A Paradox.

"I believe the safest financial course is a temperate one."

"Yes, but how can you follow such a course when money is tight?"—Baltimore American.

The Elegant Mrs. Adams.

An old Washington lady used to tell with delight of an occasion on which she went, with a kinswoman, to dine with Mr. and Mrs. John Quincy Adams. The table was beautifully set in the fashion of the time, and at Mr. Adams' place lay a four tined silver fork. The other persons at table had merely the two pronged fork then in use. Mrs. Adams apologized for her husband's little eccentricity, saying that in his long sojourn in France he had acquired the habit of eating with his fork, a habit of which he had been unable to break himself. "And, my dear," the old lady used to say, with a twinkle in her eye, "the elegant Mrs. Adams and the rest of use ate with a knife."

In a storm at sea the chaplain asked one of the crew if he thought there was any danger. "Why," replied the sailor, "if this continues we shall all be in heaven before tomorrow morning." The chaplain, horrified, cried out in prayerful fervor, "The Lord forbid!" —London Tit-Bits.

Early Greek Waterworks.

The early Greeks depended upon natural springs and cisterns hewn in the rock, but the insufficiency of the supply led to daring engineering works. As early as 625 B. C. a tunnel 4,200 feet long, 8 broad and 8 feet high was cut through a hill which stood between Samos and a coveted supply of water. Fifty or sixty years later extensive works of a similar nature were constructed to bring water to Athens from the hills of Hymettus, Pentelicus and Parnes. Two conduits from Hymettus passed under the head of the Ilissus and were cut in the rock for most of the distance. This conduit and one from Pentelicus met in a large reservoir just outside Athens, and from this the water was distributed throughout the city by underground channels. Some of the ancient aqueducts continue to supply Athens at the present time.

A Managing Widow.

A certain young widow who has just changed her weeds for brighter hues gave a dinner party not long ago. The rooms were decorated with a great profusion of flowers. Roses in masses were on the mantels and the dinner table fairly blossomed. In fact, the abundance of flowers was unusual. One of the guests could restrain her curiosity no longer and when the dessert was brought in said:

"Well, Mrs. Blank, you're rather spreading on the flowers tonight."

"Yes," replied the fair widow brightly, "but tomorrow I am going to take them out to the cemetery and put them on poor Tom's grave."

A regular "13" shiver went around the table.

Conjugal Scene.

Madame gives it to her husband hot and strong. He has no consideration for her; he refuses her everything; he is attentive and kind to everybody else. At last, when wound up to the highest pitch of exasperation, she cries:

"Yes, you actually prefer your animals to me. Look, only last week, when Loulou died, you had her stuffed."

"But, my dear girl"—

"There is no 'but' in the case. I am positive you would not have done as much for me."—L'Almanach des Agriculteurs.

ANDERSON.

Special to The Journal.

Anderson, Fla., Apr. 13.—Mr. T. D. Sale has returned from points in Georgia, where he has been transacting business the past week.

Mr. Willard Pratt, of Millville, was a visitor at Anderson on Friday.

Mr. W. J. Wells stepped on a nail on Wednesday, which passed nearly through the ball of his foot.

The Sale-Davis Company's log train left the track on Friday, while out on the wharf causing one car to go overboard and carrying a man with it. No one was injured however. The man who was on the car when it went into the water escaped with nothing more than a good wetting. The work of raising the sunken car will begin at once.

Mrs. Noah Moat has been on the sick list for several days but is better at this writing.

The little child of Mr. J. Varnum who has had a severe attack of fever is improving.

The fishermen here are reporting poor luck so far.

A side track is being laid to the naval stores wharf where all of the rosin and spirits will be shipped from the company's stills in the future.

Mr. Daniels, the pile driver man, and his son paid St. Andrews a call on Thusday.

Cockfighting In England.

Cockfighting is still enthusiastically carried on in many parts of England. But no educational expert would now pronounce it a very becoming sport for gentlemen, as Ascham did when he wrote his "Scholemaster" in the sixteenth century. Colet was centuries ahead of his time when he discouraged cockfighting in his statutes for St. Paul's school. The typical statutes of a north country school of that period direct that the master "shall have, use and take the profits of all such cockfights and potations as are commonly used in schools." In Scotland particularly one morning a year was given to cockfighting, and the dominie's perquisites, all the cocks killed and a shilling from each boy, sometimes amounted to a quarter of his total fees. This lasted at least until 1828, though Manchester Grammar school dropped the practice a little earlier.—London Chronicle.

J. D. Goss Announces This Morning for Office Which is Now Elective.

In the announcement columns of The Journal this morning will be found the announcement of J. D. Goss for the position of city supervisor of registration, which is an elective office under the provisions of the amendment to the city charter.

Mr. Goss is well known in the city, having lived here for a long period and has many freinds who will support him and urge his election to the office to which he aspires. His friends have induced him to enter the race and he is the first candidate to announce for this office, which was only recently created.

Moriarity's Answer.

Eugene Moriarity, who seemed to be a fixture in the Massachusetts legislature some years ago, was at one time on the Worcester school board. A fellow member, Rev. D. O. Mears, more than hinted at one meeting that there were altogether too many Irish names on the list of Worcester teachers. The charge passed unchallenged at the time, but at the next meeting up rose Mr. Moriarity with this exquisite little gem:

"Mr. President, at the last meeting of the board some one intimated that there were too many Irish names on our list of teachers. The next day I went up to the public library and saw Librarian Green and asked if he had a dictionary of American names.

"'I have,' he said.

"'Is it complete?' I asked.

"'It is,' was the answer.

"'Can I take it home?'

"'You can,' he said.

"Mr. President, I took it home. I searched it through from cover to cover. I found no Mears in the book, but I found that Michael Moriarity was one of the bodyguards of General Washington."—Judge's Library.

An Advance of Elaborate Diction.

"You say he accused you of being untruthful?"

"That is what happened," answered Plue Pete, with much embarrassment.

"And lives to tell the tale?"

"Well, you see he used long words in such a roundabout way that he was out of the town before I had figgered out exactly what he meant."—Washington Star.

UNIQUE RECEPTION AT ALMERIA INN

The Almeria Inn was the scene of an unique reception last night tendered by Mrs. Edward Rowe to Miss May O. Reese of Ohio.

The affair was termed a "Hearts and Flowers" party, the decorations and ferns being all in the shape of Hearts and flowers.

Solos, both vocal and instrumental as well as recitations were offered the guests.

Following this a light buffet lunch was served.

The following were present: Mr. M. H. Dorr and Miss May O. Reese, Mr. H. H. Bredekamp and Miss Maude Spaikman, Captain Taylor and Miss Mary Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Burroughs, Mr. and Mrs. Quinlivan, Dr. and Mrs. McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Batts and Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Keeley.

First Railway Wreck.

On July 24, 1846, occurred the first railway accident of note in the United States. It happened on the Erie road, then less than five years old. A car went through Seaman's bridge near Monroe, Pa. Three persons were killed outright, three died later of their injuries. This casualty, says the New York World, aroused great interest at home and abroad. No columns of matter from the railway officials were printed explaining that the accident was unexplainable. There was no board of railroad commissioners to certify that everything it could find in the road's equipment was all right. In suits for damages it was established that the wreck was caused by the collapse of a cast iron spoked wheel. The railroad paid the judgments. And straightway the wheel with spokes gave way to the solid pattern used later on all the roads in the country.

Calmness In Emergency.

An eminent doctor, lecturing to a school of nurses upon the necessity of self control in emergencies, told the following incident: "One of his patients while in a low, nervous condition swallowed by mistake a dose from the wrong bottle. She shrieked out that she was poisoned. One of the nurses screamed 'Aconite!' and began to cry hysterically. The other nurse, seeing that the patient was going into convulsions from terror, when relief would be impossible, said coolly: 'Don't be frightened. Look here,' taking a mouthful of the dose herself. She then went outside to rid her mouth of it, procured an emetic and sent for a doctor and a stomach pump. Her calmness saved the life of the patient."
