PEOPLE ON ROOFS.

As the aeroplane approached the city, flying steadily but bucking the wind, the roofs of all the buildings became crowded and pleasure craft started up the river in an effort to keep up with the remarkable craft that flew above them.

As the machine flew high above the water craft, the little maroon-colored canoe which Wright had previously attached to his aeroplane for use in the event that he would be compelled to alight on the water, was plainly visible.

As the machine pushed into the breeze, dipping slightly occasionally as though caught by a downward trend of the air and then again was lifted suddenly, apparently striking a disturbing air current, the absolute mastery of the aviator was strongly impressed on the spectators.

The exact distance in a straight line from Governors Island to the foot of West 14th street, which marked the northernmost point of Wright's flight, is nine and a quarter miles. This would make his flight, if it had been in a straight line, one of eighteen miles and a half. Counting curves and the circles at the start, Mr. Wright estimates that he covered more than 20 miles.

He said that he would talk about the wheat crop, about the condition of cattle in the west and about almost anything but cotton. He said that Dr. Knapp knew more about the cotton crop from practical observation of conditions in the south than any other man in the department, and he had nothing to add to the statement made by him.

TELEPHONE IN THE COUNTRY

BY ITS USE THE FARMER IN THE RURAL DISTRICTS IS ENABLED TO KEEP IN TOUCH WITH MARKET CONDITIONS.

The Atlanta Constitution recently said editorially: Commenting upon the marvelous manner in which the telephone is coming into vogue in the rural districts, and outlining its practical value to the farmer and the rural resident generally, The Manufacturers' Record says:

"It is not alone that the farmer can, in this way, keep posted as to the price of his products, and many of the farmers of the west depend entirely upon the telephone in making sales of grain and other produce—valuable as the telephone is from this financial point of view, it is even more valuable in bringing the family of farmers in touch with their neighbors. The loneliness which has made farm life a burden to so many people, especially to the women and children—the fear that takes possession of them when the men are away; the fear of the inability to reach a doctor

We Are Offering Special Low Prices ...ON... TOP BUGGIES AND RUNABOUTS Wm. Johnson & Son.

In times of sickness, are all banished by the telephone in the home. Among the great blessings which have come to civilization in recent years there is scarcely anything comparable to the value of the telephone, and as valuable as it is to the people of the city, it is infinitely more valuable to those in the country.

In the south, and of latter years, especially in Georgia, the "voice in the box" has made wonderful strides in the country districts.

The farmer has outgrown the old impression that the telephone was a luxury accessible only to the man in the city.

He has discovered that with the use of the "party line system" and co-operative methods, now so prevalent throughout this section, he can have an instrument in his house the year round at a cost well within the revenue from one bale of cotton.

The claim of The Record that a telephone is even more essential to the country than to the city is entirely logical.

In the city there is none of the isolation that characterizes the rural districts, and the means of communication, aside even from the telephone, are numerous and rapid.

In the country there is only one highway connecting farmhouse to farmhouse, a highway often nearly impassable in inclement weather and under the best of conditions forcing consideration of the elements of delay and outlay.

Into this difficult situation the rural telephone comes as a great transformer. It mitigates isolation almost to the vanishing point. It puts the farthest-removed farm in immediate touch with neighboring farms as well as civilization-at-large. It gives the farmer, with a crop ready for sale, instant access to market quotations. It provides for the summoning of physicians, for aid in fighting fire or for any other one of the dozen emergencies inseparable from country life.

It is not strange that, offering these and other revolutionizing advantages, the telephone should be rapidly conquering the rural districts.

So vividly was Mr. Roosevelt's country life commission impressed with the salutary results that had followed the general prevalence of telephones in the country that it named their patronage as one of the factors destined to solve the rural problem.

With the south facing unprecedented prosperity, it is likely the coming year will witness even greater progress on part of this modern adjunct to life and business.
