

Married Misery

People often rely on nature unaided to correct evil but it doesn't. One aim of corrective medicine should be to do away with married unhappiness. At the bottom of a deal of misery is found lack of cheerful yielding. Mean selfishness is as surely due to ill-health as famine is to failure. Ungovernable temper—a third fault—is largely the outcome of stomach disorder. All these causes disappear when stomach and liver are keyed to a finely balanced tone. The first sign of on-coming Biliousness, Indigestion or Headache, should suggest old Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. No other known medicine contains so complete a curative power for disordered stomach and torpid liver—Twill avert many a conflict between man and woman.

Take pains, however, not to insist too strongly on having your own way except with the drug—insist that he give you Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Constipation is always aggravating. A costive person is hardly fit to associate with—while free and easy bowel action tends to make the grouchy grumbler a cheerful optimist, lovable and full of hope. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, taken now and then, move bowels gently once a day. That's enough.

Novelized From Eugene Walter's Great Play
By JOHN W. HARDING
Copyright, 1902, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

For the source of their inspiration, of this tremendous flight into the divine azure from his regulated role of the commonplace and coldly practical, was the woman at his side, the one being in the world who was dear to him and ever had been, whom he held in little less reverence than he did his Maker.

He broke off his description of the forest giants and vast freedoms of the west with a conclusion in his ordinary street surface language.

"But there—it's no use me trying to do any lecture platform stunts. I wasn't born with the gift of the gab. Emma, then things have got to be seen to be appreciated. There's no other way. You understand."

Yes, Emma understood. She had listened to his brief, unsuspected eloquence and had read his soul in the light of the celestial flicker that had emanated from it; had seen the glory of it in his face—a glory transient as a beacon flash, that was gone from it, leaving only his habitual noncommittal smile, as he turned to her and said, "You understand."

They continued the climb in silence, Emma's bosom rising and falling rapidly upon the rush and swirl of the torrent that raged beneath it, almost sweeping her self control before it. Jimmy indeed loved her! Why had this chance revelation of what her intuition had divined long before torn open the floodgates of her own emotions? Because it had set vibrating every chord of her being, and every chord of that being, as she had come to understand also, was attuned to his. Together they had beheld the mirage of heaven.

At the upper edge of the forest labyrinth they emerged on to a rocky plateau studded with dwarfed firs and balsam pines, but covered thickly with aromatic ferns and blueberry bushes.

Jimmy bared his head to the cool breeze that swept the clearing and watched Emma, who, with a little cry of delight, had stooped among the blueberry bushes and was gathering a handful of their ripe fruit. She was glad of the pretext to hide the upheaval in her heart that she felt must show in her eyes.

This upheaval, sudden and almost overpoweringly violent though it was, was not of the morning's forming. She had known the calm, sympathetic westerner—as he had reminded Captain Williams—ever since she was a girl in short frocks. She had soon come to look upon him as a big brother, with whom she shared her girlish troubles and in whom she confided freely, naturally, as a matter of course. When she had become a woman and he had sought her for his bride she had not been able, with all her liking for him, to bring herself to consider him in the light of a lover.

After the scales formed there by the flashlights and personal pulchritude of Brooks had fallen from her eyes and she saw that she had bowed down to an empty, painted fetch of plaster instead of to God in the flesh she had resigned herself to the lot destiny had brought her and sought to make the best of it like the pure woman she was. Household drudgery and the stern vertices of her existence had vanished and out to flight all her illusions. Love was a delusion. It was not what she had conceived it to be. It existed in perfect, ideal form only in the imaginations of the poets and litterateurs. Had any one suggested to her that Jimmy Smith was the depository of it, that his heart was the altar on which the sacred fire burned unquenchable, that under the crust of his unemotional manner was a quiescent volcano of passion that could be roused to stupendous eruption, she would have laughed.

She had grown wise and come to look upon Jimmy's visits as pleasant breaks in the monotony of her existence, however, she had obtained glimpses of his inner self, flashes of the profundity of his mind, an inkling of his elevation of sentiment that escaped him, in spite of himself, quite unconsciously. Her woman's keen perception had divined a spirituality that was buried purposely by speech and conduct. This had interested her and given her food for thought, but she could find no satisfactory explanation. The clew to the mystery, which, truth to tell, interested her but mildly, had come to her first on the evening of her husband's attack on Captain Williams in the little Harlem flat, when, after he had let fall and smashed the cup, he had remarked a little ruefully that he had let slip everything he had ever had in his life that was worth while. The confirmation of her deduction that his unrequited love for herself had been the death of ambition and accounted for his aimless, lonely existence, which she had been inclined to reject as absurd, was obtained on that momentous night just before her husband extinguished utterly and forever the few embers of love for him that still were live. After he had told her the story of his life in his quaint, everyday speech and her heart had gone out to him in that burst of irrefragable sympathy the consternation this had caused him had uncovered his secret as in a book, for in that moment she had seen beyond the mere start of timid modesty.

Later, after the shock of Brooks' action had ceased to obsess her and he had ceased further and further toward a memory, she had set free her imprisoned inclinations. Once more her rejuvenated fancy had taken wing to the heights of the ideal and romantic. Somehow it had come to associate Jimmy with his excursions. Possessor of his secret, she had set herself, while disguising her taste with cunning, to the dangerous study of the heart that had held it so long inviolate. The knowledge that he loved her with such steadfast intensity rekindled love on the dead ashes her husband had left behind, and for the very reason that Jimmy betrayed his sentiments in nothing, held unwaveringly to the line of conduct toward her he had followed ever since she had refused to take seriously his offer of marriage, this love had grown stronger, fiercer, until it had filled her life. She saw that she had passed happiness by. She exalted Jimmy's secret passion until in her imagining he became the incarnation of nobleness, of desire, of all mortal joys.

She brought a heap of blueberries to him and poured them into his joined hands, and they seated themselves on a rock to eat them and to rest. "This is the most enjoyable picnic I've had in years," she said gayly. "It was quite an inspiration of yours to run up to visit us. Why don't you come often instead of spending your week ends in the hot city? You ought to take a vacation and stay here for a few weeks."

"I'd like to awfully," he told her, "but the fact is I'm too busy to think of getting away. Williams is piling a whole lot of work and responsibility on me these days. Williams, you know, isn't what you'd call an easy boss. If he raises a man's salary he sees to it that he gets his money's worth. He simply won't be bothered, even with matters that ain't precisely details."

DR. McELROY ENTERTAINED
Miss Eliza and June Wright entertained at the latter's home on Lake Minnie Saturday night in honor of Dr. Sylvan McElroy, who is to be married Wednesday to Miss Edna Dozier, of Ocala.
The affair was quite a surprise to the doctor and when late in the evening he was presented with a large basket decorated with white and red hearts, it was with fear and trembling he opened one bundle after another. The contents of some caused a great deal of fun for the crowd. After this, refreshments were served. The porch was comfortably arranged as a smoking room, where the men found their favorite brands of cigars. Some one, unknown to the doctor, slipped out and decorated his Buick with strings of red hearts which were very noticeable as he drove down Orange avenue Sunday morning.—Orlando Reporter-Star.

CLOSE CALL FOR TEDDY
Nairobi, B. E. A., Oct. 19.—Mr. Cresswell, government engineer at Nyori, came into Nairobi yesterday afternoon and brought word that Mr. Roosevelt had a very narrow escape when shooting his first bull elephant. Roosevelt, accompanied by Mr. Cunningham and guides followed the usual procedure and killed his elephant at the second shot. Suddenly, before Mr. Roosevelt could reload, another elephant bull charged him at close range. Both Cunningham and Roosevelt got behind trees, and Cunningham fired and turned the bull from Mr. Roosevelt just in time.
