BRYAN CALLS TEDDY TO BOOK

all of the big "illegal combinations" are supporting Bryan, the latter, on arriving here, announced that he would fully reply to President Roosevelt later.

Real Joy Among Republicans

New York, Sept. 23.—Real joy and enthusiasm are to be seen around the republican national headquarters in greater quantities than have been manifested heretofore during the present campaign. President Roosevelt's letting made public this morning, showing that Taft had drawn the dead line on Foraker a year ago, Bryan's attack last night on Roosevelt, the Comstock's harking back in his speech yesterday to the cry of anti-imperialism, and the general impression that the republicans have benefited by the recent Hearst expose of the ramifications of Standard Oil lobbying, have all given cause for rejoicing in the republican camp. "We haven't started to run our race yet," said one national committeeman. "So far the elephant has been letting the democratic donkey make all the pace. The elephant, however, has plenty of reserve strength and will finish very strong." From an inside authoritative source it is learned today that the republicans will endeavor to carry out the work started by Hearst and designed to show Governor Haskell's connection with Standard Oil.

But They Seem to be Short of Boogie Chicago, Sept. 23.—That the funds necessary to defray the expenses of a long, vigorous speaking campaign have not been forthcoming was frankly admitted yesterday by Chairman Frank H. Hitchcock, of the republican national committee. The statement was made in explanation of the delays that have attended the beginning of the campaign work in most of the states.

HEARST IS AFTER BRYAN'S HAIR

The Sole Aim and Purpose of the Independence Party is to Beat the Democracy

Washington, Sept. 22.—Hearst is after revenge. The political events of the last few days indicate clearly the spirit behind the independence party. They show that William Randolph Hearst is after Bryan's scalp. Everyone knows, including the man who does Mr. Hearst's political thinking for him, that Mr. Hearst has been placed at the nominal head of the forlornest kind of hope. And now everyone may well know that the Massachusetts candidate is the club with which Mr. Hearst is planning to give the final blow to Bryan's presidential ambition.

Mr. Hearst gets only a little cheap advertising for serving as Hearst's tool.

Only a few weeks ago it was not evident that the independence party was chiefly anti-democratic although it was to be presumed that it would draw most from the democratic strength. But now Mr. Hearst has made it perfectly evident that the thing he is after is to down Bryan once for all. In effect, he and his party promise to be one of the best allies the republicans will have in the campaign. Had Mr. Hitchcock been able to lay a deep plot for the downfall of the democrats, he could scarcely have done better than to start precisely the movement which Hearst is engineering.

Attacks All on Democrats

Mr. Hearst's animus is shown by his speech at Davenport, which was directed exclusively against the democratic ticket. During the course of it he read the affidavit to the effect that Bryan had called a group of glass-workers "lot of public beggars." There, too, he sprang his attack on the labor record of C. N. Haskell, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee.

But Mr. Hearst's spirit was shown far more by the treatment which his speech received in his own papers. They called the Hearst attack an "expose," although the allegations contained in the much-vaunted affidavit were used in some localities in the campaign of 1896. Mr. Hearst's New York American printed a headline over its proprietor's speech which might lead one to believe that the alleged "beggars" remark was fresh from Bryan's lips, and that he applied the word to workmen in general. Here it is:

"Public Beggars," Bryan Cays Workmen in the American is colored with anti-Bryanism.

Hearst's disposition to down Bryan is also indicated by the burlesque which his papers are using in Mr. Bryan's Commoner. The Hearst sheets have a department on the editorial page, which represents a complete newspaper and which is called "The Still Commoner." On the day of the Davenport speech, that department was devoted exclusively to making trouble for Bryan and the democrats, and such is its usual attitude. It is not directly a boost for the independence party, nor does it criticize the republicans. Its effect is to rake Bryan and to smooth Taft's way.

Also Fighting Gompers

In many quarters it is believed the influence of the Hearst publications will go quite a way towards counteracting the work of Samuel Gompers for Bryan. They are addressing themselves directly to that end. In the advertisements of "The Still Commoner" appears this:

S. GOMPERS MOVES AND DELIVERS LABOR VOTES IN LARGE AND SMALL QUANTITIES, TERMS ON APPLICATION.

Every effort is put forth in Hearst's papers as well as in his Labor Day speech, to convince the union men that it is unmanly and unwise to allow Mr. Gompers to deliver their votes. And when the Hearst papers appeal to union men, they find an audience. Mr. Hearst has spared no pains to make himself popular with union workers. It has been his policy to go more than half way in meeting the demands of the unions, and he has turned this policy to good advertising for himself and his publications. The consequence is that what his papers say is near the law and gospel for a great number of working voters, who read little in addition to what Mr. Hearst's clever and yellow editors place before them.

Speaking of the style of the Hearst publications it is worthy of notice that William Randolph Hearst loomed very big in the accounts of that Davenport meeting. His own papers very modestly gave his speech the best position in the paper. You were able to discover, by dint of wading through several columns that a presidential candidate, one Thomas J. Higen, also made remarks. From which it may be inferred that, although Mr. Hearst is willing to delegate to another the somewhat doubtful honor of being a candidate without hope, he intends to hold stoutly to his job of being the big end of the independence party.

So far as his attitude towards Mr. Bryan goes, it appears that Mr. Hearst has reached the point where he simply declines to turn the other cheek. He has some grounds for feeling that Bryan has abused him. In 1896 he threw himself into Bryan's fight with tremendous energy and effectiveness. He made that fight at no little expense. At that time he was just getting his New York papers well established. To advocate free silver in New York was a bit dangerous, for the financial interests centering at Wall street were not much in love with free silver. It is said that Mr. Hearst's New York property lost money in large hunks during the campaign and after.

In 1904 came Mr. Bryan's opportunity to reciprocate. At the St. Louis convention, Mr. Hearst led a very promising candidacy for the presidential nomination. The votes of Nebraska, delivered at the psychological moment would probably have given him victory. He appealed to Mr. Bryan, who led the Nebraskans. William Jennings, however, delivered the vote of his delegation to Senator Cockrell, who was hardly a candidate, and Parker was nominated.

This was a pretty tough blow for Hearst to pass over lightly, but he was apparently inclined to forget it. Two years later he wanted Bryan to take part in his New York campaign for Governor. Bryan didn't do it. This accounts for Mr. Hearst's animus, but from Mr. Bryan's standpoint the case stands a little different. He feared that it would be dangerous to ally himself with the fortunes of Mr. Hearst and his extreme radicalism. He apparently foresaw that such a move would make it impossible to win the conservative democrats back to the fold. And it is very probable that, had he not pursued the course which he chose, he would not have been the democratic candidate for President, with a fairly united party behind him.
