees manager Billy Martin pointed out there was too much pine tar on Brett's bat. However, American League president Lee MacPhail reinstated the home run. (The game was completed Aug. 18, 1983 with the Royals beating the Yankees, 5-4.)

Ten years ago: Nine coal miners became trapped in a flooded tunnel of the Quecreek Mine in western Pennsylvania; the story ended happily 77 hours later with the rescue of all nine.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush, speaking at Charleston Air Force Base in South Carolina, sought to justify the Iraq war by citing intelligence reports he said showed a link between al-Qaida's operation in Iraq and the terror group that attacked the United States on Sept. 11, 2001.

The U.S. minimum wage rose 70 cents to $5.85 an hour, the first increase in a decade.

One year ago: Thousands of protesters angry about Spain's brutal economic woes once again filled Madrid's downtown Sol square after many had spent weeks marching hundreds of miles from far-flung cities across the country.

Today's Birthdays: Comedian Ruth Buzzi is 76. Comedian Gallagher is 66. Actress Lynda Carter is 61.

Thought for Today: "It is easier to do a job right than to explain why you didn't." — Attributed to President Martin Van Buren (1782-1862).

Members of the Foster family work together July 5 to milk one of their goats on their farm near Wicksburg, Ala. Should all U.S. children get tested for high cholesterol? A dispute among experts may leave parents wondering whether to have their kids screened. In a health-conscious world, people are often looking for alternatives and goat meat and goat products are getting more attention.

Doctors at odds over kids' cholesterol test guidance; consulting fees at issue

LINDSEY TANNER
AP Medical Writer

— CHICAGO Should all U.S. children get tested for high cholesterol? Doctors are still debating that question months after a government-appointed panel recommended widespread screening that would lead to prescribing medicine for some kids.

Fresh criticism was published online Monday in Pediatrics by researchers at one university who say the guidelines are too aggressive and were influenced by panel members' financial ties to drugmakers.

Eight of the 14 guidelines panel members reported industry ties and disclosed that when their advice was published in December. They contend in a rebuttal article in Pediatrics that company payments covered costs of evaluating whether the drugs are safe and effective but did not influence the recommendations.

It also is not uncommon for experts in their fields to have received some consulting fees from drug companies.

Even so, the ties pose a conflict of interest that "undermines the credibility of both the guidelines and the process through which they were produced," says the commentary by researchers at the University of California at San Francisco. The authors are Dr. Thomas Newman, a researcher and former member of a Food and Drug Administration pediatrics advisory committee, and two heart disease researchers, Drs. Mark Pletcher and Stephen Hulley.

Pletcher has received research funding from drug and device makers; the other authors said they had no relevant industry ties.

Other criticism was published earlier this year in the Journal of the American Medical Association. That critique raised concerns about putting children on cholesterol drugs called statins, noting the medicine has been linked with a rare muscle-damaging condition in adults. Those authors were heart specialist Bruce Psaty and pediatrician Frederick Rivara, both of the University of Washington in Seattle.

JAMA included additional criticism from a dissenting member of the panel that produced the kids' cholesterol guidelines, Dr. Matthew Gillman of Harvard Medical School. He recommends more narrow screening based on family history of cholesterol problems.

The guidelines are endorsed by the Academy of Pediatrics, which publishes the journal that carried the critical commentary Monday. The panel recommends that all U.S. children should get blood tests for high

Can diesel exhaust cause cancer?

We have all seen the large diesel trucks roaring off from a stop sign or a red light with dark clouds of exhaust spewing up into the air.

I am certain that none of us think that inhaling those fumes would be good for us. But have we really considered how dangerous to our health they could be?

This thought process has been jumped started by a recent report of possible dangers associated with diesel exhaust. A group of experts from the World Health Organization (WHO) has now classified diesel engine

Kinder, gentler chemo

I recently saw an 82-year-old patient. She noticed a lump inside her mouth on the upper part called the hard palate.

It was increasing in size, so a biopsy was done. It showed mantle cell non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

She had a bone marrow biopsy as an outpatient in my office. Lymphoma involved the bone marrow too. A PET/CT scan showed enlarged lymph nodes in her chest, abdomen and pelvis. Her lymphoma is stage IV.

This sounds like a very bad prognosis, but lymphoma responds very well to chemotherapy.

In many instances, they have seen lots of other physicians, taken lots of pills and they come to the conclusion that sinuses could be causing their headaches.

In many instances, they are right. It is the sinuses, but also something that is overlooked is an allergic headache. Just like a sinus headache, an allergy headache can cause nasal pain or sinus pressure.

Some experts think allergy headache is even more common and frequent than sinus headache. Headaches in the forehead area accompanied by pain in the eye or temple often signal an allergic nasal condition and headache.

Other conditions besides sinus and allergy can include deviation of the septum, which is a twisting of the nasal bone that separates the left and right side such that it stops normal air flow, and also generalized swelling of the nasal lining and its structures can also cause headaches.

Migraine headache is also confused with allergic nasal headaches. The confusion lies in

Beware online drugs

Eighty percent of Viagra (sildenafil) purchased from websites was found to be counterfeit, according to a study by Dr. Irwin Goldstein, professor of surgery at the University of California at San Diego.

Dr. Udaya Kumar
UROLOGY TODAY

His study was presented at the American Urological Association's annual meeting in Atlanta. Goldstein's survey, quoted in the June issue of Urology Times, looked at Viagra bought from 22 websites over a four-day period in March 2011. It found costs varied from as little as $3.28 to $33.

None of the websites required a prescription for the drug. The postal origin of the pills included Hong Kong, the U.S., Canada, China and India.

While Viagra is still under patent and there is no generic equivalent for erectile dysfunction, it is advertised as such all over the Internet, according to Dr. Goldstein.

Dr. Goldstein found that many of these fake pills were packaged and made to look exactly like the real ones, contained harmful and sometimes even life-threatening agents such as boric acid, paint, insecticides, gypsum and rat poison!

The drugs had been compounded in unhygienic conditions,

Massage as medicine for osteoarthritis

The Wall Street Journal published an article in March of this year, reporting on the surge of scientific interest in massage, because of a wide variety of tangible health benefits.

Randi N. West
RUB IT IN

This was of particular interest to me, as I have often written here, in my quarterly columns in the Chronicle, on the supporting research for the benefits of massage therapy.

I have quoted research data supplied by sources as far reaching as by the Harvard Medical School, the American Medical Association and from The Science Sports Massage and Osteopathic Program at the University of Westminster, London, England, to name a few.

The article in the Journal further validates that many scientists and research institutions understand the value of massage, and that the American public is flocking to this type of treatment for both the health benefits, as well as those looking for complementary and alternative medical treatments for a variety of ailments and conditions.

Statistics from the National Institute of Health report 8.3 percent of adults used massage in 2007 (the most recent data currently available), and massage was estimated to be an $11 billion dollar industry in the U.S. for 2011, according to the American Massage Therapy Association, a nonprofit professional trade organization of which I am proudly a member.

The Department of Health and Human Services estimates nearly 25 percent of adults in the United States will have doctor diagnosed arthritis by the year 2030. Not lost on many physicians who treat arthritics is that massage is a valued complementary treatment; one tool in the toolbox for them to use for relief of arthritis symptoms.

According to a Consumer Reports Health.org chart published in June 2011, respondents to a survey, analyzed by the National Medicines Comprehensive Database, an independent research group, reported that six in 10 individuals with arthritis of the neck responded that massage helped alleviate some of the pain and stiffness associated with arthritis.

In addition, the chart noted 28 percent of those respondents said their doctors had recommended massage.

Massage is increasingly recommended as a complementary treatment for arthritis, and it has been widely acknowledged to have one of the best overall success rates for arthritics because many of the other treatments have concerning side effects that massage does not have.

A study published in the 2006 Archives of Internal Medicine, showed improvement for those suffering with osteoarthritis of the knee.

According to author of the study, Adam Perlman, executive director of Duke Integrative Medicine in North Carolina, "if it works it should become part of the conventionally recommended intervention."

A number of studies published in 2011 Annuals of Internal Medicine looked at people with chronic back pain and the researchers found that a regular course of massage reduced pain, and the benefits lasted at least six months.

In a 2010 study published in the International Journal of Neuroscience, Dr. Tiffany Fields showed that stimulating pressure receptors or nerves under the skin that convey pain, reduced signals to the brain, leading to reduced symptoms for those suffering from arthritis.

Dr. Fields was also the author of a study in 2006 that conducted clinical trials for adults with arthritis pain of the wrist and hand, and found the patients receiving a regular course of massage showed greater grip strength, less pain and lower levels of anxiety.

In addition, in February 2012, Massage Magazine published a survey conducted by the American Hospital Association and Samueli Institute a nonprofit research organization that investigates healing oriented practices. This survey found 42 percent of 714 responding hospitals indicate they offer massage as a complementary therapy, up from 37 percent in 2007.

Arthritis Today, the official publication of the Arthritis Foundation, suggests consulting a rheumatologist or primary care physician first to insure that massage is safe for your particular type of arthritis. The foundation suggests that this treatment can be a complement to other doctor prescribed arthritic treatment, whether the goal is to relieve anxiety and stress caused by arthritis, or to be used when seeking relief from pain and stiffness in one particular region of the body.

FDA tracks reports of adverse drug reactions

Q: How many adverse drug reactions are reported to the FDA?

Richard Hoffmann
ASK THE PHARMACIST

A: According to the Institute for Safe Medication Practices, which monitors adverse drug events (ADEs), the FDA received 179,855 reports of serious or fatal adverse drug reactions in 2011.

However, there is a general consensus in the drug world that only about 1 percent of serious events ever get reported to the FDA, so this number is probably very conservative.

The top 10 drugs with the largest number of reports sent directly to the FDA by health care practitioners and consumers in 2011, in order of frequency, were:

- Pradaxa (generic name dabigatran).
- Coumadin (warfarin).
- Levaquin (levofloxacin).
- carboplatin.
- Zestril (lisinopril).
- cisplatin.
- Zocor (simvastatin).
- Cymbalta (duloxetine).
- Cipro (ciprofloxacin).
- Bactrim (trimethoprim/sulfamethoxazole or TMP-SMZ).

It is interesting to note Pradaxa surpassed all other monitored drugs in several categories, including overall number of reports (3,781), deaths (542), hemorrhage (2,367), acute renal failure (291) and stroke (644). It was also suspect in 15 cases of liver failure.

Coumadin (warfarin) has been prominent in the rankings for many years. It accounted for 1,106 reported ADEs overall, including 731 reports of hemorrhage and 72 deaths.

There are three options for submitting a voluntary adverse event report:

1. Complete Form 3500 online at https://www.accessdata.fda.gov/scripts/medwatch.

2. Call 800-FDA-1088 to report by telephone.

3. Download a copy of Form 3500 at www.fda.gov/medwatch/SAFETY/3500.pdf and either fax it to 800-FDA-0178 or mail it back using the postage-paid addressed form.

It is very important for consumers to report side effects from their medication to the FDA.

Richard P. Hoffmann, Pharm.D., has been a pharmacist for more than 40 years. Send questions to him at 2960 E. Coventry Court, Hernando, FL 34442.

exhaust as a carcinogen, a substance that causes cancer.

The International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), which is part of the WHO, based its decision on what it calls "sufficient evidence" that exposure to diesel exhaust causes lung cancer, and "limited evidence" that it increases the risk of bladder cancer. The new classification moves diesel fuel from the category of "probably carcinogenic" to "carcinogenic."

Over the past several decades, studies have raised concerns about the connection between diesel exhaust and cancer in workers with heavy exposure to exhaust from diesel engines.

Men with the heaviest and most prolonged exposures, such as railroad workers, heavy equipment operators, miners, and truck drivers, have been found to have higher lung cancer death rates than unexposed workers.

For example, in March 2012, the National Cancer Institute and National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health published results of a large study that showed an increased risk of death from lung cancer in underground miners exposed to diesel exhaust.

People can also be exposed to diesel exhaust in areas where they live and play, although typically at lower levels than in the workplace.

Exposures are highest where diesel traffic is heaviest, such as along major highways and in cities. Large engines — including those used in many trucks, buses, trains, construction and farm equipment, generators, ships and in some cars — run on diesel fuel.

The United States and other developed countries have responded to environmental and health concerns over diesel and gasoline exhaust by tightening emission standards.

For example, changes in requirements for diesel engines have led to designs that burn fuel more efficiently, decrease the sulfur content, and reduce emissions.

In less developed countries, however, regulations are less strict or don't exist.

The recent announcement and conclusion of the WHO sends a strong signal that public health action is warranted. This emphasis is needed globally, including among the more vulnerable populations in developing countries where new technology and protective measures may otherwise take many years to be adopted.

Those of you who work and live in Citrus County should also heed this warning, and if you are frequently exposed to diesel exhaust fumes, find ways to cut back this exposure.

GANDHI

Lymphoma can be Hodgkin's or non-Hodgkin's. Mantle-cell is a non-Hodgkin's lymphoma (NHL).

This is an aggressive subtype of NHL affecting about 7 percent of people with NHL. It most often appears in people older than 60.

It usually involves the bone marrow, lymph nodes, spleen and gastrointestinal system (esophagus, stomach, intestines).

Since this is an aggressive lymphoma, in the past we used to give aggressive chemotherapy.

In the recent largest oncology conference in Chicago, an excellent study was presented.

A drug that languished for years behind the Iron Curtain should replace aggressive chemotherapy as the standard of care, as per a researcher in the conference.

Bendamustine (Treanda) is both more effective and less toxic than the standard CHOP regimen when both are combined with rituximab (Rituxan), according to Mathias Rummel, M.D., Ph.D., of University Hospital in Giessen, Germany.

Bendamustine, an alkylating agent, was first discovered 50 years ago, Rummel noted, but was unknown in the West until the fall of the Berlin Wall. Since then, it has been approved in the United States.

The study consisted of almost 550 patients who were randomized to receive either CHOP or Bendamustine.

Both groups also received one targeted therapy called Rituxan. Both regimens worked very well with response in excess of 90 percent. The patients were followed for almost four years.

The most important difference was in side effects. Bendamustine does not cause hair loss. And nausea and/or vomiting is also much less common and lowering of blood count is also much less likely.

In short, Bendamustine is not only more effective, it is also much better tolerated, giving much better quality of life.

My patient is 82 years old, but she is fairly active and does not have significant comorbid condition.

I am offering her treatment with Bendamustine.

I am sure she will tolerate this well. This will improve not only her survival, but also quality of life.

Research like this impacts cancer care right away.

that people are convinced that pressure or weather changes trigger the headache to start, and because of the nasal stuffiness that sometimes is associated with it, it can be confused for nasal sinus problems. But migraine sufferers have involuntary nervous system problems that will trigger those events, and it may not be allergy or sinus at all.

Migraines are typically distinct in that they last hours to days. They are one-sided. They are pulsating. The pain is intense, worsened by physical activity or exercise, and can be associated with nausea, vomiting and light and/or sound intolerance.

There is also a possibility you could have a headache that is allergic and migraine.

There is a significant percentage of people who suffer with both, and the exact reason is not clear.

One of the suspect causes is a product your body makes called histamine that is involved in allergic reactions and causes some tissue changes that could be also the first step to a migraine headache.

The use of antihistamines, both over-the-counter and prescription, work well for allergic type headaches and believe it or not, some migraine headache sufferers also get relief with an antihistamine.

So, you can see why it is still quite confusing for researchers and scientists and so there is constant research going on, trying to decipher these problems so as to create better treatment.

So, what we know for sure is allergies can cause headaches, and the exact cause and relationship between allergic rhinitis and headaches is not clear, but is being explored.

So, if you do suffer from headaches that you think is related to your nose, sinuses or allergies, talk to your doctor. If simple antihistamine therapy works well for you, you can continue to utilize that just as long as it does not become an everyday problem.

If your headaches are protracted, you might need to see your general practitioner or neurologist and determine if you're not having a migraine-type problem.

sometimes in construction sites using concrete mixers that churned plaster by day and counterfeit drugs by night!

While 80 percent of the pills that were bought were counterfeit, on spectral analysis, the active ingredients in the pills were only 30 percent to 50 percent of that claimed on the packaging.

It is not just Viagra that is counterfeited but many drugs and dietary supplements that are sold online also suffer the same fate. Buying fake drugs online can pose additional problems to patients, such as exposure of personal details such as credit cards, details, email and telephone numbers to criminals.

Patients looking to purchase medicines, dietary supplements and food ingredients should look for the verification by the FDA approved USP (US Pharmacopeia) and NF (National Formulary).

According to the USP, counterfeit or substandard drugs accounted for a $75 billion market worldwide.

Purchase of medicines and supplements over the Internet exposes customers to increased threat of counterfeit and substandard drugs as well as loss of personal data to criminals.

Let the buyer beware!

Periodontal care proving too expensive to keep teeth

Dr. Frank Vascimini
SOUND BITES

Q: I really enjoyed your column this week (Tuesday, July 17). It could have been written about me.

I, too, have had periodontal disease that may possibly have been caused by an underlying condition. I have always had cleanings every six months and have been told I do an excellent job with my home care. While some of my remaining teeth are loose and have gaps between them, I have not lost a tooth in more than 30 years.

I have, in the past year, changed doctors when I was given what even I knew was bad advice about tooth extractions. In trying to find a dentist to maintain the teeth I have remaining, I have run into a problem with the dentist insisting on very expensive periodontal cleanings. I paid $365 to clean and laser treat just three teeth five weeks ago, and was told I needed another cleaning this week for $231, bringing the total for five weeks to $600.

I refused the treatment.

I would love to maintain my teeth the best I can with regular cleanings and X-rays. I know eventually I will need more work done on them. But where can I find routine maintenance that I can afford to keep the teeth I have now?

Why do doctors only want to give you the most expensive treatment? I was told every dentist in this area would insist on these expensive treatments. Thanks for listening and for your column. I always enjoy it.

A: I understand how you feel. As in many cases, without seeing you I cannot give you complete advice. I will give you some information that might help you make a good decision.

Periodontal disease is classified as mild, moderate and severe. In the mild condition the depth of pockets that surround the tooth are lower than in the advanced.

Let's say the number scale is one to nine. As a general rule, when the number depths are five and greater, the treatment suggested involves what many people call deep cleanings.

This procedure is more costly than what many people call a cleaning. If you know your numbers, this should help you decided what to do.

It is not uncommon for a dentist to suggest full-mouth deep cleanings when these deep numbers are recorded.

When there are only a few areas that are deep, I have done deep cleanings in those areas and a regular cleaning in the rest of the mouth. This will usually end up costing less money and still attaining the goal of lower pocket depths. Please realize this method only works if there are only a few areas.

You mentioned the use of a laser. I have one of the lasers that can be used to treat this sort of problem. It has been my experience that the laser is not a predictable method to treat periodontal disease.

Instead, when warranted, I suggest the use of antibiotic placed right in the pocket that is deep. This treatment seems to work every time when combined with deep cleanings. It does add to the cost of care, so it is not always accepted by the patient.

In general, I have seen an improvement of an additional 1.5 mm loss of pocket depth over deep cleanings alone when the antibiotic is used. In the cases where the patient does not accept the antibiotics, we simply do the deep cleaning alone. This works better than the regular cleaning every time.

As far as the cost goes, the standard cleaning is always going to be the least costly treatment. Unfortunately, there are times it is not the right thing to do.

The fees you mentioned seem high, especially since I am not a believer in the use of the laser. I should mention there is a specific laser manufactured for the sole purpose of treating periodontal disease.

That laser has some solid studies to back it up; however, I am not aware of anyone in this county who has this laser.

Most of us have a different laser that is said to be good for many uses. I did not find this sort of care to be one of them. That being said, please realize this is only my opinion; in someone else's hands, success may be attained. I have always been a believer in predictability, and I have not found that with this type of care.

I hope what I have mentioned here helps in some way.

sayscholesterol as early as age 9 and that testing should begin much earlier for kids at risk of future heart disease, including those with diabetes or a family history of heart problems. Treatment should generally begin with lifestyle changes including diet and exercise, the guidelines say.

Cholesterol drugs would be recommended for some kids, but probably less than 1 percent of those tested. But the advice says those drugs, including statins, shouldn't be used at all in children younger than 10 unless they have severe problems.

The guidelines aim to help prevent and treat conditions in children that put them at risk for later heart-related problems. At least 10 percent of U.S. children have unhealthy cholesterol levels and one-third are overweight or obese.

The dispute may leave parents wondering whether to have their kids screened.

Dr. Sarah De Ferranti, an American Academy of Pediatrics spokeswoman and director of preventive cardiology at Boston Children's Hospital, said the question should be part of a conversation parents should have with their pediatrician about heart disease risks, including weight, blood pressure and lifestyle.

"Almost all of us could do better in that area," she said.

"My kids are about to turn 9 and I'm going to have them screened," said De Ferranti, who has a family history of heart disease risks.

Experts on panels that create screening and treatment recommendations for various diseases frequently have at least some financial ties to industry.

"The problem is the people who care about this issue are doing research on it and there's no way to get research done without some involvement of industry," said De Ferranti, who has done industry-funded research herself.

The critics said there's little evidence widespread cholesterol testing and treatment in children will reduce their chances of having later heart problems.

They argue widespread testing is costly and could cause anxiety in healthy children who don't need treatment.

The National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute appointed the guidelines panel. Dr. Susan Shurin, the institute's acting director, said there are few qualified specialists who have no industry relationships, and that panel members were selected for their expertise.

"We got the best people in the country to do this," Shurin said.

Dr. Stephen Daniels, chairman of the guidelines panel, is pediatrics chief at the University of Colorado School of Medicine. He has worked as a consultant or advisory board member for Abbott Laboratories, Merck and Schering-Plough, now part of Merck, and co-authored the Pediatrics rebuttal.

Daniels said industry ties "were vetted during the discussions of the panel and I think really did not influence the debate."

The other rebuttal authors are Drs. Brian McCrindle of the University of Toronto, whose industry ties include consulting or serving as advisory board member for Merck and Abbott; Peter Kwiterovich of Johns Hopkins, consulting or advisory board member for Merck and LipoScience; Patrick McBride, University of Wisconsin, who said he has had no relevant industry ties since 2007; and Rae-Ellen Kavey, University of Rochester, who listed no relevant financial ties.

Spay, neuter for less

Animal rescue group plans weekly drawing, low-cost program

Special to the Chronicle

Precious Paws Rescue will have a weekly drawing for a free spay or neuter for a dog or cat to kick off their low-cost dog spay/neuter program to go along with their feline plan.

To participate in the weekly drawing, stop by the Crystal River Mall Adoption Center, PetSupermaket, FCVH or Center State Bank in Inverness to complete an entry form. There is no charge to enter but only one entry per pet owner is allowed.

Thanks to a bequest from a community pet lover and the continued support and participation of the Floral City Veterinary Hospital, Precious Paws Rescue has added a low cost spay/neuter program for dogs. The fee for dogs is based on their weight starting at $25 to neuter a male dog up to 50 pounds to $50 for dogs of more than 100 pounds. Spays for females start at $30 for dogs weighing less than 20 pounds up to $60 for dogs of more than 100 pounds. Cat procedures continue at $20 (spay) and $10 (neuter).

Pet owners wishing to participate in these programs must come to the mall adoption center and purchase a voucher for the desired procedure. They are responsible for making their appointment directly with the FCVH and transporting the pet for the surgery. The adoption center is down the hall from JCPenney and is open noon to 4 p.m. Thursday through Sunday. Any additional services such as vaccinations or tests must be arranged directly with FCVH and paid for at the time of the service.

Precious Paws Rescue will continue the programs based on the availability of funds. Donations are welcome and appreciated. PPR is an all-volunteer nonprofit dedicated to helping needy pets. For more information, call 352-726-4700 and leave a message.

Army buddies

From left: Paul Simek of Inverness, Pat Carroll of St. Charles, Mo., and Steve Walburn of Findlay Ohio, recently celebrated a 45-year reunion. All three served during the 1960s in Berlin, Germany, for the U.S. Army where Simek and Walburn were in the 287th military police, while Carroll was with Berlin Brigade Security. Simek met the two while serving at the brigade and Check Point Charlie. Through the years, the men and their wives have kept in contact through frequent visits, phone calls and emails. This spring they met in Nashville and St. Louis to catch up on new happenings and laugh about the old Army days of low pay, high rent and living in Germany. The couples have a total of seven children and five grandchildren.

Great time at Key Center annual event

It's always exciting to attend the Key Training Center's Annual "Reach For The Stars" dinner auction out at the Chet Cole Life Enrichment Center.

Greeting us at the entranceway was a jazz sax musician. Inside, Tina Renwick and Danny Lambert, Key clients, greeted us, and volunteers escorted us to our table.

Nearby, Sue Howard, Imagination Workshop instructor, and Key artist and client Jimmy Smith were offering their polymer-clay-decorated wineglasses, keychains and decorated Koozie drink holders fashioned in the workshop on the Lecanto Key Campus.

AROUND THE COMMUNITY

Table after table were laden with silent auction items generously donated by local merchants and individuals. There was a circular table with opportunity tickets for dinners from local restaurants. The fabulous display of live auction items were at the front of the stage area where we were entertained by the Cool Corporate Cats.

The sumptuous steak dinner was donated in part by the Outback Steakhouse of Inverness with a crew of servers manning three serving lines for the 400-plus in attendance.

Copp Winery donated commemorative wine bottles. Excel Printing printed the programs, tickets and invitations.

Auctioneer Bill Elrod kept the auction of 27 items moving along in rapid succession. He was ably assisted by Rebecca Bays, Katie Lucas, Rebecca Martin, Tom Doyle, Amy Meek, Mark McCoy and Tobey Phillips. Bays and Meek, dubbed the evening's Vannas, strolled through the hall, enticing bid participation as they displayed the coveted items, including a Tim Tebow autographed portrait which brought $1,050, a Don Mayo sea turtle painting which fetched $1,100, and a Norman Rockwell poster signed by Charlie Grimm, and, as always, private box seats to a University of Florida football game for six, which brought $1,100.

Silent auction items included golf outings at the Plantation on Crystal River, sterling silver earrings, a Lennox "lily" porcelain figurine, a Waterford crystal flower vase and bowl, Odyssey pattern, a "Call to Glory" Hummel figurine and more.

Other opportunities included the Legacy Walk bricks for a walkway to be built under the campus trees that will carry your special message, a rifle drawing, a wheelbarrow of cheer, day trips with $25 gas cards donated by Nick Nicholas Ford, and certificates for portraits from Cason Photography.

Key Chorale clients Carolyn Bogush, Lenora Constable, Alexis Council, Teresa Emmons, Megan Lemond and Aleene Weeks gave the musical blessing.

WYKE-TV provided the video production portrayal of life at the Key, "Feels Like Home," starring Clancy Jones, Ruthie Farr and Francine Tuzzolino, Key client residents.

Chris Moling received the Key's "Citizen of the Year" award for his untiring Run for the Money involvement.

The Citrus County School System received the "Organization of the Year Award" for its support of the Key, including the annual Field Days at the Crystal River High School Campus. Accepting the award was Sam Himmel, superintendent of schools.

Key Partners were recognized for their financial assistance in the overall Key special needs, including the scholarships for the unfunded clients. The partners are Bay Area Air Conditioning, the Citrus County Chronicle, FDS Disposal, Curry's Roofing, Suncoast/Plumbing and Electrics, WYKE-TV, DEX Imaging, Lassiter Ware Insurance, WTRS Radio.

The highlight of the evening was Key client Smith's decorated stained-glass mirror, which brought $450, and his inlaid desk design, which brought $350.

Special to the Chronicle

Do you know a woman who is so good at what she does that you'd like to see her honored publicly? This is the time to nominate her for recognition in the "10 Most Admired Women" program.

For the 16th year, the Citrus County Chronicle and Altrusa of Citrus County Inc. are sponsoring this program, which honors women in Citrus County for their dedication and excellence in improving professional growth and quality of life for the people in Citrus County.

Nominations are being accepted in 10 categories: Arts, Athletics, Business, Community involvement, Education, Government, Health care, Leadership, Mother, and Up-and-coming youth.

Throughout the month of July, the Chronicle will publish nomination forms. They are also available on the Chronicle website and at www.facebook.com/CitrusAltrusa.

Altrusa members, themselves businesswomen and active community participants, are privileged each year to review the nominations to select the 10 Most Admired Women. The winners will be featured in a special section of the Chronicle on Sept. 12, and honored at the annual Altrusa awards dinner on Oct. 4.

PHILLIP ALDER
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Suffragette leader Susan B. Anthony said, "Cautious, careful people, always casting about to preserve their reputations ... can never effect a reform."

Cautious, careful bridge players, always passing to preserve their plus scores, will rarely do well.

Sometimes you will have to decide between a brave bid and a pusillanimous pass (or underbid). Far more often than not, the courageous call will work better.

This deal from a social game is an example. After North opened three clubs, South nearly jumped to five clubs to stop West from bidding four spades. But South decided that he might buy it in four hearts, and that was more likely to make than five clubs. (Note that five clubs can go down three if East leads his heart. The defenders can take one spade, one diamond, one club and two heart ruffs.)

What should West do?

There are three choices: pass, double or bid four spades. Pass is cautious. Double suggests only four spades, not five. Four spades on such a weak suit gambles on finding partner with support. However, I think West should bravely bid four spades. And if it goes pass-pass-double-all pass and down several tricks, too bad!

At the table, West passed. Yes, four hearts went down one, declarer losing one trick in each suit. (His third club went on dummy's diamond king.) But four spades would have made easily, losing one spade, one heart and one diamond.

If the opponents bid four hearts without the normal high-card values and you might overcall four spades, do so.

Dear Annie: I've been with my boyfriend for eight years and find that I'm not as happy as I used to be. But we have a child together, which makes it harder to decide what to do.

For the past few years, I have been talking to another man. Nothing has happened between us, but we are very attracted to each other.

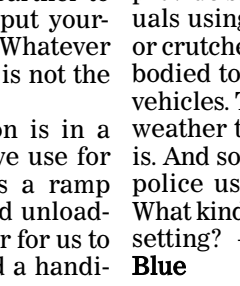
We hang out occasionally, and I can't stop thinking about him. He has a child with his live-in girlfriend, so he's in the same position as I am.

I don't know what to do. My relationship is bumpy and stressful, but I have a hard time leaving. — Vermont

Dear Vermont: You have a commitment not only to your boyfriend, but to your child. It means you don't behave selfishly and rashly, or in ways that will hurt them. Being attracted to someone else is not unusual, but acting on those feelings puts you in the wrong.

If your current relationship is "bumpy and stressful," please get counseling with your partner to see whether you can put yourselves back on track. Whatever the outcome, cheating is not the answer.

Dear Annie: Our son is in a wheelchair. The van we use for his transportation has a ramp that makes loading and unloading simple. But in order for us to use the ramp, we need a handicapped parking space that is next to a wide, striped area. Unfortunately, often someone parks next to us in the striped area before we return to the van, which then makes access to the ramp impossible.



ANNIE'S MAILBOX

We can't decide whether it's ignorance or arrogance that makes people do this. Are they not aware that any striped area is a no-parking zone?

A few years ago, we were at a local mall at Christmastime, and parking was at a premium. We were fortunate to find a handicapped space near the entrance. When we returned to the van, a car had squeezed into the adjacent blue-striped area. It required leaving my son unattended behind the other vehicle while I pulled my car out. What made matters worse was that mall security was present and did nothing.

It makes my blood boil to see people use the striped areas. Some of these people have handicapped placards or plates, so I guess they think that makes it OK. It does NOT.

The striped areas are there to provide safe passage for individuals using wheelchairs, walkers or crutches, and for the less able-bodied to get in and out of their vehicles. The more inclement the weather the worse this problem is. And sometimes even the local police use these areas to park. What kind of an example are they setting? — Seeing Red About Blue

Dear Red: A poor one. We know that some people are dismissive of handicapped spaces and park wherever they want. But most people try to be respectful, so we assume they don't realize that these adjacent striped areas are intended to be used for ramps, wheelchairs and other necessities. Please, folks, life can be challenging enough for those with disabilities. Let's not make it harder.

Dear Annie: This is in response to "Free To Be Me." I, too, have lived in a verbally abusive marriage for more than 40 years, but in my case, I am the husband, and she is the bully. Change the pronouns, and I could have written that letter.

I want to thank "Free" for giving me the courage to file for divorce. As a result, I, too, must walk away from everything: family, friends, church, home and most of my income. Many people sit in silent desperation waiting for their life to pass by. I did that for years, but now it is time to move on. — Being Me, Too
