

Bad Symptoms.

The woman who has periodical headaches, backache, sees imaginary dark spots or specks floating before her eyes, has gnawing distress or heavy full feeling in stomach, faint spells, dragging-down feeling in lower abdominal or pelvic region, easily startled or excited, irregular or painful periods, with or without pelvic pain, suffering from weakness and derangements that should have early attention. Not all of above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time.

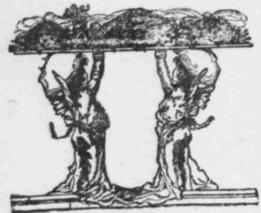

Neglected or badly treated and such cases often run into maladies which demand the surgeon's knife if they do not result fatally.

No medicine extant has such a long and numerous record of cures in such cases as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. No medicine has such a strong professional endorsement as each of its ingredients is supported by a large number of medical authorities (legislators, etc.). The very best ingredients known to medical science for the cure of woman's peculiar ailments enter into its composition. No alcohol, harmful, or habit-forming drug is to be found in the list of its ingredients printed on each bottle wrapper and attested under oath.

In any condition of the female system, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can do only good—never harm. Its whole effect is to strengthen, invigorate and regulate the whole female system and especially the pelvic organs. When these are deranged in function or affected by disease, the stomach and other organs of digestion become sympathetically deranged, the nerves are weakened, and a long list of bad, unpleasant symptoms follow. Too much must not be expected of this "Favorite Prescription." It will not perform miracles; will not cure tumors—no medicine will. It will often prevent them, if taken in time, and thus the operating table and the surgeon's knife may be avoided.

Women suffering from diseases of long standing, are invited to consult Doctor Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser (1000 pages) is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps for paper-covered, or 21 stamps for cloth-bound copy. Address as above.

THE MAN FROM BRODNEY'S

A Thrilling Story of Law and Love and a Struggle for Life and Wealth with Semi-Savages.

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

(Copyright 1908 by Dodd Mead & Co.)

CHAPTER III

THE excitement attending the Skaggs-Wyckholme revelations had not yet spread to the grand duchy of Rapp-Thorberg. Apparently lost as it was in the cluster of small units which went to make up a certain empire, one of the world powers. The Grand Duke Michael disdained the world at large. He had but little in common with anything that moved beyond the confines of his narrow domain. His court was sleepy, lackadaisical, unemotional, impregnable to the taunts of progression. His people were thrifty, stolid and absolutely stationary in their loyalty to the ancient traditions of the duchy. His army was a mere matter of taxation and not a thing of pomp or necessity.

The precise location of the grand duchy in the map of the world has little or nothing to do with this narrative. Indeed, were it not for the fact that the grand duke possessed a charming and most desirable daughter the Thorberg dynasty would not be mentioned at all. The grand duke's peace of mind had been severely disturbed—so severely, in fact, that he was transferring his troubles to the emperor, who, in turn, felt obliged to communicate with the United States ambassador, who, in his turn, had no other alternative than to take summary action in respect to the indiscretions of a fellow countryman. Chase's conscience was even and serene, and he was resigning his post with the confidence that he had performed his obligations as an American gentleman should, even though the performance had created an extraordinary commotion. Chase was new to the old world and its customs, especially those rigorous ones which surrounded royalty and denied it the right to venture into the commonplace.

Chase had been the representative of the American government at Thorberg for six months. The American flag floated above his doorway in the Friedrichstrasse, but in all his six months of occupation not ten Americans had crossed the threshold. He was a vigorous, healthy young man, and it may well be presumed that the situation bored him. He was not a politician; no more was he an office seeker. He was a real soldier of fortune in search of affairs—in peace or in war, on land or at sea. Possessed of a small income sufficiently adequate to sustain life if he managed to advance it to the purple age, but wholly incapable of supporting him as a thrifless diplomat, he was compelled to make the best of his talents, no matter to what test they were put. He left college at twenty-two, possessed of the praiseworthy design to earn his own way without recourse to the $4,500 income from a certain trust fund. His plan also incorporated the hope to save every penny of that income for the possible "rainy day." He was now thirty. In each of several New York banks he had something like $4,000 drawing 3 per cent interest, while he picked his blithe way through the world on $2,500 a year, more or less, as chance ordained.

"When I'm forty," Chase was wont to remark to envious spendthrifts who couldn't understand his philosophy, "I'll have over a hundred thousand there, and if I live to be ninety just think what I'll have. Moreover, I may get married and have to maintain a poor wife with rich relatives, which is a terrible strain, you know. You have to live up to your wife's relatives, if you don't do anything else."

He did not refer to the chance that he was quite sure to come in for a large legacy at the death of his maternal grandfather, a millionaire ranch owner in the far west. After leaving college he drifted pretty much over the world, taking pot luck with fortune and clapping the hand of circumstance. There had been hard roads to travel as well as easy ones, but he never complained. He swung on through life with the heart of a soldier and the confidence of a pagan. He loathed business, and he abhorred trade.

He was an orphan and bounden to no man. No one had the right to question his actions after his twenty-first anniversary. He went in for law at Yale and then practiced restlessly, vaguely, for two years in Baltimore under the patronage of his father's oldest friend, a lawyer of distinction. Tiring of the law books and reports in the old judge's office, he suddenly abandoned his calling and set forth to see the world. Almost before his friends knew that he had left he was heard of in Turkistan. In course of time he served as a war correspondent for one of the great newspapers, acted as agent for great hemp dealers in the Philippines, carried a rifle with the Boers in South Africa, hunted wild beasts in Asia and in Hottentot land, took snapshots in St. Petersburg and almost got to the north pole with one of the expeditions. Not in a month's journey would you meet a truer thoroughbred, a more agreeable chap, a more polished vagabond, than Hollingsworth Chase, first lieutenant in Dame Fortune's army. Tall, good looking, raven-haired, cheerful, gallant, he was the true comrade of those merry, reckless volunteers from all lands who find

A Religious Author's Statement

Rev. Joseph H. Pesperman, Salisbury, N. C., who is the author of several books, writes: "For several years I was afflicted with kidney trouble and last winter I was suddenly stricken with a severe pain in my kidneys and was confined to bed for eight days unable to get up without assistance. My urine contained a thick white sediment and I passed same frequently day and night. I commenced taking Foley's Kidney Remedy, and the pain gradually abated and finally ceased and my urine became normal. I cheerfully recommend Foley's Kidney Remedy." Sold by all druggists.

CUTTING DOWN THE FERTILIZER BILL

Press Bulletin 130 of the Florida Experiment Station

(By A. W. Blair.)

Cost of Nitrogen in Fertilizers

According to the report of the state chemist for 1908, Florida spent in that year, about $1,680,000 for nitrogen (ammonia) in fertilizers. The greater portion of this money went outside the state, to pay for sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of soda, dried blood, bone meal, tankage, etc. All who are engaged in general farming, and many fruit and vegetable growers, cut considerably lessen their expenses for fertilizers, without impairing their crops, and thus bring about a saving to the state. The cost of the three fertilizers, without impairing their fertilizers, is about 5 cents a pound for phosphoric acid, and the same for potash, while nitrogen costs 20 cents a pound. (As used in connection with fertilizers, the terms nitrogen and ammonia mean nearly the same, one pound of nitrogen being equivalent to 1.214 pounds of ammonia.) It is possible for the agriculturist to do equally well without buying much nitrogen, and so he can materially reduce his fertilizer bill. For in the beggarweed, the cowpea, and the velvet bean, Florida has a natural factory, in which the most expensive fertilizing element, nitrogen, is gathered free from the air. Knowing this, it seems extravagant to continue sending outside of the state for large quantities of nitrogenous fertilizers.

Free Nitrogen From the Air

It is well known that the legumes, such as beggarweed, cowpeas, and velvet beans, have the power of fertilizing nitrogen from the air and storing it up, so that it may be used for other crops. Some chemists claim that the greater portion of the nitrogen of these crops usually comes from the air. If the farmer will take advantage of this provision of nature, it is easy for him to cut down his fertilizer bill. We can estimate roughly how much nitrogen any legume will add to the soil, if we know the analysis of the crop and the yield per acre. Clean beggarweed hay, cut when the plants were just coming into bloom, contained 3.3 to 3.4 per cent nitrogen. The dry stubble and roots contained about 1.45 per cent, and the weight was about a quarter of the weight of the hay. Hence one ton of hay would yield 67 pounds of nitrogen, which, at 20 cents a pound, would be worth $13.40; while the roots and stubble (500 pounds) would give seven and a quarter pounds of nitrogen, worth $14.5. The value of the nitrogen from this ton of hay, including stubble and roots, would be $14.55. If we only allow that one-half of the nitrogen comes from the air, we have utilized the nitrogen of the air to the value of $7.27, which is nearly as much as we would have to pay for 500 pounds of bright cottonseed meal. But we ought to get two tons of beggarweed hay per acre, which would then double our gain of nitrogen. If the beggarweed is left on the ground to decay, the plant food that the crop took from the soil, and the nitrogen that was taken from the air, are returned to the soil. If the crop is taken off as hay and no manure returned, there is some compensation, since the fallen leaves, roots and stubble have in them some nitrogen that came from the air. If the beggarweed is taken off as hay and the manure returned to the land, most of the fertilizing constituents go back to the soil.

Fertilizing Cotton and Citrus

The cotton grower will possibly fertilize his field with 200 pounds of acid phosphate, costing $1.50; 150 pounds of bright cottonseed meal, costing $2.50; and 100 pounds of kainit, costing 65 cents; the total cost being $4.75 per acre. But a crop of beggarweed may supply to the soil, from the air, about as much nitrogen as there is in 500 pounds of cottonseed meal. From this we see that the cotton grower can, by growing beggarweed and omitting the nitrogen, reduce his fertilizer bill by more than one-half, and still have more nitrogen than if he had bought the usual fertilizers and grown no beggarweed.

When growing beggarweed in orange groves, harm may be done to the trees as well as to the pocket book, if, when the time comes to fertilize, the grower uses about as much nitrogen as he would have done if the grove had not borne a crop of beggarweed. The trees and fruit may then show the ill effects of too much nitrogen. Much of the nitrogen that would otherwise have been washed out during the summer rains, is stored up in the beggarweed, to be returned to the soil as the plants and roots decay in the fall and winter. In case none or only part of the hay is removed, it is doubtful if the fall fertilizer ought to contain any nitrogen at all.

If you desire a clear complexion take Foley's Orino Laxative for constipation and liver trouble as it will stimulate these organs and thoroughly cleanse your system, which is what everyone needs in order to feel well. Sold by all druggists.
