Cretonne the Latest Material for Slips, Coats, Parasols and Hats—Something Quite New in Lingerie Hats—Poppy-Reds now Popular—Skeleton Summer Coats of Ribbon.

BY MONS. GENE DE PONTAC.

There is a tremendous variety in the colors introduced this season, and new and wonderful combinations and effects may be arrived at. A costume may be made or marred by its color scheme and some of the most impossible-seeming combinations are the most successful when skilfully handled.

A new use for large-flowered cretonne is to make of it a slip for wearing under a gown of transparent material. Some of the effects are really beautiful, the pronounced designs and colorings of the cretonne dulled and blurred by the outer robe of silk voile or chiffon.

The cretonne coat is much worn abroad, not only with lingerie frocks for country wear, for which it would seem to be best suited, but with silk or wool gowns for afternoon functions. Less conspicuous and equally smart is the coat of plain linen, with waistcoat, collar-facing and cuffs of cretonne or chintz.

Aside from hats and parasols, cretonne figures largely in accessories—in belts and brass-mounted handbags, waistcoats, collars and cuffs and even as buckles on white shoes.

The newest lingerie hat is quite unlike the soft mob-cap affair hitherto seen and is made of linen, hand-embroidered and lace-medallored, stretched smoothly over a shape of the rolling sailor variety, with a rather high crown.

Carise, which was so much seen on early spring hats, appears less and less—not altogether, it would seem, because it is too warm a color, for its place has been to a large extent taken by poppy reds, which are exceedingly popular for mid-summer hats.

Coats made of ribbon are the very newest thing. Flowered ribbon, ten or twelve inches wide two widths in the back and one on each side of the

The Modesty of Women

Naturally makes them shrink from the indelicate questions, the obnoxious examinations, and unpleasant local treatments, which some physicians consider essential in the treatment of diseases of women. Yet, if help can be had, it is better to submit to this ordeal than let the disease grow and spread.

The most intelligent women now-a-days insist on knowing what they take as medicine instead of opening their mouths like a lot of young birds and gulping down whatever is offered them.

SEVEN YEARS A FUGITIVE

Romantic Story of an Escaped Florida Convict Who Has Returned to Serve His Sentence

Tallahassee, Fla., June 13.—A brief dispatch in the Morning News Thursday told of the return of an escaped convict to finish serving a sentence of ten years imposed upon him nine years ago.

Nine years ago Milsted was a farmer in Escambia county, 29 years of age, was married and the father of four children. It was during his wild days that he had incurred the ill-will of some of his neighbors to such a pitch that the gun-toting habit had come to be constant.

Became a Camp Cook

One month after entering upon his sentence he was made a trusty and assigned to duty as a camp cook. When Milsted became a convict Cleo Neel was in charge of the camp as superintendent. Milsted remembers him as a kindly man, conducting his trust with a firm hand, but one which had no sting of cruelty.

It was a custom at the camp when new convicts arrived to have them stripped of their clothing outside the stockade and dressed in stripes. It usually happened that the new arrivals came in at night, and the transfer was made in the dark, and clothing taken from the new ones was left on the ground with orders for the trustees to burn it the morning following.

Escaped in a Storm

For months he began saving his pennies and at the time of his escape he had the great sum of $4.50. Being a trusty he had the freedom of the camp and one night as a storm was brewing he was sent outside the stockade to close the windows of the guards' quarters.

Haunted Day and Night

Milsted had been in Texas leading the life of a fugitive for seven years. During that time he never saw a familiar face, or any one from whom he had cause to expect arrest or recapture, but he was haunted night and day with the palpitating presence of wrong-doing, rendering his life a burden.

He never went to church, but the Salvation Army held services on the streets of the little Texas town every night, and by some force he was led to attend the meetings. As he listened to the simple confessions of faith night after night the burden that Milsted carried grew heavier, and by degrees he came to the conclusion that he must seek relief from his gnawing trouble.

All these years he had been separated from his family. Not until two years ago did his wife know of his whereabouts and after she did know, communication was not frequent. The fear of discovery and arrest kept him from writing and forbade the letters of his family.

After the man had made up his mind to tell the captain of the Salvation Army his past life it was difficult for him to get up the courage, but determined to put an end to his misery by getting right with the laws of his country and the demands of justice he told the captain and asked his advice. The captain told him there was nothing to do but to give himself up again to the authorities from whose jurisdiction he had fled, and, agreeing to do this, the captain wrote a letter to Commissioner of Agriculture B. E. McLin, who is the official head of the prison system, reciting the crime, conviction and escape of Milsted and indicating his desire to come back and place himself in the hands of the law.

With this assurance Milsted lost no time in starting to Florida. His family is still living in Escambia county near McDavid station. He arrived there Sunday night and spent the time until Monday noon with them—his own family from whom he had been separated nine years.

Goes Back to His Family

The three elder children remembered him, but the youngest, a baby when he was convicted, ran from him and was reluctant to make friends with him. There were tears at the meeting. The burden of rearing the family had fallen upon the woman. Nine years ago the boy, who is the eldest of the brood, was but a child, and the others were younger and more helpless.

Some of the neighbors dropped in Monday and Milsted told them his story. He was on the way to Tallahassee to give himself up. The news spread in the neighborhood and a deputy sheriff, thinking to get some reward, arrested him and kept him in jail in Pensacola until Milsted could get authority from the prison department to come on to Tallahassee without guard.

Paroled by Prison Board

He arrived Wednesday and reported to the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and there told his story. Because of the absence of the Governor it was impossible to have a board meeting, but the man was paroled with instructions to report once a week until the board acts upon the case.

It is nine years since the crime was committed. The sentence was for ten years. Nearly two years of the time was spent in servitude and the rest of it has been passed in the mental discomfort of the fugitive. Speaking of it, Milsted said: "I would rather be in a penitentiary than to spend the time as I did. If any man believes that freedom under such circumstances is better than living under prison regulations, just let him try it and find out."

The man hopes to get some sort of clemency, but he does not depend upon it and isn't begging for it—with all seeming sincerity for an opportunity to begin life again and to take care of his family. It is his purpose to return to Texas after the sentence is served, or after he has satisfied the demand that the board shall put upon him.—Savannah News.
