SALT LAKE CITY, AND UTAH

The run from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City is a distance of 781 miles and is one of the most desolate and dreary trips for several hundred miles of the way imaginable, as it is over the Mojave desert of California and Utah and scarcely a scene of life, if you except the attendants at the stations, the rest being a bleak and barren waste, with sage brush, cacti or orchards, mountainous hills of volcanic origin and color. The heat is great, yet moderate the day we passed, the temperature being 96, although it frequently reaches 110 and 115 which, with the fine dust that is raised by the motion of the train and which filters through the screened windows, makes traveling anything but comfortable. The dust would be unbearable but for the fact that the roadbed is ballasted and the top sprinkled with crude oil. In fact, many places along this track the sands drift as if in the snow in colder climates, and it is only by the liberal use of crude oil that the sand wastes can be controlled during the dry seasons that frequently prevail there.

The name of this road is the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake, and at first glance one wonders why it was ever built and what supports it, but a closer inspection shows the wonderful convenience this road is to all Southern California, a link absolutely needed for the quick and direct transportation of passengers and fruit to the great and consuming centers. This road is the outcome of the labors of former Senator Clark, now deceased, the silver and copper king of Montana, Idaho and the rich discoverer in Death Valley. Los Vegas, several hundred miles from Los Angeles, is the first town of importance on the line, growing from a ranch owned by two brothers to a substantial town of 4,000 people. It is a division end of this road and where Clark's gold mine nearly a hundred miles or more to the north, finds connection and where its vast output of precious metal finds its outlet. Here are several beautiful springs, hence the home of the ranchers and the very reason Mr. Clark knew he must possess them for his road. The ranch owners made a big strike by the transfer than they ever anticipated could be possible.

The construction of this railroad is one of the best in the country and extraordinary time is made on it. It is one of the few roads in the country that meets all the demands made upon it as to time and commodity, no matter how large the demands. When you reach Clear Lake, 100 miles this side of Salt Lake, the aspect of the country changes, the rolling features of the desert and lava mountains recede from a dimly visible but ever widening valley, with spots here and there of green, created by springs that creep mysteriously from the mountain fastnesses and as the journey proceeds ranches appear, crops are seen and flocks are in evidence, until the rich, fertile and vast valley of the river and its sparkling river make you realize what a picture of hope it proved to the Mormons when they beheld its lovely vision as they stood on one of the highest ranges of the Wasatch mountains, just north of the present site of Salt Lake and beheld in wonderment and joy for the first time the Salt Lake valley, their promised land. 61 years ago, no one who was not among that sturdy band of pioneers, and have traveled the alkali plains of the west and the steep and rugged mountains they had traversed for more than 1,600 miles of unhabitated country, except by unsteady Indians, enduring fatigue, hunger, danger and death. It is hard to appreciate what it was to them to find a home, a city, an empire that they might serve their creator in a manner as they interpreted the words of holy writ, not however, as interpreted by the later day saints and the Gentiles, but the Brigham Young followers had made the desert bloom as a rose, compelled the Mormons at least to all appearances to revise their Biblical code.

At Brigham, ten miles this side of Salt Lake City, we passed through a town of the same name with a population of 10,000 people, the home of one of the largest and most successful smelting works in the country, drawing its rich ore from the Highland Bay mine, forty miles north into the heart of the Wasatch range, but into which a railroad has been built to bring the ore to be treated and which mine we were told made the real millionaires of that country, among them Sam Weir and Sam Newhouse, the latter the owner of the wonderful flat iron building in New York City and also possessed of several of the newest and costliest smelting steel sky scrapers in Salt Lake City. He is now preparing to build the finest hotel structure between Chicago and San Francisco.

We struck Salt Lake City on the days the G. A. R. was holding forth and we found a brass band at the depot to meet us, that is, the boys in blue. The city was crowded with veterans and there were blocks in that town that you had to push your way through and at the hotels you could scarce get into the lobbies, so dense were the old vets and their friends. When we state on that occasion the Mormon capital with a population of 100,000 entertained 50,000 guests, the crowded condition of the place can easily be imagined, though the city did itself proud in its efforts to hospitably and hundreds of private homes were thrown open to the visitors. The crowd was good natured and everybody was happy and all bent on seeing the sights. Excursions were run in all directions. Salt Lake attracted thousands. Everybody desired to take a dip into it and bob around like a cork in a tub of water. It is needless to say to our readers you couldn't drown in Salt Lake if you wanted to, for the saline density of its brine is so great it bears you up in spite of yourself, though you could get your stomach full of the salt fluid if you get too gay, so covoring around in the water and an unneeded wave counters you on your mouth and gives you a great big dose of salt in a short unceremonious manner. The lake is sixteen miles from town and the price of the trip is only 25 cents, but when you get to the immense pavilion erected for the pleasure of the sight seers, you are not let off so lightly. The railroad to the lake and all its comforts and conveniences belonged to the late E. H. Harriman and the public has to pay for the privilege of enjoying them.

Observation cars ran at intervals of an hour all over town and the suburbs and out to Fort Douglass on the top of a high plateau, at a cost of one dollar for the trip. A speaker accompanied each car and his description of the town is interesting information. He tells you that all the streets of the town are laid at right angles; that every street is 130 feet wide; that the residence portion of the town is lined with trees that cast a grateful shade. He pointed out imposing Protestant church buildings, which he said would surprise visitors in a town that was largely dominated by Mormons, but they were numerous and a number cost a good sized fortune.

Salt Lake has many elegant and costly homes, and the distinctive feature of the history, rank like this: There is the home of Augustus Y. Young, who took a retainer of stock in a litigated mine. At the time this took place the paper the stock was printed on was deemed the most valuable asset, but since then a big pay streak was struck that has made the attorney several times a millionaire. You can easily catch the gist of this remark when we state that the Highland Bay mine has paid 15 million and over in dividends and a share represents a great big fortune. There were others in this category, like the Lucky Boy and the King mine, and others now passed out of memory. We saw the magnificent business block on a main street and the splendor announces that it belongs to a Mrs. Cummings, a widow, who is immensely rich and her husband made his money in a similar manner. Her home is a veritable palace, but that good woman's heart is in the right place, for one of the conspicuous objects on the hill going to the fort is a commanding building, which we are informed is the indigent miners' home, the money to build it coming from the treasury of this good woman, who spent several thousand dollars to erect and equip it and is the home of any aged miner who spent his life prospecting and mining. We understand nearly 200 infirm and aged miners now live there in ease and their declining days are made comfortable by this kind, good and generous hearted woman.

Fort Douglas is occupied by the 15th U. S. Infantry. It is a beautiful and commanding location; looks right down on the city. It has generous and comfortable barracks and elegant homes for the officers. It has beautiful shaded lawns and the finest water on earth. Yet it is said that Gen. Badger remarked 85 years ago as he was about to depart for this country, that he was ready to deliver 1,000 in coin for every spear of grass that could be grown in that country. If this valiant son of wars could return to earth and see the paradise that has been made out of the desert, he would faint for the safety of his bank account, for there are thousands of acres of green alfalfa, barley and wheat in the valley and hay stocks of portentous proportions dot the landscape over.

In returning we had a good look at Emigrant Gap in the Wasatch mountains, through which Brigham Young led his home-seeking hosts in sighting Salt Lake valley. It is noticeable from the fact that this expedition of Brigham Young's contained scarcely 200 persons, not quite that number of horses and other equipment and that it took over a year to make the journey from the Missouri river to Salt Lake valley. Here is a flagstaff and flag that marks the spot made memorable in Mormon and United States history. What a theme for contemplation! What marvels have that valiant band wrought in half a century! Coming down the incline to town, the Utah University buildings are noted out and several magnificent public school buildings; but the school house that attracts the most attention is the building erected for the education of Brigham's children, 51 of them, and incidentally said children had 21 mothers. The Mormon Endowment House and the home of Emily Young, his favorite wife, were pointed out and looked at with great interest. The Mormon temple is a grand building with magnificent proportions of granite brought in ox teams from quarries in the mountains twenty odd miles away, and it took years to bring the material and erect it. It is said to have cost three millions of dollars. None are allowed in the building but the "pure in heart" and of Mormon faith. Most of their marriages are solemnized there. Though it is said by the National Editorial persuasion, who visited Salt Lake City in 1892, in which Judge Alex Wynne and wife of Eastlake, Marion county, were members that Mrs. Wynne so ingratiated herself into the good graces of a Mormon, who had charge of the building, that he permitted her to enter the building. This is one of the events in the life of Mrs. Wynne. The Assembly House is where the committee of 70 Mormons meet and conduct all the affairs, secular and religious or the order.

The auditorium, where the Mormons hold their services, is a magnificent structure. It seats 8,000 people and the building has not a support or pillar inside of its walls. It is the home of a magnificent organ. The acoustic properties of the auditorium are perfect. You can stand on its spacious stage and hear the dropping of a pin on the floor at the back of the hall. Another peculiarity of this wondrous building is that not a nail was driven in its walls in its construction. These buildings are the mecca of any person who visits Salt Lake City. Visitors are welcome at stated hours and a guide accompanies you and explains all the details and history of the buildings.

The Mormon House is an immense mercantile institution, known as the Zion Cooperative Society, at which every good Mormon does his trading, or the branch stores scattered over the state. The material resources of five million dollars of business a year. In its department store you can purchase anything from a pin to a steam engine. There is no other business establishment in Utah that carries the stock of goods that the Zion Cooperative Store does. The nearest to this is the Gentile firm of Walker brothers, who were among the pioneer merchants of the place and are also bankers, establishing the same in 1857. These men have grown immensely rich and are interested in everything that pertains to Utah progress and prosperity.

Brigham Young named his state Deseret, and the first newspaper published there by the Mormons was called the Desert News, which still flourishes and is now one of the big dailies of the land. The Mormons have an immense publishing house and issue publications and pamphlets by the millions of copies. The material resources of Utah are immense. As a fruit growing country it is a marvel. The Mormons have started many manufacturing industries, among them, shoes, clothing and its design of overalls has a national reputation.

But this hurried sketch must suffice, imperfect as it is, from the fact that the memorandum made at the time became misplaced and I had to write from memory and that soon becomes treacherous after a lapse of a very short time.

C. E. FOY, SR.

As noted in the Star Monday, Mr. Charles O'Malley Foy, Sr., who had been quite ill for some time of consumption, was brought to Ocala by Dr. T. K. Slaughter and placed in the hospital, where he was operated on by Drs. Slaughter and Izlar. While the operation was successful and the patient greatly relieved, yet he never rallied to any appreciable extent, but gradually sank until death claimed him at 8 o'clock last night.

His son, Mr. C. E. Foy and wife and little daughter, Miss Essie Foy, and adopted daughter, Miss Sarah Gwistar, were with him when he died. They came to the hospital with him and were unremitting in their care of him. The remains are in charge of Melvor & MacKay, undertakers, and will be taken to Leesburg to be interred by the side of his wife who preceded him five years ago, with the same affliction.

Deceased has a brother, H. E. Foy, of High Springs, and a sister, Mrs. J. E. Jenkins, of Washington, D. C. He was born in Buford, S. C., but came to Ocala several years ago from Georgia and for a time engaged successfully in the real estate business. Then he went to Port Inglis, where he conducted a hotel for a time and became postmaster of the place, but his health grew worse, so he sold out and bought a home at Belleview.

Mr. Foy was an amiable gentleman of a bright and sunny disposition, a well stored mind and nature endowed him with a poetic temperament, contributing some really deserving verses to the local press of Ocala. His last effusion was a beautifully written poem for the 4th of July celebration at Belleview, but which he was too unwell to read at the time.

He was 52 years of age. He bore his affliction with the greatest fortitude and patience. He knew the end was not far off, was resigned and his last wishes were met by the side of his wife. A good man has gone from among us.

We had the pleasure to look into the state prison hospital this morning at the Marion Farms and found everything in splendid condition. The patients, a dozen of them, were doing nicely. The floors and the bedding on the cots were clean and the patients had only words of praise for the treatment received and the attention given them by Hospital Steward J. A. Potter and the attending physician, Dr. S. H. Blitch. We inspected the dining hall and the kitchen and their neatness and cleanliness were indeed pleasing. The good cooked was abundant and wholesome and the pies and corn bread looked so tempting it was difficult to restrain one's desire to sample them.

At present there are 61 inmates at the farm. The relations of superintendent and guards with prisoners for the past six months have been very harmonious and everything has moved along like clock work.

There were two million visitors that thronged New York City Sunday to see the sights of warships of eight nations in the harbor and best of all not an accident occurred in the crush at the points of greatest interest. Never a scene like it before. The decks of the warships was a living mass of humanity, the only most untidy, dirty and the gallant officers did their duty showing them the sights. They were mostly women. There were 50,000 autos in Central Park. A billion candle power illuminated the city at night and cost $50,000. The churches were crowded and several dozen sermons were preached touching on the Hudson-Fulton celebration and the life of these two men. Tonight, Wednesday, banquet will be tendered the foreign guests in the New Hotel Astor ball room, the decoration of the ceiling being solid bronze and costing $50,000. There will be 2,200 guests and each plate will represent $20. The biggest carpet ever woven will cover the floor, 200x150 feet wide. The organ in the dining room has 102 speaking stops. It will be the grandest affair ever given in New York City.
