IED severely injures airman

The Hurlburt Field combat controller was hurt July 10 in Afghanistan

Combat Controller Justin "JD" Day is undergoing treatment at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center for massive injuries from a July 10 mission. An airman in the 24th Special Operations Wing at Hurlburt Field, Day was injured while assigned to a U.S. Army Special Forces team dealing with ISIS militants.

"As a result of his injuries, JD has lost his right leg above his knee and some portions of his left hand. He has also suffered burns," his family said in a statement.

Day, who was recently married, was presented with a Purple Heart, according to reports on the incident.

Day and his wife, Aubry, are expecting their first child late this year.

"Justin is doing well, relative to his situation," his father, Brian Day, said in a statement. "We want people to know that we still have service members downrange and the threat is still real. When you have a child deployed, you feel very close to the threat, waking up every morning with a pit in your stomach, fearing a phone call or a knock at the door. All of our service members and their families deserve our support and recognition."

Col. Claude Tudor, commander of the 24th Special Operations Wing, praised the initial care Day received from military medical personnel.

"We are very fortunate to serve with incredible professionals from across our joint team who made sure Justin received not only necessary care when and how it was needed downrange, but that he will also receive the absolutely best extended care," Tudor said.

"I am extremely proud of the how our Air Force Special Operations and Special Tactics enterprise comes together in order to support families in these situations since they are equally important to our success," Tudor added.

According to a GoFundMe page set up to help Day and his wife deal with financial pressures expected as his medical treatment continues, combat controllers from a unit in Washington state drove all night to be with the Day family in Oregon until one of his teammates arrived from Hurlburt Field to serve as the family liaison.

The GoFundMe page, www.gofundme.com/5sxpguo, had raised more than $100,000 as of Tuesday afternoon.

"We can't express how grateful we are for all the love surrounding us as we start this journey," Day's family said. "We are incredibly proud of JD for his choice to serve our

Resident celebrated 104 years of life on Friday

LAUREL HILL — McDonald Campbell, Laurel Hill's oldest resident, turned 104 on Friday.

In 1914, her story began in a little white two-bedroom house on the corner of 1st Avenue and 4th Street, where she currently resides. She was born in the front bedroom, now the living room.

Campbell knew Laurel Hill when it was a like a "village" with plenty of shopping, places to eat, and a train that came through the town. Her father owned a grocery store called the Campbell Store for 50 years in the heart of Laurel Hill. It was well known throughout the community for many years, and Campbell's caretaker said it was one of those grocery stores that sold everything from hardware to ham.

She attended Laurel Hill School from a youth to graduation.

It wasn't until her father passed away at the age of 52 that Campbell moved back into her childhood home. She wanted to be with her mother, who didn't care to be alone at night, she said.

After graduating from Laurel Hill, Campbell went to college at Florida State University in Tallahassee where she earned a bachelor and masters degree in education.

Campbell dedicated 35 years of her life "or a little more" to teaching. She taught one year at Crestview High School, two years at Marianna High School, and spent many years teaching at Laurel Hill School.

Around Christmas time in the 50s, when Campbell was teaching at Crestview, she stayed late after school hanging Christmas décor and went home. Later that night, another teacher called to tell her the school had burned down.

"She called me and said,

'Finding your roots'

New club looks to help Crestview community research personal genealogy

By Kaylin Parker
| 682-6524 | kparker@crestviewbulletin.com | @Kaylin_Parker

CRESTVIEW — History becomes personal once a month at the Crestview Library.

The Family History Club is an open forum where people interested in researching their individual genealogy can receive guidance from Cindy Barber, a member of the Genealogy Society in Okaloosa County. Barber said she has been researching genealogy since 1980 and is starting a program in the fall called the ProGenStudy Group, which will enable her to become a certified genealogist.

"For a lot of people, it goes back to finding your roots, finding out where you came from," Barber said. "For me, I like the research...I never liked history in school, but because of doing family history and things like genealogy, it brings your personal history to life."

Emily Knie, adult services librarian, contacted the genealogy society asking for someone to do something with genealogy in Crestview because there had been interest from some residents and Barber volunteered, Knie said.

"It's really nice to be able to provide the opportunity for the people of Crestview to get some professional experience in the field of searching for personal genealogies,"

The telecom hills are alive with the sound of mergers. Last month, a judge ruled the $85 billion offer by AT&T to acquire Time Warner is legal. Last year, the United States Department of Justice sued to block the deal, and the government will appeal this decision.

Time Warner (AT&T would change the name to Warner Media) owns HBO, CNN and Warner Brothers. Fees for the various banks and other advisers could total hundreds of millions of dollars.

Separately, on July 19 Comcast dropped efforts to purchase 21st Century Fox, clearing the way for Disney to acquire this unit of the Fox Empire. Disney will be much stronger in competition with media giant Netflix.

In early 2014, Comcast agreed to purchase Time Warner for $45 billion. However, the Federal Government vetoed the deal, arguing Comcast would acquire a dangerous too-dominant role in the Internet. During that time, AT&T successfully purchased DirecTV.

Similar consolidation characterizes cell phone markets.

Apple and Google largely define the global mobile operating system market. The former pioneered the user-friendly desktop computer. Co-founder Steve Jobs eventually left in a power struggle, only to return and engineer a brilliant turnaround centered on the iPod, iPhone and iPad. Devices have grown smaller even as the universe of information expands.

As in the past, telephones, computers and good old TVs are helping to democratize information. Two continuous characteristics are complex interplay between technology and society, and government oversight.

Information transmission now involves vast rapid change, but at the start, telephone and computer companies enjoyed much more solid, structured commercial environments. Dominant corporations effectively controlled largely stable, predictable markets, in contrast to today.

Historically, concentrated corporate power clearly threatened the public interest. John D. Rockefeller brilliantly built the Standard Oil Corporation into a powerful foundation of the American industrial economy, but monopoly of oil and kerosene production was also dangerous. Standard Oil could literally dominate the U.S. economy and shut down the government, including the military.

Antitrust prosecution broke up Standard Oil in 1911. Investigative journalist Ida M. Tarbell was instrumental in this result, thanks to her book "The History of the Standard Oil Company."

Computer and communications companies likewise face prosecution, though none has the power of Standard Oil. The Feds had success pursuing AT&T with an antitrust suit begun in 1974. In 1984, the corporation was broken up. Southwestern Bell eventually purchased surviving long-distance carrier AT&T, re-adopted the name, and became a principal player over time.

In 1894, Tarbell moved back to the U.S. after several years in Paris. Rather than rejoin family in Titusville, Pennsylvania, she settled in New York City, a courageous move then for a single woman.

However, as Steve Weinberg points out in "Taking on the Trust," his book about her career, electricity was already radically transforming life in the great metropolis. Electric trains and lights permitted relatively safe, comfortable travel. Over time, technology made life easier. Consumers benefited from growing freedom of movement.

Investigator Tarbell made excellent use of the new telephone.

Hypocrisies, Tramps and Thieves

Ron Hart

Forty million tax dollars into the Mueller farce of a "Russian collusion investigation," another TMZ-like story has been unearthed. The heavy-handed, ceremonious and against-all-legal-precedent raid of Trump personal lawyer Michael Cohen's home and offices revealed that they may have discussed paying a bimbo for her silence in 2016.

In their honorable pursuit of justice, Robert Mueller, the FBI (Peter Strzok/Andrew McCabe), DOJ's Lisa Page, et al have said how important their investigations are. In such political prosecutions, they will go where press leaks lead them.

We are told that the FBI/DOJ (along with 17 other duplicitous federal law enforcement agencies with unlimited, tax-payer funded budgets and scant accountability) are there to "protect Americans." We keep funding new federal/state/county/city/campus law enforcement agencies that incarcerate more of us on a whim.

In this FBI/DOJ prosecution, it's important to justice that they follow the facts in this case, no matter how many porn stars and Playboy Bunnies they lead to.

It is interesting how Trump, who has the strong support of evangelicals, keeps having Clintonian "bimbo eruptions." Clearly Trump is well schooled in scripture. Who can forget his answer when asked his favorite Bible verse? "Corinthians Two." In explanation, Trump said he's pretty sure Corinthians Two was the second Tweet of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians. To be fair to Trump, he may have confused Corinthians Two with a leather vendor once used at one of his hotels.

The current tally on Trump is three wives, and multiple affairs and counting: one porn star and a Playboy Bunny, none of which he admits. He is just adhering to his modern interpretation of the Seventh Commandment: Thou Shalt Not Admit Adultery.

I feel sad for Trump's family. There is nothing like the Trump boys (Eric and Don Jr.) having to remember being sent off to boarding school by their dad at age ten. After shaking his hand goodbye, their only memory of him for the next year was the stripper glitter on their tiny hands.

So Trump's eager, legal eagle "fixer" attorney, Michael Cohen (who looks like a Staten Island massage parlor lookout), did some dirty work for The Donald. Not surprising, and pretty much in the Trump brochure when he campaigned.

Attorney Cohen reminds me of the hard-working, eager to please attorney law firms love to hire. It is what law firm partners look for. When they recruit a young lawyer, they have a partner take him to his country club for dinner and show him the nicest houses on the best street in town. Then they let him know, "If you work hard for years at this firm, all this ...will be mine."

So in the continuation of these political prosecutions, the Trump tape seized in the raid of his attorney's office was leaked. "I am shocked," said no one paying attention to all this.

I am surprised at the hypocrisy of the left, who historically said they want to limit secret surveillance by government, love Russia, hate McCarthyism, love attorney/client privilege and hate law enforcement, yet they cheer all this on. Reflect on the irony. They need to think where the dark side of this spectrum ends. These days, intellectual honesty in that party is about as hard to find as a white southern Democrat.

So our corrupted FBI and DOJ are hot on the trails of a Playboy Bunny and a porn star. It seems appropriate that Stormy Daniels and the FBI are tied together in this probe, since the FBI has changed its position on camera as many times as she has.

This might be the golden age for my humor column: the Playboy Bunny in this case is trying to lift a "gag" order, and the owner of the tabloid is named Pecker. Some jokes just write themselves.

For the kids out there, Playboy was a magazine run by an 80-year-old man, Hugh Hefner, who burnished his brand by assembling hordes of women up to half his age in his sex mansion in LA. Then one day, they just stopped objectifying women, with little notice. Now Playboy is PC and doing a transgender issue, which I presume is a pop-up book.

Just the thought of the now defunct Playboy Magazine in print is nostalgic to a person like me who writes op-ed satire. I was the only boy in Maury County, Tennessee who read Playboy for the jokes.

the position in order to be more available for his sick mother. In 2007, he completed his Correctional Officer Certificate for the state of Florida. As of 2007, David worked at the Okaloosa County Jail as a corrections officer for the past 11 yrs., where he was well respected and appreciated. David received the Okaloosa County Department of Corrections Lifesaving Award for Outstanding Performance and Correct Actions reflecting the highest standard of conduct for a correctional officer and bringing credit to the Okaloosa County Director of Corrections. On a personal note, in 2003, David and Shawn professed faith in Jesus Christ and were baptized at Beasley Park, while they were attending Calvary Chapel, Ft. Walton Bch. David married Shawn, the love of his life, May 27, 2006, after an extended romance. Over all, they spent 25 yrs. together. As a testimony to his character, David's Karate sensei, Lee Foley, once wrote "David Lowitz is a very unique individual, very loyal and dependable. He is a very reasonable and commonsense individual who will not overreact in a given situation." David was also known for a good sense of humor, being a thoughtful listener, compassionate, and dedicated to serving suffering people in need. Also to his credit, David saved the lives of multiple people who were in crisis. David enjoyed riding his Victory motorcycle, playing with his German Shepherd Chancellor Von Salhaus, playing his guitar, doing karate, horseback riding, and fishing off of whatever pier was available. He loved doing Goofy Golf and gaming with his son, Zack. He loved boogie boarding in the surf, eating hot dogs with a Michelob light. Shawn would always laugh because David would pick the cheapest hot dog, whereas she would always buy him the best Boar's Head. David loved music, even granting daily shower vocal performances of Metallica. David is preceded in death by his two grandmothers, his parents, and his brother, Marc. He is survived by his wife, Shawn; son, Zack; sister, Maria; brothers, Ron, Rick, and Lonnie; and many nieces and nephews. Those who so desire may make memorial donations in memory of David to the National Multiple Sclerosis Foundation, www.nationalmssociety for his brother Marc Lowitz who battled MS. Memorial services were held July 27, 2018. Expressions of love and sympathy may be placed and viewed online at www.emeraldcoast-funeralhome.com

She also had a love for animals and cared for many dogs, cats and even wild chickens. Her adoptions gave many homeless animals a wonderful life. As an excellent cook and gifted story teller, she could usually make any recipes and have others laughing out loud.

The club started their first meeting three months ago, and eight people attended the first meeting. Barber said it is hard to get things going in the summertime because of everyone's busy schedule.

"We figure we really won't get anything going probably until fall or winter," Barber said.

Crestview's library features a small genealogy section that has reference materials like past yearbooks and old newspapers.

Every meeting at the club is different, and the subjects are discussed and chosen by the group a month in advance. At the first meeting, Barber said the club discussed where each participant stood on their family history research and goals moving forward.

The club meets at 10 a.m. on the third Thursday every month in the Crestview Library's meeting room. Topics for the upcoming meeting will include old diseases that can be found on death certificates.

Information about the club can be found on the library's website: <http://www.cityofcrestview.org/178/Library>.

"You have no job." I said, "No job? You don't get fired at night," Campbell said.

But, that wasn't the only time Campbell experienced a school-consuming fire.

When Campbell was teaching at Laurel Hill School, a major storm passed through and lightning struck the building multiple times causing the building to burn down, she said.

"We all cried," Patricia Gilley, Campbell's caretaker, said.

Campbell continued to work at the new school building after the fire, which is the location of Laurel Hill School today.

Laurel Hill has been Campbell's home for many years, but in '92, she and her cousin from Georgia decided they wanted to travel. Campbell then spent the coming years touring parts of the United States and traveling outside the country to places like Germany, Austria, the Philippines, England, and Japan.

"We took off for a splurge," Campbell said. "...We had a great time."

Many of Campbell's friends, family and some of her students are, as she says, "in the grave." She never married nor had children. She had two sisters, one that died in childbirth and the other passed at age 11.

Campbell has many close friends around Laurel Hill and at her church, Laurel Hill Presbyterian Church. She has remained a faithful member of the church her entire life.

"I went every Sunday except the last three Sundays," Campbell said.

Last week, Campbell had pneumonia.

"We thought the Lord was going to call her home then," Gilley said. "And, when she woke up, she wanted a hot cup of coffee."

Campbell enjoys spending time with her cat, Yellow Boy. She's had Yellow Boy since he showed up on her front porch as a kitten eight years ago.

Sitting in her wheelchair in the room where she was born, Campbell recalls good memories like the little girl down the street she once played with in the front yard as a child and when an old neighbor mowed the lawn for her and her mother soon after her father passed. She doesn't know any of her current neighbor's names.

Gilley, her caretaker of over 4 years, asked what has helped her live a long life.

"God," Miss Campbell said.

A mixed-use mall?

Santa Rosa Mall owners aim to create diverse business base

By Heather Osbourne

MARY ESTHER — The Santa Rosa Mall owners are continuing to contract with unconventional leasers to fill its many empty storefronts as plans progress for an on-site apartment complex.

According to General Manager David Macdonald, the mall recently has signed on eight new leasers, including a production studio, dance studio and hair salon. With the construction for the new apartment complex set to begin at the old Belk site in early 2019, Macdonald said the mall's owners are trying to create a mixed-use development with housing, restaurants, retail and more.

"We understand people's shopping habits are changing," Macdonald said. "We're looking for local and regional operators that will provide our shoppers with a diverse experience."

It was 1976 when Santa Rosa Mall first opened with 54 stores, including Sears, JCPenney and Gayfer's (now Dillard's), a Morrison's Cafeteria and a Winn-Dixie across the parking lot. The movies advertised on the marquee at Santa Rosa Cinema 3 outside the mall were "Shampoo," "Earthquake" and "The Hindenburg." It was touted as "Northwest Florida's largest mall."

Over the years the mall has undergone many cosmetic changes. There was a major expansion in 1986 that added another 265,628 square feet and the McRae's wing (which later became Belk). The last time the mall had a renovation was in 2000 when a tiled floor replaced the fountain and skylights were added.

Since then, however, the once bustling mall has slowly become dormant. Instead of traditional retailers, a large section has been turned into a church. Surrounding the food court of only about three restaurants are a day care center and a bounce house.

The mall still has its large retailers such as Dillard's, JCPenney and Sears. Those and the other mall stores, though, are scattered among empty storefronts.

David Goetsch, an economic specialist in Fort Walton Beach, said Santa Rosa Mall isn't alone in its decline. Shopping malls are disappearing nationwide, he said.

"There used to be three malls in Pensacola and now there's only one," Goetsch said. "What you're finding are stores in the mall are relocating to areas that are fitting their needs."

For example, Chick-fil-A used to be located in the Santa Rosa Mall. Now you have them in Fort Walton Beach, Crestview and Niceville."

Goetsch said the decline likely is caused by online shopping and the stigma that malls are a hangout for unruly teens.

"The big question is will the Santa Rosa Mall be able to replace what used to be with other income-producing and job-producing entities," he said.

"Creating a community, like they say they're doing, is always a good idea economically. If you fill up those apartments, the people who live in those apartments will want to have a place to shop and eat and work."

Some residents say they are dissatisfied with the mall's current condition. Lisa Schiller said she hopes it mall will be demolished to make way for an outdoor shopping center.

"It will add value and increase revenue in Fort Walton Beach," Schiller told the Daily News via email Friday. "Most people skip Fort Walton Beach and go to Destin or Pensacola for shopping."

Goetsch said outdoor shopping centers like Destin Commons are popping up across the United States because they resemble downtown areas, which were popular before the mall era.

"It's a retro idea," Goetsch said. "At the time malls were built, downtown areas were going away because everyone had moved out into suburbia. The Destin Commons takes us back emotionally to us shopping in a downtown area. Plus, for the Destin Commons, it's location, location, location. They wouldn't survive without tourism."

Macdonald said in addition to the unconventional leasers, the mall hasn't forgotten about fashioning retailers. Top Fashion has returned to the Santa Rosa Mall with both men and women's stores, and High Street is a new women's clothing store that will open in early August.

"The mall has a long history with offering a place to shop and play," Macdonald said. "We are continuing that, but tweaking it a little bit by offering new concepts."
