

A Most Valuable Agent.

The glycerine employed in Dr. Pierce's medicines greatly enhances the medicinal properties which it extracts from native medicinal roots and holds in solution much better than alcohol would. It also possesses medicinal properties of its own, being a valuable demulcent, nutritive, antiseptic and antiferment. It adds greatly to the efficacy of the Black Cherry-bark, Bloodroot, Golden Seal root, Stone root and Queen's root, contained in "Golden Medical Discovery" in subduing chronic, or lingering coughs, bronchial, throat and lung affections, for all of which these agents are recommended by standard medical authorities.

In all cases where there is a wasting away of flesh, loss of appetite, with weak stomach, as in the early stages of consumption, there can be no doubt that glycerine acts as a valuable nutritive and aids the Golden Seal root, Stone root, Queen's root and Black Cherrybark in promoting digestion and building up the weak and strength, controlling the cough and bringing about a healthy condition of the whole system. Of course, it must not be expected to work miracles. It will not cure consumption except in its earlier stages. It will cure very severe, obstinate, hang-on chronic coughs, bronchial and laryngeal troubles, and chronic sore throat with hoarseness. In acute coughs it is not so effective. It is in the lingering hang-on coughs, or those of long standing, even when accompanied by bleeding from lungs, that it has performed its most marvelous cures.

Prof. Finley Ellingwood, M. D., of Bennett Med. College, Chicago, says of glycerine:

"In dyspepsia it serves an excellent purpose. Holding a fixed quantity of the peroxide of hydrogen in solution, it is one of the best manufactured products of the present time in its action upon enfeebled, disordered stomachs, especially if there is ulceration or catarrhal gastritis (catarrhal inflammation of stomach). It is a most efficient preparation. Glycerine will relieve many cases of pyrosis (heartburn) and excessive gastric (stomach) acidity."

"Golden Medical Discovery" enriches and purifies the blood curing blotches, pimples, eruptions, scrofulous swellings and old sores, or ulcers.

FRIEND TO FRIEND.

The personal recommendations of people who have been cured of coughs and colds by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy have done more than all else to make it a staple article of trade and commerce over a large part of the civilized world.

A Fool Scientist.

(Original)

Reginald Overocker was a trial to his mother. Mrs. Overocker had unbounded respect for wealth and sought to train her son to esteem all roads to wealth, including marriage. The son cared nothing for wealth and was absorbed in the sciences. Everybody knows that there is nothing cheaper than brains and nothing more profitable than a knack for getting rich. This is the reason that Mrs. Overocker lamented that her son insisted on wasting his time on chemistry, geology, astronomy, biology—indeed, every science ending in y.

But when one day the young man told his mother that he was engaged to Lucy Le Roy, who had come of age and into possession of a large estate at the same time, Mrs. Overocker was much mollified. She embraced her son half a dozen times and told him he might waste his time with his sciences to his heart's content.

There was one difficulty in the way of Miss Le Roy's peaceable possession of the Le Roy estates. Her grandfather had accumulated them, and as her father, Henry Le Roy, had married her mother contrary to the old Le Roy's wishes, dying he had left all the property to Peter Le Roy, his only other child, Miss Le Roy's uncle. Peter disappointed the old man by leading a wild, roving life and had twenty-five years before been last heard of in South America. From that time he had not troubled her brother or her brother's family, who at the old man's death had entered into peaceable possession of the estate.

But, then, supposed-to-be-dead people have an inconvenient way of turning up when least wanted, and the engagement of the young couple had scarcely been announced when notice was served on Miss Le Roy that her uncle Peter had returned and demanded his possessions. The blow was a severe one to Miss Le Roy and Mrs. Overocker. Reginald was engrossed in his scientific studies and experiments and did not seem to have common sense enough to take notice that he, a poor man, had pledged himself to marry a girl who at the end of a lawsuit—if she contested the claim—would likely be as penniless as himself. His want of appreciation of the fact was very annoying to his mother and correspondingly refreshing to his fiancée.

He who claimed to be Peter Le Roy had long lived under the name of Frederick Briggs. He had very little resemblance to the boyish pictures of Peter, but this was not surprising, as few people will easily recognize even a friend not seen in a quarter of a century. He secured the services of a lawyer with a talent for making the most of his points of evidence, and many people had no doubt that he was the real Peter. However, Miss Le Roy's counsel advised her to contest his claim on the ground that he was no one else than Frederick Briggs.

It was well known that the real Peter Le Roy when a boy of eighteen had been hit in the temple with a baseball and had consequently lost the use of his right eye. Miss Le Roy's counsel relied on this fact to prove Briggs an impostor and ordered the man before an oculist for examination. Whether Briggs and his counsel knew what their opponents intended to gain by the examination and were prepared for their tests or whether the man was really blind in his right eye, the oculist was unable to prove that he could see with it. However, when the case was called and Briggs had brought the strongest possible proof that he was Peter Le Roy, Miss Le Roy's counsel introduced the oculist, who vainly tried by a number of tests to entrap the claimant into reading with his left eye closed. The trial had reached the climax, and Miss Le Roy was so wrought up over the probability of being reduced to poverty that she prevailed upon her studious lover to leave his sciences for one day and go to court with her. He sat in the courtroom evidently far away with some problem till the oculist began his efforts to entrap the claimant. After that he was all attention. When the oculist failed Reginald whispered something to Miss Le Roy's counsel, then left the courtroom. In half an hour he returned and was called upon to examine the claimant's eyes. Giving the man a pair of spectacles to put on, Reginald held a black card before his eyes, on which were words written in green letters, and asked him to read them. This the claimant did without any difficulty. Reginald glanced at Miss Le Roy's counsel, indicating that he was satisfied, and he was called on for the result of his test.

"Of these glasses," he said, "the left is red, the right is ordinary transparent glass. The red glass before what he admits is his sound eye combined with green letters produces black. In other words, through this glass he cannot see the letters at all. Consequently he read them with his right eye, which he claims is opaque." The judge looked at the jury, the jury looked at each other, the spectators turned the oculist blue and while

Miss Le Roy beamed on her lover. Then the jury without leaving their seats found a verdict for the defendant, and the property remained in the hands of Miss Le Roy.

When Reginald Overacker was praised for his shrewdness in unmasking the claimant's rascality he was puzzled. He couldn't understand why such a simple matter should inspire judge, jury, attorneys and a room full of spectators with wonder and admiration. However, since he was thereafter permitted to pursue his studies without the interference of his mother.
