Man makes meth, again, at elderly dad's home

A Perry man was arrested last Thursday for operating a meth lab in his father's mobile home on Vera Lane—the second time he has been charged with the same offense at the same location.

“Acting on information we received, Rusty Davis, Marty Nowlin and myself went to 3672 Vera Lane to investigate. While making first contact with the homeowner, we noticed two marijuana plants growing behind the home. A search of the home revealed all the ingredients—including ‘Shake & Bake’ bottles—for making methamphetamine,” Taylor County Sheriff's Office Capt. Ron Rice said.

Three individuals were taken into custody at the home: Joel Thomas Reynolds, 32, charged with manufacture of methamphetamine and manufacture of cannabis; Timothy Jay Alex Monroe, 23, manufacture of methamphetamine and possession of drug paraphernalia; and Billy Allen Laird, 20, possession of drug paraphernalia.

School grades fall; first ‘F’ since 1999

With school grades falling precipitously across the state this year, Taylor County was not immune, with Steinhatchee School earning the district's first “F” grade since 1999.

The Florida Department of Education (DOE) on Friday released school grades for elementary and middle schools, with Taylor County Middle School (TCMS) earning a “C,” Taylor County Elementary School (TCES) earning a “D” and Steinhatchee School earning an “F.”

The latter two schools will have new principals when students return to classes in three weeks after Superintendent Paul Dyal did not recommend re-appointing the schools' administrators to their positions in June.

TCMS earned a “B” last year and missed repeating the grade by just five points, earning a total score of 555, while the cut-off for a “B” is 560.

TCES, the only school to maintain its grade from last year, scored 410 points, exactly in the middle of the range for a “D,” which runs from 395 to 434.

Elementary and middle schools are graded on different scales, but since Steinhatchee School was a combination, including eighth grade, it was measured by the middle school standards. This was one of the reasons Dyal gave for his recommendation to eliminate middle school grades from the school and convert it to a K-5 school, which the Taylor County School Board approved earlier this summer.

Steinhatchee School scored 385 points and needed at least 445 for a “D.”

DOE will not release grades for high schools until late November or December. Since Perry Primary School is considered a feeder school to TCES, it receives the same grade, which in this case is a “D.”

“With the release of school grades on Friday, the results were just as we had anticipated,” Dyal said in a statement Monday. “It is obvious from our

City attorney's abrupt resignation: 'I don't suffer fools well,' Smith says

Longtime City Attorney Mike Smith abruptly resigned during the middle of the Perry City Council's regular July 23 meeting.

Smith scribbled out a one-line resignation on a sheet of notebook paper, folded it in half and tossed on the desk in front of Mayor Daryll Gunter before exiting through a side door Tuesday evening.

“I was just handed a letter a few seconds ago we'll need to agenda. It was a letter of resignation from Mike Smith that reads: ‘Dear Mr. Mayor, Please accept this as my resignation as city attorney for the City of Perry, effective immediately.’ Signed Michael S. Smith.”

“I gladly accept it and we'll need to go out and get advertising for a new attorney,” Gunter said.

“Do I have a motion?” he then asked.

“No action is required, is there?” Councilman Don Cook said.

“If we have to vote to accept it, I will gladly pass the gavel and make the motion,” Gunter said.

“I second,” Councilwoman Shirlee Hampton said.

Following the unanimous vote to accept Smith's resignation, Gunter asked City Manager Bob Brown to begin advertising for a new attorney “right away... preferably one who doesn't make me so mad.”

Councilman Cook intervened at that point, cautioning Gunter to consider what he was saying before he continued.

Shoppers ready for tax free days

Florida's 2013 back-to-school sales tax holiday arrives this weekend, Aug. 2-4, and has expanded to include purchases of personal computers and accessories.

With many parents heading to stores, the Taylor County School District recently announced that its dress code will be the same this coming year as it was during the 2012-13 school year.

During the three-day tax holiday, sales of clothing, footwear and certain accessories selling for $75 or less as well as certain school supplies selling for $15 or less, will be exempt from the state and local sales tax.

New this year, the tax holiday will also apply to personal computers and certain related accessories for personal use selling for $750 or less per item.

According to the Florida Department of Revenue (DOR), clothing includes any article of wearing apparel, including footwear (excluding skis, swim fins, roller blades and skates). It does not include watches, watchbands, jewelry, umbrellas, handkerchiefs or sporting equipment.

School supplies include pens, pencils, erasers, notebooks, notebooks, notebook filler paper, legal pads, binders, lunch boxes, construction paper, markers, folders, poster board, composition books, poster paper, scissors, cellophane tape, glue, paste, rulers, computer disks, protractors, compasses and calculators.

The personal computer tax exemption includes any electronic book reader, laptop, desktop, tablet or tower computer.

It does not include cellular telephones, video game consoles or digital media receivers.

Computer accessories include keyboards, mice, personal digital assistants, monitors, other peripheral devices, modems, routers and non-recreational software, regardless of whether the accessories are used in association with a personal computer base unit. Related computer accessories not included in the tax holiday are furniture or systems, devices, software or peripherals designed or intended primarily or intended for recreational use.

A full list of the tax-exempt items can be found online by visit the Department of Revenue's website at <http://dor.myflorida.com>.

Long road to justice

Less than 48 hours after receiving a life sentence for first degree murder, Lloyd Phelps was in prison.

The Florida Department of Corrections gave the 59-year-old Perry man the standard welcome all inmates receive—a haircut, a shave and a new set of prison blues.

While this is not Phelps' first stint in prison, it is slated to be his last under the mandatory sentencing guidelines set out for first degree murder. Parole is not an option and a six-person jury was unanimous in the “guilty” verdict it handed down last Tuesday evening, July 23.

The swift verdict, sentencing and transfer to state custody was a marked contrast to the six-year investigation that led to justice for Phelps' victim, 39-year-old Patricia “Niece” Knight.

Knight was first reported missing in January 2006. While it would be another five years before her case was officially upgraded to a murder investigation, her mother, Carol Dean Lockett, knew something had happened to her child long before the grim details of her death echoed across a courtroom.

“Her mother went out looking for her that very first night,” Perry Police Department (PPD) Det. Mike Anderson said.

That night was Jan. 16, 2006—Lockett's birthday.

“She never missed her mother's birthday. Never. So when Carol Dean didn't hear from her all that day, she knew something was wrong. They had already spoken with officers well before they filed a missing persons report just over a week later.”

Lockett's birthday was on a Monday that year. Investigators now know that the last time anyone saw Knight alive was the preceding weekend (Saturday/Sunday).

“So we knew when she went missing. Basically we “Patricia Knight was never simply ‘the victim.’ She was always ‘Patricia’ to us. She and her family were always in the forefront of our minds during the investigation,” officers said.

knew when she was killed,” Anderson said.

The first investigator assigned to the case was Jim Wiggins. At that time, it was simply a missing persons investigation and he treated it as such. Wiggins even met

THINKING OUT LOUD

By RAY EVANS

Look Before You Leap

There's an old saying that we should believe nothing we hear and only half of what we see. Now that we have entire movies created by computers, the number of things we see that we can believe is greatly diminished. So it was with the trial of George Zimmerman in which he was charged with the murder of Trayvon Martin.

During the trial there was no end of speculation, angry charges, outrageous claims, etc., from individuals in many different positions. They had formed opinions even before the strongest evidence in the trial had been presented. They believed what they wanted to believe. But that was nothing compared to some of the statements I have heard since the trial ended and all of the known facts had been presented.

TV personality Sean Hannity interviewed Zimmerman before the trial in the presence of his attorney. Zimmerman gave a matter-of-fact account of what happened. Before being charged with murder he had willingly been interviewed by the Sanford police, who believed his account, and even gave them a daylight walk-through of the events as he saw them. It appeared that he had nothing to hide. He said he was attacked by Martin and was in a struggle for his life before he shot Martin. The most-informed eyewitness testified that the two were struggling on the ground and that one was pounding the other repeatedly. He wasn't absolutely certain who was on top, but said it appeared to be Martin. Zimmerman was battered. Martin wasn't. After hearing some 50 witnesses (related to an event with only one direct eyewitness) the jury found Zimmerman not guilty of murder or manslaughter. Then the real trial began.

Before Zimmerman had even been charged with a crime several organizations that we used to call news gatherers, but which now seem to want to be molders of public opinion, did their best to portray him as a hate-filled white man who ruthlessly tracked down an innocent black child because he wanted to shoot him. Then they found that Zimmerman wasn't, according to government standards, white, but was Hispanic. But he was partly white (like the black president we have), so they invented a new descriptive classification: white Hispanic. This was necessary in order to support their claims that this was a racial murder. (Will they now describe black persons as white black or black black, according to their pigmentation?)

But wait! The FBI had already interviewed 30 or more residents of Sanford in an effort to determine whether or not this was a racially-motivated killing. If so, that would allow the federal government to intervene in a case that otherwise was entirely within the state of Florida's jurisdiction. The result: Absolutely no evidence that Zimmerman was a racist or was motivated by race to shoot Martin.

Zimmerman, part of the community's volunteer watch force, had noticed Martin ambling about in the rain. He seemed to be going nowhere in particular, just looking around. Zimmerman called the police and asked for their assistance because Martin's actions seemed strange to him. Zimmerman attempted to keep Martin in sight while waiting for the police to arrive. Martin walked into a dark area and Zimmerman attempted to follow him. Nothing illegal had yet been done by either party. Zimmerman claimed that he turned to return to his vehicle when Martin, who evidently was not visible at the moment, landed a blow to Zimmerman's nose. A struggle ensued, and Martin was shot while pounding Zimmerman and hitting his head against the concrete sidewalk. No witness offered any evidence to contradict what Zimmerman and the only close-up eyewitness described.

After the trial I watched TV with my mouth agape as well-educated individuals denied all of the evidence presented at the trial and gave speculative descriptions of what they considered to be the truth. One member of Congress, who claimed that Zimmerman acted without provocation, was asked if Zimmerman's bloody nose and face didn't indicate that he was attacked. The congressman replied that we don't know how Zimmerman's nose was damaged, and suggested a few ridiculous possibilities. His mind was made up, and he refused to even consider the known facts in the case. Several others were adamant that this was an intentional murder, not self-defense, which I believe is justifiable in all 50 states. Some quoted words that Zimmerman never uttered.

Now we have the usual black personages who earn their livings by riling up uninformed individuals, urging them to engage in public demonstrations and demand "justice," when justice has already been rendered. Based upon their previous records I assume that they just want to keep their base of support active

'The wells are running dry'

Dear Editor:

In this day and time, it seems like everyone has their hand out for a government hand-out.

We have more people on welfare and other government aid programs than ever before.

In my opinion, the U.S. government, the state government and the local counties have made it so easy to get on a program to receive financial assistance, it makes one wonder about the outcome.

Sooner or later the government will run out of our tax money and will require people to work longer and pay more taxes to support those deadbeats that don't work. The wells are running dry.

I said "don't work," not "can't work." There is a difference. Far too many people are out there receiving financial aid, as in our tax dollars, that can work, but choose not to.

I know that there are people out there that can't work because of illness, accidents or disabilities, or the elders that can't work; those I have no problem with them getting the financial support they need.

The ones I have a problem with are the ones that are just plain lazy, the druggies or bums that apply and get financial assistance.

I am not sure what those

Midweek Muddle

The traveling tablecloths

By SUSAN H. LINCOLN

When the December wedding came to a close, it was the bride's mother who looked around at her friends from college.

"We've got one hour to clean up this place or I face another $250 charge."

Say no more.

We took off our heels and these five college friends--as well as a few family members and out-of-town guests--went to work, wrapping candlesticks and glass globes, putting flowers in boxes for transport to the adjoining condominiums, breaking down tables and folding up chairs.

The previous evening, we had stayed up past midnight ironing the same tablecloths for this gala event, as well as the bride's dress. Now we were surveying the damage following the reception.

"All the tablecloths go in her car," the bride's mother said, pointing toward me.

I smiled confidently because we had decided on this arrangement through e-mail and phone conversations. "I can buy these cloths for $11 each or rent them for $6 each, and then have to pay a fee if they're damaged. I'm buying them," said the MOB (mother of the bride).

"Then I'll take them after your daughter's wedding and use them again," said I, eyeing another wedding in March.

It was such a simple business proposition. I patted myself on the back for saving money and encouraged the husband to praise me too.

It wasn't until the evening of this December wedding, nearing midnight that I began to question the wisdom of the transaction. The tablecloths I was taking from Seaside showed the individual preferences of the guests. Red wine stained quite a few, while crab dip made greasy little marks here and there, along with occasional splatters of melted butter, beef au jus and other culinary delights.

One of the men in the impromptu clean-up group began putting "my" tablecloths in garbage bags. First one bag, then another, then a third, then a fourth, and suddenly I needed a Greyhound bus to get back to Perry.

"Wow, these tablecloths are heavy," all the men commented as they hefted the bags into the trunk and back seat of my car, while complaining of hernias and looming medical expenses.

The next day, on I-10, I wondered if I looked as if I owned a Chinese laundry. My luggage was in the front seat of my car, so that the trunk and back seat could hold garbage bags of tablecloths which were spilling out toward the windows in every direction.

When I landed at the house, the husband who had noted my enthusiasm toward saving money, began dragging the tablecloths into the house, with the exact same description, "These things are heavy," he said.

And indeed they were. I could only wash three--maybe four--at a time. I started that night and I washed, in between the regular laundry, for six weeks.

I had to buy several large totes for storing the tablecloths and then I had to clean out an entire closet to accommodate them.

That's when I began to admit that this wasn't the greatest idea I had ever had.

My MOB friend felt horrible. "I'm so sorry I had to send the tablecloths home with you in such a mess."

But it was the deal: no charge as long as I laundered them before and after use.

"I'm still washing," I told her.

"Ohmigosh," she said.

"But I'll be glad that I have them, and I have all of this completed," I assured her. After all, it wasn't her fault. She was buying the tablecloths whether I recycled them or not.

When the wedding in my family rolled around, only half of the tablecloths were the correct size. I was pleased to have that half, but then I had to rent the remaining cloths.

Following the wedding, I had to load all the dirties, as well as the clean ones which were the wrong size, back into my car, drive them home and return to the laundry room. I called my college friend who would be the next MOB.

"Rent the tablecloths," I said, without even saying "hello."

"What is that noise?" she asked.

"It is the washing machine," I said. "I will need a new one by the time I finish washing these tablecloths again."

"Well, Dianne offered hers for my daughter's wedding," she said, and I interrupted.

"These are hers," I explained. "I'm still washing them. I'm telling you as a good friend, rent the tablecloths."

Another six weeks passed and my tablecloth laundry was complete. With help, I loaded the totes into my car and returned the tablecloths to my MOB friend in Alabama.

"Wow, I didn't realize these things were so heavy," she said.

I smiled knowingly. They took up the entire back of her SUV.

"I'm not going to take them out until I donate them to the church or loan them to another friend," she said.

"Good idea," I confirmed.

She called Sunday. "The tablecloths are on their way to Savannah, Ga., for another wedding," she said. Oh, the stories these tablecloths could tell! I could see that she--a corporate accountant--was gratified that her investment was a good one, and that friends far and near had benefitted.

I, however, was happy that I wasn't the one using them this time.

"Next, I'm going to offer them to Claire," she said.

Our MOB friend is gracious and generous and always willing to help, but some help needs to be declined.

As my final warning, I texted my friend quickly. "Rent the tablecloths. Trust me."

Having been in the trenches and emerged on the other side, army-crawling through wine-stained tablecloths, my new mantra is: What's one more bill if it means one less headache?

In the world of weddings, my friends, that's what we call "priceless."

‘Only one shot at charges’

Investigators never gave up on ‘cold case’

with the man who would quickly become the prime suspect, Phelps, at his home. However, he had no way of knowing that he was sitting down with Knight's killer... just feet from the bedroom where she was killed.

That information developed in later investigations and interviews.

When Det. Dwight Norris inherited the case in October 2008, it was undeniably classified as cold.

“By then it had been two years and she (Knight) had not had any contact with anybody. She also had not received any (government) services of any kind during that time,” Norris said.

Phelps remained on the investigators' radar.

“The only suspect we ever had was the one being charged,” Anderson said.

“We followed everything—every call, every tip. We made every attempt to find Patricia. We dug up whole city lots, called in cadaver dogs, flew over wooded areas searching for sinkholes, had four-wheelers on the ground... anything and everything to find her,” Capt. Jamie Cruse said.

“When I got the case, I called in an Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE) agent and worked with them going back over the case file. We saw there were some interviews and witnesses to follow up with, one of those being (Kimberly) Sierra Hockaday. She had been interviewed prior to this and gave just a little bit of information. When I approached her, she was able to give us a little bit more (information) each interview. Just more and more. She told us that Lloyd Phelps killed Patricia. Where he killed her and how,” Norris said.

Armed with this account, Norris was able track down the mobile home Phelps was living in at the time of the murder. By then it had been repossessed and was sitting on a sales lot in Panama City.

The mortgage company was able to provide photos of the home at the time it was repossessed (exterior and living room shots only). However, the interior photos confirmed details of Hockaday's story—the location of Phelps' bedroom off the main living room and the color of the carpet.

When detectives traveled to Panama City to see the mobile home, they were hoping, at best, to find DNA from blood evidence.

“Given Sierra's description of the crime, we knew the amount of blood loss was substantial and chances were good we might find something,” Norris said.

Regardless of what they hoped to find, what was revealed to them when the carpet in the master bedroom was peeled back rocked even these seasoned investigators—a bloodstain so large it covered half a sheet of plywood. Even more shocking was the shape of the bloodstain, an outline easily identifiable as a human body. Head, shoulders, torso.

The plywood was removed and sent to the FDLE for processing.

“It took awhile. We had to get DNA from her mother, from her father (who was living in New York at that time), but finally we were able to say ‘Yes, this is her,’” Norris said.

“But a bodiless homicide is one of the hardest to prove,” Det. Sgt. Gene Franklin said.

Even without Knight's body, investigators had little doubt they were now dealing with a murder.

“It was a violent death. You have to consider the stain and consider the fact that the blood went through her clothes, the carpet, the padding and soaked into the plywood,” Norris said.

“She laid there, knowing she was dying,” Franklin said.

While it may seem all these events happened in a rush, the reality is they did not.

“It took six months to get the DNA results back. We continued to do everything we could to find her body, without any success,” Norris said.

“So the case goes cold again. We knew who did it, so the question then became what is it going to take to prove it. To get it prosecuted,” Anderson said.

“How do we prove she's dead? We had numerous experts look at the bloodstain, but due to the variables involved (unknown thickness of the carpet, padding, etc.), they were not able to say with a certainty that this kind of blood loss was enough to cause death. But, they did say the amount more than exceeded enough to cause death, especially if the victim did not receive treatment. We contacted every hospital and trauma center in the area to see if anyone fitting Patricia's description had received treatment. No one had.

“Then we looked at her financial trail. There was no trail beyond December 2005. EBT activity (which was her sole means of support) ceased after she went missing. It was like she fell off the face of the earth January 2006. Once we established she ceased to exist after that time, we re-interviewed witnesses again. There had been no contact with anyone after the night she went missing, which was the weekend of Jan. 13-16. A witness had picked her up that Saturday night and she had talked about plans for a BBQ the next day. That was the last time this individual saw her alive. So our timeline was narrowed down even further, to something happening between Saturday night and early Sunday morning,” Anderson said.

“We met with the state attorney again and were ready to take the case to the grand jury. We focused on the bloodstain in his home...at the foot of his bed. How could he not have noticed it? But he denied everything and that was his strategy.”

During this time lapse—between the murder in 2006 and actual charges being brought against him in 2012—Phelps had other run-ins with the law enforcement, chiefly for battery charges involving violence against his wife (whom he had married during that time span).

“He was charged with strangling her. Also several years before he had been charged with attempted murder for cutting the throat of another woman he was involved with,” Anderson said.

“In one instance, a state attorney witnessed him (Phelps) doing this toward a witness/victim while in court,” Franklin said, drawing his thumb across his throat from ear-to-ear.

“Lloyd was violent toward women. We validated he was violent toward women,” Cruse said.

“When we interviewed people, they said when he drank or was high, he became a demon. And everything we heard was validated by his previous history. We never received any information of another viable suspect. The community knew he did it. We knew he did it,” Anderson said.

“But you only get one shot at a murder conviction, so you have to make sure it is the best it can be. Time was on our side in this case—there is no statute of limitations for murder,” Franklin said.

“In all our interviews we asked about Patricia, about her character and the response was always the same—she loved us and we loved her. They said she was the sweetest person and would give anything she had to help someone,” Anderson said.

Family members were “fully cooperative” with the investigation and friends were forthcoming.

“Everybody spoke for her because she couldn't speak for herself,” Franklin said.

Although some might question the caliber of witnesses who took the stand in Knight's behalf (many were convicted felons, some—including Hockaday—currently serving prison sentences of their own), “They are human beings too, they are not throw-aways. And their stories didn't change,” Anderson said.

“Sierra's (Hockaday) story didn't change. She told it for six years,” Franklin said.

“Every statement, we were able to corroborate, so much so that the jury believed them,” Cruse said.

“The bloodstain was right where she (Hockaday) said it was,” Anderson said.

Phelps' attitude during exchanges with investigators was a far cry from the face he presented to the jury when he took that stand in his own defense.

“When we interviewed him, he always said ‘I never hurt that woman.’ In the trial, he called her ‘my niece.’

“At the end of our interview, I asked him, ‘You like cutting women, don't you?’ He just smiled. ‘You can't use my past against me,’ he said,” Cruse related. “I think anybody in the audience during the trial saw that a person can do horrible things to another person without any kind of remorse. Evil is out there and evil hurts people. Evil will reach out and grab you.”

“This was different than what we normally deal with...when you get to evil people, you never forget,” Anderson said.

The investigative team praised Hockaday's “bravery” in coming forward to testify.

“She was terrified, scared for her family and friends,” Norris said. “Hopefully this will help her get rid of those demons that took over throughout the years.”

“She did what a lot of people wouldn't do. It was a wonderful thing,” Anderson said.

“She did what a lot of so-called upstanding citizens wouldn't do,” Franklin said.

“There is always more to the story whenever someone is a drug user,” Norris noted.

“But their lifestyle doesn't make them a lesser being,” Anderson said.

“This prosecution was the result of many different people doing their job exceptionally well. Everyone working on it did the best job possible with the evidence and information they had. Without everyone being 100 percent on the job, we could not have gotten the investigation we had. They were extremely effective, committed and focused,” Cruse said.

While relieved to see Phelps brought to justice, investigators know their job is not yet complete.

Hockaday's testimony put another man, Johnny Flowers, at the scene during the time of Knight's murder and, under Florida law, he could be held just as liable as Phelps for her death.

During the trial, Assistant State Attorney John Weed indicated his office would be looking at pursuing charges against Flowers.

“I can tell you that everyone was here at 7:30 a.m. Wednesday (the day after Phelps' trial was over) discussing what we needed to do to move forward,” Cruse said.

For Norris and his fellow investigators, their mission is clear: “Our ultimate goal is to bring her home if we can.”

RESTORE committee seeks ideas at Thursday meeting

The Taylor County RESTORE Act Committee has scheduled a series of public meetings over the next week to meet with people concerning potential projects and questions about the process of submitted proposals for consideration. Although the litigation involving the penalties is ongoing, Taylor County could receive between $3 million and $12 million depending on the eventual settlement with British Petroleum (BP).

Pre-project proposals are due by Aug. 30.

The meetings will be held Thursday, Aug. 1, at Steinhatchee Community Center at 6 p.m.; Tuesday, Aug. 6, at Blue Creek Baptist Church at 6 p.m.; and Thursday, Aug. 8, at the Econfina Conference Center at 6 p.m.

A mother's sorrow

As certain as birthdays come every year, so too the call or visit from her daughter that Carol Dean Lockett would receive on her special day each year. Without fail.

Until Jan. 16, 2006.

Lockett waited and waited for the call that never came and she says she knew, in her heart, something was wrong.

“I was scared, I was nervous. When a week had passed and I still hadn't heard from her, I told my husband that something had happened to my child,” Lockett said.

It took seven long years, but Lockett can finally have some closure as to her daughter, Patricia “Niece” Knight's fate.

During court proceedings last week, Knight's second cousin, Lloyd Phelps, 59, was found guilty of first degree murder for her death.

“It was sad on both sides. We're still family and I hate that they have to go through what I have. But, they can still go see him in prison. I can't go see my daughter,” Lockett said.

In the end, Lockett said while the guilty verdict gives her some comfort, it is hollow at best.

“I just wish he would tell me what he did with the body. I think he still doesn't want to admit what he did to his family. I think he will take that to the grave with him,” she said.

school grades at our K-5 schools that we are not being successful at the requirements of increased rigor brought on by the raising of the cut scores and the movement toward high level of thinking skills that are required with the new standards and assessments in the state's accountability program. I would like to speak to each of these.

“In looking at our scale scores for both individual students and grade levels, those have not dropped and in some areas have gone up,” Dyal said. “The difference is that the ‘cut score’ of what now determines proficiency has increased and this has lowered the percentage of our students that score at level 3 and above. It is these percentages that are used to calculate school grades.

“We still have students scoring at the same level as when our K-5 schools were ‘As’ and ‘Bs,’ but, those scores do not meet the increase required by the change in the school grading formula brought on by the increased accountability measurements. In other words, what would have been a proficient score in reading for a student at level 3 two years ago is now a level two and lower. But, we must meet these challenges.”

Statewide, the number of “A” elementary schools fell by 44 percent compared to last year, the number of “A” middle schools fell by 30 percent and the number of “A” combination schools fell by 17 percent. Meanwhile, the number of “F” middle schools more than tripled, the number of “F” elementary schools doubled and the number of “F” combination schools rose from two last year to 17.

This year also marked the lowest number of “A” in the past decade.

“Not only has the scoring requirements on determining proficiency increased, what is needed to meet the rigor of the new standards has changed and will become even more rigorous with the Common Core State Standards,” Dyal said.

“We have been transitioning from the Sunshine State Standards, where we were successful, to the Next Generation of Sunshine State Standards, which were more rigorous as well as requiring cognitive skills that go beyond knowledge/recall and simple comprehension to more application, to now the Common Core State Standards and assessments that move to the higher cognitive skills of the depth of knowledge that will be needed to be successful.”

“Our teachers are working just as hard as they have always worked. Our students are as committed as ever. What is required is that we must change our delivery of instruction to meet these increased requirements. We are making changes in our core curriculum in reading, math and science. We are looking at our instructional strategies in the teaching of writing.

“Our teachers at K-5 have been busy all summer in developing curriculum maps that guide them in covering the strands, pacing guides to provide daily instruction, and lesson plans based on the new curriculum materials for our core programs. We will continue to be part of the support team provided by the FLDOE. We will have new leadership at our 3-5 schools as we take our schools in a direction that will bring us back to the success we expect and are used to.

“Public education in our state is going through lots of mandated changes. In this, we must understand that these changes are inevitable. Our schools, our students, our parents and our community must embrace the change instead of fighting it and work to return to our status as an Honor Roll School District. I know we can and I know

'Loving gifts' appreciated

3 bring home 'ultimate prize' from national championships

Eighteen local athletes traveled to Orlando to compete in the AAU National Championships June 12-16, joining more than 3,500 athletes from across the country who converged on Disney's Wide World of Sports complex to compete for this coveted title.

Jackson and Kinzi Mattingly left the gym floor with the ultimate prize—the titles of “All-Around National Champion.” Schubert had a first place finish on vault and floor, along with an “incredible” 36.95 AA score for the win in Level 5. Jenny Jackson took gold on the vault and uneven bars in addition to her AA win for Level 8 with a score of 36.825. Mattingly scored a 36.10 to capture the title for Level 7. “We could not have been more excited,” said Coach Mike Romano. “This was a great way to end the season for these girls that work so hard and put in so many hours at the gym.” Level 8 gymnast Malaysia White won first place on vault, second place on uneven bars and in the All-Around, and third place on floor. Level 7 gymnast Ayonna Carter took first place on the uneven bars, second on vault and third in the

Dogs' fall practice will begin Monday

The Taylor County High football team begins fall practice Monday, Aug. 5, after completing a successful summer conditioning program.

"We had a really good summer. We got a lot more conditioning work in this year than in any of the previous years I've been here," Bulldog Coach Ryan Smith said.

Smith is preparing for his second season at the Bulldog helm after guiding his team to a 6-5 record in 2012 including a trip to the state playoffs.

The coach played for the Bulldogs in the early '90s and later served as an assistant coach.

"The players have really cranked it up a notch, and now that we have got our new coaches in we are ready to get the ball rolling for this season," he said.

The Bulldogs will be practicing daily from 9 a.m. until about 1 p.m. They hope to get about 14 practice sessions in before traveling to Tallahassee on Aug. 23 to take on Leon in a spring jamboree game.

Two-a-day practice sessions have now been barred by the Florida High School Athletic Association.

"We were doing pass skeleton skill work this morning (Monday) and there was a lot of great coaching going on. We are very excited about this season," Smith said.

The coach was especially proud of several players' work ethic over the summer.

"Jamar McNeal did not miss a single workout over the summer. He and Jermaine Watkins have really stepped it up and taken a leadership role on defense, alongside the players we knew were going to lead like Luke Kallschmidt and Percy Jacobs," Smith said.

The coach said senior wide receiver Moral Stephens has also really stepped up his game this summer and the Bulldog coaches are expecting big things from him and QB Daniel Wentworth on offense this year.

The Bulldogs competed in a 7-on-7 tournament over the summer and finished in the final four out of a dozen teams. During the tourney, Taylor County defeated Florida High, Wakulla, West Gadsden and North Florida Christian.

Touchdown Club seeking members

The Taylor County Touchdown Club is seeking members for the 2013 season.

Everyone interested in helping support the Taylor County Bulldogs football program can become a "Super Dog" for $300 (includes two season tickets in reserved seating area for five regular season home games). Any individuals and/or businesses interested in becoming a "Super Dog," purchasing a field sign advertisement or having an ad in the 2013 football program, can contact Aaron Portwood at 838-4834 or Benjye Tuten at 843-0000.

NRA banquet is Thursday

Taylor County Friends of the National Rifle Association (NRA) invite supporters of the Second Amendment to attend their second annual banquet on Thursday, Aug. 1, at 6 p.m. at the Perry Elks Lodge.

In addition to dinner, all those who attend will have a chance to win door prizes, bid on unique NRA collector items in a silent auction and take part in a live auction.

This family-friendly event will feature exclusive firearms, limited-edition merchandise, knives, art, jewelry and much more.

Tickets are $40 per person and can be purchased in advance online at: www.friendsofnra.org/fl, at Woods 'n Water Magazine or at the door. Seating is limited.

Businesses and individuals can purchase sponsorship packages to reserve a table and receive discounted dinner tickets,

City advertising for new attorney

CITY ATTORNEY

Gunter held his tongue and simply asked that the advertisement include provisions for the new city attorney to be present at every meeting.

"We seem to get into trouble when we don't have our attorney present and then have to turn around and do things differently," he said.

Tensions between the mayor and Smith have appeared to be on a slow simmer for the past several meetings, notably during exchanges when the council dealt with issues regarding the placement of a mobile home in the Pine Ridge subdivision.

Smith has also expressed his frustration with how some individuals are allowed to address the council when they take the public podium.

At one point, he offered to draft an outline "rules of order" for the council to consider.

The city began advertising for a new attorney late last week; when asked about the resignation, City Manager Bob Brown called it "unexpected."

Responding to inquires about his resignation Tuesday, July 30, Smith said: "I don't suffer fools well...there seems to be an agenda with our mayor to find someone else. I am content and happy not being in that position anymore. It was frustrating at times. As long as I did not attend the meetings and just handled the business of the city, it was fine. But attending the meetings and listening to all that nonsense...it is a burden off me and I wish nothing but the best for the city."

Each team member is 'blessed with talent'

ULTIMATE PRIZE

All-Around Around while teammate Ceven Kidd took bronze on beam and floor, and silver in the All-Around.

Level 9 Alexis Burkett took gold on the uneven bars, silver on vault and bronze in the All-Around.

"We were very pleased with all of our girls' performances at this prestigious competition," Coach Romano said.

"Their placements are too numerous to list. Many of them finished in the top of their division. They are steadily improving and progressing. This is a very specialized sport--only a select few have the talent and ability to succeed. Each of our team members has been blessed with talent and we are proud of the effort they put in to develop it," Coach Brooke Rose added.

Taylor Gymnasts who competed at the national competition included: Emma Grace Ducksworth, Kylee Padgett, Colbi Bodiford, Felicity Emory, Anna Ellison, Emily Johnson, Elisabeth Cook, Emma Gray, Riley Mathis, Paityn Wilson and Mickaela Whiddon.

Letters to the Editor

'You have to pass a drug test to work, but not for a handout'

people will do when the wells do go dry and their handouts stop.

Even locally we have a large percentage of people getting government checks every month as a result of just plain being too lazy and not wanting to work; it's easier to get a handout.

The TV and other ads constantly tell people to apply for this government program or that one and some lawyer will take your case and get you on a program and get you money.

We have people getting government checks simply because they twisted their ankle or have ingrown toe nails, yet they can walk through the woods and hunt all day without a problem. As soon as they get back home, the pain is back and they can't do anything.

A large percentage of the people don't know or believe that the money that they get every month is our money, the money we pay as taxes. The government does not have a vault of money that they print up to make those payments.

I like the idea that Gov. Scott is pushing to have everyone that is getting or applies for assistance to pass a drug test first and periodically after that.

It's it ironic that if we work we have to pass drug tests but if you are out there for a handout, you don't have to pass any test.

President Kennedy's words seem to be reversed now days, when he said "Ask not what the country can do for you, rather ask what you can do for your country."

Now days it seem that it's "ask not what you can do for your country, rather what the country can do for you."

I believe and hope that one day our government will wake up and stop the cash flow for those that are receiving money that don't really qualify for it.

Our welfare and assistance programs are broken and need to be re-evaluated, revised and fixed.

For the most part, our politicians have no idea of the impact this has on the local economy. If they do, they could care less. They only worry about getting re-elected.

Our elected official could care less; they get their checks every month and the more programs they come up with equals more votes at election time.

This situation reminds me of the old saying of, "Give a man a fish and he eats for a day, teach him how to fish and he eats all week."

We continue to give the handouts week after week yet we don't have systems in place to get them out of the handout line and to a point that they can help themselves, then again, why should they work when the government is there with the open checkbook.

To sum it up I would have to say that "the more handouts you give, the more hands will be out."

It's not a matter of if, it's a matter of when the well's going to run dry.

'Too many people are making up facts to support their arguments'

so the dollars will continue to come in to them. Aside from that, almost everyone else seems to either support Zimmerman's account and the facts presented by witnesses, or to support the unprovable theory that Martin was a victim of a racially-motivated attack. I have no pronouncement to make here, but if you are interested in what comes next, please consider a few indisputable facts that were brought to light by the trial.

Zimmerman claimed that Martin attacked him. He was severely battered. Martin showed no sign of having been beaten or struck. Martin was a football player (his coach has confirmed), somewhat taller than Zimmerman, and had previous behavioral problems involving the police which had been downplayed to avoid ruining his record for life. It's easy to imagine that, not knowing what Zimmerman was doing and not seeing any weapon, he might have thought that he could "take" him, so he struck, as Zimmerman claimed. And Martin was not a child. He was 17 years old and probably eligible to enter the U.S. Navy, where he would have been referred to as a man, not a child. (That's what happened to me when I was 17.)

It was testified that Zimmerman had enrolled in self-defense training but was not very good at it, and the instructor would not let him advance in training. Knowing his own weakness, if Zimmerman thought Martin was dangerous to him wouldn't he have drawn his weapon before following him into the dark space? I would have done that, but he didn't, apparently, because his gun was holstered during the fight.

My point is this: Too many people already are making up their own "facts" to support their arguments. If you want to get into the argument, be sure that you know the "real" facts (all facts are real, of course) before you begin your argument. Look before you leap into the fray and save yourself some embarrassment. But why argue the matter at all? The trial is over and the story ended. Except for the apparent intent of the federal Department of (in)Justice to try to persecute Zimmerman as long as possible. But that's another story.
