AMUSEMENTS.

At the New Theatre.
Last week's bill at the cozy little playhouse certainly made a hit.

"The Merry Widow."
Every once in a while a theatrical production arises which lifts its head above its fellows and endures the test of time.

Henry W. Savage is sending the production of "The Merry Widow" to this city again. It will be here as radiant as ever.

Time, which is the surest judge of truth, has crowned Savage's presentations with approval.

Girls in "The Red Mill"

In the ordinary musical comedy, there are always from a dozen to thirty chorus girls.

air of refinement which only good breeding can impart. Likewise, they know how to carry themselves, and wear their costumes, no matter if in their quaint Dutch or evening dresses.

Working girls enter the chorus because it offers better pay, more independence and more chance for advancement than any other means of livelihood.

The statuesque blonde to the right, first claimant, used to pound keys for a grocer's grain speculator in Wall street.

Chorusing has been juggling beaten all ways from the joker, the little girl with the twinkling testicles to that "Honest," she says, "I had awful poor luck until I cut out the hashing."

As an evidence of the safety of the port of Pensacola, the German steamship Henry Horn, Capt. Wiems, arrived off the bar Friday night and there was no pilot boat in sight.

A PILOT WAS NOT ON BOARD

NEVER VISITED PORT OF PENSACOLA HERETOFORE STEAMER TO BERTH WITHOUT TROUBLE.

As an evidence of the safety of the port of Pensacola, the German steamship Henry Horn, Capt. Wiems, arrived off the bar Friday night and there was no pilot boat in sight.

You must think to see Miss Helen Tilden trip the fantastics that she was being awkward. But she must have been, for she is her own accuser.

Miss Edwards had freckles until she learned how to iron them out. She was scared to death when she made her first application.
