Ares I-X set to launch on Oct. 27

CAPE CANAVERAL - For the first time in more than a quarter century, a new vehicle is sitting at Launch Pad 39B at NASA's Kennedy Space Center in Florida. The Ares I-X flight test vehicle arrived at the pad atop of a giant crawler-transporter at approximately 7:45 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

The crawler-transporter left Kennedy's Vehicle Assembly Building at 1:39 a.m., traveling less than 1 mph during the 4.2-mile journey. The rocket was secured on the launch pad at 9:17 a.m.

The vehicle is scheduled to launch at 8 a.m. on Oct. 27. This test flight of the Ares I-X rocket will provide NASA an early opportunity to test and prove hardware, models, facilities and ground operations associated with the Ares I launch vehicle.

The Ares I rocket is being designed to carry astronauts to space in the Orion crew exploration vehicle. The Ares I-X test flight also will allow NASA to gather critical data during ascent of the vehicle's integrated stack, which includes the Ares I with a simulated upper stage, Orion and launch abort system. Data collected from more than 700 sensors throughout the rocket will begin to confirm the vehicle as a whole is safe and stable in flight before astronauts begin traveling into orbit.

"With the arrival of Ares I-X at the pad, this milestone demonstrates NASA's world-class ability to conceptually design, build and process a new launch vehicle in just under four years," said Bob Ess, mission manager for Ares I-X at Kennedy. "Nearly 2,000 NASA and contractor employees located throughout the United States worked together in an unprecedented fashion, resulting in the new vehicle ready for flight."

During the week before launch, technicians at the pad will perform a variety of electrical and mechanical checks to ready the vehicle for flight, including hydraulic power unit hot fire, steering tests and internal power verifications using flight batteries.

United Space Alliance of Houston is NASA's prime contractor for the ground processing of the Ares I-X rocket.

"Processing for the Ares I-X test flight in parallel with space shuttle operations has been a true challenge involving people and hardware from across the country, and we're very proud of what the team has accomplished," said Mark Nappi, vice president of Launch and Recovery Systems for United Space Alliance.

ATK Space Systems of Magna, Utah, is NASA's prime contractor for the first stage of the rocket.

"The NASA and contractor teamwork displayed over the last four years has been the catalyst that brought us to this important milestone today," said Bob Herman, ATK's vice president of Exploration Systems for Kennedy Space Center Operations. "As the Ares I first stage provider, we are looking forward to receiving invaluable data during the flight test."

At the Flight Test Readiness Review on Oct. 23, mission managers will finalize the launch date and provide the team with a final "go" or "no go" for launch.

MacDill and USF team up

USF Business Professors research MacDill's management and culture practices to ensure combat effectiveness

TAMPA - MacDill Air Force Base is partnering with experts from the University of South Florida's College of Business to streamline operations and potentially trigger one of the largest lean management transformations ever. Working with the Sixth Air Mobility Wing (6 AMW), USF professors will research MacDill's management, culture, and business practices, including the transformation initiative known as Air Force Smart Operations for the 21st Century (AFSO21), before crafting a change management strategy aimed at infusing the "Lean" management program into daily operations. The project could potentially impact operations throughout the entire United States Air Force.

"Our goal is to increase combat effectiveness" said Lt. Col. Jim Ledbetter, the 6 AMW AFSO21 director. "We will improve combat effectiveness with the principles of AFSO21, by building a stronger, more agile and combat capable force that our nation can call upon."

The Air Force is using AFSO21 to develop a culture of continuous process improvement and waste elimination, said Ledbetter, adding that, like the nation in general, the Air Force is facing great resource constraints such as aging systems, increasing cost, and outdated processes. Through this fundamental transformation, the Air Force will identify performance gaps and allow airmen to find innovative and more effective ways to accomplish missions, exploit opportunities, and maximize efficiencies.

"AFSO21, along with USF's experts Jerry Koehler and John Jermier, will help the Air Force develop airmen that are problem-solvers," Ledbetter said. "This will keep us on the leading edge and enable the USAF to remain the greatest air force in the world."

AFSO21 is a program born from the successes the air force experienced with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Lean Aerospace Initiative (now known as the Lean Advancement Initiative - LAI). LAI enables enterprises to effectively, efficiently and reliably create value in complex and rapidly changing environments. USF was the fifth university in the nation to offer Lean educational courses based on programs developed by MIT's LAI.

A key part of this congressionally-funded project will be an evaluation of the initiatives currently in place to streamline operations through the AFSO21 program. Part of a research grant from the Air Force Office of Scientific Research, the evaluation will include in-depth research of MacDill's management, culture, current efficiency measures, and business processes. Led by principal investigators and professors Koehler and Jermier, the nearly three-quarter-million-dollar research program will include both the 6 AMW and the 927th Air Refueling Wing, the 6 AMW's Air Force Reserve sister wing.

"The goal is to create and implement an organizational change strategy for both wings' based on our research findings," said Koehler, an expert in organizational leadership, design, change, and development. "We will determine if their current attempts at being lean are, in fact, effective before designing a program," he said. "We will look to replicate effective practices and improve processes that are wasteful or inefficient."

Col. Larry Martin, the 6 AMW Commander, said he is looking forward to the project partnership, which he envisions will help MacDill be "one team with no seam" and lead to a long-term relationship between USF's business school and MacDill. He is excited to have the experts from USF come to MacDill and look at the current efforts to lean processes and create a culture of continuous process improvement as he is confident the partnership and the project will produce results that will help MacDill and the 6 AMW, along with reserve partner the 927 ARW, move towards the goals and objectives set forth in MacDill's strategic, long-term plan, and his vision for the 6 AMW to be "America's Best Wing!"

USF College of Business Dean Robert Forsythe believes the mutually beneficial partnership will spark future educational opportunities for MacDill's employees as well as research opportunities for USF's scholars. "We will work to improve efficiencies at the base and, at the same time, provide an avenue for our faculty to examine struggles in the organizational change process," he said, noting that one of the benefits of being a top research university is the opportunity to bring real-time, real-world lessons into the classroom. "Students in our management courses will be learning from the very instructors who will be spearheading this project."

Stetson Law wins Veterans Law Appellate Competition

TAMPA — On Oct. 15, Stetson University College of Law students won the inaugural Veterans Law Appellate Advocacy Competition in Washington, D.C., competing against teams from prestigious law schools around the country. Student advocates argued before the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims.

The Stetson Law team of Chase Hattaway and Megan O'Neill won the Best Respondent's Brief Award in addition to the competition. O'Neill was also named Best Overall Oralist, the highest individual award given in the competition, which was held in conjunction with the 20th anniversary of the court.

"Chase and Megan represented Stetson with poise and professionalism and they are coming home champions," said Moot Court Advisor Professor Stephanie Vaughan.

Professor Michael Allen, a veterans law expert who recently testified before the U.S. Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs, coached the team to victory. The competition was co-sponsored by the U.S.

Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims and the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims Bar Association.

"Moot court competitions in general are wonderful opportunities for students to learn the skills needed to be appellate advocates," said Professor Allen. "This competition in particular is important for students to see how they can use their talents to assist the men and women who fought for this country."

The U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims was created on Nov. 18, 1988, after nearly three decades of debate. For the sixth time in our nation's history, Congress established a court of national jurisdiction without geographical limits. Few federal courts have been created since the ratification of the Constitution.

Stetson Law's Center for Excellence in Advocacy began a veterans advocacy clinic in August at its Tampa Law Center to help Florida veterans understand their legal rights. To set up an appointment with the clinic, interested Florida veterans should call Stetson at 727-562-7317.

City property owners saved by Lien Amnesty program

ST. PETERSBURG - St. Petersburg property owners facing real estate liens get one last chance to clear their property's encumbrances through the city's Lien Amnesty program after a unanimous vote by City Council to extend the program through November. The innovative program, which was scheduled to end September 30, allows property owners to remove liens placed against their properties by paying a fraction of their unpaid fines if they meet certain guidelines. The program applies only to liens placed because of safety or neglect violations.

Property owners have until November 30 to apply for the program which, if approved, allows them to pay 20 percent of the outstanding lien on a single property. For example, an owner facing $4,000 in liens would only pay $800 in outstanding fines to clear their property. Property owners, the owner's attorney or authorized agent would pay a $50 application fee; all others pay $100. Owners must not have active code violations on the current property, or any other they own, to qualify. The program is not available for properties with Special Assessment liens for lot clearing, securing structures or building demolition.

Since April, the Lien Amnesty program has brought in more than $100,000 to city coffers-money that Codes Compliance Director Todd Yost says the city probably wouldn't normally have seen-and cleared 118 liens from properties. He says the main objective is to lower the number of city properties with liens, not increase revenue.

"This program has allowed those owners to re-enter the St. Petersburg real estate market, either to sell their property or benefit from its equity, getting them out from under the financial cloud caused by the lien."

Since the program's inception, almost 2,000 letters explaining the program were sent to St. Petersburg property owners with outstanding liens. More than 500 inquiries have come into the Codes Compliance office after the initial announcement. Yost cautions property owners against missing this new deadline.

"The city has no plans to extend the deadline after November 30, so it would be in the property owner's best interest to act now and clear their properties of that burden."

The Lien Amnesty program will apply only to code enforcement liens, not special assessment liens. Applications for the program will be accepted through November 30, 2009. For more information or to apply for the program, visit www.stpete.org/codes/lien_amnesty_program.asp.

Governor Crist names Deputy Chief of Staff

TALLAHASSEE - Governor Charlie Crist announced Wednesday that Shane Strum will take over as Chief of Staff beginning November 3. Strum currently serves as Deputy Chief of Staff to the Governor.

"Shane's past experience as a successful businessman combined with his experience in our administration on the important issues of transportation and business have prepared him well to lead our office," Governor Crist said. "He has shown tremendous leadership, and I am confident he will serve the people of Florida well."

Strum, 40, currently oversees a portfolio of Governor's agencies vital to Florida's economic growth that includes the Departments of Transportation, Education and Business and Professional Regulation. He has championed such issues for the administration as strategic transportation and infrastructure planning and higher education reform.

"I am humbled by this new responsibility to serve Governor Crist and the people of Florida. Under the Governor's leadership, I look forward to the opportunities that lie ahead and working together to better the lives of those we serve," Strum said. "These are challenging times in our state and I thank the Governor for his confidence in me. I welcome the opportunity to work alongside the dedicated staff of the Executive Office of the Governor."

Strum previously served as the Deputy Secretary for Business Operations in the Florida Department of Management Services. As deputy secretary for business operations, Strum directed a 450-person team that manages state purchasing, real estate development, fleet operations, federal property surplus, correctional privatization and supplier diversity. Prior to serving at DMS, Strum directed new business development for seven years at Blue Frog Solutions, Inc., a Pompano Beach-based finance and insurance technology firm.

From 1995 to 2000, Strum served as the Director of Corporate and Government Affairs for Nova Southeastern University's Huizenga School of Business and Entrepreneurship. USF Director Rachel May brings richness to ISLAC department TAMPA - The University of South Florida's new director of the Institute for the Study of Latin America and the Caribbean (ISLAC) has devoted her academic career to studying international human rights and Latin American politics. In her new role, Rachel May is very eager to build on USF's intellectual strength in Latin American and Caribbean studies as well as USF faculty expertise in such diverse areas as public health and engineering, multicultural education, and race and ethnicity. With this foundation we can expect ISLAC to be equally rich and varied in its offerings in order to attract top students to its forthcoming bachelor's and expanded master's degree programs. ISLAC is also planning for regular academic and community outreach programming for students, faculty and people in the community.

"The links between Tampa and Latin America and the Caribbean are broad and deep," May said. "ISLAC is well positioned to facilitate the exchange of resources between our faculty experts and the diverse local community."

Many ambitious plans are taking shape as May gets acclimated. Applying for foundation and federal grants is at the top of her list along with reaching out to the university and Tampa Bay communities. Fluent in Spanish, May is ready to share her knowledge, interests and curiosity about the many constituencies that make up Latin America and the Caribbean - a part of the world that captured her imagination over two decades ago.

"It is really hard for me to say what drew my interest to Latin America originally," May said. "I went to Colombia when I was 19 years old to visit friends and spend the summer, and I just felt like I had come home. The region has been pretty much at the center of my life since then."

May graduated magna cum laude in philosophy from Kenyon College and earned a master's and Ph.D. in Latin American Studies from Tulane University. She came to USF from the University of Washington, Tacoma where she worked from 1992 to 2009, a tenured professor since 2000. She was awarded three Fulbright Fellowships, most recently a Lecturing and Research Award in 2006, to teach and conduct research at the University of Buenos Aires.

She is the author of Terror in the Countryside: Campesino Response to Political Violence in Guatemala, 1954-1985, published by Ohio University Press in 2001, and co-edited with Andrew Milton, (Un)Civil Societies: Human Rights and Democratization in Eastern Europe and Latin America, published by Lexington Press in 2005.

Hillsborough Health Department modifies vaccination program

National shipment delays on N1H1 vaccines cause health departments revised scheduled availability

TAMPA -- The Hillsborough County Health Department (HCHD) has modified the H1N1 swine flu vaccination program due to a national delay in vaccine shipment. The HCHD received a revised schedule for the estimated availability of H1N1 vaccine October 17. The new estimates reduced the overall total number of doses available to Hillsborough County over the course of the program by 11% or roughly 77,000 doses from the original estimates.

The impact of this reduction is immediate. Over the next three weeks vaccine availability for Hillsborough County has been reduced by approximately 100,000 doses. "Instead of planning to distribute over 58,000 doses next week, we now only expect to have 6,000 doses," said Dr. Douglas Holt, Director, Hillsborough County Health Department. "The impact of this reduction has affected our current distribution plan and prompted these changes."

As a result of the limited supply, the HCHD is focusing on priority sub-groups within the overall target group identified for early vaccination. Over the course of the next week obstetricians will receive their first doses of injectable vaccine for pregnant women and the HCHD will initiate the school-based vaccination program at selected middle and high schools based on geographic location and vaccine availability.

"We knew it was going to be all about supply, and had planned for possible delays," said Dr. Holt. "However, given these new estimates I have asked my team to revise our current plan to ensure the limited supply of vaccine reaches the highest priority groups in our community: pregnant women and children."

To date, more than 15,200 doses have been distributed to medical providers and hospitals in Hillsborough County. The majority of this vaccine was in the form of live attenuated influenza vaccine administered by nasal spray and went to local pediatric practices.

For the coming weeks, the private provider and institutional portions of the are being scaled back. Each obstetrical clinic that requested vaccine will receive a minimum of 100 doses of the single-unit dose preservative-free vaccine. We also will be supplying vaccine to pediatricians and hospitals that did not get vaccine last week. The school-based program is also being scaled back. In cooperation with the school district, the HCHD will provide vaccination during school hours to nine middle and high schools next week.

Additional schools, including the after-hours program for elementary students, will be scheduled based on vaccine availability in the coming weeks.

Nationally and here locally the H1N1 (Swine) Flu is primarily affecting children and young adults. Additionally, Florida and the nation are seeing very little H1N1 in our elderly population.

All applicants, regardless of when they apply, have the same chance of being selected, as long as they submit their applications within the application period. Applicants must apply by 11:59 p.m. Nov. 30 to be included in the random drawing.

"When you submit your application, you will receive a receipt showing the hunts you have applied for and your preference status," said FWC quota hunt coordinator Eddie White.

Hunters also may apply as a group. A group leader must first apply to create the group. The group's number will be printed on the group leader's receipt. Each person wishing to join the group must submit his own application using the unique group number assigned to the leader.

If chosen, applicants will receive, by mail, a spring turkey quota hunt permit. Applicants not chosen in Phase I may reapply during Phase 2 for any hunts not filled and will still be eligible for the preference drawing next year. Applicants may check drawing results at MyFWC.com/Hunting, under "Limited Entry Hunts" click "Check Permit Availability and Drawing Results."

New hospital's most reliable asset is the building itself

Shands Cancer hospital opens Nov. 1, soothing, yet energy efficient

BY KIM ROSE
UF NEW BUREAU

GAINESVILLE — Heading to the hospital? These days, the newest member of your medical team just might be the building itself — and it's likely to play a bigger role in your healing than you might think. New trends in hospital design are helping health-care systems to better choreograph care and provide a soothing yet energy-efficient environment.

Consider the Shands Cancer Hospital at the University of Florida, which opens Nov. 1. The new 500,000-square-foot, $388-million medical tower is an extension of the Shands at UF academic medical center on its new south campus. The tower will feature 192 private beds and will house the Shands Critical Care Center for emergency and trauma services. Medical teams will serve a variety of inpatients, including those receiving diagnostic and therapeutic oncology care.

"Through academic medicine, we offer patients novel diagnostic and treatment options by expert physicians, researchers and teachers, and skilled and compassionate nurses and clinical teams," said Timothy Goldfarb, Shands HealthCare CEO. "Now we have added a truly innovative, healing setting that incorporates industry best practices and therapeutic design to enhance our patient's overall health-care experience. This is the hospital of tomorrow."

Shands and Gainesville Regional Utilities partnered to establish the GRU South Energy Center to provide 100 percent of the hospital's energy needs. The onsite power plant will ensure uninterrupted power, independent of the city's energy grid, regardless of a prolonged outage elsewhere in the community. It will efficiently convert fuel into electricity and provide 46 percent savings compared with traditional fossil fuel-burning generations. Officials estimate this will save 27 million kilowatts per year, enough to power about 3,000 homes.

The commitment to use environmentally sustainable construction methods to build the hospital has earned Shands HealthCare the silver Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design designation per the U.S. Green Building Council rating system.

"We used insulated windows that are treated to reduce solar glare and white rooftops designed to reflect heat," said Brad Pollitt, Shands HealthCare vice president for facilities. "The facility's air-conditioning heat wheels help to recover lost energy and irrigation and drainage systems use reclaimed water. We provide showers for employees who bike to work and special parking for hybrid cars."

Pollitt says that Shands is now being considered for gold-level LEED certification and will be one of a few academic medical centers nationwide to achieve this rating.

"Opening the Shands Cancer Hospital at UF marks a milestone for us," said Dr. David S. Guzik, UF senior vice president for health affairs and president of the UF&Shands Health System. "It will enable us to meet the growing needs of cancer patients, advance our ability to care for emergency and critical care patients and ensure our long-term commitment to meeting the region's health-care needs."

In designing the building, hospital facilities teams worked with architects whose expertise is health-care environments. Nursing and medical staff provided input to incorporate features such as nurse stations that improve sight lines to patients and monitoring systems and details that give patients control of their environment, allowing them to adjust lighting and window shades with the click of a remote. There is abundant natural light on each floor and hallway lights are wall-mounted or recessed so patients aren't subjected to blinding glare as they are wheeled from place to place.

"Every planning and design decision we made as a team was centered on patient comfort and ease for hospital staff in providing safe and healing care," said Laura Stillman, principal-in-charge/project director at Flad Architects.

"The new building is light-filled, welcoming and easily navigable for patients, families and staff — and we believe it offers hope to those who will experience it," she added.

In 2009, more than 100,000 cancer cases will be diagnosed in Florida, second only to California in the nation's cancer cases. In north Florida alone, at least 4,500 new cases are diagnosed annually. One in seven adults treated at Shands at UF has a cancer-related condition.

The new tower also includes the Shands Critical Care Center at UF, which combines an emergency department and Level I trauma center. The emergency room has 62 treatment areas and provides clinical teams the capacity to treat 100,000 patients a year. The trauma center has four large treatment rooms and is strategically located directly beneath the rooftop helipad that can hold the weight of two helicopters at once — making care a brief elevator ride away when every moment counts.

The hospital also includes 12 high-tech operating rooms designed to accommodate anticipated evolutions in robotics and 3-D imaging; surgical intensive and intermediate care units; and a bone marrow transplant unit, outpatient clinic and stem cell lab. A full-spectrum radiology department features the "crown jewel" of imaging, the Aquilion ONE 320-detector row CT scanner. The $2.5-million diagnostic tool, the second Shands HealthCare has acquired, helps physicians diagnose cancer, and it can detect stroke and heart disease in minutes, replacing dozens of other tests that typically take hours or even days. Shands was the first in Florida and one of only a handful in the nation to acquire this technology.

Ultimately, hospital officials worked hard to create a setting that underscores their commitment to hope and healing, from the Garden of Hope, which provides a place for quiet reflection, to the Sanctuaries of Silence and Peace, areas for meditation and prayer.

"As our clinical teams focus on each patient's medical and physical condition, the beautifully designed building creates a healing environment and helps us support their emotional well-being," Goldfarb said.

Some studies indicate that design improvements lead to improved patient outcomes, although more research needs to be done, according to Robert Cassidy, editor-in-chief of Building Design+Construction magazine, based in Oak Brook, Ill.

"There's great value in saving energy, improving day-lighting and providing views of nature and other amenities, such as healing gardens and family centered patient rooms and facilities," Cassidy said. "One of the ways the patients and families evaluate a health-care setting is how bright and cozy it is. Whether those elements have a benefit in reduced length of stay or other clinical benefits is not scientifically proven, but our gut tells us they do."

Tampa rivals came together for Susan G. Komen Foundation

TAMPA — Several components of the Academy of the Holy Names (AHN) community came together on Friday, Oct. 9 to raise a more than $2,400 for the Susan G. Komen Foundation. The third annual Play for the Cure event first launched in 2007 by the Academy of the Holy Names (AHN) volleyball team and student council was expanded this year to include participation by the swimming and diving team, as well as a special performance by the dance team. The AHN volleyball team played rival Tampa Catholic, and yet the two teams came together wearing pink and to show support for the Susan G. Komen Foundation. The result was the best Play/Swim for the Cure & Breast Cancer Awareness Night event to date, and a three-year total donated to Susan G. Komen now reaching $5,600. Congratulations to all who were involved in the planning and coordinating of this wonderful event, and thank you to everyone who donated to such a worthy cause.

Swim team lines up for a relay event complete with the breast cancer ribbons tattooed on their backs and their Swim for the Cure caps.

Even the smallest in the crowd found a way to think pink in their race for the cure t-shirts.

Holocaust Museum features new artist Samuel Bak

ST. PETERSBURG – The Florida Holocaust Museum is pleased to present international artist Samuel Bak and the premiere of his newest works: Icons of Loss: Angels and the Warsaw Boy of Samuel Bak. The exhibition, which features large scale surrealist artworks, studies and sketches, is made up of two series created by the artist and will open on November 1, 2009 and run through April 25, 2010.

Holocaust survivor, Samuel Bak, has painted a series of works based on Albrecht Dürer's Melancholia, dealing with the Holocaust and the absence of God. The vibrant paintings uses similar imagery to that used in Durer's etching, however, altered to raise questions about an "enlightened" society which allowed the Holocaust to occur, survival and God's failure to halt the killing of so many innocent lives. The other series included in the exhibition is based on the now infamous photograph of a young boy with arms raised taken during a roundup of Jews in the Warsaw Ghetto. (In this series), I reflect on the countless millions of children that perish in man's senseless conflicts, wars and genocides – past and present. What an unacceptable abuse of the innocents, of the just ones!" says artist, Samuel Bak.

The opening reception for the Icons of Loss will be held on Sunday, November 1, 2009 from 4:00 to 6:00 pm at the Florida Holocaust Museum. Hors d'oeuvres and wine will be served. Attendees will be able to meet the artist and hear special guest, Lawrence L. Langer, Holocaust scholar and expert on the works of Samuel Bak. In addition to the opening reception, the Museum has planned other public programs to coincide with the exhibition including one titled, "The Bible, Christianity and the Art of Samuel Bak" with scholars Danna Nolan Fewell and Gary Phillips from Drew University and Wabash College respectively, and another on childhood trauma and Bak's artwork.

Click it or Ticket program increases seatbelt usage to 85.2%

TALLAHASSEE - Florida Department of Transportation (FDOT) Secretary Stephanie Kopelousos announced today that statewide safety belt use reached a record 85.2 percent this year following FDOT's 2009 Click It or Ticket safety belt campaign and the passage of the state's primary enforcement law. The national safety belt use rate for 2009 is 84 percent.

"Fastening their safety belt is the easiest thing drivers and passengers can do to reduce the risk of tragedy or serious injury during a vehicle crash," said Governor Charlie Crist.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) estimates with the approval of its primary safety belt law, Florida will save 124 lives, prevent 1,733 serious injuries, and save $408 million in associated costs each year. Passage of the primary law means law enforcement can now stop drivers for the sole reason that someone is not wearing a safety belt.

"The increase in safety belt use is great news for the people of Florida," said FDOT Secretary Stephanie Kopelousos. "There is little doubt the statewide efforts to pass a primary enforcement law played a vital role in reaching this all time high. However, there is still much to be done to convince everyone to wear their safety belt, every trip, every time."

"Safety belts are the single most effective piece of safety equipment in a vehicle,

Castor invites FLA children's hospital reps to Capitol Hill for insights on health care solutions

WASHINGTON, D.C. – As lawmakers inch closer to landmark health care reform, the National Association of Children's Hospitals, in coordination with the Congressional Children's Health Care Caucus, hosted a Capitol Hill briefing yesterday featuring leaders of Tampa Bay area hospitals. The briefing, "Chronic Conditions: The Differences and Challenges for Children," examined children's health matters. U.S. Rep. Kathy Castor co-chairs the Congressional Children's Health Care Caucus.

Representatives from St. Joseph's Children's Hospital of Tampa and All Children's Hospital of St. Petersburg were included in yesterday's briefing. Dr. Daniel Plasencia represented St. Joseph's, and Dr. Michael Epstein represented All Children's. "Doctors from Tampa Bay area hospitals are nationally renowned experts," Castor said. "Their insights will serve America well as we strive for affordable health care solutions for families.

"Children require unique treatment for physical, mental and developmental conditions," Castor continued. "Families of children with chronic conditions often struggle to find quality, coordinated care to comprehensively address their children's needs. Ensuring that kids have a good team of doctors to address chronic conditions and to make sure that such care is more accessible is our ultimate goal."

The Congressional Children's Health Care Caucus has worked on issues including child hood obesity, food allergies, asthma and health care reform. Castor co-chairs the bipartisan Children's Health Care Caucus with Dave Reichert of Washington State. "We will make substantial progress on children's health through health legislation," Castor said. Human Trafficking Task Force launches Learn, Look, and Report

CLEARWATER - The Clearwater Police Department, the Clearwater/Tampa Bay Area Task Force on Human Trafficking, St. Petersburg College and their partners have released a 15-second, two 30-second and 60-second public service announcements, in an effort to continue to increase public awareness about human trafficking. They are presented in both English and Spanish.

The theme of the public awareness campaign is Learn, Look and Report. Many people are in disbelief that human trafficking is present in the Tampa Bay Area. "If you don't know what to look for, you won't see it. Law enforcement needs the public's help because victims don't self-report. They are usually in fear for their lives or the lives of their loved ones," said Clearwater Police Lieutenant George Koder, who heads the Clearwater/Tampa Bay Area Task Force on Human Trafficking.

Human trafficking is the exploitation by force, fraud or coercion of vulnerable people - often immigrants - for forced labor, domestic servitude or commercial sex operations. Human trafficking is a nine billion dollar a year industry. Florida is one of the top three destination states for women and children trafficked into this country. To learn more about human trafficking, visit www.clearwaterpolice.org or www.HumanTraffickingFlorida.org.

This project is funded by federal grants from the Bureau of Justice Assistance and St. Petersburg College.

GoUSFBulls.com talks with Coach Stan Heath about men's basketball

TAMPA - On the eve of the BIG EAST Men's Basketball Media Day at Madison Square Garden in New York City, GoUSFBulls.com sat down with Coach Stan Heath to get the inside scoop on the 2009-10 Bulls. Check out the season preview below.

What are the goals for the Bulls in 2009-10?

In the early part of this season we really have to bring our chemistry together. We need to lay a strong foundation and build our identity around rebounding, defense and running the ball. As for our goals, we want to win our home games and we want to have a strong non-conference season. We want to be the team that puts ourselves in the top part of the BIG EAST's regular-season standings. We also have postseason aspirations. We have several new players and we are young, but we feel like we have the ingredients to take a big step forward.

What has to happen for USF to move into the next level of play in the BIG EAST?

We have to be a stronger team on the inside. Our inside scoring and rebounding must improve. Our guards need to utilize our big guys. The second thing we need to address is our shooting and defense. We have to finish games by making free throws and making solid plays down the stretch.

Where do you rank the Bulls in the pre-season BIG EAST polls?

I'll let the media and fans decide that. We are going to go into every game preparing to win. We want to make sure we don't take a night off. The league is still very strong, and yet we feel like we are a much stronger team coming into this season.

What are the strengths of this year's team?

We have experienced guards. Dominique Jones is now in his third season, and I think has become one of the premier players in the league. Chris Howard is now a senior for us. We've added Mike Mercer to our team, who can be an impact player for us. We also have the addition of Anthony Crater as the season goes on. So, having guards with experience is a big key for us.

We are also more balanced. We were really one dimensional last year; we were basically a guard-oriented team. With the improvement of Gus Gilchrist and the addition of Jarrid Famous, we feel like we have a stronger inside game. I've been pleased with the play of Toarlyn Fitzpatrick, and we are hopeful Alex Rivas can join us for the season.

I'm excited with the fact we can play a faster-paced game. In the past we have been a bit reluctant to get into a transition game, but now that we have more depth, and as long as we stay healthy, we can utilize eight, nine or 10 bodies.

What does this team lack or need to improve upon?

Our defense has to be our foundation. We need to be a strong rebounding team to go with our defense. The addition of speed and size should allow us to improve in those areas. We have worked hard in the offseason on shooting and our ball handling skills. Those two areas must improve as well.

What has Dominique Jones done to improve his game after two strong seasons in the league?

Dominique Jones has worked hard in the offseason to improve his three-point shooting, his mid-range game and attacking the basket. However more importantly for Dominique will be his ability to utilize his teammates and make the guys around him better. If he does this, our team will go to another level.

Is there another scoring threat to take some of the offensive pressure off Jones?

Augustus Gilchrist averaged 10 points a game last year and he wasn't at full strength. We're seeing a different player from him this year. I really feel like he's a guy who can contribute more. Mike Mercer can also contribute from the wing position. Jarrid Famous also gives us an interior player that can also give us an offensive boost through running the floor, rebounding, put backs and even post shots.

Who has impressed you the most of the newcomers?

Toarlyn Fitzpatrick. I knew with Jarrid's experience what he could do, but Toarlyn has really come on. He is a local product from Tampa and he has been a kid who has a lot of potential. A lot of people have seen it, he has just never really pushed himself. We are seeing him push himself now, and he has the skill level to make shots, post up and run the floor. He's learning a lot.

How good can Jarrid Famous be in the BIG EAST?

We recruited him as an impact player and I have no doubt that he can be that way. I already know he's a strong rebounder, a strong player in terms of blocking shots and clogging up the paint. And he can really run; he doesn't ever get tired. He will change what USF has been able to accomplish on the inside over the past few years, maybe since we've had Kentrell Gransberry.

Who would be your starting five if you played a game tonight? What about the next three off the bench?

Jarrid Famous, Augustus Gilchrist, Mike Mercer, Chris Howard and Dominique Jones.

Toarlyn Fitzpatrick would be a post player to come in. On the perimeter Justin Leemow has experience from last year. One or two of those three shooters - Mike Burwell, Jordan Dumars or Shaun Noriega - has to emerge. I can't give you an answer on those guys yet.

How To:

Get the kids to help! Kids can make spider legs without cutting by pinching and gently rolling gumdrops back and forth between their fingertips into long thin strips. The more they roll them, the stickier they become, so have extra sugar handy to make them less sticky.

FWC introduces young adults with disabilities to protecting and managing natural resources

The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission (FWC) is again teaming up with the Archer Disability Foundation (www.archerdisabilityfoundation.org/) to introduce young adults with disabilities to careers that involve protecting and managing Florida's precious natural resources.

The fourth annual Disabled Mentoring Day will begin at 10 a.m. on Friday, Oct. 23, at the FWC's South Region office, 8535 Northlake Blvd., West Palm Beach.

The media are invited to cover the event. Students with disabilities - the mentees - will visit various stations in and around the office, where they will be introduced to several species of fish and wildlife. Live animals will be on display, and an FWC helicopter will be on site.

Mentees will learn about protected and threatened animals, such as alligators, manatees and sea turtles. They will also meet mentors, including biologists, administrators and law enforcement personnel charged with protecting and managing Florida's fish and wildlife.

Last year, 30 young adults from local schools participated in the event.

Disabled Mentoring Day is a national program coordinated by the American Association of People with Disabilities.
