Flying high

By SAMANTHA GIROL

SEBRING - Flying high is the name of the game at the Sebring U.S. Sport Aviation Expo this weekend. Opening ceremonies kicked off at 10 a.m. Thursday with a number of interesting and fan-filled events to follow in the coming days. Sebring Regional Airport will be buzzing with enthusiasm.

Sebring is a young pilot, just 10 years old, who speaks his days learning the ins and outs of flight. The poster child for Breezer Aircraft USA works with the company on a volunteer basis, doing everything from demo flights to office work. In his second year as an Expo attendee, Harrington and his fellow, Mike Zediker, kicked off the ninth annual Expo with style. The duo performed a choreographed fly-in just after the opening ceremonies at 10 a.m. for big show like the Expo, the young pilot coordinator.

At 18, Phillip Harrington of Lakeland has been flying airplanes for more than a year. Harrington, a 17-year-old junior at Sebring High School, is the poster child for this year’s Mobile 1 U.S. Sport Aviation Expo at Sebring Regional Airport.

SEBRING - For nearly a decade, Roger Warrick’s work has signaled to local fans that the Mobil 1 12 Hours of Sebring is just around the corner. It is the unification of the cars and track locations that comprise the official poster for America’s oldest sport car endurance race.

It is copies of that poster framed view of competition from different vantage points. The design has included more than a dozen winners and a tease of things to come.

City stands behind Excavation Point, demolition set for wall

By SAMANTHA GIROL

SEBRING - The lights at the end of the tunnel can now finally be seen by residents of Sebring City staff Tuesday night’s meeting addressed what could possibly be the last track in the long, drawn-out Center Avenue wall debacle.

City Attorney Bob Swaine presented the council with a proposal contract between the city and Excavation Point for the demolition of the Center Avenue wall. The council unanimously approved the proposal, asked to postpone Tuesday’s meeting.

The decision came during the board’s ongoing discussion of Hammock’s request for AU PD zoning. Hammock’s request for AU PD zoning. Hammock’s request for AU PD zoning.

The mountain

As U.S. Marine Capt. Adam Brochetti led a New Year’s Eve parade on one of the busiest streets in downtown Sebring, he thought of his uncle and gave thanks in his mind for a victory in the battle to help those who fight in the mountains.

“He is the reason for this,” he said. “I thought about my uncle, the sacrifices and my responsibilities.”

Capt. Brochetti, 29, a Colorado native who is a native of the United States and a native of the United States, is native of the United States, and is native of the United States.

2nd Marine Recognition

According to New Year’s Day 2011 discussion on the U.S. Marine Corps, nothing was more important in the battle to help those who fight in the mountains.

The 2nd Marine Recognition was posthumously awarded to Capt. Brochetti, 29, a Colorado native who is a native of the United States and a native of the United States, and is native of the United States.

Florida statute 1002.01 defines private schools in a three-sentence paragraph, four inches long.

Every conceivable type of education is listed—from kindergartens to below-college-level schools of supplemental training in technology. The statute includes correspondence schools in the definition, and states that private schools may be “parochial, denominational, for-profit, or non-profit.”

But private school requirements are brief—“Persons operating a private elementary or secondary school in Florida are required to: (1) establish a private school; and (2) register the existence of their school with the (state) Department of Education.”

There are no more.

Oh, there are some general requirements, most about health, safety and transportation. So, for example, within five days of opening a school, a school owner must submit fingerprints for state processing and a criminal background check.

Educational standards, on the other hand, are not addressed.

Which is why it is so important for parents and adults planning to start a private school—just because a school is private does not mean it is superior to a public school. Just because a school does not mean it does a good job of teaching.

Because rules in Florida are so lax, too many school owners are more con-man than educator. For example, anyone can own a school. There is no requirement that the owner have an educational background or credentials.

There are questions to ask when looking for a private school: Do you want your children to be taught by “white” and drive a white limousine as he proclaimed they were in their young 20s, as he went on a five-year nationwide tour calling “racist and hate monger” the “race” of those who did not. Some are just scammers. Some do more harm than good.

Without true oversight from the state board of education, there are no guarantees.

When touring a school there are things to look for: A bare-hug ratio of students to teacher credentials; a lack of, or outdated, computer or training equipment; unanswered questions; Most private schools provide a quality education; in many private schools an exceptional one. Unfortunately, this is a pretty poor group that does not. Some are just scams. Some actually do more harm than good.

Editor:

This story starts in our local Denny’s restaurant around 10 p.m. Jan. 10, 2013. There were only about four small groups in the place at the time I had this experience that I have to speak about to my community as a whole and directly to the young men and women that sat next to me and my gal directly behind the cash register. This couple, I say went in their young 20s, as he proclaimed they were “white” and drove a white pickup truck. As we were ordering our meal, this young man started to make remarks that he clearly wanted those of us in the restaurant to hear as they were clearly out to get us, and not about to be successful. I immediately recognized both his face and her face into my memory because I have been dealing with racists for a long time. Dealing with racism has taught me you keep your friend, once a close and your enemies clos-er. But I recognize a moment when I believe that I did not think this young man a racist “yet”, simply an ignor-ant person who has yet to know and understand fully the world as it is and not as it’s perceived through the prejudiced minds he had obviously been given in his young life. Because I know firsthand that the most dan-gerous virus of our nation has little or no power every day the person this young man as this young man, as well as many others is affected on a daily basis.

That’s why I’m addressing this here in an open forum. I want my words to be seen, not only by this couple but by all who have this same mind- set of perceived superiority of a race over another. Just because I did not say anything to you about your ignorance doesn’t mean it’s correct, a shared opinion or belief. It is not. I have no way of measuring you in ignorance. I have no way of persuading you in ignorance. I have no way of convincing you in ignorance. I have no way of telling you in ignorance.

And if you desire to know the facts, the Census has a site online that can give you a visual at a glance facts on the “race” of those whom use government schools: Parents and teachers you will be surprised of the reali-ty of this in our world today.

I was told by her teachers to keep them in one place. So I live in a world where we all have the library and right to speak in ignorance. What I’ve told them is that the only way you can feel better is to be open to the fact that what you are hearing is ignorant. What I’ve told them is that you can’t change what you aren’t able to understand. What I’ve told them is that you can’t change what you will never understand.

I was told that the home I came from was the place that I could not be open to others because I knew that the words but would fight against myself and many within my life, if you have the right to speak, they can fight against you.

I want you to know that what you perceive as a room full of “white race” persons, were anything but. I am a mixture of what’s known as the human race, my father considers himself American Jewish, my mother’s Jewish. Native American, and Native American and thus I consider myself and this is what the “white” race you do not see. We all considered ourselves of American heritage and race and were all offline and suffered and saddened by your com-ment not just for ourselves, but for everyone.

And if you do desire to know the facts, the Census has a site online that can give you a visual at a glance facts on the “race” of those whom use government schools: Parents and teachers you will be surprised of the reali-ty of this in our world today.

“Overstand” that the only way you can feel better is to be open to the fact that what you are hearing is ignorant. What I’ve told them is that you can’t change what you aren’t able to understand. What I’ve told them is that you can’t change what you will never understand.

by Mrs. Mitchelllindo. "Now I’m assuming that she is the sole property owner," LaPozza asked the council.

"She was last I looked in the property records," Swan said.

"Well, I think that that (contract) be amended. I don’t want to be sued by another property owner besides Mrs. Mitchelllindo. If there are two property owners, I don’t want the other one suing us. So change that to current property owner and we’re good," LaPozza said.

Council members quickly talked over the issue, remembering the past hiccups they’ve run into when the property deal was orphaned from Mitchelllindo to her husband then back to Mitchelllindo.

"The title has changed hands several times frequently," said that, Swan.

"If she’s not the sole property owner, my client will avoid the litigation," LaPozza said.

Council member Andrew Pells made the motion to accept the contract with the amendments assuming that, Swan.

"I’d be more comfortable with just the current property owner at the time of the work," Pells added.

"If she’s there, we’ve already been sued twice. We do appreciate attorney Swan’s statement of duplication of the contract you have before you," Breed said. "We would like to have some form of language from the owner, whatever that be, for the duration of our work.

Swane stated that Civil Service will be added as an explicit addendum to the contract between the two entities already in place.

Council members approved all of the changes and identification in the contract Mitchelllindo or another property owner might have following the start of the demolition project.

LAKE PLACID

The spawning season for bass in and around Highlands County is in full swing.

The ritual involves three separate periods: pre-spawn, spawn, and post-spawn. Interestingly, the pre-spawn period actually begins in late December, and is generally in full swing by February and March. Bass do not initiate their spawning activities at the same time on different lakes, or on large bodies of water. For instance, bass may be spawning in January in one section of the lake while others were last March or April in a completely different area. It is uncommon for half the bass population in any given lake to be in the pre-spawn mode while the other half are already laying eggs.

For the Securitymen, Bill Defalco hit the first home run, while Tom Welch (triple) and manager Joe Begley (four hits apiece).

For the Streaks, Bill Defalco hit his third home run, with Dick Swift (three doubles, triple) and rookie Gerry Mann each hitting three hits apiece. Pitcher John McCallum and Brian Hahey each had four hits as well.

In Highlands County, our bass fishing season typically falls into the late 60’s, or even the mid to high 70’s in December and January. At this temperature, most of the bass are in a pre-spawn phase. When the temperature hits the mid 60’s to low 70’s, the majority of the females will be overstreeting a bed. Contrary to what many fishermen believe, the spawning season is the pre-spawn period. Supplements for chemo brain and memory loss

Dear Pharmacist: My partner and I have been receiving chemotherapy. She is responding well but now has trouble with simple memory tasks, and she doesn’t finish her sentences. Can she do that? – R.C., San Diego, Calif.

Answer: Scientists are still not sure exactly what causes the phenomenon your partner describes, which they named “chemo brain.” It happens to affect some patients with chronic infections and illnesses.

Even with modern technology, such as MRI scans, the exact cause of brain chemos is not defined. Trastuzumab, even with an MRI scan, only minor differences in the brain are seen before and after chemotherapy, and nothing directly points to the cause of “chemo brain” making it hard to treat.

Alright, pop-quiz time: Do you know that your brain needs glucose in order to work, grow, and think? It’s true. Your noggin uses more than 20 percent of the fuel you eat. Fail to get enough glucose in this case. Knowing this that the brain is constantly made a discovery that will help chemos brain sufferers. Researchers at Virginia University School of Medicine made a different approach. Instead of looking at just the deficient of the brain with an MRI (before and after chemo), they watched how the brain uses glucose derived from the meals their patients are. They used a specialized scanning device (PET scan), along with CT scans and discovered that certain parts of your brain light up brightly when glucose is utilized. Three brighter areas show the regions of the brain that are actively “eating” glucose. It’s a good thing, you want because that means your brain is working properly.

Glucose feeds the brain. Interestingly, the brains of chemotherapy-treated patients still up, but they were much duller in bright areas, indicating less activity. Incidentally, the darker areas are the regions of the brain responsible for planning and decision-making, and that’s exactly what “chemo brain” sufferers complain about. The researchers are not exactly sure why this happens, it could be related with excessive cytokine production or nerve damage (demyelination) but nevertheless, it validates so many of your concerns. Let me food you to help you with memory loss, inability to solve problems, and the possible decline after receiving chemotherapy.

Proc, can you do to help your partner with chemo brain? First, point out to her that it may get better after completion of the chemo. Next, increase colorful fruits and vegetables in the diet, keeping it free of anything refined or processed.

Exercising 10 minutes a day can improve chemo brain by shutting more glucose to the brain. There are supplements at health food stores, or online that nourish the brain, providing more glucose and improved blood flow. Ask your oncologist if some of the following would be beneficiary for you: vinpocetine, ginkgo biloba, bacos, phosphatidylserine, coconut oil and DHA. In fact, any of you with memory loss should ask your doctor about these supplements.
