By Jacob Bemby
Greene Publishing, Inc.
When the Georgia State University Panthers roll in Tallahassee to play the Florida State Seminoles this Friday at 4 p.m., at least one face on the Panthers' team will be familiar to Madison County residents. The face will belong to Panthers' head baseball coach Greg Frady. "Some of the best years of my life were spent in Madison," Frady said. "My sons, Bailey and Riley, were both born while my wife, Rhonda, and I were living in Madison." Greg Frady, who played shortstop and pitcher for Troy University in Alabama (they won the World Series his senior year), was the head coach of the North Florida Community College Sentinels baseball team, while Rhonda taught school at Madison and Lee Elementary Schools. In addition to baseball during his six-year stay, Frady also busied himself by helping out with civic organizations, including a term as president of the Madison Rotary.

Greg Frady
"I held just about every office there was, not because I was good, but because I was young," Frady joked. After leaving Madison, Frady became the associate head coach at the University of Central Florida in Orlando. Following his tenure at UCF, he went to Germany and coached the German national team before returning to Madison.

Driver's License Renewal Is Frustrating

Recently, I went to the drivers license office in Tallahassee to renew my drivers license. I was told I had to have a birth certificate, and various forms of identification. I gathered up the information, I got my ORIGINAL BIRTH CERTIFICATE issued in 1941 by the Hospital I was born in. To my amazement an ORIGINAL BIRTH CERTIFICATE is not acceptable if it was issued by the Hospital, it must be "a birth certificate issued by a government agency.

I am 68 years old, my ORIGINAL BIRTH CERTIFICATE was good enough to get a Soc. Security number 52 years ago. It was good enough to get a driver's license for the past 52 years, It was good enough for me to serve 8 yrs. in the Air Force and get a Top Secret clearance. It was good enough to serve 30 years in Law Enforcement. It was good enough to draw Soc. Security, it was good enough to get a concealed firearms permit, but it is NOT GOOD ENOUGH to renew my driver's license.

I was told by someone this is from HOMELAND SECURITY. These brain dead people in Washington couldn't stop the terrorists from the twin towers murders, they wouldn't have caught the Christmas day bomber if his bomb had worked, but they can stop a proven AMERICAN CITIZEN from renewing a drivers license.

So, now, I will send off and try and get a Government piece of paper to say I am who I have been for 68 yrs. and perhaps break the law by driving with an expired DL.

This is the type of thing that makes ordinary people around the Country hate politicians, despise the government, and go ballistic in Government offices.

Bonaparte, Washington And Jefferson Known For All The Wrong Reasons

By Paul Niemann

He was a general, born hundreds of years ago. His first name was so unique that he probably didn't even need to tell people his last name. Or his middle name, for that matter, as it is known throughout the whole world. Yet he was as American as baseball and your mom's apple pie.

He led his troops in a well-known war that you learned about in History class.

His name? Napoleon Bonaparte. And he wasn't really exiled to the island of Elba. He wasn't married to a woman named Josephine, either.

He had something in common with George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, but it had nothing to do with being the leader of his country.

You probably didn't know that George Washington was an agricultural chemist long before he was so well known. In fact, he created many new products from plants. He is responsible for axle grease, meat tenderizer and talcum powder, among many other products. He also was the director of Ag Research at Tuskegee University at age 36.

Like Napoleon and Washington, there are several things that you might not have known about Thomas Jefferson.

He had a daughter who went on to become a first lady, married to a United States president. You didn't learn that in any of your History classes, did you?

Before you think that I'm trying to rewrite history, let me clear

University in Alabama was George Washington Carver, the well-known "plant doctor."

The Thomas Jefferson whose daughter went on to become a first

Johnson. And it wasn't that Napoleon Bonaparte, who was mentioned at the beginning of this story, but rather Napoleon Bonaparte Buford. He was born in 1801 in Kentucky, and the well-known war that you learned about in History class was the Civil War.

Buford was a general in the Union army, yet he remains unknown throughout history.

Until now. So what exactly did Napoleon Bonaparte Buford do to earn a spot in this column?

It was his first and middle name that did it for me.

No Snow In Lee

I hope everyone stayed snug and warm this past weekend. Unfortunately, for some at least, we received no snow. I'm perfectly content with it because I am Florida born and bred. This weekend looks like it's more promising and we should get some spring-like temperatures.

Makayla Touchton will celebrate her birthday on Wednesday, Feb. 17.

Karla Hanners and Rachael Webb will celebrate their birthdays on Thursday, Feb. 18.

Diamond Sherrard will celebrate her birthday on Sunday, Feb. 21.

My sister, Debbie Leutner, will also celebrate her birthday on Sunday, Feb. 21.

That's all the news for this week. Have a great week and a beautiful forever. May God bless each and every one of you.

Just A Dream

I am a Carrie Underwood fan. Just to set the record straight, I like Kellie Pickler and Taylor Swift, too. Must be something about blond country singers young enough to be my granddaughter.

Back to Carrie, on her second album Carnival is a song about a teenage girl who is planning on marrying her soldier only to attend his funeral instead. Implied in the message is that her fiancé was killed in service to his country.

It is an age-old theme. Since 9/11 nine years ago, more than five thousand American servicemen have died, primarily in Iraq and Afghanistan. The vast majority of them have been younger than 25. They have left behind family, wives and in some cases, children. It is always a sad time for those left behind who must cope with loss. The fact that most of their life and dreams were still ahead makes the loss even more difficult.

Several years ago, I wrote about my nine classmates who died in the Vietnam War shortly after we graduated. Not one of them reached their 25th birthday. Most of them were single. Not one of them was a father.

More than a million servicemen have died in our nation's wars beginning with the American Revolution. By far, the most expensive war in our nation's history was the Civil War when two-thirds of a million young men lost their lives fighting for their cause.

On Madison's monument to those who served in that war are the names of 298 young men who went to war between 1861-65 to defend their homeland and did not return. In most cases, their families never knew where they were buried. Reckoning with this loss must have been devastating for the citizens of our community.

During World War II, Madison lost about 30 young men, beginning with Colin P. Kelly, Jr. At 25, Kelly was one of the oldest listed on the monument near the Four Freedoms statue, dedicated to his memory.

We have been fortunate during the war against Islamic terrorism; thus far, we have lost none of our sons or daughters in the current conflict.

We tend to think of military casualties as losses during wartime, often in battle against the enemy, but we suffer many losses during training as well. War is a dangerous business by definition, and the preparation for war can be equally hazardous. In my Air Force career, I frequently had to deal with aircraft crashes, often fatal. When things go wrong in the air, a pilot doesn't have much time to sort things out before it's too late.

In seven years of operational flying, my squadrons lost either one or two jets a year. In test flying in the early 80s, we lost three aircraft in two years. About half these crashes were fatal. Attending memorial services was a recurring theme.

In my five years as a commander, I only had to do one death notification.

It happened on a Sunday morning. The victim had been missing for several weeks, so I had met with his wife and knew the family situation well. Normally, my wife and a chaplain would have accompanied me, but since it was a Sunday morning, I went with my wing commander and his wife instead. We sat on the couch, and I broke the news to her as gently as possible. There was a breakdown, but I think she was prepared for bad news.

Once the notification was complete, we went into the full support mode for probably a week. Another wife was always with her. I brought the chaplains in and we planned a memorial service. We met family members that flew in from out of state and settled them. Between meals and visits, her home was a beehive of activity.

I'm not going to tell you that it was easy – it wasn't, but once it began, I wouldn't have wanted anyone else to handle the job. It was as much therapy for me as it was for this young widow and her family.

This process takes a dream, maybe a nightmare, and turns it into reality. There are a hundred tasks to accomplish and each one helps make the transition to a new life easier and more understandable. It takes place everyday in the larger military family, and it is an important part of closure.

Did You Know...

On April 15, 1912, the RMS Titanic sank on her maiden voyage and over 1,500 people died. Fourteen years earlier, a novel was published by Morgan Robertson which seemed to foretell the disaster. The book described a ship the same size as the Titanic which crashes into an iceberg on its maiden voyage on a misty April night. The name of Robertson's fictional ship was the Titan.

ly and needed" says Maultsby. "This document, the Constitution, is our - America's - charter. It sets forth who we are and how we operate. It is what sets the framework to protect our freedoms. It's not to be taken lightly and ignored as many in Washington, D.C. seem to believe. It's disheartening and scary to hear how so little of our critical heritage is being taught today. This event is giving us the opportunity to highlight its importance, protect it, and celebrate it."

Maultsby added that the fact that our county is named after the Constitution's primary author, James Madison, makes it all the more appropriate for us to hold this celebration in our county. "Republican groups are holding Lincoln-Reagan Day dinners all across the state. But because of our association with President Madison, our group felt it most appropriate to adopt this theme. Getting our government, and really voters, refocused on the constraints of the Constitution is, I believe, key to getting our nation back on track. We are looking forward to the message that Mr. McClure will bring."

Mr. McClure, a fifth generation Floridian with Madison ties, is active in civic affairs, such as Rotary and United Way, and religious and education organizations. His family has been significant in Madison's development. McClure lawyers of two generations had their offices in the metal front building donated to house the Treasures Museum. The building's restoration saved one of only three historic metal front buildings now preserved in Florida.

The event begins at 6:00pm on March 4th at Divine Events, 5 miles north of Madison on SR 145 (Colin Kelly/Valdosta Hwy). More information is available by calling Marianne at 850-973-3269.

Tickets are being pre-sold for a minimum donation of $30. Tickets are available from Mark at the Ameriprise Financial office (973-8888) at 121 SE Rutledge St (one block south of Subway restaurant on Duval St/SR53). Table sponsorships are available.

Frady is in his fourth year as head coach of the Panthers, who compiled a 39-22 record in 2009, won the Colonial Athletic Association conference championship and appeared in the NCAA playoffs.

He said that the 2010 diamond season also looks hopeful for his good, but young, team.

Frady is also proud of freshman All-American Justin Malone.

"It's going to be a difficult challenge," Frady said of his team's chances against the number six ranked Florida state Seminoles.

Frady is familiar with Mike Martin, the Seminoles head coach, because he spent from 10-15 years working at Martin's baseball camp in Tallahassee.

Yolanda Smith Haynes Chosen Teacher Of The Year

Yolanda Smith Haynes was chosen District Teacher of the Year on Thursday night, February 4, at a banquet recognizing Madison County's outstanding teachers. The Golden Apple Teacher Recognition Banquet, sponsored by Madison County Foundation for Excellence in Education (MCFEE), was held at the Madison County High School cafeteria with over 140 people in attendance. All seven teachers honored as Teachers of the Year from their schools were introduced by students and were presented with their plaques and a check from MCFEE and cakes which had been donated by School Board member Bart Alford.

The seven Teachers of the Year are Steve Bass, Madison County High School; Missy Cherry, Pinetta Elementary School; Joi Collins, Greenville Elementary School; Gary Gazlay, Madison County Central School (middle school); Yolanda Haynes Smith, Madison County Central School (elementary school); Vickie Sherrard, Lee Elementary School; Valerie Thomas, Madison County Excel School.

Tim Sanders, filling in for MCFEE president Faye Browning who had laryngitis, welcomed the attendees followed by a welcome and invocation from Lou Miller, Superintendent of Schools. During a wonderful dinner prepared by Miss Nellie and the cafeteria staff and served by FCCLA members, entertainment was provided by the MCHS Jazz Band under the direction of Geoff Hill.

After dinner, Jo Willis, Director of the Take Stock in Children Scholarship program, gave an update on the scholarship students. There have been 50 students who have graduated from high school and there are 63 currently in the program. There will be contracts signed later in the spring for new students. She also recognized donors and mentors who were in attendance and encouraged attendees to volunteer to mentor a student.

Christy Adams, 2010 Teacher of the Year, began the recognition of the teachers by asking the audience if they could remember various award winners in sports and entertainment over the past few years. Then she asked how many of us could remember an outstanding teacher we had while in school. She went on to highlight the importance of a teacher in a child's life before introducing the seven Teachers of the Year from the individual schools.

Ramey Panaro, a junior at MCHS, introduced her teacher Steve Bass, who expressed in his educational philosophy, "I view public education as a precious gift to be shared. I had teachers who went the extra mile to draw me out and help me excel academically. They gave me the tools to succeed socially and educationally. I want to do the same for my students."

Jacob Adams from Pinetta Elementary School introduced his teacher Missy Cherry to the audience. Missy Cherry, a 2008 National Board Certified Teacher, stated that she went through the rigorous process to become a NBCT because, "I wanted to make sure that I was giving each of my students the best that I had for the year that I had them. I have learned to question every strategy, curriculum and teaching practice that I'm involved in to guarantee that everything I present to my students is indeed what they need to be successful, including my delivery of the curriculum." Joi Collins, Greenville Elementary School's representative, was introduced by her student Brishauna Connor. Joi Collins' teaching philosophy involves students being "actively involved in the learning process. I strongly believe that many students learn best by engaging in real-world and hands-on activities. Worksheets just do not cut it. Both teacher and student are accountable for learning, with the teacher assuming the leading role."

Beverly Oro, a middle school student from MCCS, introduced her band teacher Gary Gazlay who stated in his teaching philosophy, "My primary goal as an educator is to motivate students to truly take responsibility for their own education by teaching them to engage in learning. I have learned that students will excel in the classroom and in life when they are challenged to surpass what they believe they can achieve."

stated, "I want to be a person that can be remembered for making a difference in children's lives, and becoming a teacher gives me the opportunity to instill values worth believing in." As she shared the difficult path which brought her to become a teacher the audience was brought to its feet.

Paige Richardson, a Pre-K student from Lee Elementary School, introduced her teacher, Vickie Sherrard. In her teaching practices Vickie Sherrard said that "It was rewarding to watch these young students use their classroom activities to develop thinking skills while engaged in a visual arts activity and active discussion with their peers. They talked seriously about their ideas, used their previous experiences with plays to help them think of creative ways to solve their problems, and used the social skills they learned to interact with their classmates to arrive at a solution to any class problem."

Valerie Thomas of Madison County Excel School was introduced by her niece Makeela Hawkins. Valerie Thomas believes it is imperative that she "keep growing, learning and changing. I am passionate about what I do and I try desperately to infect my students with the same passion. I would like to think that what was said or done that impacted my students is still making a difference."

Following the speeches by the teachers, Mark Branham sang "You Raise Me Up" and then Christy Adams made the announcement designating Yolanda Haynes Smith the 2010 District Teacher of the Year. Yolanda Smith expressed her thanks and gratitude to those who had supported her throughout her journey to become a teacher.

In her application to become Teacher of the Year, Ms. Smith closes with this statement, "The faith that I have in my students allows me to feel the hope of the future. Through them I feel as though I am making a positive impact on the world. Teaching truly brings me great joy."

SWAT representatives from the Central School discuss club activities during a recent Tobacco Free Madison meeting.

With nearly 10 percent of Florida's youth having used smokeless tobacco products in the past month, Tobacco Free Florida encourages community partners to raise awareness of the dangers of smokeless tobacco by participating in "Through With Chew Week" campaign, February 14-20.

Even though smokeless tobacco use can lead to nicotine addiction and dependence, many youth are unaware of these dangerous consequences. Many believe that "smokeless" means harmless, but in fact, it contains 28 cancer-causing agents that could lead to oral cancer and gum disease. According to the Centers for Disease Control, oral cancer is the sixth-leading cancer in males and one of the most difficult types of cancer to diagnose, treat and cure.

SWAT (Students Working Against Tobacco) is participating in "Through With The Chew" at Madison County Central School. SWAT members are going to display posters and a video about the dangers of smokeless tobacco during this week.

Recently, Tobacco Free Florida launched a new website dedicated to smokeless tobacco. This site, www.SmokelessKills.com, is designed to expose the dangers of smokeless tobacco with hard-hitting statistics and graphic images.

Tobacco Free Florida

recognizes that tobacco dependency is an addiction and provides tobacco users with tools for empowerment, which are necessary for long-term success. Be free today and contact the Florida Quitline at 1 (877) U-CAN-NOW or go online at www.floridaquitline.com for free counseling and nicotine replacement therapies.

If you would like to join SWAT or would like more information about the dangers of smokeless tobacco, please contact Doug Freer or Ashley Rudd at the Madison County Health Department at (850) 973-5000, ext. 119 and 120.

Video Games Bring Families Closer

(NU) - Families today keep busy schedules. Parents are working longer hours, and family members are involved in more activities. So what can parents do to create more family time?

Parents can spend more time with their children by adopting their activities. According to a 2007 Neilson study, 41 percent of all U.S. homes have at least one video game console — an 18.5 percent increase from 2004.

Consoles like the Nintendo Wii are a great source of entertainment for children and adults, and they can be a way for parents to find quality time as a complete family. The Wii has many four-player games, like the popular Wii Sports series, where you can play bowling, golf and tennis.

Parents who wish to use their Wii for family bonding can keep their quality gaming going strong with the MeWe

Quad Charger designed by Hamgo, Inc., an independent Wii video game accessory manufacturer and distributor. The Quad Charger allows Wii owners to charge up to four remotes simultaneously with their rechargeable battery packs, eliminating the constant need to buy and replace AA batteries and providing up to 13 hours of play time per remote.

Credit Score Damage Control

By Jason Alderman
Although not as unique as fingerprints or snowflakes, credit scores are highly individualized – and often mysterious. Many factors determine your score, which can change overnight depending on everything from last month's credit card balances, to opening a new account, to applying for a car loan.

To help demystify – and quantify – how credit scores are determined, FICO recently shared information on the impact certain negative actions can have. For those not as obsessive about credit scores as I am, FICO is the company whose proprietary software is used by major credit bureaus to calculate the credit scores they sell to potential lenders as a tool for determining your credit-worthiness.

But as FICO's Public Relations Director Craig Watts noted, the very uniqueness of each person's individual situation makes it difficult to generalize. "Take two people with excellent FICO scores of 780," he explained. "One might have a mortgage, several low-balance credit cards and a 20-year credit history; the other has a dozen open accounts, hefty student loan balances and a car loan, but no mortgage. Same score, very different circumstances."

What they probably have in common, said Watts, are a history of on-time payments, a low ratio of outstanding debt to available credit, and a cautious attitude toward taking on more debt – that, and no major negative credit activity: "If you have late payments over 30 days, receive a tax lien, or file for bankruptcy, the toll on your credit score can be significant and long-lasting."

With the caveat that actual point losses can vary widely depending on your individual situation, FICO did share broad ranges for two hypothetical scenarios: One person has a 680 score and the other 780, and each has a mortgage, car and student loans and several credit cards. They differ over factors such as amount of credit limit used, late payment record and length of credit history. Overall:

- Exceeding a credit card limit might lower scores by 10 to 45 points.
- A single late payment exceeding 30 days – 60 to 110 points.
- Entering a debt settlement agreement with a creditor – 45 to 105 points.
- Losing property to foreclosure – 85 to 160 points.
- Filing for bankruptcy has the most devastating impact – anywhere from 130 to 240 points in the scenarios given.

Surprisingly, people with good-to-excellent credit scores often lose more points for negative incidents than do those with lower initial scores. Watts explains that's because lower initial scores already reflect riskier behavior; not so for high-scoring people, so the appearance of negative credit activity on their otherwise spotless credit records may drop their credit scores farther.

The main reason to be concerned about significant point drops is that falling into a lower credit category could hamper your ability to qualify for a loan or credit card or receive lower credit limits, as well as greatly increase interest rates you're charged.

To learn more about what you can do to protect – or repair – your credit scores, visit What's My Score, a financial literacy program run by Visa (www.whatsmyscore.org). The site also features a free FICO Score Estimator that can help you approximate your score.

It's always a good idea to consult a tax or financial advisor for specific information on how tax laws apply to your situation and about your individual financial situation.

Home Finance

Make The Right Decision For The Long Term

(NU) - As homeowners struggle with the recession and impact of declining home prices, some are considering whether to continue paying their mortgage or simply walk away from the obligation. As a homeowner, when you contemplate the recent decline in your home's value, perhaps below your mortgage balance, you may consider options that normally would never have entered your mind. Regardless of what you might hear from relatives, friends or advisors, you need to carefully consider the long-term impact of this important decision.

In many communities, the cost of renting can be more than the after-tax cost of mortgage payments on a house. Renting does not provide the long-term benefits of ownership.

Even if your home's value has fallen significantly, tax benefits and compounding appreciation rates can still be on your side. U.S. tax laws still favor homeownership, particularly for those in higher tax brackets. The tax shelter of deducting mortgage interest and property taxes can reduce the overall tax burden and enable individuals to keep more of their income.

Defaulting on your mortgage can have implications beyond just losing your home.

Tax Deadline Approaches

By Jason Alderman

April 15 is right around the corner. If a chill just went down your spine, chances are you haven't yet organized your income tax paperwork, let alone filed your return.

Even if you can't file or pay your taxes by April 15, it's vital to at least request an extension by then; otherwise, the penalty on taxes owed increases dramatically – generally an additional 5 percent of taxes owed for each month you're late, plus interest, up to a maximum penalty of 25 percent.

However, if you file your return or request an extension by April 15, the penalty drops to 0.5 percent per month, plus interest. Contact the IRS early if you won't be able to pay on time; they may even waive the penalty, depending on your circumstances. Call 800-829-1040 or visit www.irs.gov for more information.

Another way to avoid a penalty: The IRS does accept payment by credit or debit card, with a small convenience fee that is tax deductible. Just be sure you can pay off your credit card balance within a few months, or the interest accrued might exceed the penalty.

Here are several 2009 federal income tax changes to keep in mind as you fill out your return:

New homeowner tax credit. If you bought a home in 2009 and hadn't owned one during the previous three years, you may be eligible for a credit of up to $8,000; in addition, existing homeowners who bought a new primary residence after November 7, 2009, may also be eligible for a credit of up to $6,500. Eligibility rules and deadlines are complicated, so read "First-Time Homebuyer Credit" at www.irs.gov for details.

New vehicle tax deduction. If you bought a new (not used) car, RV or motorcycle between February 17 and December 31, 2009, you can deduct state and local sales and excise taxes, with certain limitations, even if you don't itemize deductions. Read "Sales Tax Deduction for Vehicle Purchases" at www.irs.gov for details.

Expanded college tax credit. For 2009 and 2010, Hope Scholarships have been replaced by the more robust American Opportunity Tax Credit. Enhancements include:

- Maximum tax credit increases to $2,500.
- Credits can now be claimed for all four years of undergraduate college, instead of only the first two.
- Those with modified adjusted gross income under $80,000 ($160,000 for joint filers) qualify for the full credit; it phases out between $80,000 and $90,000 ($160,000 to $180,000 for joint filers).

Lower-income families who owe no taxes may file a return anyway and receive a refund for up to 40 percent of the credit amount, up to $1,000.

Read "American Opportunity Credit" at www.irs.gov for details.

Unemployment benefits. Up to $2,400 in unemployment benefits is tax-free for 2009.

Numerous free or low-cost tax-preparation services are available to seniors, military and low- and middle-income taxpayers, including:

IRS-sponsored programs. (Search "Free Tax Preparation" at www.irs.gov).

AARP volunteers provide free tax preparation to low- and middle-income taxpayers, particularly those over age 60 (www.aarp.org/money/taxaide).

Military personnel and their families worldwide can get free assistance through a program overseen by the Armed Forces Tax Council. (Check with your base for details.)

New IRS Deadline Means Your 1099s Could Arrive Later

Provided by Brad Bashaw, Edward Jones

Traditionally, investors have received their year-end 1099 statements no later than the first week of February, because the IRS imposed a Jan. 31 deadline for the mailing of these documents. Starting this year, however, that deadline has been moved to Feb. 15.

What does this mean to investors? All securities firms will be impacted by the change. At Edward Jones, we expect to mail about 77% of our clients' 1099s by Jan. 31.

However, the data that we report on our clients' consolidated 1099 tax statements comes to us from the securities issuers – e.g., corporations, mutual fund companies, government and other entities that issue securities. We cannot produce 1099s until we receive this data. With the Feb. 15 mailing deadline, we expect to receive some of this data after Jan. 31. We will print and mail 1099s weekly in February as we receive data, with all consolidated 1099 tax statements mailed by Feb. 15.

Some 1099s Will Be Marked "Figures Not Final"
If you receive your Edward Jones consolidated 1099 after Feb. 15, be sure to note whether it is marked "Figures Are Final" or "Figures Not Final." When we do not receive final information from issuers of your investments before the mailing deadline, we must issue a "Figures Not Final" 1099.

If you receive a "Figures Not Final" 1099, be assured that we will work to issue your finalized 1099 as soon as we receive final data from the issuers of your investments. You will receive a final 1099 no later than mid-March.

What Can You Do to Prepare?

* Work with your tax professional to schedule your appointments after you expect to receive your finalized 1099s.

* Be aware that you may not receive your Edward Jones Consolidated 1099 Tax Statement by Jan. 31.

* Enroll in Edward Jones Online Account Access, which enables you to review and print your 1099s as soon as they are available. This could be as early as five to seven days before you receive them in the mail.

* Be sure to note whether your 1099 is marked "Final" or "Not Final" and make your tax professional aware.

* If you plan to be out of town during tax season, contact your Edward Jones branch to make arrangements to get your tax forms to your tax professional.

Your local Edward Jones financial advisor and branch associates are happy to help you. For assistance with your personal situation, contact your local branch today.

America Moves To Raise A Healthier Generation Of Kids

www.LetsMove.gov

The Let's Move campaign will combat the epidemic of childhood obesity through a comprehensive approach that builds on effective strategies, and mobilizes public and private sector resources. Let's Move will engage every sector impacting the health of children to achieve the national goal, and will provide schools, families and communities simple tools to help kids be more active, eat better, and get healthy.

To support Let's Move and facilitate and coordinate partnerships with States, communities, and the non-profit and for-profit private sectors, the nation's leading children's health foundations have come together to create a new independent foundation – the Partnership for a Healthier America – which will accelerate existing efforts addressing childhood obesity and facilitate new commitments towards the national goal of solving childhood obesity within a generation.

Helping Parents Make Healthy Family Choices

Parents play a key role in making healthy choices for their children and teaching their children to make healthy choices for themselves. But in today's busy world, this isn't always easy. So Let's Move will offer parents the tools, support and information they need to make healthier choices for their families. The Administration, along with partners in the private sector and medical community, will:

Empower Consumers: By the end of this year, the Food and Drug Administration will begin working with retailers and manufacturers to adopt new nutritionally sound and consumer friendly front-of-package labeling. This will put us on a path towards 65 million parents in America having easy access to the information needed to make healthy choices for their children.

Already, the private sector is responding. Today, the American Beverage Association announced that its member companies will voluntarily put a clear, uniform, front-of-pack calorie label on all of their cans, bottles, vending and fountain machines within two years.

The label will reflect total calories per container in containers up to 20oz. in size. For containers greater than 20 oz., the label will reflect a 12 oz. serving size. While more work remains to be done, this marks an important first step in ensuring parents have the information they need to make healthier choices

Provide Parents with a Rx for Healthier Living:

The American Academy of Pediatrics, in collaboration with the broader medical community, will educate doctors and nurses across the country about obesity, ensure they regularly monitor children's BMI, provide counseling for healthy eating early on, and, for the first time ever, will even write a prescription for parents laying out the simple things they can do to increase healthy eating and active play.

Major New Public Information Campaign: Major media companies – including the Walt Disney Company, NBC, Universal and Viacom – have committed to join the First Lady's effort and increase public awareness of the need to combat obesity through public service announcements (PSAs), special programming, and marketing. The Ad Council, Warner Brothers and Scholastic Media have also partnered with the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to run PSAs featuring top professional athletes, Scholastic Media's Maya & Miguel, and Warner Brothers' legendary Looney Tunes characters.

Next Generation Food Pyramid:

To help people make healthier food and physical activity choices, the U.S. Department of Agriculture will revamp the famous food pyramid. MyPyramid.gov is one of the most popular websites in the federal government, and a 2.0 version of the Web site will offer consumers a host of tools to help them put the Dietary Guidelines into practice.

Empower Change:

USDA has created the first-ever interactive database – the Food Environment Atlas – that maps healthy food environments at the local level across the country. It will help people identify the existence of food deserts, high incidences of diabetes, and other conditions in their communities. This information can be used by parents, educators, government and businesses to create change across the country.

LetsMove.gov: To help children parents, teachers, doctors, coaches, the non-profit and business communities and others understand the epidemic of childhood obesity and take steps to combat it, the Administration has launched a new "one-stop" shopping website — LetsMove.gov — to provide helpful tips, step-by-step strategies for parents, and regular updates on how the federal government is working with partners to reach the national goal.

Serving Healthier Food in Schools

Many children consume as many as half of their daily calories at school. As families work to ensure that kids eat right and have active play at home, we also need to ensure our kids have access to healthy meals in their schools. With more than 31 million children participating in the National School Lunch Program and more than 11 million participating in the National School Breakfast Program, good nutrition at school is more important than ever. Together with the private sector and the non-profit community, we will take the following steps to get healthier food in our nation's schools:

Reauthorize the Child Nutrition Act: The Administration is requesting an historic investment of an additional $10 billion over ten years starting in 2011 to improve the quality of the National School Lunch and Breakfast program, increase the number of kids participating, and ensure schools have the resources they need to make program changes, including training for school food service workers, upgraded kitchen equipment, and additional funding for meal reimbursements. With this investment, additional fruits, vegetables, whole grains, and low-fat dairy products will be served in our school cafeterias and an additional one million students will be served in the next five years.

Double the number of schools participating in the Healthier US School Challenge: The Healthier US School Challenge establishes rigorous standards for schools' food quality, participation in meal programs, physical activity, and nutrition education – the key components that make for healthy and active kids – and provides recognition for schools that meet these standards. Over the next school year, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, working with partners in schools and the private sector, will double the number of schools that meet the Healthier US School Challenge and add 1,000 schools per year for two years after that.

We are bringing to the table key stakeholder groups that have committed to work together to improve the nutritional quality of school meals across the country.

New Commitments from Major School Food Suppliers: School food suppliers are taking important first steps to help meet the Healthier US School Challenge goal. Major school food suppliers including Sodexo, Chartwells School Dining Services, and Aramark have voluntarily committed to meet the Institute of Medicine's recommendations within five years to decrease the amount of sugar, fat and salt in school meals; increase whole grains; and double the amount of produce they serve within 10 years. By the end of the 2010-2011 school year, they have committed to quadruple the number of the schools they serve that meet the Healthier US School Challenge.

School Nutrition Association: The School Nutrition Association (SNA), which represents food service workers in more than 75% of the nation's schools, has joined the Let's Move campaign. Working with other education partners, SNA has committed to increasing education and awareness of the dangers of obesity among their members and the students they serve, and ensuring that the nutrition programs in 10,000 schools meet the Healthier US School Challenge standards over the next five years.

School Leadership: Working with school food service providers and SNA, the National School Board Association, the Council of Great City Schools and the American Association of School Administrators Council have all embraced, and committed to meeting, the national Let's Move goal. The Council of Great City Schools has also has set a goal of having every urban school meet the Healthier US Schools gold standard within five years. The American Association of School Administrators has committed to ensuring that an additional 2,000 schools meet the challenge over the next two years. These combined efforts will touch 50 million students and their families in every school district in America.

Accessing Healthy, Affordable Food

More than 23 million Americans, including 6.5 million children, live in low-income urban and rural neighborhoods that are more than a mile from a supermarket. These communities, where access to affordable, quality and nutritious foods is limited, are known as food deserts. Lack of access is one reason why many children are not eating recommended levels of fruits, vegetables, and whole grains. And food insecurity and hunger among children is widespread. A recent USDA report showed that in 2008, an estimated 49.1 million people, including 16.7 million children, lived in households that experienced hunger multiple times throughout the year. The Administration, through new federal investments and the creation of public private partnerships, will:

Eliminate Food Deserts:

As part of the President's proposed FY 2011 budget, the Administration announced the new Healthy Food Financing Initiative – a partnership between the U.S. Departments of Treasury, Agriculture and Health and Human Services that will invest $400 million a year to help bring grocery stores to underserved areas and help places such as convenience stores and bodegas carry healthier food options. Through these initiatives and private sector engagement, the Administration will work to eliminate food deserts across the country within seven years.

Increase Farmers Markets:

The President's 2011 Budget proposes an additional $5 million investment in the Farmers Market Promotion Program at the U.S. Department of Agriculture which provides grants to establish, and improve access to, farmers markets.

Increasing Physical Activity

Children need 60 minutes of active play each day. Yet, the average American child spends more than 7.5 hours a day watching TV and movies, using cell phones and computers, and playing video games, and only a third of high school students get the recommended levels of physical activity. Through public-private partnerships, and reforms of existing federal programs, the Administration will address this imbalance by:

Expanding and Modernizing the President's Physical Fitness Challenge: In the coming weeks, the President will be naming new members to the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports, housed at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The council will be charged with increasing participation in the President's Challenge and with modernizing and expanding it, so that it is consistent with the latest research and science.

Doubling the Number of Presidential Active Lifestyle Awards: As part of the President's Physical Fitness Council, the President will challenge both children and adults to commit to physical activity five days a week, for six weeks. As part of the First Lady's commitment to solve the problem of childhood obesity in a generation, the Council will double the number of children in the 2010-2011 school year who earn a "Presidential Active Lifestyle Award" for meeting this challenge.

Safe and Healthy Schools: The U.S. Department of Education will be working with Congress on the creation of a Safe and Healthy Schools fund as part of the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary School Education Act this year. This fund will support schools with comprehensive strategies to improve their school environment, including efforts to get children physically active in and outside of school, and improve the quality and availability of physical education.

Professional Sports:

Professional athletes from twelve leagues including the NFL, MLB, WNBA, and MLS have joined the First Lady on the Let's Move campaign and will promote "60 Minutes of Play a Day" through sports clinics, public service announcements, and more to help reach the national goal of solving the problem of childhood obesity in a generation.

Partnership for a Healthier America

Core to the success of this initiative is the recognition that government approaches alone will not solve this challenge. Achieving the goal will require engaging in partnerships with States, communities, and the non-profit and for-profit private sectors. To support this effort, several foundations are coming together to organize and fund a new central foundation – the Partnership for a Healthier America – to serve as a nonpartisan convener across the private, non-profit and public sectors to accelerate existing efforts addressing childhood obesity and to facilitate commitments towards the national goal of solving childhood obesity within a generation. The Partnership for a Healthier America is being created by a number of leading health care foundations and childhood obesity non-profits, including the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, The California Endowment, W.K. Kellogg Foundation, The Alliance for Healthier Generation, Kaiser Permanente, and Nemours, and will seek to add new members in the days and months ahead.

Hospital Endorses A Tobacco Free Madison

MCMH CEO forges agreement with MCHD and Big Bend AHEC

By Michael Curtis
Greene Publishing, Inc.

The health consequences of tobacco use – including smokeless tobacco – is no longer a subject of debate. It is indisputable fact, proven by millions of lives and billions of dollars. Still, tobacco persists today, why? The reason is simple.

It's the big bucks. It's because federal law still allows it. It's because local policy ignores it. It's because Big Tobacco is playing a big money game, and they play to win.

Tobacco prevention and cessation advocates have gotten in their punches too, however. In a twisted sense of split personality, Big Tobacco actually pays money to the government to support efforts to eliminate tobacco. This is the penalty for lying to the public for decades. Taxes have increased as well, with packs of cigarettes now over $5 per pack and twice that in some places. But just walk into any convenience store and look around the counter. Or for that matter, take a look a tobacco advertising all around that is aimed at youth. Big Tobacco knows if they get teens hooked early, the warning labels won't matter.

That's what has been, but fortunately Madison County has several tobacco warriors who are working with local employers to create new policies designed to dramatically decrease and eventually eliminate tobacco use by their employees and clients. Obviously, there is an increased focus on healthcare providers, clinicians and their facilities, since this is where patients go to address the consequences of tobacco use. It's where they go to get healed.

On Jan. 14, Doug Freer, tobacco prevention specialist with the Madison County Health Department and director of Tobacco Free Madison; and Preston Mathews, tobacco cessation consultant with Big Bend AHEC; joined Madison County Memorial Hospital CEO David Abercrombie to discuss these issues. The goal was to forge an agreement regarding future tobacco policy, and to introduce the staff to a manual titled, "Treating Tobacco Use And Dependence, Clinical Practice Guideline 2008 Update."

Preston Mathews (left), tobacco cessation consultant with Big Bend AHEC; and Doug Freer (right), tobacco prevention specialist with the county health department; present MCMH CEO David Abercrombie a copy of the manual, "Treating Tobacco Use And Dependence, Clinical Practice Guideline 2008 Update." The hospital executive joined the growing list of Madison County organizations that recognize the huge consequences of tobacco use.

"The guidelines present data that shows how a healthcare provider's suggestions and support of client cessation attempts greatly increases the success rate of the clients cessation," Freer noted.

Beginning Jan. 28, the hospital has been hosting workshops where the tobacco specialists have presented this tobacco curriculum. The classes also qualify as continuing education for the attendees. More importantly, the hospital is formally dedicated to improving tobacco prevention and cessation efforts. There was also an agreement that the new hospital will pursue a completely tobacco-free environment.

"The point is to Ask, Advise and Refer. In the past a doctor may have said, 'You should really quit smoking,' but did not facilitate the process. What we are asking is for clinicians to ask if a patient is a tobacco user. If so, we are advising them to quit and then refer them to the available resources, like Quitline and Big Bend AHEC. Further follow-up is then recommended upon subsequent visits to encourage the process. The new question would simply be, 'How did the Quitline work for you?' or 'How did you like the classes?'" Mathews added.

"Our goal is to serve the health needs of Madison County. We are committed to this cause, and look forward to expanding the relationship when we construct our new facility," Abercrombie concluded.

Both tobacco advisors emphasized their desire for the community to know that Tobacco Free Madison is a resource that provides information and support for tobacco-free policies in schools, businesses and organizations. TFM organizers are willing to provide signs that promote awareness of tobacco policies including breathe-easy zones or designated smoking areas as well.

For more information regarding support, signs, or education, contact Doug Freer at the Madison County Health Department at (850) 973-5000, x119.
