Monticello officials continue pursuing their goal of having the city designated a Certified Local Government (CLG) -- a classification that would help it promote historic preservation.

City Clerk Emily Anderson, one of the individuals taking a lead in the pursuit of the designation, told the Monticello City Council on Tuesday, March 5, that she and numerous other community residents interested in pursuing the designation had recently attended a two-day seminar in Tallahassee.

The workshop -- hosted by the Tallahassee Trust for Historic Preservation, the Florida Trust for Historic Preservation, and the Florida Department of State, Division of Historic Preservation -- had as one of its elements a general introduction to historic preservation for those interested in pursuing the Florida CLG designation.

Building activity increased slightly in the city and county during February, but overall, valuations remained relatively weak.

This is the bottom-line message of the figures found in the latest numbers released by the Jefferson County and City of Monticello Building Inspection and Contractor Licensing Department on Monday, March 4.

The numbers show that the city and county issued a combined 46 permits in February, compared with 39 in the previous month. Despite the increased activity, however, valuations didn't fare so well.

Economic Group Donates $500 To Second Graders At Elementary School

The Economic Development Council (EDC) has agreed to adopt the second grade at Jefferson Elementary School, meaning that the organization will donate $500 worth of school supplies to the five classes comprising the grade level.

In doing so, the EDC was acting on the recommendation of School Board Member Larry Halsey, head of the committee appointed to delve into the issue.

Halsey reported to the EDC board on Monday, March 11, that in conferring with Edna Henry, parent involvement/volunteer coordinator for the school district, she had informed him of the materials that the children most needed.

A partial listing of the materials that Halsey cited included ruled paper, pencils, erasers, folders, hand sanitizers and crayon and pencil boxes. He estimated that, based on his online review of Office Depot prices, the cost to supply the roughly 100 second graders with the needed materials would cost about $500.

"Many of these supplies would be sufficient to get through the end of the school term and provide a start for the fall beginning of school," Halsey said. "I propose that we offer to purchase the materials in bulk and divide them into five kits, avoiding the cumbersome funding through cash donations, which requires Please See DONATION Page 3

Public Building Naming Ordinance Almost Ready

LAZARO ALEMAN
ECB Publishing
Senior Staff Writer

More than a year after proposing the idea, Commissioner Betsy Barfield finally has ready for commission review a draft ordinance for the naming of public properties in honor of individuals.

The idea of the Public Property Naming Ordinance, as Barfield has titled the measure, is to establish standards that will guide county officials in the naming of public properties and structures going forward.

Three past named properties readily come to mind. They are the Desmond "Dude" Bishop building on West Washington Street, named after a former school superintendent and serving as the school district's administration building until about a year ago; the James Boland transportation facility on South Jefferson Street, named after a former longtime School Board member and serving as the school district's bus barn; and the current Jefferson County Bailer Public Library on Water Street, named after Rev. Dick Bailer, a retired pastor and longtime community volunteer.

Whatever the method for naming public properties in the past, Barfield wants to ensure that clearly defined standards are in place going forward to assure for the fairness, consistency, equity and transparency of the process.

At a workshop on Tuesday afternoon, March 5, Barfield presented a draft of the ordinance for review and comment, prior to bringing the document formally Please See NAMING Page 3

Two Significant Issues Set For Hearings On Thursday

LAZARO ALEMAN
ECB Publishing
Senior Staff Writer

The Jefferson County Commission is scheduled to hold two public hearings this week that have the potential to elicit much public participation, as commissioners see it. Which make for a potentially lengthy meeting this Thursday evening, March 21.

The two proposed ordinances up for public hearings involve tax relief for businesses that create jobs and removing the ban on the sale of alcoholic beverages on Sundays.

The proposed tax abatement ordinance embodies the will of the majority, as expressed by voters in the last election via approval of the Local Option Tax Referendum.

According to state law, the voters' approval of the referendum authorized the commission to exempt from ad-valorem taxation up to 100 percent of the assessed value of all improvements made by, or for the use of, of new businesses, as well as all tangible personal properties of such businesses.

The referendum also authorized the commission to exempt up to 100 percent of the assessed value of all added improvements to real property made to facilitate the expansion of existing businesses and of the net increases in tangible personal properties acquired to facilitate such expansions by existing businesses.

The public hearing is to determine if commissioners will enact the ordinance, amend it, or reject it, although it's almost a foregone conclusion that they will approve it.

Among the stated long-term goals of the ordinance are to raise the county's per-capita income, increase the percentage of manufacturing employment, raise the educational level of the population (age 27 and over) to the state level, and encourage diversification of agriculture, with an emphasis on increasing agricultural employment.

The abatement would only apply to businesses in unincorporated areas of the county and for those ad-valorem taxes levied by the Jefferson County Commission. The exemption would not apply to the land on which a new business or an expanding business is located; to property that is acquired to replace existing property; to taxes that are levied to pay for bond issues or other special tax levies authorized by voters; or to taxes levied by the school or water management districts.

The exemption would be renewable annually for a period of 10 years, provided that the business makes application by March 1 of each year and maintains at least 10 new jobs in the county.

The exemption expires after 10 years or at any time that a business fails to apply for a renewal by the March 1 deadline. The exemption, however, may be extended under certain conditions.

The proposed ordinance on the sale of alcohol aims to lift the ban on the sale of alcohol on Sundays.

As prepared by legal staff, the ordinance is brief and to the point, taking up all of one page. It basically repeals and replaces that section of the Code of Ordinance that deals with the current prohibited times for the sale and consumption of alcohol.

The proposed new language reads: "No alcoholic beverages may be sold, consumed, served or permitted to be served or consumed in any place holding a license under the state division of beverages between the hours of 1 a.m. and 7 a.m., Monday through Sunday."

The prohibition under the original ordinance is between 1 a.m. and 7 a.m., Monday through Saturday.

“One Bite At A Time!”

What’s the big deal about gun control?? Perhaps one should start by recalling a quote from President Obama’s closest advisor, Rahm Emanuel, when he said, “You never want a serious crisis to go to waste.”

The latest major disaster in gun violence, the Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting, once again provided the liberal left gun control gang another emotional opportunity to advancing their national gun control agenda. Keep in mind that the deranged lunatic’s weapon of choice at Sandy Hook was a pistol. Likewise, the choice of a pistol was true for the Colorado theatre shootings, the Virginia Tech shooting tragedy and the assault on Congresswoman Gabby Gifford and subsequent killings. In as much as assault weapons account for less than one percent of the nation’s gun violence, then why all the bellowing and debate about assault weapons and large capacity magazines!?

Here is where the plot thickens! This can best be answered by asking a simple question—“How do you go about eating an elephant?” Answer: “One bite at a time!” The liberal progressive left knows that attempting to place an outright ban on pistols (which would appear to be the most logical thing following Sandy Hook shooting, et. al.), would have no chance or ever see the light of day in any legislation. So how do you go about getting gun control or potential future ban of all public firearms advanced?? You start by taking one potentially successful “bite” out of our 2nd Amendment at a time. Once you have successfully demonstrated the ability to begin undermining the foundation of our nation’s Constitution, further assaults on that document are easier and more acceptable. In this case, framing the argument against any citizen needing or owning a military style assault rifle, is an easier sell to America’s low information and politically uninformed public. Such a ban would have done nothing to stop the Sandy Hook, Colorado theatre, Virginia Tach and Gifford shootings, but those events are disingenuously being used to arouse the passion of the politically uninformed and unengaged public. The immediate goal is to demonstrate that our Constitution can be overruled and degraded to suit one person or political party’s agenda. In this case, the necessary initial steps to chip away at our 2nd Amendment rights. In reality, gun control is not about controlling guns, but about controlling people.

Hitler did not ban guns as many believe. What the Nazi’s did in 1938 with the “German Weapons Act” was to restrict gun ownership to “loyal” German citizens. This meant that all Jews, political opponents, communists, etc. were banned from any gun ownership or possession to defend their personal rights and liberty. In this regard, it would be prudent to keep in mind what Martin Luther King Jr. said, “Never forget that everything Hitler did in Germany was LEGAL.”

The grander picture of what is going on today is much more frightening! What really is the “elephant” after all? Most telling is President Obama’s statement that “The Constitution only tells us what we can’t do and says little about what we can do.” In other words, we now have an entire political party in the Democrats and a President who believe the nation’s Constitution, which has sustained us into becoming the most prosperous free republic in the world for over two hundred years, actually is outdated and serves now only as an obstruction to their view of progress. In reality then, the United States Constitution is indeed “The Elephant!” –and you eat it one bite at a time. Sadly, only those people who have actually been paying attention are aware of the alarming number of violations of our Constitution that have already been blatantly undertaken over the past four years.

Teacher Appreciation Day Came Early at Jefferson Elementary School

If you have ever had lunch at Rosemary Tree in downtown Monticello, then you know how delicious and what a special treat the Jefferson Elementary Schools’ teachers and staff had Friday, on their planning day. This occasion brought many smiles to the faces to all present not only for the excellent meal but because of the kind gesture made possible by Carrie Ann Tellefsen, Denise Vogelsang, and the Jefferson County Economic Development Council. Mr. Glover Jones and Louie Barrington, members of the EDC, spoke briefly at the luncheon about how the council intends to support our school through volunteer mentors and financially by adopting different grade levels with specific needs. Julie Connelly reported that various school supplies have already been purchased from teachers’ wish list to ensure students have the materials they need to accomplish various tasks throughout the day. The JES administrators, teachers, and staff would like to thank everyone involved for making this day truly special for us and we look forward to establishing a dynamic partnership that will benefit not only the children in Jefferson County, but our entire community.

RETIREMENT, SUCCESSION PLANS: "MUST HAVES" FOR BUSINESS OWNERS
Provided by Robert J. Davison

If you own a business, you may well follow a “do it now” philosophy — which is, of course, necessary to keep things running smoothly. Still, you also need to think about tomorrow — which means you’ll want to take action on your own retirement and business succession plans. Fortunately, you’ve got some attractive options in these areas. For example, you could choose a retirement plan that offers at least two key advantages: potential tax-deferred earnings and a wide array of investment options. Plus, some retirement plans allow you to make tax-deductible contributions.

In selecting a retirement plan, you’ll need to consider several factors, including the size of your business and the number of employees. If your business has no full-time employees other than yourself and your spouse, you may consider a Simplified Employee Pension (SEP) plan or an owner-only 401(k), sometimes known as an individual or solo 401(k). Or, if your goal is to contribute as much as possible, you may want to consider an owner-only defined benefit plan.

If you have employees, you might want to investigate a SIMPLE IRA or even a 401(k) plan. Your financial advisor, working with plan design professionals and your tax advisor, can help you analyze the options and choose the plan that fits with your combined personal and business goals.

Now, let’s turn to business succession plans. Ultimately, your choice of a succession plan strategy will depend on many factors, such as the value of your business, your need for the proceeds from the sale of the business for your retirement, your successor, and how well your business can continue without you. If your goal is to keep the business within the family, you’ll need to consider how much control you wish to retain (and for how long), whether you wish to gift or sell, how you balance your estate among your heirs, and who can reasonably succeed you in running the business.

Many succession planning techniques are available, including an outright sale to a third party, a sale to your employees or management (at once or over time), or the transfer of your business within your family through sales or gifts during your life, at your death or any combination thereof.

Many succession plans include a buy-sell agreement. Upon your death, such an agreement could allow a business partner or a key employee to buy the business from your surviving spouse or whoever inherits your business interests. To provide the funds needed for the partner or employee (or even one of your children) to purchase the business, an insurance policy could be purchased.

Your estate plan — including your will and any living trust — should address what happens with the business, in case you still own part or all of it at your death. The best-laid succession plans may go awry if the unexpected occurs.

All these business succession options can be complex, so before choosing any of them, you will need to consult with your legal and financial advisors.

Whether it’s selecting a retirement plan or a succession strategy, you’ll want to take your time and make the choices that are appropriate for your individual situation.

You work extremely hard to run your business — so do whatever it takes to help maximize your benefits from it.

Preservation

other local residents attending the seminar were Beulah Brinson, Terri and Tom Dunn, Charles Davis, Emily Anderson, Jennifer Ellis, Troy Avera and Ann Holt.

Together, these individuals represented city government or various associated organizations, including the Monticello Historic Design and Review Board, Monticello Local Planning Agency, Main Street Monticello, and the Jefferson County Historic Preservation Association.

Anderson reported that the effort to pursue the CLG designation was moving forward and said she planned soon to talk with Property Appraiser Angela Gray about a possible historic preservation credit and others of the incentives that she had learned about at the conference.

Jones, for his part, returned from the experience evidently inspired and exhibiting the unbridled enthusiasm, if not zealotry, of the newly converted.

Jones pointed out several existing violations of the city codebook relative to the historic district and declared that City Manager Steve Wingate should take immediate action to remedy the situation.

One alleged violation involved a downtown restaurant that is prominently displaying its advertisement on the wall of a downtown building facing North Jefferson Street, and another involved an abandoned building on East Washington Street that formerly served as a bed-and-breakfast inn.

Jones pronounced the two cited establishments to be in gross violation of the historic district requirements, per his reading of the codebook, and he urged immediate action on the two problems.

City Attorney Bruce Leinback, however, asked to be allowed to review the codebook before the city took any action, a request that Wingate indicated he would honor.

Per Tom Dunn, one of the conference's attendees, nearly 70 government entities in Florida currently have the CLG designation, which identifies them as having an interest in encouraging preservation, reconstruction and reuse of local historic buildings, structures and sites as a means of increasing tourism, creating jobs through small business development, reducing blight, and promoting a sense of community pride.

CLG proponents argue that acquiring the designation wouldn't much alter the way that Monticello presently handles many of the historic properties. What it would do, they say, is it would benefit the city in terms of state grants and technical assistance and training. The designation also would translate into tax abatements for individual property owners who undertake renovations of historic structures, they say.

To qualify for the CLG designation, the city would have to adjust certain of its current practices. Among the required adjustments, members of the Monticello Historic Design Review Board would have to possess a certain level of expertise in specified areas and the board itself would have to adopt specific rules of procedures.

Also -- and this is possibly the biggest adjustment -- the Historic Design Review Board would become the final authority on certificates of appropriateness for restorations and demolitions, as opposed to its current status as an advisory board that merely makes recommendations to the council. Of course, such decisions of the Historic Design Review Board would always be capable of being appealed to the City Council, effectively giving the latter the final say ultimately.

Others of the CLG requirements that would require adjustments include the provision that three of the design review board's members must reside within the historic district and that the board must meet at least four times annually.

Since its inception in 1986, Florida's CLG program has reportedly assisted in the survey, designation and preservation of thousands of historic and cultural resources and has helped to increase public awareness of historic preservation. Participation in the program also impacts on local planning processes, as governments in Florida must address historic preservation in their comprehensive planning decisions.

Naming

before the full board for action in the coming weeks.

As a result of the workshop, the document underwent a few revisions. These revisions were that buildings and properties can be named after living or deceased persons; that the naming will require a supermajority vote, or four of the five commissioners voting for the action; that the honor can be bestowed based on an individual's in-kind or financial contributions; and that the naming will be in perpetuity, as opposed to a set time period.

Barfield argued that if the option to name structures and properties after living people were removed, it would take away from the toolbox a valuable tool. As it would if financial contributions weren't allowed as a means of acquiring the honor, she said. Both of these measures, Barfield argued, would serve as an incentive to spur individuals to do more for a particular project or institution, either through volunteerism or financial donations. And didn't such contributions ultimately serve to the benefit and betterment of the community? Barfield asked.

Nelson conceded the point, saying he was agreeable to the two measures, so long as the naming required a supermajority, a stipulation that Barfield said she could live with.

As it was left, the ordinance is expected to come before the commission for consideration at its next regular morning meeting, which would be 9 a.m. Thursday, April 4.

Barfield's proposal stems from the request of a group in late 2011, which group asked that the Jefferson County Recreation Park be renamed after Franklin Hightower, one of the park's founders and a longtime supporter. At the time, Barfield asked that a decision on the request be postponed until rules and procedures for the handling of all such requests could be drafted. Which drafting the board assigned to her.

Since, Barfield has presented several versions of the ordinance to her colleagues for review and comments, preparatory to completing a final draft.

Among other things, the ordinance calls for the formation of a permanent six-member committee, to be called the Public Property Naming Committee (PPNC). Members of this committee would each serve three-year terms on a staggered basis and would review and make recommendations to the commission for the naming of public places.

The criteria that would enter into the naming of public properties would include neighborhood, geographic or common usage identifications; natural or geological features; and association with historical events or figures.

Individuals whose names are to be considered for the honor must have exhibited superior levels of performance in their chosen fields of endeavor, possess excellent characters and reputations, and maintain high standards and ethics in conduct, among other qualities.

Building

The report shows that the 46 permits generated $6,049.36 in fees, compared with the $6,966.60 generated by the 39 permits in January. Of the 46 permits, the city issued 13 and collected $1,450.85 in fees, and the county issued 33 and generated $4,598.51.

A breakdown of the permits shows 37 were for repairs and additions; six were for commercial uses; one was for a mobile home; and two were for miscellaneous uses, such as a shed, sign, workshop or barn.

There was zero valuation in the residential permit category in February, compared with $100,916 in January. This valuation was $466,542 in February 2012.

The valuation for commercial permits was $71,100, compared with $143,000, in January. It was zero in February 2012.

And the valuation for other permits (a category that includes additions, re-roofs and non-residential structures, was $352,452, compared with $335,479 in January. This valuation was $226,147 in February 2012.

Meanwhile, the Jefferson County Planning and Zoning Department issued seven permits and collected $1,466.25 in February, compared with six permits and $1,877.07 collected in January.

In February 2012, the planning department issued 12 permits and collected $3,372.6.

Donation

internal accounts administered through the school principal's office." Which recommendation the EDC board accepted.

Halsey noted that the EDC donation didn't preclude individual board members from volunteering their time and energy to the school and children. In fact, he encouraged them to do so.

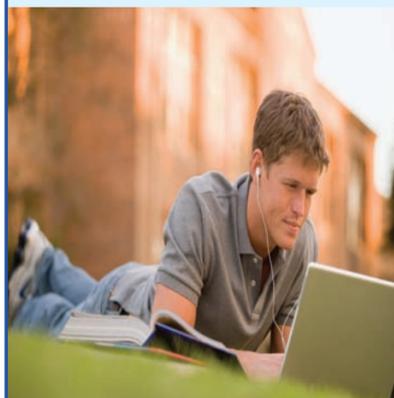

The EDC's decision to adopt a classroom stems from the appeal of Henry at a luncheon meeting of the Chamber of Commerce on Feb. 5. At that time, Henry urged the audience to get involved, adopt a classroom, and help make a difference in the school district. Conley, who was in the audience, took the appeal to heart and broached the idea to the EDC at its March meeting. She suggested that EDC involvement in such a project would not only benefit the children, but it would also raise the EDC's profile in the community.

In response, EDC Chairman Ron Cichon appointed a committee to research the proposal and return a recommendation to the board. That committee consists of Halsey, City Councilman John Jones and businessman Monty Morgan.
