COLD IN GEORGIA AND THE CAROLINAS

Many People in Shattered Cities Are Shivering Amid the Wrecks of their Homes—Loss of Life and Property Appalling.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 29.—Georgia and South Carolina are facing a drop in temperature which is severe enough to threaten those made homeless by floods with serious suffering, as many of the affected are practically without household goods and are camping in the open.

Reports from Augusta show that the streets are practically clear of water, but that a decidedly low temperature prevails for this season of the year.

The death list remains the same, though many rumors, which could not be substantiated, have been rife of the drowning parties in various sections of the affected districts.

Spartanburg, Greenville, Columbia, and other South Carolina cities report all danger is over and that the damage has been comparatively light.

Telegraphic communication is slowly being resumed in all directions. Trains coming into the city last night report that much damage has been done along the right of way and a detour via Nashville was necessary to reach northern points.

The first trains from New York reached Atlanta last night, bringing a great bunch of mail which had been held up on account of broken bridges.

Fourteen Lives Lost at Augusta

Augusta, Ga., Aug. 29.—Now that the water has sufficiently subsided to make an intelligent estimate of the damage done by the floods, it is found that the foundations of a great many of the buildings of the city have been seriously damaged, especially in the business section of the city.

Among the more seriously damaged buildings are the Central Grammar school building, the walls of which have collapsed. The walls of the National Biscuit company building have fallen and the underpinning of the Port Royal bridge is in danger, though the bridge itself is still intact.

The death list is estimated to be fourteen in this vicinity alone, though it is expected that the roll will be lengthened by later developments.

Immense Damage to Property

The property loss in Georgia and the Carolinas is estimated at two and a half million dollars.

Three Thousand Homeless at Fayetteville

Fayetteville, N. C., Aug. 29.—This city, located on the Cape Fear river and having a population of 12,000, is almost entirely submerged as a result of the floods. Probably three thousand persons are reported to be homeless and an appeal for relief has been issued.

MURDERERS OF MORELAND

State Detective Eaton Is Sure He Has Evidence Against the Right Parties

(Tampa Tribune, 28th.)

That he will be able to produce evidence to convict Truby O. Osteen and Will Bexley of the murder of W. H. Moreland at High Springs when they come to trial at Gainesville was the statement made by Special Agent Charles F. Eaton, of the state detective service yesterday. Mr. Eaton says that he will not only do this, but will bring to justice the man who wrote him a threatening letter from High Springs, advising him not to come to that city and interfere in the affairs of the residents there.

Mr. Eaton arrived in the city yesterday morning, after a recent visit to High Springs. He went there in the face of a threatening letter written to him some weeks ago by an unknown person there. He secured evidence on which the two accused were bound over, also evidence as to the murderers of W. C. Sellers, the Atlantic Coast Line special agent.

Mr. Eaton came to Tampa on professional business and will probably remain here several days. He has with him evidence against the writer of the threatening letter from High Springs that is beyond question, and will turn it over to the United States postal authorities, who are now in charge of this phase of the sensational killing of young Moreland at that place the first week in August.

A Cold Blooded Murder

From the evidence secured by Detective Eaton from eye witnesses the killing of Moreland was cold blooded murder. The homicide was committed in a thickly populated district of the city, and there were as many as four eye witnesses. While the statement of some of these as to the effect that they did not believe that the young men intended killing Moreland, that they fired the fatal shots. When the two young men were arraigned at Gainesville one eye witness to the tragedy testified, but despite this fact the accused were allowed their freedom on bonds of $1,000 each. Detective Eaton is of the opinion that they should either have been freed or should have been held without bond on a charge of murder.

The crime of which the young men are charged and the subsequent developments are still fresh in the minds of Tampanians. Moreland was a commercial traveler out of Atlanta. At 8 o'clock at night he was shot down on the streets of High Springs, and no light was thrown on the case until the state's officer conducted an investigation.

Before he went to High Springs Mr. Eaton received a letter, written on a typewriter, advising him to let the affair alone, or he would suffer the consequences of interference. In the face of this the officer went to High Springs and after securing evidence on which the two young men were bound over he set about finding evidence against the writer of the threatening letter. There are only five typewriters in High Springs and he secured letters written on all of these, and after comparing them decided on which typewriter the letter had been written, and it was an easy matter to discover who the writer was. This information has been turned over to the government authorities.

Murder Was From Jealousy

From the evidence secured by the state detective, and which came out, in part, at the preliminary hearing, the killing of Moreland was due largely to jealousy. The three young men, it is alleged, had engagements with young women of High Springs for an evening drive. The companion of Moreland decided not to go, which interfered with the plans of the other two, breaking up the plans of Osteen and Bexley.

It is alleged that when Moreland returned from a short call to the young woman with whom he had an engagement that he was accosted by the two young men, and an altercation ensued, in which Moreland was shot and killed.

The Sellers Murder

For a long while an effort has been made to secure evidence against the slayers of Special Agent Sellers, of the Atlantic Coast Line, who was shot down at the depot at High Springs several years ago. Sellers was employed by the Coast Line to investigate some car breakers at High Springs, and when he arrived there at 8 o'clock in the evening he was shot down within a few minutes after he had stepped from the train. A load of buckshot tore away nearly all of his head, and no evidence was ever discovered by which anyone could be connected with the crime. Recently, however, State Detective Eaton has come into possession of some information which he believes will lead to the apprehension of the murderer.

WHAT DID DICK DO?

He Hasn't Yet Answered the Famous Question, "Where Did You Get It?"

London, Aug. 29.—The freedom of the city of Dublin, which was conferred on Richard Croker yesterday, was formerly a much prized honor.

The first name on the list of Isaac Butt, and the great Irish politician was followed by Gladstone, General Grant and Parnell. Two other American names appear—those of Edward Potter, captain of the ship Constitution which brought relief to Ireland in 1880 and the late Patrick A. Collins, who was at one time mayor of Boston.

A special meeting was summoned to confer the honor, and the lord mayor of Dublin occupied the chair during the ceremony. Mr. Croker attended with a party, including Miss Croker, Mrs. Bowman and Richard Croker, Jr. Mr. Croker was presented with an illuminated copy of the resolution which made him a Burgess of the ancient city of Dublin, after which he signed the roll of honor.

The Evening Mail, commenting on the presentation, says: "Of Mr. Croker's services to America we know little, of his services to Ireland, we know less."

But Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Cured Him

It is with pleasure that I give you this unsolicited testimonial. About a year ago when I had a severe case of measles I got caught out in a hard rain and the measles settled in my stomach and bowels. I had an awful time and had it not been for the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, I could not have possibly lived but a few hours longer, but thanks to this remedy I am now strong and well. I have written the above through simple gratitude and I shall always speak a good word for this remedy.—Sam. H. Owen, Concord, Ga. For sale by all druggists.

CHARMER WAS THINLY CLAD

Wore Only Her Nightie When Her Young Lockinvar Carried Her Away

Hesper, Mont., Aug. 29.—The cowboy admirer of Freda Bauer, fifteen years old, frightened her father with a revolver under pretense of robbing him, took the girl, clad only in her nightgown, on a horse with him, and galloped with her across country through the sage brush to Laurel, a village eight miles from her house.

John Bauer, the girl's father, says he recognized behind the huge false mustache which the "bandit" wore Ernest Huxton, a young cowboy who has often called on Miss Bauer of late.

Two men rode up to the Bauer home a few night ago, and calling Bauer to the door, "covered" him with a revolver and demanded money and whisky. Bauer retreated into the house, saying he would get what was wanted, and barricaded himself in his room, while his wife fled by a rear way to a neighbors, crawling on her hands and knees part of the way.

When help came and Bauer ventured out of his room, the man had disappeared, and Freda Bauer's bedroom was empty. All her clothes were hanging on chairs or in the wardrobe, indicating that she had been carried away in her night gown.

County officers arrested Jack Howard, a cowboy, whom Bauer said he saw leading the horse of his caller. Howard admitted that he went to the house, and says Huxton was with him. He told the police that the girl was taken in her night dress to Laurel, willingly, or to discuss the matter further.

At Laurel trace of the couple is lost. The authorities are unable to learn whether they are in hiding with friends, awaiting an opportunity to escape, or whether the girl is detained against her will.

The father is inclined to believe that his daughter was abducted. Huxton had called several times on the girl. The family had joked with her about him, and laughingly asked when she intended to get married. To these sallies she replied that she did not like Huxton and would not marry him.

The fact that the girl was taken in her night clothes leads her family to believe she was taken without her consent and that the attempted hold-up was a blind to cover the kidnapping of Miss Bauer.

As the girl is under age, a marriage license cannot be issued in this state without the consent of the parents.

NO GEISHA GIRLS FOR JACKIES

Ancient Japanese Custom of Entertainment Protested Against by the Y. M. C. A.

New York, Aug. 29.—The American sailors of Admiral Sperry's round-the-world fleet will not be permitted to break the hearts of the Japanese geisha girls if the Young Men Christian Association of Japan, the native Christian churches and the missionaries are able to prevent it. Information from Tokio was received at the headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. in this city that the Christian religious organizations of Japan are circulating petitions among the citizens of Japanese cities which the men of the American fleet will visit protesting against the old style of Japanese hospitality, which is expected to include an abundance of stimulants and introductions to the geisha girls.

The object of the movement is announced to be a celebration more in keeping with American ideals. It is said to be desired that a precedent be established of eliminating geisha girls from the public entertainments in Japan.

THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

By Meredith Nicholson (Copyright 1907 by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.)

CHAPTER VII

ON THE DARK DECK.

"AM Columbus every time I cross," said Shirley. "What lies out there in the west is an undiscovered country."

"Then I shall have to take the part of the rebellious and doubting crew. There is no America, and we're sure to get into trouble if we don't turn back."

"You shall be clapped into irons and fed on bread and water and turned over to the Indians as soon as we reach land."

"Don't starve me! Let me hang from the yardarm at once or walk the plank. I choose the plank immediately after dinner for my ossequies!"

They were silent for a moment, continuing their tramp. Fair weather was peopling the decks. Dick Claiborne was engrossed with a viraculous California girl and Shirley saw him only at meals, but he and Armitage held night sessions in the smoking room, with increased liking on both sides.

Armitage saw something of all the Claibornes every day in the pleasant intimacy of ship life, and Hilton Claiborne found the young man an interesting talker. Judge Claiborne is, as every one knows, the best posted American of his time in diplomatic history, and when they were together Armitage suggested topics that were well calculated to awaken the old lawyer's interest.

Shirley and Armitage talked—as people will on shipboard—of everything under the sun. Shirley's enthusiasms were in themselves interesting, but she was informed in the world's larger affairs, as became the daughter of a man who was an authority in such matters, and found it pleasant to discuss them with Armitage. He felt the poetic quality in her. It was that which had first appealed to him, but he did not know that something of the same sort in himself touched her. It was enough for those days that he was courteous and amusing and gained a trifle in her eyes from the fact that he had no tangle background.

Then came the evening of the fifth day. They were taking a turn after dinner on the lighted deck. The spring stars hung faint and far through thin clouds, and the wind was keen from the sea. A few passengers were out. The deck stewards went about gathering up rugs and chairs for the night.

"Time oughtn't to be reckoned at all at sea, so that people who feel themselves getting old might sail forth into the deep and defy the old man with the hourglass."

"It is the idea. Such people could become fishers—permanently and grow very wise from so much brain food." "They wouldn't eat, Mr. Armitage. Brain food forsooth! You talk like a breakfast food advertisement. My idea—mine, please note—is for such fortunate people to sail in pretty little boats with orange tinted sails and pick up lost dreams. I got a hint of that in a pretty poem once—

"Time seemed to pause a little space. I heard a dream go by."

"But out here in midocean a little boat with lateen sails wouldn't have much show. And dreams passing over—the idea is pretty and is creditable to your imagination. But I thought your fancy was more militant. Now, for example, you like battle pictures," he said. "That was a wonderful collection of military and battle pictures shown in Paris last winter."

She half withdrew her hand from his arm and turned away. The sea winds did not wholly account for the sudden color in her cheeks. She had seen Armitage in Paris—in cafes, at the opera, but not at the great exhibition of the world famous battle exhibition of the world which he had seen her, and she remembered with instant consciousness the hours of absorption she had spent before those canvases.

"I was in Paris during the exhibition," he said quietly. "Ormsby, the American painter—the man who did the 'High Tide at Gettysburg'—is an acquaintance of mine."

"Oh!" It was Ormsby's painting that had particularly captivated Shirley. She had returned to it day after day, and she thought that Armitage had taken advantage of her deep interest in Eick-
