Governor's race gets nastier

Scott, Crist debate in South Florida

Associated Press

DAVIE — The Florida governor's race that was already one of the most negative in the state's history became even nastier — and weirder — as Republican Gov. Rick Scott and Democrat Charlie Crist fought over everything from self-defense laws and the economy to the use of an electric fan during a debate Wednesday night.

The start of the second debate was delayed by about five minutes as confused panelists pointed out that neither candidate was on stage. At that moment, Crist walked out and the audience was told Scott was refusing to join him because Crist had a small fan inside his lectern. The panelists spent a few minutes deciding what to do, with Crist insisting the debate go on without Scott.

The governor eventually walked on stage, and Crist kept his fan. With that flap over, the candidates continued the attacks on each other that have marked the campaign. There is little common ground between Scott and Crist, which Crist noted after both men talked about their faith in God.

"I'm happy to be a Methodist, too. Maybe it's the only thing we agree on, Rick," said Crist, who

NEWS BRIEFS

Two cars strike, kill pedestrian

A pedestrian was killed Tuesday night after two cars struck him on U.S. 19 as he was crawling on his hands and knees across the highway, according to a Florida Highway Patrol incident report.

Andrew Jeremian Smith, 32, of North Carolina was reportedly under the influence of alcohol as he attempted to cross U.S. 19, south of West Cornflower Road in Crystal River.

One car failed to stop in time while traveling southbound on U.S 19 and struck Smith in the inside lane.

Smith was subsequently hit by another vehicle traveling south according to the report.

He was pronounced dead at the scene.

Voters to decide which governor fills high court

MIAMI — Florida voters are being asked to decide Nov. 4 whether the outgoing or incoming governor should fill three expected vacancies on the state Supreme Court in 2019.

The Republican-led state Legislature put proposed constitutional Amendment 3 on the ballot to avert what they called a potential constitutional crisis. Democrats called it an attempted court-packing power grab.

Three of the seven justices have 70th birthdays coming up in 2018. Seventy is the justices' mandatory retirement age.

Their terms would end on Jan. 8, 2019, which is also a gubernatorial inauguration day.

If Amendment 3 passes, the outgoing governor would choose the three new justices. If it fails, the governor taking office in 2019 would get the picks.

INVERNESS — The issues surrounding Amendment 2 were given a thorough thrashing and then some during a raucous debate Wednesday night at the Citrus County Auditorium.

Orlando attorney John Morgan, the money and face behind the medical marijuana amendment, squared off with state Rep. Jimmie T. Smith, R-Inverness.

For a solid hour the men sat side by side arguing whether medical marijuana is saving grace for thousands of patients of debilitating diseases or a way for children to get a quick and easy high.

The crowd of about 350 seemed pretty solid with Morgan, whose "For the People" law firm is known via TV ads throughout the state.

And they cheered loudly when Morgan chastised Smith by saying, "You can't sit up here and make s— t up! That works in Tallahassee but it doesn't work in Citrus County."

Moderator Bob Schweickert Jr., whose GroundHog News sponsored the forum, tried to keep Morgan and Smith focused on his questions.

Instead, Morgan and Smith spent much of their time talking over each other.

If voters approve the measure on the Nov. 4 ballot, doctors will be able to recommend marijuana for patients with debilitating diseases.

Smith said the wording of the amendment is too vague and doesn't belong in the state Constitution. He said the Legislature this year passed a law allowing "Charlotte's Web," a form of marijuana that does not induce the "high" normally associated with the drug.

Morgan, however, said the effectiveness of Charlotte's Web is limited and could not help the 400,000 patients who suffer with cancer, ALS, multiple sclerosis, HIV and epilepsy.

He said the amendment belongs in the state Constitution because of the Legislature's inability to do otherwise.

"Charlotte's Web is here because I got this ball rolling," he said.

Smith said he supports medical marijuana, but not in the Constitution.

He also said he believes medical marijuana is dangerous for patients who can overdose on it.

Morgan said that wasn't the case.

"When you're on your death bed, I can promise you something, Jimmie T., they're not

School board wants a three-year pause before implementing testing

ERYN WORTHINGTON

INVERNESS — Citrus County School Board members have heard student and teacher protests about new testing and accountability and have resolved to take action.

"Each day as I visit schools and talk to parents and teachers, I hear the cry for help," said Chairman Thomas Kennedy. "They are saying that what the state is doing to public education is hurting them. Our teachers in Citrus County have exceeded each time when the state has lifted the bar. This is the first time in my 25 years involved in education that I have heard teachers say they feel defeated and helpless in how they can implement what the state has put upon them."

At Tuesday's monthly meeting, the school board discussed joining other Florida school boards in issuing a resolution to the Florida Department of Education about testing and accountability.

"School boards and superintendents did not create the problem that we are in," Kennedy said. "Many of us have fought against it, and now people are

County close to settling MSBU lawsuit

MIKE WRIGHT

INVERNESS — The county is close to settling a 10-year-old lawsuit that derived from a special fee district and the decision to use money from that account to build the Citrus Springs Community Center.

The settlement, approved unanimously Tuesday by county commissioners, refunds up to $1.2 million to current and former owners of vacant land in Citrus Springs whose lots are accessible by a paved road.

Kerry Parsons
county attorney.

Refunds will come over a three-year period from the Citrus Springs municipal services benefit unit, or MSBU. The fund receives about $620,000 annually and has about twice that much in a reserve account, Commissioner Joe Meek said.

The Citrus County chapter of Rolling Thunder Florida is sticking with its mission statement: To educate the public that more than 83,000 Americans from all wars were left behind either as Prisoners of War/Missing in Action. And that the group would not rest until they are all back home.

On Tuesday, the group helped dedicate a black chair — right in front of the dais of the Board of County Commissioners — to keep the stories and memories of those still missing or imprisoned front and center in the public eye.

adorn all three athletic sites at the county's three public high schools — Lecanto, Citrus and Crystal River.

"I think those should be done in the next few weeks," Cynthia Holden, a Rolling Thunder member said Wednesday.

Holden said chapter president Archie Gooding came up with the chair idea, and the group's board adopted the plan during their September meeting.

"It is our mission to keep the issue of all of the more than 83,000 people from all wars in the mind of the public and never forget them," Holden said.

Rolling Thunder is a nonprofit organization that is open to veterans, nonveterans, motorcyclist and nonbikers willing to donate their time to the POW/MIA issue.

The group holds monthly meetings and has been active in the community, helping families with food, clothing and other essentials.

Holden and the group have been famously involved in the agitation to have U.S. Army Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl freed from Taliban custody. The group insisted the campaign to have Bergdahl released, which had come under some criticism, fits the organization's mission to advocate for the return of every American soldier.

Bergdahl, who spent more than five years in captivity, was released earlier this year in a prisoner exchange with the Taliban. Some have accused Bergdahl of desertion which led to his abduction, but Bergdahl remains in the military and an investigation into those allegations is ongoing.

rightfully demanding a solution. … If we continue to allow this and not speak out, shame on us."

School board members, along with Superintendent Sandra "Sam" Himmel, agreed unanimously to form a resolution based upon similar language that 10 other districts have utilized. They are requesting a "three-year pause of holding teachers and students accountable for testing that has not yet been properly tested or implemented."

The resolution would request the state to wait before using Florida Standards Assessment scores for school grades, student retention and teacher evaluations.

Himmel said the district is not asking the state to not hold Citrus County students accountable but criticized the development of the testing.

"There are too many unknowns; the state is asking us to give a test in the spring — it is not even developed yet, and it's modeled after Utah's test," she said. "We need to take a stance for our teachers to say, 'Listen, we are in agreement with you but this train is going way to fast.' We are not telling them that we are not going to be compliant. We are not telling them that we don't agree with higher stakes or standards. We are just saying to slow the train down."

Board member Sandy Balfour stressed the need for solutions to be presented.

"Yes, enough is enough," Balfour said. "I definitely see the need to have the pressure on the hiatus here. I am hearing it from all over and not just Citrus County. I definitely support this movement. It is easy to criticize, but we need to bring solutions to them."

Board member Pat Deutschman and research and accountability director Patrick Simon are to utilize Tuesday's board conversation and bring a proposal to the Oct. 28 workshop and special meeting for consideration of signatures.

Tampa

School closes due to colds, flu

A severe bout of cold and flu has caused one Tampa school to close for the rest of the week.

Officials at Cambridge Christian School made the announcement Tuesday after about 25 percent of the 250 students in grades 9 through 12 were absent with illnesses.

The school's chairman of the board Greg Froelich says officials decided to "err on the side of caution."

Students in pre-kindergarten through eighth grade are not affected because they attended classes in a separate building.

Cambridge Christian has a total enrollment of about 640 students.

Orlando

No medical pot in tourist area

If voters approve the legalization of medical marijuana next month, officials in metro Orlando are making sure treatment centers stay clear of the area's tourist district.

Orange County staffers on Tuesday unveiled a proposed map of where the medical marijuana treatment facilities would be allowed if voters approve the state constitutional amendment legalizing them.

The International Drive tourist corridor would be off limits. Under the plan, 4,500 acres would be available in Orange County.

UF picks Cornell offiicial for president

Cornell University's provost was selected Wednesday as the University of Florida's next president, replacing Bernie Machen as the state's largest university continues its drive to become a Top 10 public university nationwide.

After three days of interviews and meetings the Board of Trustees named W. Kent Fuchs as the 161-year-old school's 12th president. The other finalist was New York University Provost David McLaughlin.

Once ratified by the Florida Board of Governors on Nov. 5 or 6, Fuch's tenure will begin Jan. 1.

"It's going to be a great privilege to be a part of the Gator nation, to be one of the most enthusiastic Gator fans out there, to build on the legacy of excellence the leadership here was able to achieve and to take it to new heights," he said.

State to step up preparation for Ebola

The nation's Ebola crisis has yet to reach Florida, but state officials want to spend millions to prepare for a possible outbreak.

This week, top health official asked for permission to redirect money from federal grants to buy full body suits for health care workers who may have contact with any potential victims of the virus.

Dr. John Armstrong, secretary of the Department of Health, said in a letter to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that the state wants to spend more than $7 million on the effort. The state plans to start spending more than $1 million, but is seeking a green light to use federal money for the rest of the purchases.

Gov. Rick Scott has previously asked for 100 special suits from the federal government, as well as 30 additional Ebola testing kits, but the request has not been granted.

Online auction to benefit food pantry

ROCHELLE KAISER
Homosassa Beacon editor

We Care Food Pantry in Homosassa is gearing up for the holidays and preparing for its annual online auction, where deals can be found and proceeds go to help fund the food pantry.

The public is invited to participate in the fourth annual We Care Food Pantry Online Auction 2014. The auction opens online Monday, Oct. 20 for bidding on hundreds of items online at www.nat71.com. Online bidding ends at 2 p.m. Monday, Dec. 1. But there's more to come.

Starting at noon on Saturday, Dec. 6, the auction will begin to close live on WYKE-TV. Participating bidders can continue to bid by phone all afternoon until final bids due in by 5 p.m.

This online and live televised auction has become an annual fundraiser. Find a comfortable seat in front of the computer to view hundreds of items online. Enjoy the fun by checking back to track your bidding or outbid someone else.

Items available include 14-karat gold and sterling silver jewelry, restaurant gift certificate packages, paintings by local artists, a two-person kayak, overnight stays at local establishments and even a 32-inch LED TV. With so many items to view, participants should plan on at least an hour of viewing to see everything.

The food pantry is a nonprofit 501c(3) corporation operated by an all-volunteer staff. Every penny of the proceeds from this auction will benefit the food pantry that assists thousands of people in need every month.

"We have up to 3,000 people coming through the doors each month. These are hardworking people who are working and trying to make ends meet. I don't know how much more we can do to help them. We have the dental bus for them, we have the medical bus for them. They are the working poor," said President Diane Toto.

Country comeback

She put her career on hold 30 years ago, but now she's back

NANCY KENNEDY
Staff writer

INVERNESS

Just a few weeks shy of her 67th birthday, Brenda Kaye Perry is ready for a comeback.

After a 30-year break, the country artist who once performed with Charlie Rich and the Oak Ridge Boys, who had four Top 40 Billboard Country hits, who sang on stage at the hallowed Grand Ole Opry and who will be inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame in March 2015, has a new CD, "Look Me Up," and will be heading out on tour in 2015.

"Being back and recording again, it's like I never left," Perry said from her home in Inverness.

Perry said picking up her guitar and singing felt like being home.

The North Carolina native grew up singing traditional country. After moving the family to Virginia, her father became a country music promoter and disc jockey and sent Perry and her brothers and sisters to music school.

"We learned to read and write music, and then we became a family band back in the '60s," she said. "Dad told us to pick an instrument, and I picked the accordion — and I laugh to this day. Later on, I really wanted to play guitar, so when we had rehearsals at home and had breaks, I asked my brother to show me some chords. Eventually, I started playing rhythm guitar."

NANCY KENNEDY/Chronicle

Country singer Brenda Kaye Perry once toured with Charlie Rich, performed with the Oak Ridge Boys, had four Top 40 hits on the Billboard Country charts and sang at the Grand Ole Opry. After a 30-year break, she's back with a new CD, "Look Me Up," and will be on tour in 2015.

She said she started singing at 3, recalling the time shortly after Hank Williams had died and her father had done a tribute program on the radio. She was in the back seat of the car listening to the car radio and belting out the songs.

"My mom and aunt were in the front seat, laughing — I knew every one of those songs," she said.

She went on to have a career in country music, recording and touring and appearing on TV — "The Porter Wagner Show," "The Ralph Emery Show," "Del Reeves Country Carnival" and "The Statler Brothers Show."

Her first national Billboard charts hit was "Ringgold, Georgia," which she made with Billy Walker. That song led to her solo hit, "Deeper Water."

"And then I got to do the Opry by myself," Perry said. "That's the highest high for a country artist. You're on that stage, and you can feel the presence of the greats who have been there, like Hank Williams and Patsy Cline, and then there's this little girl that always had this dream of singing at the Grand Ole Opry. It's got to be next to heaven."

Then when Perry's daughter entered middle school — they were living in Florida at the time — Perry took a break from recording and touring, which turned out to be a 30-year break.

This past August, Perry did a show in Michigan with Jett Williams, the late Hank Williams' daughter. She begins her "Look Me Up" tour in 2015.

"The thing I want to tell people, women especially, is that it ain't never too late," she said. "It's been 30 years, and I'm older, and I have to pace myself, but I still love doing this.. Singing is all I've ever loved and have ever done. And this time I have a seven-year contract, so how about that?"

Birthday — This will be an exciting year. Everyone will be interested in your plans and opinions. Your unique ideas and creativity will make you the center of attention.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — You won't need to look far for help. Your family and friends will do everything possible to assist you. Take the advice given to you seriously, without offense.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — It is easy to get carried away when you go out shopping or spend time with someone who has more money than you. Plan ahead and limit your expenses.

Sagittarius (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) — You may have strong opinions, but you shouldn't expect everyone to agree with you.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Expect to encounter a troubling relationship issue. If you have been insensitive to someone who looks up to you, it's best to do a little backtracking and make amends.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — Protect your position and reputation. Think before you act, and keep your ideas to yourself for the time being. A rash decision will end up being a costly mistake.

Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20) — You will be pulled in several different directions. It's impossible to please everyone, so listen carefully to what others have to say and make the best choice.

Aries (March 21-April 19) — If you are feeling lazy or lethargic, make an effort to get some physical exercise. If you invite friends to accompany you, you will not find it so difficult.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) — It's time to organize your paperwork and sort through any outstanding bills or legal documents. Keeping your personal papers in order will save you time and money.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) — Take a class, join a group or start a new hobby. Excessive spending will be your downfall, so look for hobbies that won't stretch your budget.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) — You will feel dissatisfied, but you shouldn't take your bad mood out on family members. Complaints or criticism will only serve to make matters worse.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) — Be careful not to overdo it. Pace yourself.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Today, it may seem as though everything is going wrong. Be patient and let the little things slide.

'Annie' star Wallis hopes to become a veterinarian

NEW YORK — Quvenzhane Wallis says she took singing lessons to prepare for the lead role in a new version of "Annie," opening in theaters in December.

Quvenzhane, who was nominated for a best-actress Oscar when she was 9 for her role in "Beasts of the Southern Wild," said she's always listened to music, especially while on her way to her brothers' basketball games.

"My vocal chords got better as I sang in the car, and when I (took) singing lessons, they got even better," the 11-year-old Quvenzhane said in a recent interview.

The movie also stars Jamie Foxx, Cameron Diaz and Rose Byrne. Producers include Will Smith, Jada Pinkett-Smith and Jay Z.

In this contemporized adaptation of the Broadway musical and the "Little Orphan Annie" comic strip, Annie lives in a foster home instead of an orphanage, "and there are cellphones," Quvenzhane said.

One thing hasn't changed: the presence of Annie's loyal companion, a mutt named Sandy.

Quvenzhane said she hopes to become a veterinarian.

Quvenzhane wrote the forward to a new book, "My Very, Very Busy Day," the story of a dog and a cat, designed to teach kids about the responsibilities that come with having a pet.

College to pay writer $26,000 for rescinded invite

PASADENA, Calif. — A California community college has agreed to pay Oscar-winning screenwriter Dustin Lance Black $26,000 not to sue after the school rescinded an invitation to speak at commencement.

The Los Angeles Times reported Tuesday that Pasadena City College officials were concerned about the school's image after a stolen sex video with Black was posted online.

Black, who wrote the screenplay for "Milk," ultimately delivered the May 9 address at his alma mater after he wrote a letter in the student newspaper hinting at legal action and trustees apologized and invited him back.

'Real Housewives' star wavers on taking plea deal

PATERSON, N.J. — One of the Real Housewives of New Jersey stars convicted of bankruptcy fraud this month in federal court apparently had second thoughts Wednesday when faced with the decision to go to trial in an unrelated state case.

A lawyer for Joe Giudice announced in court Wednesday that his client was turning down a deal that would have resolved false identification charges. But when questioned by the judge about the decision, Giudice appeared to waver, and the hearing was put on hold while Giudice conferred with his lawyer.

The false identification charged was brought after Giudice allegedly used his brother's identity to obtain a driver's license while his own license was suspended for driving while intoxicated in 2010.

He was charged with unlawful use of an ID, which carries a maximum 10-year sentence upon conviction, and impersonation, which carries an 18-month maximum sentence.

Wednesday's plea deal would have allowed Giudice to plead guilty to the lesser charge and serve 18 months, concurrent with his 41-month federal sentence.

worried about getting high," he said.

Morgan repeatedly asked Smith if he would support the amendment as a bill if it narrowed the debilitating diseases to a specific few.

"If this was for cancer, yes," Smith said. "If this is for an end of life issue, yes."

Smith said doctors could prescribe marijuana for just about anything, including back pain.

Morgan said that wasn't the case.

"Debilitating is debilitating," he said. "Everybody in this auditorium knows what debilitating is."

The debate turned testy when Morgan began talking about his brother Tim, who at age 15 was in an accident that left him a quadriplegic.

Morgan said the strains of marijuana such as Charlotte's Web do nothing to ease his brother's discomfort.

Smith said he supports a legislative form of medical marijuana, to which Morgan countered: "It's like saying I'm for guns, but I'm not for bullets."

When Smith repeatedly challenged Morgan to prove that, the attorney said: "You don't know what you're talking about! You're a security guard, not a doctor."

Smith said the amendment would bring marijuana into the hands of young people.

"This amendment allows people to go out and smoke a joint," he said.

Smith said he supports a legislative form of medical marijuana, to which Morgan countered: "It's like saying I'm for guns, but I'm not for bullets."

The amendment will lead to marijuana abuse, Smith said.

"You're going to have the Phillip Morris of marijuana," he said. "You're going to have the Lucky Strikes of marijuana."

Morgan responded: "Nobody's ever died from marijuana. Not one person in the world has ever died from marijuana."

The crowd quickly thinned out as the debate ended, even though candidates for county commission and circuit court judge were still on the schedule.

By the time commission candidates Ron Kitchen Jr. and Joey White took their place on stage, about 40 people were left.

MSBU

recipients is unknown, Citrus Springs had about 27,000 vacant lots when the class-action lawsuit was filed in 2004, County Attorney Kerry Parsons said. Most people will receive less than $200, she said.

Once the plaintiff signs off on the settlement, it will go to Circuit Court Judge Patricia Thomas for a final order dismissing the case.

James Ownby, who lived in Volusia County but owned seven vacant lots in Citrus Springs, sued the county over the MSBU, which was put into effect in 1993 and started collecting assessments seven years later. The assessments are $25 a year for an improved lot and $20 a year for a vacant lot accessible by a paved road.

Citrus Springs residents at the time asked for the MSBU to complete tasks that the developer, Deltona Corp., failed to do. That included mowing rights of way, road repair, adding street lights, a new fountain at the development entrance on U.S. 41 and building a new community center.

Once the plaintiff signs off on the settlement, it will go to Circuit Court Judge Patricia Thomas ...

Ownby claimed the MSBU held no benefit for owners of vacant property. He especially was critical of using MSBU funds to build the $2.5 million community center because it is publicly owned and the county receives money for renting it, according to court records.

Attorneys for the county pointed out that Ownby actually supported both the MSBU and new community center in a newsletter he printed and sold to other owners of vacant Citrus Springs property.

He filed suit, they said, only after Ownby's brother-in-law won a similar case in Marion County, where a development's MSBU funds were used to hire law enforcement.

The lawsuit asked a judge to declare the MSBU void and refund all money to property owners.

The county, however, argued that Ownby didn't represent the interests of other property owners because most supported the MSBU and the projects it funded.

In 2010, two other property owners, Fernando and Edith Monroy, joined the lawsuit with Ownby.

Parsons said the proposed settlement doesn't tie the county to any admission regarding the MSBU, which still continues.

"We are not saying we violated the law," she said.

Once signed by the judge, it will be up to Ownby's attorneys to set up and distribute the refunds. Parsons and Meek said any money left over after three years returns to the MSBU account.

At trial, Swiss banker details IRS secrecy

Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — They were known as the prized "black accounts," those held in Swiss banks by wealthy Americans who wanted to make sure their billions of dollars in assets were securely hidden from the IRS, a longtime banker testified Wednesday in the trial of a former senior executive at UBS AG.

Hans Schumacher, who also worked at UBS and other Swiss banks, was the first important prosecution witness against Raoul Weil, once the No. 3 executive at UBS. Weil is accused of conspiracy to defraud the U.S. government by helping thousands of rich Americans conceal some $20 billion in assets from the IRS between 2002 and 2008.

Schumacher has also been indicted in the U.S. on the same charge and appeared in the Weil trial under an agreement that his testimony can't be used against him in his own criminal case. Schumacher voluntarily flew from Switzerland to Miami last week to surrender to U.S. authorities and is free on $500,000 bail.

At UBS and other Swiss banks, Schumacher testified, there was an ingrained culture of secrecy that included use of code names, numbers and fake foreign corporations to hide the true account holders' identities. The Americans who didn't want their names disclosed to the IRS where known as the "black accounts," he said, and those who allowed disclosure were "white accounts."

Raoul Weil walks with his wife Susan Lerch Weil on Tuesday during a lunch break in his trial at federal court in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Weil, a former top executive with Swiss bank UBS AG, is charged with helping thousands of wealthy Americans conceal some $20 billion in assets from the IRS.

"It was very confidential. Very wealthy individuals came to Switzerland to get that secrecy," Schumacher testified. "If you want to see Mickey Mouse, you have to go to Disney World. Switzerland was the safest place to hide their money."

UBS bankers never called their U.S. clients from Switzerland, which would leave a trail of phone numbers, he testified. They didn't send clients any mail. When they traveled to the U.S. for client meetings, they either sent hard-to-decipher bank statements ahead to hotels or hid them in luggage. Bankers changed hotels frequently to avoid suspicion and prying eyes. They had a second set of business cards bearing no trace of UBS.

For the rich clients, the reward was no taxes on profits for investments UBS was making for them with their hidden assets. For UBS, it was the steep fees for all these special services that made it all worthwhile.

"It was a win-win-win," Schumacher told jurors.

Weil, 54, faces up to five years in prison if convicted.

Bolts only blemish on successful spacewalk

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Spacewalking astronauts replaced a failed electrical unit at the International Space Station on Wednesday, restoring full power to the orbiting lab.

The space station had been operating since spring with only seven of its eight solar-power channels. Wednesday's work by Reid Wiseman and Butch Wilmore — NASA's second spacewalk in two weeks — brought the energy capability back up to 100 percent.

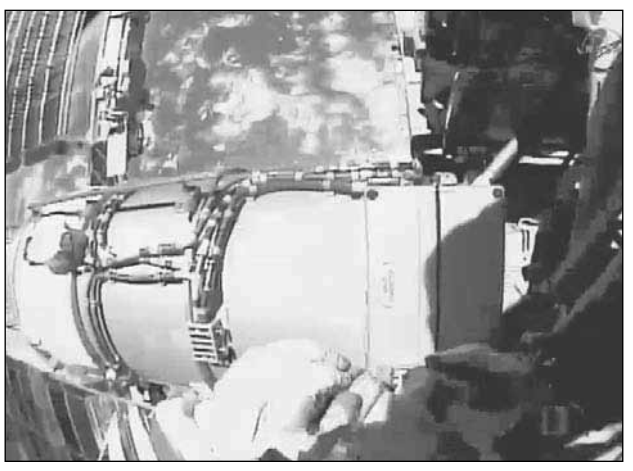
The spacewalkers encountered balky bolts but still managed to complete the job in the allotted time, with less than two minutes to spare.

"Yoo-hoo!" they cheered as NASA declared victory.

The voltage regulator shorted out in May but could not be replaced until now because of a yearlong hiatus in nonemergency spacewalks by NASA. The stoppage was caused by spacesuit problems, most notably a flooded helmet that nearly cost an astronaut's life in 2013.

Wiseman took part in the Oct. 7 spacewalk that jump-started NASA's outside maintenance, accompanied by a German. This time, Wiseman was joined by Wilmore, who made his first spacewalk.

To avoid an electrical shock, the two spacewalkers waited until darkness before attempting to remove the old voltage regulator, so there would be no discharge. They took in the view 260 miles below as they waited for the space station to fly into the night side of Earth.



Associated Press

This video frame grab from NASA shows NASA astronauts repairing a failed power regulator Wednesday outside the International Space Station. Flight Engineers Reid Wiseman and Barry Wilmore of Expedition 41 replaced the regulator, known as a sequential shunt unit, which failed in May. "The unit regulates power from the 3A solar array," NASA said in a statement.

"I see Cairo!" Wiseman said. "Can't quite make out the pyramids, though."

Sunset came over Kazakhstan and China, and Wiseman began to undo the bolt holding down the bad regulator. His pistol grip tool failed to loosen the bolt. "I can feel it binding up," he said. A ratchet wrench — along with some muscle — did the trick.

Wiseman removed the 330-pound boxy regulator from its slot and, with Wilmore's help, popped in the new one. But once again, they ran into bolt trouble, this time in securing the new device.

The minutes ticked away as Mission Control debated how much longer to keep up the effort, before stopping for the next orbital sunrise. With less than 10 minutes remaining, flight controllers advised Wiseman to try tightening the bolt with the ratchet wrench. It worked.

"Outstanding news," Mission Control radioed.

Flight controllers immediately checked out the newly installed system, with less than three minutes to go. Success was declared with one minute and 45 seconds remaining.

The voltage regulator — officially called a sequential shunt unit or SSU — is needed to keep excess power from its designated solar wing from overloading the station system. Power is regulated at about 160 volts.

After the May breakdown, NASA transferred space station systems dependent on the failed power channel to a backup. No operations were hampered, but NASA wanted that channel operating again for full capability and redundancy. It should be back up and running normally again by Thursday.

With their main job completed, the spacewalkers installed a new camera, and moved around various camera and wireless radio systems. The relocations are needed to get ready for the eventual arrival of new commercial crew vehicles. That's still a few years away.

"It's been a very successful day," Mission Control said as the 6 1/2-hour spacewalk drew to a close.

A Russian spacewalk, meanwhile, is on tap for next Wednesday.

A dizzying day for Wall Street as stocks plunge

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fear drove Wall Street to one of its most dramatic, dizzying days in years on Wednesday.

Investors fled stocks and poured into bonds as worries about a global economic slowdown intensified. The Dow Jones industrial average dropped 460 points in afternoon trading, all three U.S. stock indexes were in negative territory for the year, and the so-called fear index spiked.

A late recovery limited the damage and left stocks mostly lower. But investors were shaken after the heaviest day of trading in more than three years.

"I think it's fair to call it a global growth scare right now," said Bill Stone, chief investment strategist at PNC Asset Management.

Investor concerns of a worldwide economic slowdown turned into outright fear after weeks of turbulence. Germany, Europe's biggest economy, is struggling. China's economy appears to be slowing. A batch of worrisome economic news in the U.S. also fueled the selling.

Traders sold riskier investments and moved money into U.S. government bonds, gold and cash.

By the end of the day, the Dow Jones industrial average lost 173.45 points, or 1 percent, to 16,141.74. The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 15.21 points, or 0.8 percent, to 1,862.49 and the Nasdaq composite dropped 11.85 points, or 0.3 percent, to 4,215.32.

The relatively modest declines, however, masked what was frightening ride for investors. At one point, the Nasdaq flirted with a correction, which happens when a benchmark index closes 10 percent or more below a recent peak.

Wall Street's so-called "fear index" also kept rising. The Chicago Board Options Exchange's volatility index, known as the VIX, has more than doubled over the past month: from 12 in September to 26 on Wednesday.

Government bonds also reflected deep anxiety among investors. The yield on the benchmark U.S. 10-year note slumped from 2.20 percent to below 1.91 percent in early trading Wednesday, a move of 29 basis points. As bonds prices rise, yields drop.

HBO cutting the cord, will offer streaming as a stand-alone

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Next year HBO is cutting the cord and selling its popular streaming video service HBO Go as a stand-alone product, as more Americans choose to watch the Web, not the TV. Viewers longing to see "Game of Thrones," "True Detective" and "Veep" will no longer have to pay big bucks for cable and satellite contracts. Is this the end of pay-TV as we know it?

"HBO and ESPN are the two main reasons why people have cable and satellite TV," says Forrester analyst James McQuivey. "The whole industry has eyed them for years nervous that one day they would decide to do exactly what (HBO) said they'll do in 2015. We don't know until we see pricing and packaging how rapidly this will force a change in the way pay TV operators work, but it will definitely force a change."

Millions already have canceled pay-TV subscriptions — up to 10 million U.S. households are currently broadband-only. And about 45 percent of Americans stream television shows at least once a month, according to research firm eMarketer. That number is expected to increase to 53 percent or 175 million people by 2018, it said.

Video streamers aren't falling behind on entertainment — so-called "cord-cutters" watched about 100 hours of video per month during the first half of this year, estimates the Internet research firm Sandvine. The trend accelerated as Netflix's Internet video service expanded into original programming and bought the rights to show popular cable network shows such as "Breaking Bad" and "American Horror Story." Netflix's 36 million U.S. subscribers now watch about 100 minutes of Internet video each day, calculates BTIG Research analyst Rich Greenfield, based on Netflix disclosures about its customers' overall viewership patterns. Netflix-watching accounts for about one-third of U.S. Internet traffic in the evening, according to Sandvine.

Amazon.com Inc., Yahoo Inc. and Google's YouTube also offer Internet-only series as alternatives to pay TV.

Business HIGHLIGHTS

Walmart scales back US store growth

NEW YORK — Walmart Stores Inc. plans to dramatically scale back expansion of its U.S. supercenters next year, while investing more in e-commerce.

The company also is conducting a major review of its U.S. Walmart business and will update investors on its plans early next year, executives told investors at the retailer's annual analyst meeting on Wednesday.

The review comes as it aims to revive business at Walmart discount stores, which have not recorded growth in sales at locations open at least a year for six straight quarters. The business, which accounts for 60 percent of the company's total sales, have been plagued with broader issues, including a slowly recovering economy that hasn't benefited its low-income shoppers. But the company has also been tripped up by its own mistakes like being out of stock on items shoppers want.

Supreme Court weighs generic drug dispute

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court seems divided as it considers a high-stakes patent dispute between rival pharmaceutical companies over the world's best-selling multiple sclerosis treatment.

Justices heard arguments Wednesday in a case that threatens to cut into the $4 billion-a-year profits that Israel-based Teva Pharmaceutical Industries Ltd. earns selling the drug Copaxone.

Teva claims the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit wrongly overturned five of its patents for the drug. At issue is whether the appeals court was allowed to second-guess factual findings made by a federal district court that had earlier ruled in Teva's favor.

The justices seemed split over whether patent cases should be reviewed under a different standard than other cases, where appeals courts must defer to factual findings made by lower courts.

VW nudges GM out of 2nd place in global sales race

DETROIT — Volkswagen edged out General Motors for second place in the global auto sales race during the first three quarters of the year, but Toyota was expected to keep its lead to stay in first place.

GM said Wednesday that is sold 7.37 million cars and trucks worldwide from January through September. But VW said it sold 7.4 million to nudge GM out of second place.

Toyota won't release its numbers for the first three quarters until late October. But it was in first place in the first half with sales of almost 5.1 million, and it expects the full-year figure to be 10.1 million.

Toyota finished first last year with a record 9.98 million sales. General Motors Co. finished second and VW third.

Brazilian pair boosts bid for Chiquita to $658M

NEW YORK — Two Brazilian companies are raising their bid for banana company Chiquita to approximately $658 million.

Investment firm Safra Group and juice company Cutrale Group said Wednesday that they are now offering $14 per Chiquita share, up from their previous bid of $13 per share. That's an approximately 6 percent premium to Chiquita's Tuesday closing price of $13.16.

Chiquita already has a merger agreement in place with Irish fruit importer Fyffes that would give Chiquita's stockholders nearly a 60 percent stake in the combined company under an all-stock deal. Fyffes shareholders would own about 40 percent. If the deal goes through, it would create the world's largest banana supplier.

Safra and Cutrale initially made its $13 per share, or $611 million, buyout offer to Chiquita in August. Chiquita agreed to talk with the companies and said in September that it would open its books to them.

FESTIVAL FUROR

Battle with seafood fest is bad form

Fish or fishy — that's your choice for the second weekend of November, when a decades-old community event will, for the first time, be competing for its share of the bounty.

The Homosassa Seafood Festival is the primary fundraiser of the Homosassa Civic Club, which funnels the event's proceeds to various civic clubs and organizations. Prior to this year, that weekend was the festival's alone, as organizers of the county's festivals observed the unwritten rule that they would avoid competing with each other. It's a rule that apparently didn't make its way to the ears of Lori Greene in time. Greene, who owns and operates Elite Services & Events LLC, has planned the Great Florida Yard Sale for the same weekend. The inaugural yard sale, based on similar annual events elsewhere in the nation, is slated to be a 15-mile swath of vendors on U.S. 19 stretching from U.S. 98 to the Crystal River Mall.

THE ISSUE:
The Great Florida Yard Sale.

OUR OPINION:
Event could do more good by stepping on fewer toes.

Greene's event sounds fun, but interviews with her have raised more questions than they've answered.

Greene is a longtime Homosassa resident who operates a for-profit events-planning business, yet she claims to have been unaware of the Homosassa Seafood Festival, now going into its fourth decade. If you were an events planner who had been living in a small community for many years, do you think you would be aware of one of the premiere annual festivals in your community?

She claims the event is a fundraiser for veterans organizations, yet expects to make roughly $3,000 from the sale of space to vendors, of which 90 percent — $2,700 — would benefit veterans. If your primary goal was to organize a fundraiser to benefit veterans, wouldn't you try to plan an event that has a better chance of raising more money, such as a golf tournament or auction?

Furthermore, the two organizations Greene claims she'll donate the proceeds to — the Veterans Economic Development Center Inc. and the Mission in Citrus homeless shelter — are organizations which serve veterans primarily, but not broadly. The Veterans Economic Development Center helps companies owned by disabled veterans deal with the government, and Mission in Citrus focuses on assisting veterans. The Great Florida Yard Sale has also failed to garner the endorsement of any of the county's many veterans service organizations, a conspicuous omission given the doggedly benevolent nature of those groups. You have to ask: If you wanted to organize an event to benefit veterans, wouldn't you seek to benefit as many as possible, and wouldn't you partner with organizations whose clout is likely to benefit your event?

Until very recently, Greene was apparently unwilling to meet with the county to obtain the proper permit needed to put on the yard sale, insisting she'd obtained approval when she hadn't. Her event has now received the requisite stamp of approval from the government. In August, Greene addressed the dispute with the seafood festival by telling the Chronicle, "We strongly believe it will enhance the seafood event. We will work with them."

We think they would have appreciated that.

Given the inconsistency of Greene's statements and her unwillingness to cooperate with both county government and the organizers of the Homosassa Seafood Festival, we are skeptical of the motives underpinning the Great Florida Yard Sale. To us, this smells like a business opportunity garnished with charity, and a badly timed one at that.

What is pickleball?

I'm looking at the newspaper this morning, which is Monday (Oct. 6) and I see down here on Sound Off, someone's asking about pickleball. What is pickleball?

Editor's note: According to the USA Pickleball Association website, pickleball is played with a paddle which is larger than a ping-pong paddle but smaller than a tennis racquet. The game combines elements of ping-pong, tennis and badminton and is played on a court 20 feet by 44 feet. The ball resembles a whiffle ball. The game was invented in 1965 near Seattle. The nearest court providing public access is at Coehadjoe Park in Ocala. They offer Drop-in Pickleball at 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. every Tuesday. They provide the paddles and balls and staff often assists in getting games started. The park is at 4225 NE 35 St. Ocala. The phone number is 352-671-8560.

Can you eat 'em?

I'm wondering, what is pickleball? Are pickleballs good to eat? A pickleball court — is that when you go to court? Do you need a lawyer? What's with pickleball? Never heard of it.

LETTERS to the Editor

Capitalism works

Nancy Nehring's letter "Raising wages raises prosperity" is some really bad economics. It is full of obsolete data, unconstitutional thought and is an outright plea for socialism, or worse. It's based on Obama's agenda of class warfare and fair share economics.

This country was founded and became a great nation based on equality of opportunity, not equality of outcome. American entrepreneurship and free enterprise built this country, not some over reaching, over controlling nanny state socialist government.

The data is outdated when you say Seattle and San Francisco have the highest job growth rates in the country. You used old data. They did experience a little technology boom a couple of years ago, but their claim to fame today is the highest minimum wage rates. The cities for 2014 and the projection for the next three years in order of job growth are Naples, Austin, McAllen, Greeley, Dallas, Cape Coral, Raleigh, Port St. Lucie, Houston and San Antonio. That's five in Texas and three in Florida, my favorite low tax rate states. I just returned from a few days in Houston and all I can say is "OMG."

I don't know where you came up with your fundamental law of capitalism, but it's not even close. It's certainly not "if workers have more wages, businesses have more customers." It's really about market equilibrium. Let's talk about the four basic rights of capitalism as enshrined in our constitution.

The four basic rights that form the foundation of capitalism are the rights to private property, the right to keep all profits made after taxes, the right of choice and the right to compete with other businesses.

I'm glad you choose Sam Walton to pick on, because the history of his company is an example of everything good about capitalism. You suggest compelling Walmart to increase the wages of each employee $10,000 a year. You didn't actually use the word "compel," but given the rights listed above, I don't see how else you can accomplish this. You just took $10 billion that didn't belong to you and redistributed it to someone else who it didn't belong to either all in the name of fairness.

Mexico is a poor country. Right? No, dead wrong. At $12 a day median income, they are up there with the high rollers. They are in the 77th percentile of income in the world. They make more money than 76 percent of the rest of the world, and 20 percent of their population is here because they can make even more here than in Mexico.

Here is the thing that should be obvious but somehow the left doesn't get. In Nancy's scenario, she lifts 1 million Walmart employees to a better life — not much better, but a little better. You still have 5.5 billion people living below the standard of Mexico, and you are out of Walmarts. You'd need 5,500 more Walmarts just to bump the worst of the worst from $2 a day to $12 a day. You can completely blow off ever getting them to our standards. This doesn't work in microeconomics, like Detroit, and it doesn't work in macroeconomics. I'm not hard-hearted, but I'm also not stupid. Capitalism works, socialism does not. Do the numbers.

Do you want it or not?

Chronicle publisher Gerry Mulligan seems to believe that the referendum proposing a one percent sales tax on discretionary items will fail.

He may be right. It could fail because we Americans just don't like taxes.

Well, there's good news. There is a system whereby all government services are offered free: socialism.

Because the government owns the asphalt plant and the paving company, they can repair your neighborhood streets at no cost to you.

All you have to do is wait. And wait. And wait.

On the other hand, under our oppressive capitalist system, we have to pay our government if we want our streets paved. The good news is that under our inhuman democratic system, we have a choice: the referendum.

We can uphold the great American principle of opposing taxes and vote the referendum down.

We needn't worry. The county is going to fix our streets. They will hire a private company to do it and pay them with money derived from our property taxes.

All we have to do is wait....

The referendum is simply the county's way of asking us whether we want to or not.

Democratic challenger, former Republican Gov. Charlie Crist, left, and Florida Republican Gov. Rick Scott, shake hands after participating in their second debate on Wednesday in Davie. It was sponsored by the Florida Press Association and Leadership Florida.

GOVERNOR

preceded Scott as governor before he switched parties from Republican to Democrat.

The candidates disagreed on gay marriage and Florida's "stand your ground" law, as well as how each has handled education and the environment. They also blamed each other for rising utility costs.

When the candidates were asked if justice was served when neighborhood watch volunteer George Zimmerman was acquitted of murder for fatally shooting unarmed teenager Trayvon Martin last year, Crist used the opportunity to suggest amending the stand your ground law, which allows use of deadly force if people are in fear for their lives.

"Everyone believes in that American premise and it is the right thing to do to defend yourself and your property," Crist said. "But when it gets to the point where you have a statute on the books that allows the instigator ... to end up killing another human being after they started the incident, there is something fundamentally wrong with that law."

Scott said Martin's death was tragic, but the law should remain as is.

"I believe in the right to defend yourself. I can't imagine losing a child like that but I have talked to sheriffs and police chiefs," Scott said. "I stand with them that we need to have the existing law in place."

As he has done throughout the campaign, Scott blamed Crist for rising unemployment during the recession and took credit for lower unemployment during the recovery.

"Charlie is the zero-wage governor: 832,000 people went from wages to zero wages when Charlie was governor," Scott said.

Crist quickly shot back.

"Rick, there you go again, trying to blame the global economic meltdown on me. It is unbelievable that he would continue to say that, but he says it. And he also says he created all these new jobs all by himself," said Crist. "You just can't trust Rick. And it's sad. It's unfortunate."

Scott also tried to blame Crist for a law that allowed Duke Energy to collect money from customers for a nuclear power plant on Florida's Gulf Coast that will never be built.

"That's not true. That was Jeb Bush," Crist said to audience applause.

Bush signed the bill in 2006 that Scott referred to, but Crist signed a separate bill amending the law to add language that also allowed power plants to charge customers for the cost to run transmission lines from nuclear power plants.

Scott was asked if Florida's constitutional ban on gay marriage was discriminatory, but he refused to directly answer the question, even when asked a second time. He did say he supports traditional marriage.

Crist said he supports gay marriage.

"Who is it for us to tell other people who to love and what is it in our right to tell other people who to marry?" Crist said.

Scott then pointed out Crist supported the gay marriage ban when it passed in 2008.

"We don't know what Charlie believes on this issue because he's taken every side on this issue," Scott said.

Statue of WWII journalist has typo

Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Ernie Pyle's statue needs an edit.

A bronze statue of the famed World War II journalist on the Bloomington campus of Indiana University misspells the word "correspondent" by dropping an "r."

University officials found the mistake Wednesday, two days before the sculpture is to be formally dedicated, the Herald-Times reported.

Sculptor Tuck Langland said it won't be easy to correct the misspelling, which is located on Pyle's jacket, but it will be done — just not by Friday.

"We're going to fix it," said Langland, an IU-South Bend professor emeritus of sculpture.

The statue depicts Pyle sitting on an ammunition box with his typewriter, notes and a coffee cup on a table. Langland has said the scene is meant to show how Pyle spent so much time during the war with average soldiers.

The school commissioned the larger-than-life piece as a way to pay tribute to Pyle, who attended the university in the 1920s. It sits outside Franklin Hall, the future home of the Indiana University Media School.

It's not the first time an object inspired by Pyle's heroism has needed a correction. In 2002, toy maker Hasbro Inc. produced new packaging for a G.I. Joe doll modeled after the war correspondent because the original packaging said Pyle attended Indiana State University.

Pyle, who grew up near Dana, left Indiana University in 1923, just short of finishing a journalism degree.

Gay marriage arrives in Idaho

BOISE, Idaho — Gay couples started to marry in one of the most conservative states in the nation Wednesday as more than 100 same-sex couples gathered early at the Boise courthouse and counted down the seconds before the clerk's office opened.

The couples cheered and streamed inside at 9 a.m. as Idaho became the latest state to recognize gay marriages in a burst of court rulings nationwide.

"It's been such a long time coming," Councilwoman Maryanne Jordan said. "It's a historic day for Boise and Idaho."

A crowd sang out "here comes the brides" as Rachael and Amber Beierle and Shelia Robertson and Andrea Altmayer headed toward City Hall.

Courts reject Ariz. immigration law

PHOENIX — Arizona's authority to confront its illegal immigration woes was again reined in Wednesday when a federal appeals court threw out a 2006 voter-approved law denying bail to people in the country illegally who are charged with certain crimes.

The decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals follows other battles over the state's immigration policies, including rulings that struck down much of Arizona's landmark 2010 immigration enforcement law.

On Wednesday, an 11-member 9th Circuit panel struck down a law that denies bail to immigrants who are in the country illegally and have been charged with a range of felonies that include shoplifting, aggravated identity theft, sexual assault and murder.

The court said no studies, statistics or other evidence showed that people in the country illegally pose a greater risk of fleeing from authorities than people in the country legally.

Psychic admits to duping rich heir

PORTLAND, Ore. — A psychic has pleaded guilty to conspiracy and tax charges after authorities said she duped the heir to an Oregon timber fortune of millions of dollars and used some of it to travel with her boyfriend and buy expensive cars.

Rachel Lee, 43, entered her plea on Tuesday to conspiracy to commit wire fraud and conspiracy to commit money laundering , as well as failing to file personal income taxes.

Lee operated psychic shops in Bend, Canby, St. Helens and Portland, but court documents show she didn't use that skill to separate Ralph Raines Jr. from his money.

Raines, now 67, met Lee in 2004.

An indictment said Rachel Lee gained control of the family's financial and business affairs, and started siphoning money for her personal use.

Deficit at lowest level since 2008

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The deficit for the just completed 2014 budget year was $483 billion, the lowest of President Barack Obama's six years in office, the government reported Wednesday.

It's the lowest since 2008 and, when measured against the size of the economy, is below the average deficits of the past 40 years. The deficit equaled 2.8 percent of gross domestic product, which is the economy's total output of goods and services.

By comparison, the deficit for 2013 was $680 billion, or 4.1 percent of GDP.

Here's an easier way to understand why the new numbers are good news: The government borrows 14 cents for every dollar it spends; six years ago, it was 40 cents.

"This is a return to fiscal normalcy," White House budget director Shaun Donovan said.

But there could be trouble ahead.

The retirement of those in the baby boom generation is projected to spike the deficit in coming years. The Congressional Budget Office warns that the current trajectory is unsustainable and eventually could lead to a fiscal crisis.

For now, slow growth in government spending, including on health care, and increased tax revenues have combined to produce rosier deficit numbers.

Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew said it's an indication the economy is far healthier than when Obama became president in January 2009. Lew hailed "the most rapid reduction in the budget deficit since World War II."

Obama inherited an economy in recession. The deficit topped $1 trillion for each of his first four years in office, including a record $1.4 trillion in 2009.

"Our economy is better off now than when the president took office by almost every measure," Lew said.

Downward trend for deficits

The difference between what the federal government spends and what it takes in shrank in 2014 to the lowest level of Barack Obama's presidency.

New Ebola case found

Nurse helped care for African patient; traveled on airliner before diagnosis

Associated Press

DALLAS — The Ebola crisis in the U.S. took another alarming turn Wednesday with word that a second Dallas nurse caught the disease from a patient and flew across the Midwest aboard an airliner the day before she fell ill, even though government guidelines should have kept her off the plane.

Amid growing concern, President Barack Obama canceled a campaign trip to address the outbreak and vowed that his administration would respond in a "much more aggressive way" to Ebola cases in the United States.

Though it was not clear how the nurse contracted the virus, the case represented just the latest instance in which the disease that has ravaged one of the poorest corners of the earth — West Africa — also managed to find weak spots in one of the world's most advanced medical systems.

The second nurse was identified as 29-year-old Amber Joy Vinson. Medical records provided to The Associated Press by Thomas Eric Duncan's family showed she inserted catheters, drew blood and dealt with Duncan's body fluids.

Duncan, who was diagnosed with Ebola after coming to the U.S. from Liberia, died Oct. 8.

Kent State University in Ohio, where three of Vinson's relatives work, confirmed she was the latest patient.

Even though the nurse did not report having a fever until Tuesday, the day after she returned home, the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said she should not have boarded a commercial flight.

The nurse also knew before heading home that another nurse, Nina Pham, had been diagnosed with Ebola, and she had a slightly elevated temperature — 99.5 degrees, according to government officials.

While in Cleveland, she was contacted by health officials and told that her health would need to be more closely monitored for Ebola, the CDC said. It was unclear whether she was told not to fly.

From now on, CDC Director Tom Frieden said, no one else involved in Duncan's care will be allowed to travel "other than in a controlled environment." He cited guidelines that permit charter flights or travel by car but no public transportation.

On its website, the CDC says all people possibly exposed to Ebola should restrict their travels — including by avoiding commercial flights — for 21 days.

Ebola patients are not considered contagious until they have symptoms. Frieden said it was unlikely that others on the plane were at risk because the nurse was not vomiting or bleeding.

Even so, the CDC is alerting the 132 passengers who were aboard Frontier Airlines Flight 1143 from Cleveland to Dallas-Fort Worth on Monday "because of the proximity in time between the evening flight and first report of illness the following morning." Officials are asking passengers to call the health agency so they can be monitored. The nurse flew from Dallas to Cleveland on Friday, Oct. 10.

Kent State said it was asking the workers related to Vinson to stay off campus for 21 days "out of an abundance of caution."

Her Ebola diagnosis was confirmed Wednesday.

The CDC's investigation suggests that health care workers were at highest risk from Sept. 28 to Sept. 30, the three days before Duncan was diagnosed. Both nurses who contracted Ebola worked on those days and had extensive contact with him when he had vomiting and diarrhea, Frieden said.

Medical records indicate that the workers wore protective equipment, including gowns, gloves and face shields during that time. The first mention in the records that they wore hazmat suits was on Sept. 30.

In his most urgent comments on the spread of the disease, Obama also warned that in an age of frequent travel, the disease could spread globally if the world doesn't respond to the "raging epidemic in West Africa."

Nurse's travels

A second Texas nurse who has tested positive for Ebola was on a Cleveland to Dallas flight the day before she was diagnosed.

Terror fight dubbed 'Operation Inherent Resolve'

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It's less punchy than previous nicknames for U.S. conflicts in the Middle East — remember Operation Desert Storm and its thunderous attacks against Saddam Hussein? — but the Pentagon has finally named its fight against Islamic State militants in Iraq and Syria: Operation Inherent Resolve.

The naming, which took weeks of deliberation behind closed doors at U.S. Central Command and at the Pentagon, is part of an effort to organize a long-term military campaign.

The staff of Army Gen. Martin Dempsey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made the final decision, said his spokesman, Col. Ed Thomas. Thomas offered no details.

Military operations are routinely given official names, in part for administrative reasons.

But they are meant also to bolster public support and international credibility. The U.S.-led effort to protect Kurds who fled their homes in northern Iraq in the aftermath of the 1991 Gulf War, for example, was called Operation Provide Comfort. A U.S. military disaster relief mission in Bangladesh that same year was Operation Sea Angel. The U.S. military's effort against Ebola in West Africa is called Operation United Assistance.

Royals crowned AL Champs

Royals hold off Orioles 2-1, finish ALCS sweep

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo — After nearly three decades spent trying to return to the playoffs, Kansas City is taking its perfect postseason ride all the way to the World Series.

With more dominant defense, an opportunistic offense that plated two runs in the first inning, and a bullpen that shut down the Baltimore Orioles once again, Greg Holland and the wild-card Royals wrapped up a sweep of the AL Championship Series with a 2-1 victory on Wednesday.

Next stop: The Royals' first Fall Classic since 1985. They'll face the winner of the NLCS between the Giants and Cardinals. San Francisco leads that series 2-1.

"It's been an amazing run. This is great," said left fielder Alex Gordon, who made another jarring catch. "We've been playing pretty good baseball. It's nothing better than when you win. Today, same old story: good pitching, good defense and scratch out a win."

Outfielder Lorenzo Cain was selected MVP of the ALCS, batting .533 and leading an outstanding defense.

After holding the Orioles to three hits in Game 3 on Tuesday night, Jason Vargas and the Royals bullpen nearly turned the trick again. Kelvin Herrera and Wade Davis ushered the game to Holland, who matched Dennis Eckersley's record by saving his fourth game of the best-of-seven series.

After Holland got J.J. Hardy to ground out to third base for the final out, the Royals spilled onto the infield in a wild celebration. Fireworks shot over the crown-shaped scoreboard in center field, and a blue-clad sellout crowd that included Royals great George Brett let out a roar.

Kansas City will host the first two World Series games beginning Tuesday. Coincidentally, it was the Cardinals who the Royals beat for their only World Series title in a dramatic seven-game series.

CRYSTAL RIVER – The only drama came when Sam Alford and Mackenzie Woods came near a photo finish running in the Citrus County Cross Country Championships boys race Wednesday at Crystal River High School.

Alford, a senior, just nipped Woods by two seconds. Alford had a 16:53 and Woods had a 16:55. Chase Benoist made the top three exclusively an All-Lecanto High group. Benoist had an 18:27. Crystal River High's Caleb Russo took fourth with an 18:17 time.

Both were physically spent and sitting or lying on the ground after the race.

"It wasn't as hot as other races," Alford said. "Going fast makes you hotter. This is the first time I have won the county championship. I'm tired."

"This race we did (pace each other)," Woods said. "There were a couple of muddy spots but I did well."

The Lecanto boys won the county team title easily with 19 points. Crystal River was second with 43 points.

It was the third straight boys title for the Panthers.

"I thought the boys did great," Lecanto boys coach Roselle Lattin said. "It's a cooler day. The boys ran really well. We got five in the top seven. Good race overall, great competition. Mackenzie had a really great freshmen year. He continues to drop time. That's his PR. Sam and Mackenzie really work well together. My three, four and five have been improving all year."

On to regionals despite weather

HERNANDO — It took a while — a full day longer, in fact — and there was certainly more time spent on the course than the girls were used to. But in the end, there were no other surprises as Citrus, Crystal River and Lecanto all advanced to play in next Tuesday's 2A regional at the Black Bear Golf Club in Eustis.

And Citrus will have the honor of taking both the individual 2A-7 champion as well as the team district title with it on that road trip.

The rain-delayed 2A-7 district tournament, held at Citrus Hills Golf and Country Club in Hernando, started Tuesday and was finally finished Wednesday afternoon. Although they struggled somewhat by their standards, the Hurricanes still managed to capture the trophy with a 437 team total. Crystal River was second at 457, with Lecanto third at 512 and South Sumter fourth with a 544.

Medalist honors were captured by Citrus junior Camrin Kersh, whose 91 edged Lecanto's Maddison Polazzo by a single stroke. Isabeau Van Der Waal of Crystal River placed third with a 102.

"You just never know," Citrus coach Dave Hamilton said. "On the first day, the girls were in a groove, they were playing well. But anything can happen when you have a rain delay and you have to put it off for 24 or 36 hours or whatever it may be, and then just come back and try to pick up where you left off.

"But these girls have worked hard all year. They are not perfect, but they are working hard to get there."

The No. 1 golfers on all four teams had only the par-three final hole to negotiate on Wednesday; their teammates weren't so fortunate, some of them having six holes to finish.

"I'm happy (I'm the medalist) but I didn't play as well as I

Sankey next in line?

SEC's Sankey shaping future of college sports

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Greg Sankey is limping around on a knee that is feeling the effects of 41 marathons, most of which he has run during the last 12 years when he has been working as the Southeastern Conference commissioner's right-hand man.

A few years back Sankey decided to run a marathon a month for a year. He ended up doing it for 15 straight months, and one month he ran two.

The 50-year-old upstate New Yorker-turned-honorary southerner has never shied away from taking on challenges. And he may have a big one coming up next year.

As the SEC's executive associate commissioner and chief operating officer since March 2012, he's been handling day-to-day operations while Commissioner Mike Slive worked on major projects such as the SEC Network and the College Football Playoff.

The 74-year-old Slive announced Tuesday he will retire in July 2015. Sankey could very well be his replacement.

"Bottom line, I think he has the potential to be one of the truly great leaders in intercollegiate athletics," Conference USA Commissioner Britton Banowsky said.

The foundation of college sports is being threatened in the courts, and their structure is being revamped. Sankey embraces the task of plotting a course for their future.

"Part of my effort to educate myself is trying to learn history. Where we've been and why," he said in a lengthy interview with the AP at the start of the football season. "One of the things you learn is it has always been a bit of a struggle, the tension between the existence of college athletics on campus.

"From a core standpoint it exists on our campuses because it's centered on education. Sometimes there's stress in there. There are problematic stories. There are volumes of great stories."

Conference looks to future, backfield sets example

Formidable freshmen emerging across SEC

Associated Pres

BATON ROUGE, La. — The latest performances of Georgia's Nick Chubb and LSU's Leonard Fournette have firmly established them as players to watch in the Southeastern Conference — for the rest of this season and perhaps the next two.

Both ran for about 140 yards, serving as examples that freshmen are flourishing in the mighty SEC.

All across the league, coaches at programs ranging from the top to the bottom of the standings are showing they're willing to let recruits fresh out of high school compete for major roles — and many are showing they deserve it.

Chubb's rise was on the sudden side because he was predictably placed in a backup role behind Heisman Trophy candidate Todd Gurley. But when Gurley was suspended indefinitely last week because of accusations he violated NCAA rules by signing autographs for money, Chubb was thrust into a starting role. He delivered with 143 yards on 38 carries in a 34-0 rout of Missouri, letting fans of 10th-ranked know that the Bulldogs' running game could continue to be a force for the immediate and long-term future.

"I knew going into the game that obviously we can still win with Chubb in there," Georgia quarterback Hutson Mason said, adding that the only thing he worried about was Chubb's durability. "The only thing I remember is him taking some hard licks and getting back up. He's just a tough cat. A lot of times, you don't really appreciate what a guy is doing in the SEC as an 18-year-old rookie who just graduated from high school, carrying the team on his back."

At Texas A&M, defensive end Myles Garrett has 7 1/2 sacks, which is an Aggies freshman record. Speedy Noil is a fixture in the No. 21 Aggies' passing game, with 27 catches for 360 yards and three touchdowns. He is also the Aggies primary punt returner.

"I don't bring guys here to stand next to me on the sideline. The best guys play," Texas A&M coach Kevin Sumlin said recently. "Experience is relative. Just because you're a junior, if you haven't played, what kind of experience is that? We're recruiting at a level where guys are coming into this program to compete and play."

At No. 3 Mississippi, freshman defensive end Marquis Haynes is coming off a two-sack performance at Texas A&M last weekend.

The leading punter in the SEC is Alabama freshman JK Scott, with an average of 46.7-yards per punt. The No. 7 Crimson Tide is also starting a freshman at left tackle, though the 6-foot-6, 323-pound Cameron Robinson hardly looks like one.

Rebuilding teams with newer coaches are bound to have more youth in the lineup. That holds true with second-year coach Butch Jones at Tennessee.

Freshman Jalen Hurd is the No. 1 running back and one of five true freshmen starters on offense, along with tight end Ethan Wolf, who has 15 catches for 134 yards. Already, Tennessee is looking more competitive, raising hopes that the Volunteers will be a rising force in the SEC East in coming seasons.

"It's exciting to see how much time we have to get bigger and stronger and faster and smarter and see what things are going to happen," Wolf said.

Freshman Stanley "Boom" Williams has helped spark Kentucky's resurgence under second-year coach Mark Stoops with 91.6 all-purpose yards per game as a rusher, receiver and returner.

"He definitely helps us and gives us that added dimension of a home run guy," Stoops said.

But even at LSU, where Les Miles is in his 10th season, freshmen have risen to prominence after several top Tigers left early for the NFL, including 1,000-yard receivers Odell Beckham Jr. and Jarvis Landry. Now true freshman Malachi Dupre is the Tigers' second leading receiver in yards (257) and touchdowns (4).

Early production was expected of Fournette, one of the most sought-after running back recruits in the nation. He needed a few games to adjust to the speed and size of SEC defenses, but his performance at Florida indicated he's comfortable with that now.

He ran right over Gators defenders for the first of his two scoring runs last Saturday night, and now leads all LSU rushers with 504 yards and 6 TDs, giving him a chance to approach 1,000 yards rushing in his first year out of high school.

"Those freshmen that come to our place, we expect you to make a very significant contribution and to play a big role," Miles said. "It's kind of how we're built right now, with the early leaving to the NFL and the absolute requirement that that freshmen classes come in with the ability athletically and emotionally to step on to the field and do those things."

'Hayne Plane' heads overseas

Jarryd Hayne quits rugby league to try out for NFL

Associated Press

Jarryd Hayne stunned the rugby league world by quitting his long-time Australian club suddenly Wednesday to chase a dream of playing in the National Football League.

Only two weeks after being voted as the best player in the National Rugby League — claiming the prize for the second time — and a day after being selected again for Australia's national team, Hayne revealed his career move in a statement posted on the Parramatta club's website, and later confirmed it during an emotional news conference in Sydney.

News of the announcement was broadcast almost instantly on mainstream and social media Down Under, and a leading newspaper described Hayne's pending move to the United States for a shot at the NFL as one of the "biggest bombshells" in Australian sport.

The 26-year-old fullback was reported to have met with Seattle Seahawks team officials recently. On Wednesday, Hayne did not identify which NFL clubs — if any — were interested in offering him a tryout.

"Today I can officially announce that I will be heading to the United States to pursue an opportunity to play American football," Hayne said. "I'll be a free agent. It will give me the opportunity to go over there and train and potentially, hopefully, play NFL one day."

Hayne has been part of the Parramatta club since he was 13, and decided he needed a new challenge.

"I'm always telling people to chase their dreams and follow their hearts — if I don't live by that I'm not being honest with myself," he said. "I'm so passionate about the challenge that lies ahead for me, not only as an athlete but more so as a person. It's the hardest decision I have ever had to make in my life ... but for me to grow as an athlete and a person I feel this is the right step to take."

Hayne said if he was unsuccessful in his bid to break into the NFL and returned to rugby league, he'd rejoin Parramatta.

"I'm leaving knowing that I have signed a 'lifetime agreement' with the Eels, so if I return to the NRL, it will be to Parramatta," he said.

Renowned for his acceleration and counter-attacking prowess in the rugby league, Hayne said he believes he has the skills to make it as either a punt returner or kick returner.

"I believe I have the speed, I'm a quick learner, I feel things out really quickly," he said. "I have no doubt it's going to be tough. Ultimately it's a 12-month plan, going over there and trying to make a train-on team. For me to do that I need to start preparing for that around January or February." The 2014 NFL season is underway, so he's aiming for 2015.

Hayne travelled to the United States for a personal tour of the Seahawks and University of Washington Huskies' operations in September, less than three months after speaking to Fairfax Media in Australia about his desire to play American football.

He had two training sessions with UTS, a Sydney-based American football team, at the end of the 2013 NRL season and said "it's something that excites me."

"I actually spoke to Reggie Bush in depth about it when he was over here," he told Fairfax in July. "We were talking about different plays, what Detroit was like, what Miami was like and New Orleans was like. It interests me."

Previously linked with moves to play Australian Rules football, Hayne — dubbed the "Hayne Plane" — was one of the most marketable and valuable properties in the NRL and could have commanded one of the most lucrative contracts in the sport.

He was crucial in leading New South Wales to its drought-breaking win in the State of Origin series this year, ending Queensland's eight-year reign as champion in the biggest grudge match in the sport, and helped Parramatta move up the NRL standings.

Hayne's agent, Wayne Beavis, told The Associated Press that his player's "power and speed" made Hayne perfect for the NFL and "he'll even be able to wear a helmet and pads." In rugby league, no helmets are worn and shoulder gear is lightweight and optional.

Hayne said he'd been considering the move for more than two years, and thought he probably should have made his decision 12 months ago.

"I've known the deadline has been looming for me to make this call," he said, "and I believe the right time is now."

Krejci, Smith lead Bruins past Red Wings in SO

Associated Press

DETROIT — David Krejci and Reilly Smith both scored in regulation and again in the shootout as the Boston Bruins beat the Detroit Red Wings 3-2 Wednesday night.

The Bruins outshot Detroit 35-18 in regulation, and Jimmy Howard made three key saves in overtime — the last to stop Torey Krug at point-blank range. Howard, though, couldn't stop Krejci and Smith in the shootout, while neither Gustav Nyquist or Andrej Nestrasil could get their shots on net.

Nyquist tied the score at 2:56 of the third period, snapping a wrist shot past Bruins goalie Tuukka Rask to end Detroit's streak of nine scoreless power plays. Tomas Tatar also scored for the Red Wings.

Boston had two great chances in the final minute of regulation, but Howard made a pad save on Dougie Hamilton, then knocked away Simon Gagne's attempt to put in the rebound.

Flames 2, Blackhawks 1, OT

CHICAGO — Jonas Hiller made 49 saves and Mikael Backlund scored at 4:35 of overtime, lifting the Calgary Flames to a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Blackhawks.

Dennis Wideman also scored for the Flames, who were coming off a 3-2 win at Nashville on Tuesday.

The Blackhawks controlled the action for much of the night, enjoying a whopping 50-18 advantage in shots on goal. But Hiller was outstanding and Backlund used a wrist shot to beat Corey Crawford on his glove side for his first goal of the season.

Andrew Shaw scored in the third period for Chicago, and Crawford had 16 saves.

Bo Jackson has no more advice for Jameis Winston

TALLAHASSEE — Former Heisman winner Bo Jackson says Florida State quarterback Jameis Winston needs to make some changes in his life, but Jackson is done trying to help.

Jackson said on the Jim Rome Show Tuesday Winston has not listened to his guidance in the past and now has no plans to reach out again.

Jackson says, "I'm the type of person, I will go out of my way to help anybody. ... (But) if you can't take that advice and learn from it, then I've got nothing else to do with the situation. You're on your own."

Both are from Bessemer, Alabama; Winston has said he looked up to Jackson.

Winston is facing a code of conduct hearing after a former FSU student said he sexually assaulted her in December 2012.

thought I could," said Kersh, adding her tee shots are usually where she stands out. "I can hit my drives pretty straight down the middle, but they don't go very far."

She added, "I'm really excited to be going to Regionals with my team."

Other scorers for Citrus were Sara Taulbee at 109, Lisanne Van-Asdook with a 111 and Kayla Woodard at 126.

Crystal River's all-underclassmen team included a 110 from Olivia Diop, a 122 from Katelin Clardy and a 123 from Brook Disaber.

"I'm very, very happy, the girls did a wonderful job," Crystal River coach Claudia Sebold said. "My girls are accustomed; they know nothing is written in stone. They came out and said, 'Let's do better than we did yesterday.'"

Sebold's team, which featured three freshmen and two sophomores in the starting five, was as she put it, "not used to playing 18 (holes) — none of these girls are." But if they were tired when Tuesday's round was stopped, they were energized by Wednesday.

For Lecanto, Polazzo's 92 was certainly the highlight. Other scorers for the Panthers were Keirah Tetenburn with a 110; Nicki Poulis with a 147; and Lauren Peters with a 163.

PANTHERS

In the girls race, Lecanto junior Claire Farnsworth easily won the individual title with a 19:29. Crystal River High freshman Jillian Felton, who wasn't feeling well, finished second with a 20:12. Citrus High senior Alyssa Weber was third with a 21:12. Lecanto's Katie Mattingly was fourth with a 21:55.

Kaitlyn Thompson surprised her coach by taking fifth with a 22:30. Senior Pirate Lexi Ulseth was sixth with a personal record of 22:39.

Seven Rivers Christian's Paige Eckart was seventh with a 23:12.

"It was kind of muddy out here," Lecanto High girls assistant coach Steve Farnsworth said. "Under the conditions, that's a very good time (for Claire). The girls ran well but not quite well enough to beat Crystal River. They are a little stronger in the three, four and five than us. Katie (Mattingly) ran well."

"All of them just had an excellent day," Crystal River girls coach Deirdra Byrne said. "It was an unbelievable performance. Lexi Pred (personal record), Jillian Gamble and Cheyenne Dohner had a PR. Marin Williams had an excellent race. Overall, I couldn't have asked for anything more especially from a young team."

SEC

Sankey grew up in Auburn, New York, and went to college to be an engineer. That lasted about two years. He said he still remembers the spot in the garage of his childhood home where he told his father, a pipefitter, that he wanted to teach and coach basketball.

"So I became a phys. ed. major," he said. "It's like the most extreme transition you can make educationally."

Intellectual curiosity and willingness to make do have guided Sankey's career. His first leap of faith was moving to Natchitoches, Louisiana, almost three decades ago, so he could take a job as an intern in the athletic department at Northwestern State, making "$500 dollars a month, stuffing envelopes."

He eventually moved to the league office at the Southland Conference, working in compliance. At 31, he became commissioner.

"My Dad, I took him to the Final Four when I was Southland commissioner. He said, 'I think you made the right decision,'" Sankey said.

When Slive became SEC commissioner in 2002, he walked into a conference that was an NCAA compliance wreck. Nine of the 12 programs were either under investigation or on probation. Soon after he started, a 10th was being investigated.

Fixing the problem was Slive's top priority, and he hired Sankey to help him.

"We both saw and understood the issues and what it would take to make the cultural change that we have been successful making," Slive said.

The SEC currently has three programs on NCAA probation, but Sankey proudly notes the problems have been more isolated incidents and that schools are better equipped to root out problems.

"We have 12 compliance staff on some of our campuses now versus one or two paying attention. Our coaches know these are not just compliance issues," he said. "These are matters that relate to institutional integrity from the public."

Sankey's strength is breaking down complex issues and making them more accessible, Mississippi State athletic director Scott Stricklin said.

"Anytime we're in a meeting and the agenda comes up with NCAA issues whether it's legislation or autonomy discussions, it's the Greg Sankey show," Stricklin said. "He's the guy that walks us through things that a lot of times can be a lot of minutiae."

Sankey has played a pivotal role behind the scenes in NCAA reform that has led to the SEC, Atlantic Coast Conference, Big Ten, Big 12 and Pac-12 being given legislative autonomy.

"He's been tracking it. Developing it. Writing the white paper, presenting the white papers. Taking feedback. Making modifications. His value to the ongoing reform effort, it just can't be overstated," Banowsky said.

Having seen life from both sides of Division I, SEC and FCS, Sankey has been a bridge-builder during reform.

"He has the ability to listen and understand the important interests of others, and he has the ability to see what's important to his constituency and move that agenda forward and then understand where there might be conflict and try to identify ways to solve the conflict," Banowsky said.

Sankey said it's hard to predict the future of college athletics because so much could be determined by outside pressures, specifically court cases that could require more revenues being directed toward football and men's basketball players. He hopes autonomy creates a more nimble NCAA and a healthier version of college sports.

"I think the NCAA should exist, will exist and it has to foster those opportunities in this education environment," he said.

Figuring out where college sports are headed is Sankey's job.

He seems to be in it for the long run.

ROYALS

Regardless of the opponent, the Royals will carry an 11-game playoff win streak into the World Series, one shy of the major league record. That includes winning their first eight games this season, something that had never been done in postseason history. Kansas City beat Oakland in the wild card and swept the Los Angeles Angels in the Division Series.

"Man, it's incredible," said Royals first baseman Eric Hosmer, who drove in a run. "These guys every day come to play. If they're not doing it offensively, they're doing it defensively with the glove, just playing complete games and we've got guys stepping up right now."

The Orioles, meanwhile, will limp into the offseason after their first sweep in 21 playoff series, dating to the days when the club was called the St. Louis Browns.

Making his first start in nearly two weeks, Vargas shut down the vaunted Orioles lineup. The only damage he allowed came in the third inning, when Ryan Flaherty led off with a home run that just skirted the foul pole in right field.

By that point, the Royals had already manufactured a pair of runs.

Alcides Escobar singled off Orioles starter Miguel Gonzalez to open the game, and Nori Aoki was drilled on the right knee a couple pitches later. Royals manager Ned Yost then opted to bunt with Cain, one of his hottest hitters, to advance both of the runners.

It was a questionable decision so early in the game. But like almost every unorthodox move that Yost has made this postseason, it worked out perfectly — for the first sacrifice of Cain's career.

Hosmer followed with a chopping groundball, and first baseman Steve Pearce went home with it. Escobar slid safely and the ball bounded away from catcher Caleb Joseph, allowing Aoki to follow his teammate home and giving the scrappy, small-ball Royals a 2-0 lead.

After that, it was up to their defense and bullpen.

Escobar turned a pair of double plays early in the game to help Vargas escape jams, and Gordon made a spectacular catch while crashing into the left-field wall to rob Hardy of extra bases leading off the fifth inning. In the sixth, second baseman Omar Infante was in perfect position to snag Nelson Cruz's line drive and leave runners on the corners.

Herrera breezed through the seventh and Davis handled the eighth, just as they have all season, and Holland slammed the door on his fourth save of the series.

And set off of a wild celebration that had been 29 years in the making.

"It wasn't pretty. It's all right, though. We find ways to win," Gordon said. "Good teams find ways to win, and that's what we did. So we're going to keep going and hope we make it even more special here."

In the midst of it all was Yost, the often-criticized Royals manager who has guided a collection of budding young stars to baseball's grandest stage. In doing so, Yost became the first manager in major league history to win his first eight postseason games.

Now, just four more stand in the way of an improbable World Series championship.

Up In Smoke

The deer are out, conserving scents could have you seeing more of them

Special to the Chronicle

Buster Benoit of Inverness and an 8-point who was fooled by doe in estrous scent.

It's finally coming time for us to break out the old muzzle-loading rifles and take to the woods to make a little smoke. My introduction to muzzle-loading began at an early age.

My grandfather was really into the history of the American Fur Trade and the Mountain Men, and he would host black powder shoots at our family farm each fall prior to hunting season. As soon as I was old enough, I too would get to participate with my own side-lock .50-caliber Plainsman rifle.

Toby Benoit
REBEL YELL OUTDOORS

But hunting is truly my passion, that's where my fondness for the weapon really increased. I would always look forward to October for the first opportunities to take my side-lock .50-caliber Hawkin rifle out in search of backstraps. You can bet I'll be in the field this coming weekend as the season opens, sitting near the oaks and waiting on a buck.

That's where you should be too. The oaks are continuing to rain down plenty of nuts, and the deer and hogs are quite happily hanging around the oak trees cleaning up the bounty. I took a quick ride out to Flying Eagle Wildlife Management Area (WMA) here in Citrus County and found plenty sign near the water's edge, beneath the water oaks. It's wet this year, so keep an eye out for strips of dry land with water oaks and you should locate some game. The harvest has been kind of slow for that particular WMA during archery season, but I have a great feeling about the success of those fortunate enough to have drawn a quota permit for there.

The hogs appear to be plentiful to the northwest of Cottonmouth Slough, but the first rut of the season is coming on quickly and the whitetails should be moving well most parts of the day. I would recommend a good scent and call combination to peak an old buck's attention. Doe in estrous scents will be quite affective, especially when combined with an occasional series of doe bleats, to fool the bucks into thinking a willing doe is nearby. When I put out my scents, I try to place them in a 25-yard radius from my treestand and I do not use the scents sparingly.

One reason why I hear so many hunters bashing the use of estrous scent early in the rut is because they try to make their 1-ounce bottle of doe in heat they bought at the local archery shop last the entire year. Friends, if you don't put it out in sufficient quantities for a buck to detect it, there's no way he can respond to it. I'll use the entire bottle of scent during the course of a single day's hunt. I understand not wanting to waste it at around $10 per bottle of the stinky stuff, but by being too conservative in its use you will miss out on seeing a lot of deer.

Give it a try, and see if you don't up your odds of blowing a little smoke out your barrel while in the field this season.

If you'd like to share your hunt stories and photos with me, send them to my email address tobybenoit@hotmail.com along with any hot hunting tips you may wish to share. God bless and good hunting.

BILLIE LIVES ON

The story of Billie the Bass, the chaos then the catch

"No ramp? What did you get us into?" my fishing buddy, Junior said.

"That's the not so good part, but the fishing can be awesome." I replied.

However, no ramp usually means what? You guessed it, no road. I always had to get a good running start from the hard road and drive down a deep rutted dirt path like there was no tomorrow to avoid getting stuck in the pond. I just knew any moment the jon boat was going to fly out of the truck and pass us on dry land and beat us to the water. And no, I didn't have four-wheel drive.

Then it was unloading the boat and toting it and all the stuff in it.

Well, the good part is no traffic, speedboats and pleasure boats, not even motorboats.

But hey, give me a jon boat I can throw in the back of truck and a transom mount trolling motor and even a car battery, back then, and I'm in.

Rick Burns
FISHING REPORT

Upon Junior's and my arrival at the orange grove lake at about 6:15 p.m., and after the first cup of thermos coffee, the sun was just starting to ease up over the horizon. The light fog was still laying low on the water, it was a bit overcast and calm, not even a breeze. Good top water time.

"Since it's your boat and trolling motor, and I'm not too familiar, would you mind navigating?" Junior said.

"Not a problem." I replied.

Until he saw how I steered. Everybody knows it's much easier to pull a boat than push one, right? So, I just turned the boat around and was actually pulling the boat, trolling backwards from the transom. A lot easier just looks a little strange. But hey, who cares about strange if it works or if you're catching fish.

We eased along the heavily banked bulrushes and lily pads, casting the Zell Rowland Pop-R's into likely spots.

A cast out, and then a twitch of the wrist, give it a "plunk, plunk," sound that bass can't stand.

After about 20 minutes of this, three decent, but not huge bass had already been caught, fought, enjoyed and released.

We then decided to head over to an eelgrass point that was extending out into the water. I had taken a few off that point in the past. Another thing that made it good was an old fence post line that extended out with it. Good ambush spot for bass.

Junior was fishing out the back, (or the front) so I made a cast out towards the end of the point.

No different than any other cast. Reeled up slack. Plunk, plunk, plunk and bam — I didn't know there was a toilet out there. The lure and water left like somebody pulled a plug.

"I'll reel in and you get ready," I said.

"Get ready for what?" Junior said.

"First, getting your line out of the way and second, helping me get this fish in the boat."

"I ain't helping you. You caught her, you land her."

I thought, yeah right, he's just talking trash. After turning and pulling the little Jon boat around for a minute, I got her near the side of the boat. How do I know it's a she? Like Ted Juraszick that makes Tibor fly reels once said, "Anything that beautiful has to be a she."

Upon time of grasping, I told, not asked, Junior to grab her.

"I am not grabbing that thing." He said. "I'm not sticking my hand in her mouth, she might bite me."

"If you don't grab that fish, you and she are going to be swimming in unison." I said.

"But I've never seen a bass that big," Junior said. "Much less put my hand in one alive and ticked off. I'm sorry, man. You're on your own."

He was serious.

I told him to take the rod. As I started to lip her, I myself was a little squeamish and especially cautious to make the grab count. Pop-R top-water plugs have plenty of trebles, and she was still plenty green and full of them.

I finally got her in the boat. No lost fish, no hooked fingers snd no drowned neighbor. As officially found out later, a nice 10lb. 2oz. largeous mouthus.

"What now?" he asked.

"Trip over", I said.

Junior echoed my reply, puzzled.

"We don't have anything to maintain this fish, so it's back home and in the freezer for her." I said. "It's going on the wall. You can't leave a fish out too long after catching it, they'll crack and discolor. Besides, we can come back tomorrow if we want, I said."

That was 10 years ago.

Well, Billie lives on because of the great world of taxidermy. We'll go over the topic of taxidermy in a future column perhaps. But Bruce Carlson in Bushnell is a fantastic taxidermist. Email or holler for contact info if needed. After it was done, then it was the gingerly seat belt ride to the house.

I don't waste anything. A lot of people don't know or realize that, but think about it. The meat doesn't stay in the mount. They got to do something with it. If you don't ask, Taxidermists eat well — can't blame them.

But it is nice to look and reminisce whenever you want at how she looked when she went to take that "Pop-R"

Maybe I'll share the trip of Riley the redfish and Tommy the trout later if you want.

Be safe, and good fishing.

Central Florida natives pen homespun cookbook

JULIANNE MUNN
Chronicle food writer

> Review: "Boy, is this book long overdue! These recipes might've disappeared like a Southern breeze." — Lester McDowell, 2003 Country Music Association Major Market Broadcast Personalty of the Year and creator of Dry Creek: America's First Frontier

Hunting and fishing are lifelong activities that shaped the lives of Toby Benoit and Trisha Mickler, pursuits that led to co-authoring "Carnivore Country; The Meat Eater's Family Cookbook."

Both are longtime published writers and Central Florida natives, his ancestry pre-dating the Civil War by a few decades in the 1830s, and hers tracing back six generations.

The cookbook, published in June of this year, is packed with recipes by Benoit for everything from armadillo to wild hog and includes all manner of game he has hunted in Florida and across America.

The colorful photos of hunting and fishing are as interesting as the recipes, and the plentiful tips about how to hunt and fish for game and seafood, and how to prepare it.

Recipes include: Dixieland Fried Frog, Armadillo and Rice, Toby's Venison Loaf and Whole Roasted Wild Hog, to name just a few of dozens.

Mickler is a cousin of a noted cookbook author, the late Ernest Matthew Micker, who achieved fame with "White Trash Cooking," a colloquial collection of Old South recipes and anecdotes. She followed up his work with a sequel in 1998 called "More White Trash Cooking."

An example of what you will find in "Carnivore Country" is the first dish Benoit said he was allowed to cook, a savory Venison Stew, after his very first deer hunt in the early 1980s in the Ocala National Forest.

The recipe is prefaced with this recollection:

"That was my first deer hunt ever! I remember every detail of that day and how proud I was to help my daddy drag out and dress that deer. And then get to cook some of it also — well, I'll tell you, it was quite an honor!"

Mickler shares her family recipes, gleaned from her parents who settled in Seffner, and her grandparents who lived in St. Augustine. Her father, Bill Mickler. was a member of the Anheuser-Busch Natural Light Pro-Bass Team.

Her contributions enphasize seafood recipes and comfort food. she attributes her love of cooking to her "grandmother Nanny Madel in Seffner" and her dad. Think Mississippi Roast with slow-cooked beef chuck and pepperocini peppers, Devil Crabs, Smoked Mojo Snook and Key West Conch Fritters.

Benoit, who writes a weekly column about hunting for the Chronicle sports section on Thursdays, has hunted big game in the mountains of the west and other game in virtually every state — even, he said, free-range buffalo in Inglis at the Ross Hammock ranch.

He also owns Rebel Yell Outdoors, which manufactures scent attractants and game calls.

Creating the new cookbook began when Benoit and Mickler reunited at a class reunion two years ago at Armwood High School in Seffner. The rest is history.

"I was hunting in Wyoming at the time. When I was home I would drive down to visit Trish and she would always have a peach pie and coffee waiting for me," he said. The collaboration proceeded at a steady pace.

Benoit is a diversified hunter, noting that "archery is my passion." Indeed, he has earned a gold medal in international competition in Orange County, as well as winning 11 of 14 compound archery events in 1999 in a series of competitive events throughout the southeast.

He has also written for Woods and Waters and other sports magazines, and has authored nine Florida-themed novels, seven of which are published.

"The most successful," he said, "was the seventh, a look at Florida during the 1830 Seminole War through the eyes of an escaped slave."

Benoit now resides on his farm in rural Inverness, but said his family has always been in the cattle business, stretching back to the original cattle drive country of Okeechobee.

Both authors are avid cooks. He said his favorite recipe is Alligator Jambalaya; Mickler especially loves anything to do with seafood, and raves about her Chicken and Gnocchi Soup.

Benoit said he keeps a "freezer full of buffalo and other game," and sometimes hunts on commission for other lovers of wild game. He is also a big-game hunting guide and a go-to authority on hunting.

He recently completed a gator hunt in the Salt Creek Marsh along the Suwannee River and said it's time now to track white tail deer, wild hog and wild turkey in Florida.

The two longtime friends are as down home and hospitable as one might expect of native southerners, and she is thinking about a sequel to their popular cookbook to be named "Carnivore Country and More."

"Carnivore Country" is a product of Pelican Publishing. It can be purchased on www.amazon.com presently for $21.30 new and used starting at $10.28. Also available at other online bookstores and retail book outlets. Benoit and Mickler will be at a book signing in Brandon on Nov. 22.

Neither of the authors want the old time recipes to be lost in in time and their cookbook ensures they are on the right track to make that happen.

Here are a couple of the author's favorite recipes from their cookbook:

Alligator Jambalaya

- 1/2 cup bell peppers, chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 1 cup fresh parsley, chopped
- 1 cup celery, chopped
- 3 tablespoon cooking oil
- 2 (14 1/2-ounce) cans tomatoes
- 2 cup chicken stock
- 1 green onion, chopped
- 2 teaspoons oregano
- 2 splashes Louisiana-style hot sauce
- 2 shakes Old Bay seasoning
- Salt to taste
- 2 cups white rice
- 1 pound hot sausage, cut into chunks
- 1 pound marinated alligator fillet, cut into small pieces

In a deep skillet or wide Dutch oven, sauté the bell pepper, garlic, parsley and celery in oil. While this cooking, add the tomatoes, chicken stock and green onions to a pot that can cook on the stove and in the oven.

Stir in the sauteed vegetables, oregano, hot sauce, Old Bay seasoning, salt, rice, sausage and alligator fillet pieces. Cook on medium high heat until the liquid is mostly gone, about 12 to 15 minutes. Remember to stir occasionally to make sure the rice doesn't burn on the bottom. Cover the pot and put in the oven at 400 degrees for about 30 minutes. Serves 4 to 6. — Toby Benoit

Stone crab claws a delight

Seafood lovers rejoice! Stone crab season opened yesterday and will continue through mid-March. Stone crab is surely a Florida treasure, the Sunshine State's answer to Maine lobster — even better, some say.

I'm hoping the lack of storms in the Gulf of Mexico won't put a damper on the harvest this fall. Crabbers are happy when storms roil the waters and stir up the crabs, making them easier to catch.

In any event, most of us are eagerly awaiting our first of the season stone crab claw feast. Not much else needed, except a dish of melted butter and maybe sides of slaw and a loaded baked potato. Can't get much better than that.

But if you want to get a bit fancier or just impress your Yankee guests, here are a couple of recipes to put the crustaceans over the top:

Honey Citrus Stone Crab Claws with Hearts of Palm Salad

- 3 pounds medium stone crab claws, cooked and chilled
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup rice wine vinegar
- 1/4 cup honey
- 1/2 cup orange or tangerine juice
- 8 hearts of palm, fresh or canned
- 1/4 cup red onions, thinly sliced
- 1/4 cup red bell peppers, roasted, sliced
- 1/4 cup yellow bell peppers, roasted, thinly sliced
- 2 medium oranges or tangerines, peeled and sectioned
- 1/4 cup fresh tarragon leaves, chopped
- 2 cups fresh spinach, finely chopped
- 1/2 cup extra virgin olive oil
- 1/4 cup rice wine vinegar
- 2 tablespoon fresh parsley, finely chopped

Crack claws; remove shell and movable pincer, leaving the meat attached to the remaining pincer. Set aside.

In a small saucepan, combine the sugar, vinegar, honey and orange or tangerine juice. Bring to a boil and cook until thickened to syrup. Remove from heat, cool and set aside.

Slice hearts of palm into thin strips. In a bowl, combine the hearts of palm, onions, peppers, orange or tangerine segments, tar-

WINES & SUCH

In a humorous and beautifully illustrated little book, titled "Esquire Drinks," the author David Wondrich takes an irreverent look at drinking in America. As he puts it: "This isn't about drinking. It's about drinking liquor."

It seems just about every sort of booze ever created has been popular in the U.S. as a progression falling into several stages.

1. The Days of Rum — Up from the Caribbean Islands came molasses, which the colonists as early as 1700, in the town of Boston, distilled into the beverage known as rum. Sixty years later there were some 159 distilleries in New England alone.

The rum rage spread like wildfire. In 1728, a certain Colonel Byrd traveling through the wild forests of North Carolina found barrels of the stuff. People, it seems, were using it to fry bacon in, after which they drank the drippings. Byrd complained the stuff was so vile, no reason why it shouldn't be branded "Kill-Devil."

Americans, with their frontier mentality and down-home ways, were different from distant European cousins in the fact they enjoyed their liquor more than anyone else on the Earth heretofore.

2. The Era of Whiskey — The 19th century ushered in the upsurge of whiskey, not bourbon mind you, but good old-fashioned American rye. Long story short, it was all about the Scotch-Irish immigrants coming over to the New World, who it turns out were opposed to government supervision, and so became bootleggers of the first rank.

These hardy folks, along with their German neighbors, settled further to the west in Pennsylvania, and introduced the industry of "Monongahela rye," so that by the year 1790 there were, in four counties around Pittsburg, a whopping 570 known distilleries turning out rye whiskey for frontier folks who drank it faster than they did water.

These same good people, trying to escape whiskey taxes kept pushing the frontiers into West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Such outposts of civilization were so far from regular transportation, it cost too much to bring grain to market.

What was a thirsty man to do? Answer. Why, grow corn. Folks like Jim Beam discovered how easy this was. Simply blend it with your familiar rye and the resulting stuff was good. The center for this new mixed corn liquor was Bourbon County, Kentucky. The first combination whiskeys were white liquors, which meant they needed to be aged for many years. What these innovative drinkers discovered was a way to smooth out the brutal sting of raw liquor by burning the inside of the barrels. Charring acts as a kind of filter for impurities, but it also sweetens it and turns it into a pretty burnt amber color as well.

And if you hold back a portion of the fermented corn mash and add it to the next batch of whiskey, you get something called "sour mash." This created a long battle between honest distillers and white lightning peddlers, who juiced up their raw alcohol with nasty things like raw ether and passed it off as good liquor.

These shenanigans lead to legislation called the Bottled-in-Bond Act of 1897 dictating a four-year waiting period in the bonded warehouse. You then got a stamp from Uncle Sam saying good-to-go. So, for a while, the booze trade in America rolled merrily along until the infamous Volstead Act and Prohibition brought it all to a screeching halt.

3. Enter the Age of Gin — The bathtub variety, you see, was easier to make than good old-fashioned whiskey, with recipes brought over by the Brits who actually stole the formula from the Dutch. This stuff was cheap and it was potent.

Gin rocketed through the flapper years, picking up steam with the increasing popularity of the most famous cocktail of them all — the marvelous Martini. Almost every novel or movie from the 1930s to the 1960s featured two main background themes, cigarettes and the Martini cocktail. Who from my generation does not recall the "Thin Man" movies?

4. Suddenly, along with a health-craze, anti-smoking backlash, vodka appeared. What was once an obscure Russian booze shunned by all but Bowery bums catapulted to national fame. In 1950, 40,000 cases were sold nationwide. Five years later, the number had jumped to 4,000,000. By 1967, it outsold gin, and in 1976 it passed whiskey as America's booze of choice. Today, four out of every five bottles of liquor sold in this country are vodka. Why — who really knows? But it's not expensive, doesn't leave a bad smell and mixes with just about anything.

5. What's next? — Well rye has almost disappeared. Bourbon is making a comeback in the form of pleasing "small-batch" labels. Single-malt scotch is big, as is specialty vodka, in a rainbow of flavors. There's a lot of top-shelf gin around, and nice aged rums abound, tasting like old Cognac. Let's not forget the latest rage from Mexico — ever so widespread Tequila. And for those who may not be aware, wine is here to stay. In fact, in 2008, the U.S. had become the highest wine-consuming nation by volume on Earth.

Cheers and good health to all. What will the future bring?

Cutting the sugar? Up the zest so you won't notice

Melissa D'Arabian
Associated Press

When it comes to sweets, I have a surprising trick up my sleeve. And the best part about it? It probably won't cost you a penny because most likely you already have it, but throw it in the trash.

I'm talking about orange zest, the thin outer skin of an orange. I don't mean the white part, called the pith. That's bitter. The zest is just the paper-thin layer of colored skin, which has tons of fragrant and flavorful oils. Those oils are perfect for tricking us into thinking something is sweeter than it really is. I use zest in cakes, muffins and cookie doughs, and to bring out the sweetness in root vegetables, such as roasted beets or carrot soup.

It's easy to build a stock of this ingredient. Any time you grab an orange for a snack, take an extra minute to run a wand-style grater or vegetable peeler gently over the peel, being careful not to extract any of the pith. The zest can be saved either by freezing it in a small container or by drying.

To dry zest, place it in a 200-degree oven, turn off the heat and let it sit undisturbed until the zest is dry, about 30 to 60 minutes. Let cool completely, then place the dried zest in a clean spice jar. Very quickly you'll have a supply of flavor ready to go in either your pantry or freezer. Note that you may need to chop up larger pieces, and the zest will lose some potency as it ages, so just add a smidge extra when following recipes that call for fresh zest.

I'm sharing a seasonal favorite in our house — orange zest pudding with shaved dark chocolate. I use low-fat milk to make the pudding, but add an egg yolk at the end to impart just enough richness to make the pudding feel custardy and decadent. I like it because it's not overly sweet and it features one of my favorite food combinations — orange and chocolate.

But my kids like love it for another reason: the creamy orange color topped with dark chocolate looks Halloween-themed.

The best tool for zesting citrus is a fine wand-style grater. These very sharp graters are easy to use and do an excellent job of removing the flavorful zest without getting the bitter white pith beneath it.

Orange Zest Pudding with Shaved Dark Chocolate

- 1 3/4 cups low-fat or reduced-fat milk
- 2 1/2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1/4 cup light brown sugar
- Zest and juice of 1 large orange
- 1 egg yolk, lightly beaten
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- Pinch of salt
- 2 ounces dark or bittersweet chocolate, shaved using vegetable peeler or wand-style grater

In a large saucepan over medium heat, whisk together the milk and cornstarch until dissolved. Add the brown sugar and continue to whisk while bringing the mixture to a gentle simmer. Cook, whisking constantly, until the milk thickens to a thick pudding, about 2 minutes.

Whisk in the orange zest and juice, then remove the pan from the heat.

Place the egg yolk in a small bowl. One at a time, while whisking, add a few tablespoons of the hot pudding to the egg. Transfer the egg-pudding mixture to the saucepan with the remaining pudding.

Return the pudding to low heat and cook, whisking constantly, until it just begins to bubble. Remove from the heat, whisk in the vanilla extract and salt, then divide between four parfait glasses. Chill for at least 1 hour. Just before serving, top each cup with shaved chocolate.

Start to finish: 20 minutes, plus cooling. Servings: 4

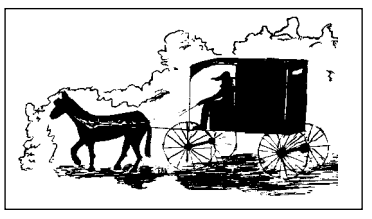
In appreciation of mother's love, hard work



Gloria Yoder
THE AMISH COOK

This week, I would like to introduce you to someone who means a lot to me, someone who has played one of the most important roles in my life (that is, besides my husband!). I have many friends who are very near and dear to me, but this particular person has probably done more for me than anyone else ever has.

You guessed it! It's my dear mother (Dorcas Raber). Little did I know or was even able to fathom what my parents have done for me until I had a child of my own. Caring for the many needs and demands of a newborn, as well as facing the challenges of training and teaching a young child, are all weighty responsibilities. Then, of course, are teenagers and a whole new set of challenges.

As a little girl, I wanted to be like my mother. I recall times when we sat down together for a little snack of saltine crackers and bell pepper slices that Mom had canned at that time. I really wasn't fond of the taste of those peppers. I munched them down all the same, though, simply because I wanted to do what she did and I know she was proud of me.

As a family, we had many good times together in spite of the trials we met along the way. The month of September brought back memories of my two stillborn sisters. They were born four years apart and both had September birthdays.

As a young girl, I had been all excited when my parents told me that there was a tiny baby on the way. Our hopes and dreams were dashed twice when we faced the devastation of their deaths prior to their birthdays.

It was an intense time of struggling for me. We had had so much fun dreaming and planning about the arrival of a newborn baby. It felt like my whole world came crashing down on top of me, but through it all God proved his love and faithfulness to us. He hurts with us when we grieve, yet wisely doesn't give us all we want. It was also a tough time for my mother, yet through it all she didn't lose her faith in God. This experience had a drawing effect on our family, it drew us closer to one another and the Lord. I was also blessed with two more sweet little sisters we dearly love and treasure.

My life keeps changing. I now have a wonderful husband who cares for me, yet my mother plays an important part in my life. She is still always there for me whether it's with a listening ear or a helping hand. Our house is less than a quarter mile from theirs so, yes, I'm spoiled. She's always concerned that I'm okay and not working too hard. This week she promised to help me with some painting, so I look forward to having her assistance with that.

Mom, along with my sisters and sister-in-law, plan to help me with my work after the baby arrives. In fact, Mom will probably be the one filling in for me in writing my weekly letters, so hopefully you'll get more of an inside view of their lives as well.

We're very excited for the arrival of our little one in a month from now, Lord willing. There are still some things on my list that I'd like to cross off before then. I'm hoping to be able to wrap up all my cleaning and painting by the end of this week. Several church ladies kindly helped wash off the walls and ceilings throughout the house, as well as clean the windows. It gave me a tremendous lift. Next week comes the fun part. I want to get the bassinet ready, wash newborn clothes, etc. Time keeps moving on rapidly, so hopefully the baby will be here before we know it.

This week I decided to share one of my mother's recipes with you. I debated quite a bit on which one I should use. Finally, I decided on her cinnamon rolls. After all, what is more inviting than opening the door at Mom's house and having the fresh aroma of cinnamon rolls there to greet you?

Caramel Cinnamon Rolls

- 1/2 cup warm water
- 2 tablespoons yeast
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 3 1/2 ounce vanilla instant pudding
- 2 cups milk
- 1/2 cup melted butter
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 6 cups bread flour

Caramel icing

- 1 cup brown sugar
- 1/2 cup butter
- 1/4 cup milk
- 1 /4 teaspoon salt
- Powdered sugar

Combine first three ingredients. Mix pudding with milk and add to the first three ingredients. Add butter, eggs and salt to yeast mixture.

Add flour and let rise. Roll out dough with a rolling pin. Spread with melted butter, brown sugar and cinnamon.

Roll up and cut into 1-inch slices. Let rise. Bake at 350 degrees until lightly golden brown.

Frosting

Yummy Halloween treats don't have to rot your teeth

ALISON LADMAN
Associated Press

It's true: Despite what the kids think, not all Halloween treats need to rot your teeth on contact.

Which isn't to say the goodies we've gathered here — a muddy punch and a granola-like snack — don't have a sweet side. Rather, we decided to take a more balanced approach to our sugar rush. You know, just in case somebody over the age of 12 wanted some.

Start with the spicy-sweet mole pumpkin seed clusters. Think of it as a savory-sweet granola that packs tons of addictive crunch and just a bit of heat (easily adjusted to your taste). It definitely has that potato chip-like can't-stop-shoving-it-in-your-face quality. Embrace it.

To wash it down, we created a spooky, muddy punch. Sure, it's jammed with chocolate, but it tastes more fruity than sugary. We kept it simple — and nonalcoholic — in case you're willing to share it with the kids. But after they go to bed, we suggest adding a healthy splash of light rum.

Associated Press

Liquid mud punch takes a more balanced approach to our Halloween sugar rush.

Spicy-Sweet Mole Pumpkin Seed Clusters

- 1/2 cup almond butter
- 1/2 cup honey
- 1/2 to 1 teaspoon cayenne pepper (more or less, to taste)
- 1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
- 1 tablespoon cocoa powder
- 1 cup toasted pumpkin seeds
- 2 cups flaked corn cereal, lightly crushed

Line a rimmed baking sheet with waxed paper.

In a medium saucepan over medium-high heat, combine the almond butter, honey, cayenne, salt and cocoa powder. Bring to a simmer and cook for 2 minutes.

Remove the pan from the heat and add the pumpkin seeds and cereal. Stir to combine, ragon and spinach.

Dress salad with olive oil and vinegar; toss until moistened. Serve salad in the center of each plate with stone crab claws arranged around the edge.

Drizzle the honey citrus sauce over all and garnish with chopped parsley. Serve extra honey citrus sauce on the side.

Mango Marinated Stone Crab Claws

- 3 pounds medium stone crab claws
- 2 cups ripe mango, cut into 1/2-inch cubes
- 3 tablespoons cilantro, finely chopped
- 2 jalapeño peppers, seeded and minced
- 4 tablespoons lime juice
- 1 tablespoon light brown sugar
- Salad greens

Crack claws and remove shell and movable pincer, leaving the meat attached to the remaining pincer. Place in a single layer in a shallow dish.

To make salsa marinade, combine mango, cilantro, peppers, lime juice and sugar in a mixing bowl. Taste for seasoning, adding more lime juice and/or brown sugar as needed.

Spoon the salsa mixture over the meaty part of crab claws. Cover and marinate in refrigerator at least 2 hours. Serve claws on a bed of salad greens with mango salsa as an appetizer.

10 fresh ways to serve pasta for dinner

Alison Ladman
Associated Press

Pasta tends to be a dinnertime trap. We get it. Feeding your family on a busy weeknight requires the navigation of a complicated matrix in which you must balance the competing demands of limited cooking time, ingredient availability, dwindling energy and patience, picky children, ringing phones, ridiculous afterschool activity schedules and — of course — homework.

So we understand how it happens. You discover those two or three easy pasta dishes that somehow can come together in the midst of all that chaos and that everyone — or at least most of your family — will actually eat. And once you find those dishes, you soon find yourself in the pasta trap. You almost never make any other pasta dish.

But we wanted to help spring you from the trap. We came up with 10 fresh ideas for serving up pasta for dinner. None is complicated. All are versatile enough to adapt to whatever you have on hand. And all can be made with whatever pasta size or shape you've got. Because who has time to fuss over farfalle versus penne when soccer practice is screaming down your neck?

Associated Press

Spanakopita is a delicious Greek treat and this pasta brings that flavor to the table.

10 fresh ways to serve pasta for dinner:

■ Caprese: Toss a pint of halved grape tomatoes, 2 cloves minced fresh garlic, a container of pearl-sized fresh mozzarella balls, and a handful of torn fresh basil leaves into a pot of drained hot pasta. Drizzle with olive oil, balsamic glaze, salt and black pepper, tossing well.

■ Thai peanut: In a blender, combine 1/2 cup peanut butter, 1/2 cup hoisin sauce, 2 tablespoons soy sauce, 1/4 cup rice wine vinegar and a dash of hot sauce. Stir into hot pasta with cooked shrimp, chopped fresh cilantro, chopped scallions, snow peas and crushed peanuts.

■ Tex-Mex cheeseburger: Brown a pound of ground beef in a skillet. Stir in 1 teaspoon kosher salt and 2 tablespoons chili powder. Add to hot pasta with a pint of halved grape tomatoes and 8 ounces of shredded cheese. Toss well, then season with hot sauce as desired.

■ Spanakopita: Thaw a package of frozen chopped spinach. Drain the spinach very well, using a mesh strainer to help squeeze out any excess water. Stir the spinach into hot pasta with 1 cup ricotta cheese, 1 teaspoon dried oregano and 4 ounces crumbled feta cheese. Season with black pepper and lemon zest.

■ Hawaiian: Stir 1 cup chopped deli ham, 1 can pineapple tidbits (drained), 1/2 cup crumbled cooked bacon and 1 cup chopped roasted red peppers into hot pasta. Top with shredded Parmesan cheese.

■ Borscht: Brown 1 pound loose sausage meat. Drain and discard any excess fat, then stir in 8 ounces mascarpone cheese and a jar of drained and chopped pickled beets. Add to hot pasta and sprinkle with fresh dill.

■ Shepherd: Microwave and peel a large sweet potato. Brown and drain 1 pound of ground lamb in a skillet. Mash the sweet potato and mix together with the lamb, 4 ounces of cream cheese and a small can of corn kernels (drained). Add 2 tablespoons finely minced fresh rosemary, salt, black pepper and hot pasta.

■ Mediterranean blue chicken: Mix 1 cup chopped Kalamata olives, 2 tablespoons chopped capers, 2/3 cup crumbled blue cheese, 4 chopped scallions, 2 cloves minced garlic, 1 cup chopped cherry peppers and 2 cups shredded cooked chicken with hot pasta. Stir in the zest and juice of 1 lemon, then drizzle with olive oil.

■ Three-bean barbecue: Drain a jar of three-bean salad. Mix into hot pasta along with 1 cup of your favorite barbecue sauce. Sprinkle with shredded cheddar cheese.

■ Garlic and herb: In a small skillet over medium heat, cook 6 cloves of garlic (chopped) in 3 tablespoons olive oil and 3 tablespoons butter for 3 to 4 minutes. Mix into hot pasta with a handful each of torn fresh basil, chopped fresh chives and chopped fresh parsley. Drizzle with 2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar, then season with salt and pepper. Top with grated pecorino cheese.

White Cane Day event

Look for Lions Saturday at Publix on County Road 486 in Hernando

Special to the Chronicle

Members of the Hernando Lions Club of Citrus County will be accepting donations for the Hernando Lions Club of Citrus County Charities on Saturday, Oct. 18, to raise funds as part of the annual White Cane Day event.

Funds donated by community members will allow Lions to meet pressing needs in our community including eye exams, glasses and surgeries, Christmas baskets, Citrus County Blessings, the homeless and others in need.

Today, White Cane laws are on the books of every state in the United States and many other countries, providing blind persons a legal status in traffic. The white cane now universally acknowledges that the bearer is blind. To make the American people more fully aware of the meaning of white cane and of the need for motorists to exercise special care for the blind person who carries it, on Oct. 16, 1964, the U.S. Congress approved a resolution authorizing the president to annually issue a proclamation designating Oct. 15 as "National White Cane Safety Day."

The Hernando Lions Club of Citrus County meets at 3 p.m. the first Tuesday of the month at VFW Post 4252 on State Road 200 and at 6 p.m. the third Tuesday of the month.

Lions clubs are a group of men and women who identify needs within the community and work together to fulfill those needs. For more information or to get involved with the Hernando Lions Club, call President Theresa Sardono, membership chairperson, at 352-513-4513 or Terry Murtha at 352-527-4361. For these taxing times

AARP Foundation seeks volunteers for assistance, preparation program

Special to the Chronicle

The AARP Foundation is again providing free tax assistance and preparation for taxpayers with low to moderate income through the AARP Foundation Tax-Aide program. AARP Foundation Tax-Aide, in its 46th year, is the nation's largest free tax assistance and preparation service, giving special attention to the older population. You do not need to be a member of AARP or a retiree to use this service.

"Each year we assist thousands of people in preparing and filing their tax returns," said Rebecca Bachman, Tax-Aide state coordinator for North Central Florida. "This would not be possible without our volunteers, who make an indelible mark on the taxpayers we work with and the communities where they live."

AARP Foundation Tax-Aide has grown tremendously since its inaugural team of just four volunteers in 1968. In 2014, 35,000 volunteers at more than 5,000 sites provided 2.6 million people with free tax help. Taxpayers who used AARP Foundation Tax-Aide received $1.3 billion in income tax refunds and more than $257 million in Earned Income Tax Credits (EITCs).

Last year, in Citrus County, AARP Foundation Tax-Aide volunteers helped more than 7'700 people file their federal tax returns. The program is offered at seven sites in Citrus County.

AARP Foundation Tax-Aide thrives due to the efforts of its volunteer base. With nearly 50 million low- to moderate-income taxpayers helped, there are always opportunities for new volunteers. Lack of experience shouldn't stop anyone from volunteering. Volunteers do not need to be AARP members.

Tax volunteers study online in November and December and the five-day formal training class is scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Jan. 5, 6 and 7, and Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 12 and 13. Volunteers will be certified on or by Jan. 13, 2015, by passing the IRS certification test prior to working with taxpayers.

Visit www.aarp.org/tavolunteer to complete the online registration form. (You must enter the address in your browser and not your home page search engine.) Type over the upper left corner tab on your homepage or use Google to access the website. Look on the middle of the page and you will see a yellow box titled Become a Volunteer, click there and it will bring up the registration page. Look for the green box on the bottom right titled REGISTER.

Citrus County Council continues its Tipping Points series on Saturday

Special to the Chronicle

Citrus County Council is hosting Tipping Points, a series of free presentations pertaining to our environment and vanishing water supply.

A presentation on Amendment 1, the Water and Land Conservation Amendment, will be followed by a discussion 10 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 18, at the Central Ridge Library in Beverly Hills.

A coalition of conservation and civic organizations, businesses and concerned citizens gathered nearly 1 million signatures from Florida voters, resulting in the Water and Land Conservation Amendment appearing as Amendment 1 on the Nov. 4, 2014, ballot.

Learn how Amendment 1 gives Florida voters a direct opportunity to keep drinking water clean; protect our rivers, lakes and springs; restore natural treasures like the Everglades and protect our beaches and shores without raising taxes.

Amendment 1 dedicates funding from real estate transactions to conserve and restore Florida's most cherished waterways and natural areas, ensuring protecting Florida's drinking water sources transcends party politics as it historically has under every governor for the past four decades.

Citrus County Council is a not-for-profit, nonpartisan consortium of homeowner associations, civic clubs and environmental groups whose mission is to protect our environment and natural resources, thereby preserving the quality of life in Citrus County. CCC monitors local government, researches issues and disseminates relevant information to citizens. Meetings are at 9 a.m. the second Wednesday monthly at the Beverly Hills Lions Club, 72 Civic Circle, and are open to the public.

Elliott Erwitt, an American photographer who was born in Paris, said, "It's almost embarrassing, but I do have one trick for taking portraits on commission. I carry one of these little bicycle horns in my pocket, and once in a while, when someone is sour-faced or stiff, I blow my horn. It sort of shatters the barriers. It's silly, but it works."

A successful bridge player has trick-one tricks: Stop and think, count winners and losers, and choose a plan of campaign. They are not silly and they work.

Try them on this deal. South is in three no-trump and West leads the spade queen. What should declarer do?

Especially if you open two no-trump with only 20 or 21 points, that South hand is worth a two-club opening because it has so many aces and kings. (If you count two points for an ace and one for a king, an average two-no-trump opening has seven points. This one has nine.)

South has seven top tricks: two spades, two hearts, one diamond and two clubs. So, if declarer can get three diamond tricks, the contract will be home. But he has to realize that the finesse is a mirage. Suppose South takes the first trick with dummy's spade ace, runs the diamond queen, and the finesse wins. South gets only two tricks from the suit and will also need clubs to break 3-2.

Instead, declarer should be willing to sacrifice one diamond trick to get three in return. He should win the first trick with his spade king, cash his diamond ace, and play another diamond. Even if he wins that second diamond trick, he plays the suit again and must succeed.

ANNIE'S MAILBOX

Dear Annie: My grown son is an alcoholic. It has not interfered with his job so far, but it seems to be getting worse. His father drank himself to death, and I'm so worried he will go down the same path. He absolutely won't discuss it.

Last Mother's Day, he promised to give up drinking, but a month later, I saw him guzzle two beers at a family picnic, and I remarked on it. He said he never wanted to speak to me again, and since then, he hasn't.

I'm not getting any younger, and I miss my son. I will be attending Al-Anon meetings, but is there anything else I can do? — Suffering in Illinois

Dear Suffering: We're so sorry your son has chosen not to deal with his alcoholism, but this is not something you can change for him. He must do it himself. You have made a wise decision to attend Al-Anon meetings. This is a wonderful organization for people whose lives are affected by a loved one's drinking. The members there will give you coping strategies and a shoulder to cry on, as well as advice for dealing specifically with your son. We hope he contacts you soon.

Dear Annie: My dearest girlfriend insists on putting a dessert spoon at the top of the dinner plates when she hosts a formal dinner. She says that's what etiquette demands.

I think a dessert spoon should be served with dessert instead of sitting out on the table during the entire dinner. Who's right? — Etiquette Challenged in Dallas

Dear Dallas: In a formal setting, dessert forks and spoons are brought out with the dessert. For an informal setting, however, it is perfectly OK to place dessert utensils above the plate or with the rest of the forks and spoons (the fork on the left, closest to the plate, and the spoon on the right, closest to the plate, because those will be the last utensils used).

Dear Annie: I usually agree with your advice, but I think you missed the mark with "Disappointed," the frustrated bridesmaid. She said the bride ordered hideous dresses, and when the bridesmaids tried to get her to find another, she didn't like any of them. When "Disappointed" found her own dress, the bride didn't like it. She then offered to drop out of the wedding party. At the rehearsal dinner, the bride announced that she had a new maid of honor because the other one didn't want to give a speech.

When a woman agrees to be a bridesmaid, she agrees to the bride's choice of dress. If they are ugly, no one attending the wedding blames the bridesmaids. "Disappointed" complained that she bought three dresses she could "ill afford." However, one of them was because the bride was trying to please her bridesmaids, and the last one was because "Disappointed" thought she had better taste than the bride. The bride was kind enough to allow her out of the maid-of-honor role, while keeping her in the wedding party.

As for the "lie" that the bride told at the rehearsal dinner? My guess is the bride thought it sounded better than "my best friend is too selfish to honor my choice of bridesmaid dress." Personally, I think "Disappointed" sounds like a bridesmaid-zilla. — Should Have Eloped

Dear Should Have: We appreciate your spin on the situation, but brides need to take their attendants' financial situations into consideration when choosing a dress. And a thoughtful bride will ask her bridesmaids to help select the dress to begin with, preventing exactly this type of rancor. As for the lie at the rehearsal dinner, we don't understand why the bride felt it was necessary to make a public announcement altogether, surprising (and embarrassing) her friend. We will say, however, that an apology — on either side — can go a long way toward repairing a friendship. We hope they can do it.
