The Lemon Party is Among the Very Latest for Pleasure Seekers.

As each guest arrives at the lemon party, meet them at the door and hand them a lemon with a little bunble of Japanese toothpicks. These may be purchased at any of the Japanese or department stores for five cents a box, each box containing ten or more little bundles of toothpicks. When all the guests have arrived, give them seats at a table, provide each one with a sharp-pointed knife and tell then they are expected to make an animal from the lemon they hold ,and that a prize is to be given to the one who makes the most artistic and a consolation prize for the most grotesque. The prizes for the same may be a silver lemonade spoon for the first and a lemon shaker or squeezer for the second. A lemon race may follow, playing it in the same way that the potato race is played.

The requirements are ten lemons, two vegetable dishes and two tablespoons. The lemons are placed in two parallel rows, five in a row and three feet apart, one of the dishes heading each row. The company forms in two equal lines, one behind each row, the lines being numbered respectively with odd and even numbers. A timekeeper is appointed to keep tally and call time for the contestants, who are allowed just three minutes to do their special "stunt." When all is ready, numbers "one" and "two" take the spoons, and start down their respective lines, the object being to see which side owns the most members who can gather up the line of lemons one at a time in a spoon, carry them to the vegetable dish and deposit them without touching the fruit with their hands. All having had a trial, the accounts are balanced, the judge renders his verdict and a prize is given to the victorious side.

A lemon pie with a good thick meringue affords much fun in its proper distribution as a prize.

The refreshments for the lemon party should all contain lemon in some form. The sandwiches may be chicken, with wafer thin slices of lemon; the salad may be served in lemon cups, made from the skins, or simply garnished with sliced lemons. The lemon ice or lemon jelly can be served in the lemon skins also, and lemon layer cake or small cakes with lemon icing may accompany the ice or jelly. Ofcourse, there will be plenty of lemonade to drink and lemon drops to fill the bon bon dishes. Let each one take home his lemon pig or other animal as a souvenir of the occasion.

AFTERNOON COSTUME.

An exquisite afternoon costume is shown in the accompanying sketch. The skirt is made of pink taffeta silk, which has a satin stripe. This is made full and has two bands of plain pink taffeta near the bottom. The bodice is made of the plain pink taffeta and is in the surplice style, folding over a V neck of tucked liberty satin. The sleeves are bell shape, trimmed with silk, and have undersleeves of the liberty satin to match the shield.

BIG PAIR OF LITTLE FOLK

Thirteen-Year Old Girl of 245 lbs, and Brother Weighs 284.

Ruby and Wilfred Westwood, who have just arrived from New Zealand to visit relatives in Birmingham, England, are, perhaps, the heaviest youngsters in the world.

Ruby, although only thirteen years old, is five feet two inches tall and weighs two hundred and forty-five pounds. Wilfred is eleven years old and weighs two hundred and eighty-four pounds. He is an inch taller than his sister. His weight is greater than the combined weight of both his parents.

In spite of their extraordinary size, the children are in excellent health, and their mother says that neither has been ill for even a day. They play with children of their own age, and, while not marvels of agility, they seem to get along well enough.

HIS ODD AD.

The Collar That Gave Plumley a Second Start In Business.

"Nothing succeeds like perseverance," said Mark Twain at a dinner. "When the luck seems most against us, then we should work and hope hardest of all. In moments of discouragement let us remember my old friend Henry Plumley of Virginia City.

"Henry Plumley ran a collar factory. Times were reported to be hard with him. When his factory, which was very heavily insured, burned down, there was every indication that he had set the place on fire himself in order to get the insurance money. Virginia City was the soul of honor in those days. Shocked beyond words, it rose en masse, seized Henry Plumley, put a halter round his neck and lynched him.

"But he did not die. The sheriff arrived and cut him down in time. He was tried and found guilty, and he served a term in jail.

"On his release you wouldn't have thought that he'd return to Virginia City again, eh? He did, though. He came back, reopened his collar factory and prospered.

"What gave him his start was the odd advertisement with which he announced his return to business among us. Preceded by a brass band, Henry, in a great gilt chariot, burst upon our streets. He sat on a kind of golden throne, and he held on a crimson cushion in his lap an old, old collar. Above the collar on a crimson banner waved this inscription in huge letters of gold:

"'This is the collar we wore when we were lynched. It saved our life. Be wise in time and use no other. At all retailers, 10 cents apiece, three for a quarter.'"—Indianapolis Star.

Old Glory Humiliated.

One instance is known in which Old Glory's shame is the crown of a family's prestige. At the battle of Bladensburg the American troops were defeated by the British under the command of an Irish officer named Ross. In recognition of his services in winning this victory his sovereign granted him the title of Ross of Bladensburg, and to his crest was added an American flag, reversed, with the shaft broken. The title is hereditary. In our generation the possessor is a colonel of the Irish fusileers. And this Ross of Bladensburg uses as his crest today our stars and stripes turned upside down and with the shaft broken in two.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Metallic Metaphors.

"It is most amazing," said a metallurgist, "how the world relies on metals for its metaphors and similes. Thus, an orator is silver tongued or golden mouthed. An explorer is bronzed by African suns. A resolute chap has an iron will. A sluggard moves with leaden feet. An ostrich has a copper lined stomach. A millionaire has tin. A swindler is as slippery as quicksilver. A borrower has brass."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Same or Another?

"And you saw Muriel?"
"I did."
"Tell me, is she married?"
"Yes."
"One question more. Again or yet?"—Washington Herald.

Individuality in Costuming of Women

"In thinking of styles today as compared with those of the past," says Mrs. Osborn in the Delineator for September, "when fashions were so fixed, so decided, I have come to the conclusion that there is one paramount difference, one paramount advance, namely: The reason back of changing fashions, the cause of innovations. That cause is the demand for comfort, the demand on the part of women for clothes that shall suit them, not somebody else."

Common sense is at last becoming operative in the matter of woman's dress. Today's styles are bearing the stamp of it. "It is far from sensible," Mrs. Osborn writes further, "that we should have been governed so long by the calendar, since back of the calendar is the weather. But many people go through life with the two telescoped. When they see October first staring them in the face, they bow to what they accept as the inevitable and buy woolen underwear. I find such people particularly aggravating. And I challenge any class of workers to meet more of them than does a person in my position. I long since decided that, to know a woman's real character, you must make a dress for her."

"Every woman her own designer,' continues Mrs. Osborn, "would not be a bad watchword. Think, I say think, before you buy. Insist upon something different, just different enough to lift you out of the crowd and yet keep you in the line of correct style.

America can never expect to lead in fashion's as long as they don't carry personal conviction into their clothes—the men as well as the women. The men put on and take off their straw hats according to the calendar. Abroad a man wears a straw hat way into Autumn if the weather is mild. Such a matter is really personal and not to be determined by the majority, who lack the courage of originality.

We are a young nation and we must learn. Every woman should endeavor earnestly to cultivate distinction in clothes; to take the initiative in freeing herself from the inanities of fashion. Her clothes should reflect herself, her charm, her impulses, her refinements.

"Just one word," concludes Mrs. Osborn, "to those women who accuse me of writing solely from the viewpoint of the rich. Obviously the rich are the people who can afford to experiment with clothes, and it is by watching them that we gain many valuable suggestions. But the primary laws of dress are applicable equally to the rich or poor. Although I am forced to illustrate from the expensive, I never fail to emphasize the simplicity of my art back of its expensive developments."

MANY REPAIRS BEING MADE

Nick Apostle Puts in Many New Improvements.

The popular restaurant and ladies' buffet of Nick Apostle does not present a very orderly appearance just at the present time. In fact, Nick says, the place looks as if it had recently been struck by a cyclone.

The trouble is just simply this: Nick is having the place remodeled. Several thousand dollars will be spent to make this place up-to-date in every respect.

Nick Apostle does not do things by halfves, and it is his present intention to give Pensacola the best restaurant service she has ever had. A series of unfortunate circumstances have delayed these improvements, which has resulted in, a great loss to the geneial and popular owner, but the place is being arranged now, and no expense is being spared to make it absolutely modern and attractive.

The place, although somewhat disarranged, is accommodating many patrons now, but when all repairs are completed, which will be about Sept. 10, a new and experienced force will be put in and Pensacola will pride herself on having a restaurant equal to those which have made New Orleans and other great cities famous.

Nick makes himself agreeable to his friends and patrons now, even under the unfortunate conditions.

THE PROHIBITION LEAGUE'S ADDRESS

sion of devastation and death, to presume to wear her garments.

Other Aspects.

Indeed, we shall show by facts, figures and irrefutable arguments that our issue with the saloon is the issue
Of good government against bad.
Of prosperity against poverty.
Of safety against danger.
Of citizenship against corruption.
Of liberty against unbridled license.
Of morality against vice and crime.
Of the gain of the many against the greed of the few.
Of life against death.
Of the house against the hovel.
Of right against wrong.

The issue is upon us. The rising tide of prohibition is moving us. Only a few of Florida's fair counties are left, and more than a thousand of Escambia's citizens have agreed for an election, to number her with the tree. We propose to wage a deathless fight for what we believe to be the best interest of all our people. Our appeal is made for good morals. It is made in defense of manhood; it is made in the defense of our mothers, wives, daughters and sisters; it is made for your children and ours, and for the children who have been robbed of their natural protectors and defenders by the saloon evil; it is made for God and Home, and Native Land.

Surely we can count on your support in the effort.

By order of the league,
N. C. McMILLAN, President.
Pensacola, Fla., Aug. 24, 1907.
