LOBSTER SEASON

The 'Dirty Girl' leaves a dock in Key Largo to drop a load of spiny lobster traps in waters 5 to 200 feet deep. The eight-month commercial and recreational lobster season started Tuesday.

Lobstermen hopeful catch, prices high

The Keys are a main supplier not just for the state, but worldwide

With the sun beating down at high noon, Capt. John Greco and his two-man crew baited 100 spiny lobster traps with smelly cowhide and then loaded them onto his 28-foot boat, Dirty Girl, for another journey out to sea.

The traps were dropped six to eight miles offshore in waters 5 to 200 feet deep, and attached to ropes with a string of pink buoys for identification.

Throughout the Florida Keys and at a few other locations in the state, the crews of hundreds of commercial boats dropped nearly a half million licensed traps into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico in preparation for the start of the 2013-14 season, which began Tuesday.

The fishermen all hope for the same thing: No hurricanes, lots of lobsters and high prices.

"Going in, we're always very optimistic," said Bill Kelly, executive director of the Florida Keys Commercial Fishermen's Association. "The larvae counts and juveniles we've seen indicate it's going to be a good season. But we also had every indication it would be that way last year."

It wasn't. The Keys commercial fishermen caught just 3.7 million pounds last season, down from 5.4 million pounds in 2010-11 and 5.3 million pounds in 2011-12, according to data collected by the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission.

"We were impacted by a pretty extensive outbreak of red tide, and also what we call the PaV1 virus," Kelly said. "It's fatal in juvenile lobsters."

Tropical Storm Isaac also played a part, hitting the Upper Keys hard just three weeks into the season. Thousands of traps were destroyed, including 500 belonging to Capt. Gary Nichols of Conch Key.

"When the storm came, it was the end of the lobsters in my opinion," said Nichols, who has been trapping them for 40 years. "It displaced them."

Monroe County accounts for about 90 percent of the spiny lobster caught in Florida and about 6 percent

FHSAA: Test prep athletes

Governing body takes stand after A-Rod scandal

When he played baseball and football for Westminster Christian Academy, Alex Rodriguez was a familiar site on the ballfields at Marathon and Coral Shores high schools.

Stench of the steroid scandal staining Major League Baseball emanates from a Miami clinic but extends even to Florida high-school sports, state officials said Tuesday.

Alex Rodriguez, the most highly paid baseball player ever and a three-time most valuable player, once lined up against Florida Keys athletes on baseball and football fields during his prep career at Miami's Westminster Christian Academy.

Now the much-maligned New York Yankee third baseman has been served with a 211-game suspension from playing in the major leagues due to his association with the now-closed Biogenesis clinic in Miami. A dozen other professional players in baseball's major and minor leagues were given 50-game suspensions Monday.

There is no evidence Rodriguez was using performance-enhancing drugs before his Westminster graduation in 1993.

But prep athletes have been linked to steroids and other potentially dangerous drugs, staff and advisors of the Florida High School Athletics Association said on a Tuesday conference call.

The Miami Herald reported Tuesday that it "has seen a partial list of alleged clients of Biogenesis from October 2011. On it are two local high school ballplayers from private schools who are set to enter their senior years, and another five players from Miami-Dade and Broward who are now in college."

ELECTION 2013

Qualifying week for two councils now under way

Marathon and Layton elections set for Nov. 5

By RYAN McCARTHY
rmccarthy@keynoter.com

The clock is officially ticking for people considering a run at the Marathon or Layton city councils on Nov. 5.

In Marathon, only former Mayor Pete Worthington and two-term incumbent Richard Keating have filed to seek two open seats on the council. Marathon's weeklong qualifying period began at noon Tuesday and ends at noon Aug. 13. A $720 fee would be required to enter the race.

In Marathon, voting is at large, meaning that if there is an election, the two highest vote-getters would be elected.

Former Marathon City Council candidate Allen Pedersen pre-filed to run on July 1, but withdrew one day before the July 9 deadline to submit 59 signed petitions to the Monroe County Supervisor of Elections Office.

Pedersen ran in 2008, coming in last among eight candidates. Current council members Dick Ramsay and Ginger Snead, along with Worthington, won that election.

Keating could be re-elected a second straight time without a challenger, while Worthington would return to the dais after one year off. He served three consecutive two-year terms from 2006 through 2012, then was term-limited out.

Paying filing fees is not uncommon in the city of Marathon. Both Keating and former Mayor John Bartus paid the fee when they ran against one another in 2009. Ramsay did the same when first elected in 2008.

Mayor Mike Cinque will finish the last of his three consecutive terms on the council in November.

Qualifying in Layton began at noon on Monday and runs through noon on Aug. 16. Candidates would be required to pay a $50 filing fee to enter the race in the Keys' smallest city.

In Layton, incumbents William Murchie (Seat 1), Gregory Lewis (Seat 3) and Philip Porter (Seat 5) are so far running unopposed.

Caroline Street getting makeover

West Marine, 96-room hotel are rising up

By SEAN KINNEY
skinney@keynoter.com

With construction of a new 12,000-square-foot store nearly complete, the new West Marine outfitter in Key West is planning a grand opening the weekend of Sept. 20.

The superstore at 951 Caroline St. is owned by developer Conch Harbor Retail Center LLC and will replace the West Marine down the street at 725 Caroline.

Manager Kevin Robertson said he has an "experienced crew eager to offer our customers all of the necessary gear to enjoy everything from an active day to just relaxing on a sandbar."

He said the opening weekend would include giveaways and other promotions.

The construction of the West Marine is just part of large-scale developments along Caroline, which borders Key West's Historic Seaport and harbor walk.

Hotel and housing developer Pritam Singh, builder of Truman Annex and the Parrot Key Hotel and Resort, recently broke ground on what will eventually be a two-story 96-room hotel on the site of the former Jabour's Trailer Court.

Before Singh got involved, Cortex Cos. attempted a condominium project that went bankrupt, leaving just one model unit standing on the large waterfront-adjacent lot.

The City Commission approved Singh's development plan in July last year.

And just across William Street from Singh's property, the former Waterfront Market is being built out as a brewery, pub and restaurant by Chris Schultz and Joe Walsh.

The city owns the concrete block structure, built in 1970 and vacant since the popular grocery store closed 2010. In January, commissioners approved a 20-year lease with Walsh and Schultz valued at $397,782 per year, plus a portion of operating revenues once the Waterfront Brewery opens.

Also for Caroline, the city has earmarked $670,000 for road and drainage improvements, new sidewalks and streetlights, the addition of several crosswalks, new trash and recycling containers, improved signs and landscaping. That money comes from the city's Tax Increment Fund.

Beginning in 1996, city

Aquarium begins to take shape

Main part of attraction is constructed

By RYAN McCARTHY

Workers were busy Tuesday erecting the main tiki hut at a planned interactive public aquarium attraction at U.S. 1 and 117th Street in Marathon. Dynasty Marine Associates co-owners Forrest Young and Ben Daughtry hope to open it by next summer.

By the looks of it, a planned interactive public aquarium at U.S. 1 and 117th Street in Marathon could be open any time now.

Less than a month after breaking ground on what was an empty nine-acre lot, workers were busy Tuesday finishing up a large tiki hut planned to house the attraction's gift shop, reception and office areas, storage space, restrooms and education room.

The aquarium has been a dream of longtime Marathon resident Ben Daughtry for more than a decade. He's part owner of Dynasty Marine Associates, a Middle Keys company known worldwide for collecting and selling Keys marine life.

"It's happening quick," he said. "Things are going well and we're running close to schedule. You're seeing the main structure going up now and then things will die down."

That's when work will begin on the main draw, a 175,000-gallon concrete tank complete with four acrylic windows so visitors can see inside. The main tank is slated to stand around 9 feet tall with 6-foot-by-8-foot windows.

The plan is for people to be able to "touch and feel" the marine life and even be able to snorkel and Snuba in the main tank. Several smaller tanks are also planned.

"The main tank will be built in the next month and after that happens, we have to wait for about 30 days for the big acrylic windows to go in because the concrete has to cure. That will take a bit longer, and we have to do the hut and decking around the tank," Daughtry said.

Construction is planned to take around a year, with a tentative opening planned for next summer. But Daughtry hopes it could be sooner.

"I would have rather opened in September just so I can get a chance to get our bearings, but I don't want to wait until next September," he said.

Daughtry and Dynasty Marine founder Forrest Young received City Council approval for the project eight years ago, but it was delayed because of the poor economy. The pair was finally able to secure financing and move forward in June.

The attraction would fit nicely with the City Council's stated vision of Marathon as an eco-tourism destination. That includes the Dolphin Research Center, Turtle Hospital, Crane Point Hammock, Pigeon Key and Boot Key, should the city eventually purchase that island from its private owners.

Plans are to be open seven days a week, likely from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. with an anticipated 15 to 20 full-time employees.

Rockland plaza slowly progressing

Design plans could go to county in fall

By KEVIN WADLOW
Senior Staff Writer
kwadlow@keynoter.com

Plans for a large Lower Keys shopping center are taking shape but nothing happens easily, says the project's land-use consultant.

"Everybody is moving as fast as they can but it's an unbelievably slow process," Owen Trepanier of Trepanier and Associates in Key West said Tuesday.

"We've got a ton of work to do on the conceptual plan," he said. "There are a lot of unique issues and challenges."

In April, the Monroe County Commission approved the Rockland Key Commercial Retail Center Overlay District to facilitate permitting on the 33-acre site.

Since then, the team assembled by developer David Garfunkel of Savannah, Ga., has been preparing the center's first conceptual plan for submission to Monroe County's Growth Management staff. That might happen later this fall, Trepanier said, but the schedule remains tentative.

Designers are working to fit the project's 335,000 square feet of covered space onto a tract near mile marker 9 that is more elongated than most building sites.

"It's a linear site and most of these larger-scale centers are not really linear," Trepanier said. "But we've got a good team and it's an exciting project."

The designers also must ensure stormwater runoff does not reach nearby mangroves and nearshore water, all protected environments. Plotting pedestrian and bicycle areas, and meeting standards for U.S. 1 access, must also be considered, Trepanier said.

"Once we get the plan solidified, we make our formal application for a major conditional-use permit," he said. "Then everybody breaks out their red pencils as they view it from the various perspectives."

In addition to Trepanier, Key West architect William Horn and civil engineer Richard Milelli are working on the plan with Garfunkel's staff.

County commissioners in April recommended Garfunkel make plans to build or provide some workforce housing for the 600 people estimated to be hired at the shopping complex. Garfunkel did not agree to the proposal but the topic could rise at future permitting steps.

No tenants have been confirmed but the center will have one anchor store, often described as like a Target or WalMart.

HENNEMANN

A Celebration of Life was held at 7 p.m. on Monday, August 5, 2013 at the Daniel Funeral Home in St. Cloud, MN for Sheri Ann Hennemann, age 72, of Key Colony Beach, Florida. Sheri passed away July 28 at St. Mary's Hospital in Rochester, MN. Reverend Kristen Anderson officiated.

Sheri was born on July 23, 1941 in Oshkosh, WI to Vernis and Howard (Domer) Manthei. Sheri lived in Scottsdale, AZ and graduated from high school in Columbia Heights, MN in 1959. Sheri married Milo Hennemann on December 28, 1961. Sheri held several professional positions including State Vice President of the Minnesota Mrs. Jaycees Chapter until becoming the Chairman of the Board of Infopac Imaging Inc.

Sheri and Milo moved to Key Colony Beach in the Florida Keys in 1991, where Sheri enjoyed the tropical lifestyle. Summers were spent at their cabin in Stone Lake, WI. Sheri loved dancing, fishing, traveling, boating on the ocean and the lake, downhill skiing, cooking, going to plays, family get-togethers and spending time with her amazing grandchildren.

Sheri will be remembered by all who knew her, for her unique laugh and her zest for life. She made everyone feel welcome and cared for.

Sheri is survived by her husband of 51 years, Milo; children, Marie of Almena, WI, Shelley (Alan) Jerome of Elk River, MN, Michael of FL; grandchildren, Taylor, Logan, Julia, Calista, Gavin; sister Arlene (John) Luttrell of Rockford, Illinois and many nieces, nephews, family and good friends.

Preceding her in death were her parents.

Bridge repairs complete

Traffic lights have come down after 15 months

By RYAN McCARTHY
rmccarthy@keynoter.com

Middle Keys commuters will be happy to hear that traffic lights at the mile marker 61 intersection connecting U.S. 1 to Duck Key were removed Tuesday as workers put the final touches on an 18-month project to repair the failing bridge leading to the island.

Monroe County Engineering Director Judy Clarke said contractors are expected to finish the $2.48 million project within 10 days, but both sides of the bridge are open for the first time since March 2012.

The state Department of Transportation required the lights, one on U.S 1 and another on Duck Key, during construction. They slowed traffic in the area, especially coming off Duck Key during long weekends, when the lights were timed to keep northbound U.S. 1 traffic moving.

Clarke said DOT funded about 65 percent ($1.61 million) of the construction cost. The county covered roughly $875,000.

Among the repairs to the bridge were replacing the top deck, railings and sidewalk, as well as concrete spalling on the substructure.

"I would say we won't be out there doing major repairs for another 15 or 20 years," Clarke said.

The bridge was built in 1967.

Administrators move around

Porter shifts staffers around at Keys schools

By SEAN KINNEY
skinney@keynoter.com

Monroe County School District Superintendent Mark Porter has appointed several school-level administrative personnel as the 2013-14 school year inches close.

Last month, Porter picked Lisa Taylor, formerly an assistant principal at Coral Shores High School, to take over as principal of Plantation Key School, replacing retiring Principal Vanessa Strickland.

Taylor began working for the Keys school system in 1991 as a teacher at Key Largo School. She said she's "thrilled" to have the job and "excited to connect with all the families."

Kristy Bedell, formerly a teacher leader at Plantation Key School, will move up to the Coral Shores assistant principal post on a yearlong interim basis.

Last week, Porter announced Bedell's interim appointment along with two other yearlong posts. He said the district would go through a formal search process in the spring.

"Each of these positions is being filled by current district personnel who have come forward to fill leadership voids as we prepared for the soon-to-open 2013-14 school year," he said. "I know they will each do an outstanding job on behalf of our students and families."

Christina McPherson, the district's director of accountability and assessment, is now interim principal at Poinciana Elementary School in Key West. Poinciana's former assistant principal, Steve Vinson is moving over to Horace O'Bryant Middle School to replace Brett Unke.

Unke was promoted to principal of Stanley Switlik Elementary School in Marathon, replacing Lesley Salinero, who's moved to Sugarloaf School to focus solely on exceptional-student education, formerly a responsibility she had in addition to leading Switlik.

Unke is a former Switlik assistant principal and has been with the School District since 1993.

Porter has also hired Randy Fabal, a Key West High School math teacher, to serve as district transportation supervisor, replacing Kayleen Watts Fabal formerly had the transportation job from 2002-04.

Ramon Dawkins, the district's human resources director, was unable to immediately provide the salaries associated with the principal and assistant principal positions.

New teachers report to school on Thursday and all teachers report by Aug. 12. School starts Aug. 19.

Dolphin harvest up for discussion

Allowable catch would increase under proposal

By KEVIN WADLOW
Senior Staff Writer
kwadlow@keynoter.com

Federal fishery managers want to hear from Florida Keys fishermen Thursday on possible changes to dolphin and kingfish harvests.

Staff with the South Atlantic Fishery Management Council hold an open session from 4 to 7 p.m. at the Key Largo Hilton at mile marker 97 bayside.

Comments will be recorded on "proposed management measures affecting fishery management plans" for snapper and grouper, dolphin and wahoo, coral, and coastal migratory pelagics including kingfish, Spanish mackerel and cobia.

Using a revised catch-survey technique, the South Atlantic staff is recommending an increase in the annual harvest of dolphin fish, also known as mahi mahi.

The recreational catch dolphin would rise to 14.2 million pounds from 13.5 million pounds.

Federal rules allocate 92.5 percent of the dolphin harvest to the recreational sector, with commercial-fishing vessels eligible to take 7.5 percent, which would be increased to 1.16 million pounds under the favored alternative.

The Keys do not have a significant commercial fishery for dolphin.

Allowable harvests were revised by applying the new Marine Recreational Information Program, which largely replaces the much-criticized Marine Recreational Fisheries Statistics Survey that relied on a more limited volume of information.

Keys commercial fishermen will appeal for a change in rules on transporting mackerel, said Florida Keys Commercial Fishermen's Association executive Bill Kelly.

A spring season when kingfish can only be caught in an area off Collier County bans Keys-based boats from bringing their catch back to Key West or Marathon, or even to wholesale docks in Fort Myers or Everglades City, he said.

"We're asking for the authority to bring our catch back to Monroe County," he said.

Hook-and-line commercial fishermen also want to have their daily limit of kingfish raised from 1,250 fish to 3,000, currently the limit allowed farther up the East Coast.

That rule, imposed to protect kingfish from being overfished as incidental catch by yellowtail fishermen, has been rendered obsolete by improved fishing techniques, Kelly said.

For more information, go to www.safmc.net. Comments can be submitted through the site.

The opening of a new West Marine store at 951 Caroline St. is planned for the weekend of Sept. 20. The 12,000-square-foot store will replace the West Marine just two blocks away on Caroline. Site work has begun at the former Jabour's Trailer Court on Caroline Street (left), which developer Pritam Singh is turning into a 96-room hotel.

Nighttime hours requested

Reconstruction would speed up

By SEAN KINNEY
skinney@keynoter.com

As complaints mount from business owners who are losing money, the contractor leading the three-year rebuild of North Roosevelt Boulevard in Key West is requesting an extension of construction hours.

The de Moya Group of Miami is running the $41.5 million project through a contract with the Florida Department of Transportation. The city's noise-control ordinance limits such construction to between 8 a.m. and 7 p.m.

The waiver de Moya has requested would allow for construction from 7 p.m. until midnight Monday through Thursday between Kennedy Drive and the intersection of North Roosevelt and U.S. 1, known locally as the Triangle.

The City Commission was scheduled to vote on the extension during a meeting after press time on Tuesday.

Conditions of the waiver would require de Moya to provide written notice one week ahead of time to businesses within 100 feet of the construction and two weeks notice to residences within 100 feet.

Jacki Hart, a project manager from local firm AMEC, made the request on July 29. The intended work is primarily sheet-pile installation for one section of seawall on the 2.9-mile stretch of road.

She said the extended hours would reduce the work from an estimated 80 or 90 days down 45 days, "thereby allowing the promenade and paving operations to occur more rapidly to expedite the contract."

When complete, the 2.9-mile stretch of Key West's main traffic artery will include a new seawall bordered by a 20-foot-wide landscaped promenade, four lanes of traffic each 11 feet wide, a 10-foot center turn lane and a six-foot sidewalk on the business side of the road.

BASTRON

A 19-year-old Tavernier man was jailed Sunday night after he crashed his car at mile marker 97 and police later found a large amount of marijuana in his auto.

Wyatt Bastron, whom jail records show is a cashier, is charged with possession of marijuana with intent to sell, possession of a felony amount of marijuana, possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of alcohol by someone under age 21.

The Monroe County Sheriff's Office says its dispatch center received a call about 11:30 p.m. from someone saying a white Mercedes speeding on U.S. and hit another car. The caller said the Mercedes driver wanted to leave the scene and appeared to be intoxicated.

When Deputy Tony Conde arrived, Bastron kept trying to reach underneath the seat of the car, saying he was looking for his wallet — but the wallet was in his hand, Deputy Becky Herrin said.

Conde found a Budweiser beer can on the floorboard and a small vial of white powder, which Bastron said was Molly, also known as Ecstasy.

In the trunk, Herrin said, deputies found four cases of beer and a backpack that Bastron said was his. In the backpack were 111 grams of marijuana. A digital scale was also found.

The white powder will be tested. Depending on what it is, more charges are possible.

CRIME FRONT

Cops: Man tried to force himself

He's charged with attempted sexual battery

A 52-year-old Key Largo was jailed with no bond Monday, accused of exposing himself and fondling and forcibly kissing a young woman against her will.

Pedro Portillo was supposed to bring the woman, in her 20s, a sandwich Monday afternoon, says Deputy Becky Herrin from the Monroe County Sheriff's Office. She said he walked into her home and found her in the shower, opened the curtain and groped her breasts and vagina, despite her protests.

The woman, who is not related to Portillo, pulled the curtain closed but he opened it again and this time was naked, Herrin said. She said he fondled himself in front of her saying "you know you want this."

She fled the shower and ran to the living room but he followed her and forcibly kissed her, Herrin said. She pushed him away and ran back to the bathroom but he forced his way in, kissing her again and grabbing her buttocks, Herrin said. She again told him no and to leave. He did.

Portillo was found at a trailer he owns in the Calusa Campground in Key Largo. He's charged with attempted sexual battery and he was booked into jail.

Portillo was arrested in October 2011 on a cocaine possession count.

Projects progressing

From Caroline, 1A

officials created the Community Redevelopment Agency to oversee the Key West Bight, Caroline Street Corridor, Trumbo Road and non-contiguous parts of Bahama Village that were designated as blighted.

With that label, 1996 became the baseline. Any tax revenue generated based on the increase in property values above that baseline is collected and then reinvested in the area through the TIF.

There's also a broader enhancement plan from architect Michael Ingram that considers creating four plazas at the termini of Greene, William, Margaret and Grinnell streets, all of which end along the Gulfside bight and intersect Caroline.

'Elephant in the room'

From Steroids, 1A

Florida problem; that's where the Biogenesis scandal has occurred," said Roger Dearing, FHSAA executive director. "You can't believe that's the only such lab out there. These probably are being made available across the state and nation."

"We must draw a line in the sand against PEDs. It's the elephant in the room," Dearing said. "We've known it exists but we may not have been as vigilant as we should have been."

The FHSAA plans to make an "aggressive step" to prevent use of steroids and other performance-enhancing drugs in prep athletics.

That likely will include seeking a ban on coaches linked to PED abuse by minors, and a call for public and private schools to require testing of any athlete suspected of using the banned substances.

"It's distressing to see impressionable teens make mistakes," said Dr. Jennifer Roth Maynard, a physician at the Mayo Clinic in Jacksonville and a member of the FHSAA Sports Medicine Advisory Committee. "Student athletes see this occurring in Major League Baseball and replicate it, without recognizing the harm. Teenagers are still developing mentally and physically."

Maynard has seen high-school athletes pressured by "coaches, older siblings and, most heartbreakingly, parents" to take PEDs.

One player told her his father urged him to take steroids for "bigger muscles and bigger bulk so he could be more intimidating on the football field."

People abusing steroids may suffer dangerous heart and liver damage among other side effects, Maynard said.

"That's enough to scare anybody," said state Sen. Bill Montford, a former schools superintendent in North Florida. "Today's student athletes face far more pressure and far more negative opportunities than I ever seen before."

Testing a single athlete suspected of steroid use costs about $150.

With about 283,000 students now playing high-school sports, the state and local school districts cannot afford to test every one, Dearing said. Local support groups or businesses may be able to volunteer funding for limited programs, he said.

Press protects public's interests

Federal court is in the wrong for ruling 'Times' reporter must testify in CIA leak trial

A misguided ruling by a federal appeals court on press freedom last month underscores the need for a federal shield law that protects the news media's right to report on wrongdoing in the government and mischief by public officials.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit, based in Richmond, Va., declared in a 2-1 ruling that New York Times reporter James Risen must testify in the trial of a CIA operative charged with leaking classified information to him. The decision undermines the First Amendment privilege and gives the government unchecked power to intimidate Risen and other reporters who refuse to reveal their sources.

As Judge Roger Gregory noted in his dissent, the majority's ruling "severely impinges on the press and the free flow of information in our society."

It would compel reporters to reveal confidential sources in a criminal trial, effectively discouraging whistleblowers in the government from coming forth. Fearing government retaliation, news organizations would be obliged to think twice before going public with information based on leaks by employees on the public payroll.

The government would no doubt prefer a lapdog to a watchdog, but the public would be the big loser. Hard-hitting journalism that uncovers wrongdoing in government provides information on some of the most important issues in the realm of public affairs, promotes transparency, and keeps public officials on their toes.

The court's ruling should give Congress new impetus to enact a federal shield law. It is the best way to protect the public's right to know without damaging national security.

Such a law would protect journalists who are doing their job against being compelled to reveal their sources, but also require courts to apply a balancing test to safeguard the public. Exceptions would include instances when the government seeks information that could be used to prevent terrorism attacks and when information sought from reporters can help prevent harm to others.

The bill would transform into law a set of guidelines issued by the Obama administration in response to the public backlash over disclosures that it had seized phone records and e-mails from reporters without notifying the news media beforehand.

The administration rules issued after the embarrassing disclosures of its overreach aren't enough. A law would guard against the possibility that a future president or attorney general — or the present ones — would try to get rid of the current guidelines at a later time.

Congress has tried and failed several times to approve a federal shield law. This time it must not fail.

Leave park as it is

Dagny Johnson Key Largo Botanical State Park is a pristine hammock that grants its visitors a glimpse into the beauty that once comprised the Florida Keys.

The state, along with its taxpayers and local citizenry, went to great lengths and expense to return this parcel of land back to its original habitat. This park had to be cleared of abandoned concrete structures and construction debris that was left by a bankrupted developer who brought this nature preserve to the brink of ruin.

Dagny Johnson Park is recognized as a Florida birding trail. All of the migratory birds and butterflies traversing our skies utilize this resource as a means to rest, feed and breed. These creatures, along with the many endangered spices residing in the park, have no other location that can offer them protection and life.

Tourists from all over the continental United States and from around the world flock to this park with thousands of dollars worth of bird watching equipment. They value the tranquil and quiet setting that is necessary to engage in this type of activity.

Scientists from all points within the states and around the globe routinely travel through the park, viewing the undisturbed flora and fauna. Many local residents take quiet walks with their families through the park, valuing the relief they get in this canopied paradise, away from the noise, pollution and traffic congestion that has overtaken the Keys.

For the mountain bikers, there are two extended mountain bike trails that can take these riders deep into the backcountry of the park. The rustic exposure that mountain bikers desire already exists. There is no need to further destroy this nature preserve with an expanded mountain bike trail system and its terrain features.

This rare natural refuge and passive park was established by the state to remain as a sanctuary. It wasn't created to be torn up to appease a group of bicyclists unable to appreciate the mountain bike trails that were built for them. Destroying the fragile balance that is required to maintain all life is non-negotiable.

Library's a treasure

Every summer, the Islamorada library participates in the Florida Library Youth Program, a reading and activities program designed to show children that the library is a fun and friendly place. The goal is to encourage children in Florida to become lifelong readers and library users.

These programs provide the language and literary experiences that expand children's knowledge about the world as well as provide experiences that enhance literacy.

The Islamorada library would like to thank everyone who helped make this year's program a success. Veterinarian Dr. Clifford Glade, along with Islamorada Fire and Rescue, the Monroe County Sheriff's Office and Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission, all demonstrated the search-and—rescue capabilities of Monroe County, and special thanks to Liam and Cassie, the search dogs.

Thank you to Jon Dreaver, owner of the Art Box in Key Largo. He has consistently brought his creativity and love of art to the program and the children. Many thanks to the members of the Island Christian School Key Club for their assistance in the program: club president Lindsay Bean, Jacquie Herre, Amanda Ihrig, Jessica Ledwith, Andrea Scott and Mariah Eadie. The library also thanks the Friends of the Helen Wadley Library for their continued support of the children's programs.

The Monroe County Public Library is proud to be a participant in the Florida Library Youth Program.

GUEST COLUMN

Cruise ships are essential to our economy

BELLAND

Disclaimer No. 1: I am in the tourist business. Disclaimer No. 2: The main economy of Key West is tourism. Assumption No. 1: Some people do not think they depend on tourism. Assumption No. 2: They may be right but I doubt it.

Given the increased intensity of the debate over the issue of widening the channel into Key West and an Oct. 1 referendum requesting a study of it looming large, here is yet another view.

I arrived in Key West in 1973 through the front door as the U.S. Navy was leaving Key West out the back door. Duval Street was a shuttered reminder of vibrant businesses catering to a vast Navy payroll and where locals went to shop. In a matter of a few years, it all came crashing down. Merchants left the main shopping area for SearsTown. In 1973, Key West was a financial wreck.

Since that time, Duval Street has become a successful economic attraction, although not to the tastes of many (in some cases, me, as well) and houses have been restored to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars, all resulting in us having one of the lowest unemployment rates in the country, with our hotels having the highest occupancy and average daily rate over any other place I know. So how did we go from the depths of economic depression in the early 1970s to the premier travel destination that we are today? You got it: Tourism.

Things have changed dramatically since I went to third grade in Key West. The Navy and shrimping were king. Tourism was here but not the dynamic force it was destined to become. Much like when Julius Stone came to Key West during the Depression and determined it was America's Caribbean island and the poor man's Bermuda, we had very little to fall back on with the demise of shrimping and the main departure of the Navy base at Truman Annex, except for tourism, which is exactly what we did.

The dynamic of our tourist market has changed significantly from just a few decades ago. There used to be a lot more day-trippers, and while the day-trip market is still significant, it is nowhere near what it used to be.

Certainly, the increase in tourism is not wholly due to the evolution of cruise ships in Key West, but they have had a significant impact. People come here on cruise ships and fully 65 percent have said in exit interviews they would be planning a land-based vacation. Does this have anything to do with the drive-in market from Miami-Dade and Broward counties? Does this have anything to do with the high hotel occupancy and the money spent in restaurants, attractions and retail in Key West? I am guessing yes.

I have been to cruise-ship destinations that, in my view, were overwhelmed by too many ships. It is not pretty. Contrary to some opinions, I do not believe we are overwhelmed.

I have been to cruise-ship destinations that did not keep up with emerging trends and the economic shock of their departure, such as in the Dominican Republic and Bermuda, has been unpleasant. It could happen here. I have seen destinations become wholly dependent upon cruise ships and found them to be, quite frankly, boring. The same shops, over and over in each destination. We should learn a lesson from this.

I have been in cruise-ship ports such as in Alaska where, although they have many ships, they manage them well and have interesting and unique options. So do we. I guess my question would be, no matter what the level of cruise ships, be they thick or thin, can we not determine our own destiny?

It is apparent the cruise-ship industry is changing to a different type of ship. It is also apparent that the smaller, higher-end ships are not particularly interested in Key West, Mexico and most ports in the Bahamas and Caribbean. We will need to either accommodate the new type of cruise ship being built or we will, in effect, make the conscious decision that we will have few, if any, cruise ships coming to the port of Key West. A big decision for future generations.

Key West has always made its living from the sea. Our history is associated with ships wrecked on the reef, ships passing through on the way to Cuba, ships plying the Florida Straits, military ships and virtually everything in between. Why are we now deciding that Key West, given its strategic location and deep-water port, should no longer consider our port the asset that it is?

Chris Belland is chief executive officer of Historic Tours of America in Key West.

NEWS BRIEFS

DOT remains busy with Keys roadwork

The state Department of Transportation is getting ready to make some repairs on the Bahia Honda Bridge.

"Currently, equipment mobilization is still taking place," DOT said in a prepared statement. The "contractor is completing an inspection of the current conditions of the bridge prior to beginning any repair work. All of the work will be done on the water and should not interfere with traffic. The public is welcome to fish in the area. However, they are asked not to use the driveway or staging area for fishing."

DOT also has U.S. 1 roadwork projects going on from Grassy Key to Layton, where it's widening the shoulder, and Ramrod to Big Pine Key, where resurfacing is taking place.

UTILITY BOARD

Another files for board

Vidal joins Root, Cates in Group 3

By SEAN KINNEY

VIDAL

With the addition of a local photographer, there are now three candidates vying to fill the open Group 3 seat on Keys Energy Services' policy-setting Utility Board.

Vidal, a Key West native who goes by one name and owns Vidal Photography of Flagler Avenue, filed papers in the City Clerk's Office on July 26.

Also running for the seat are contractor Timothy Root, an appointed member of the Key West Planning Board, and Cheryl Cates, a Realtor and wife of Mayor Craig Cates.

Four-term board member Lou Hernandez, formerly the executive director of the nonprofit Helpline 24-hour social-service referral agency, isn't seeking another term.

Vidal said in an e-mail that he wants to focus on community outreach and communications with utility customers.

"I want to be a strong voice for the citizens of Key West," he said. "I want to keep the public better informed. Technology is growing at such a fast pace, I have found that some of Keys Energy's longest-paying customers are being left behind. Those customers don't happen to have access to the Internet [and cannot] utilize it to review the minutes of the board meetings."

In addition to photography, Vidal describes his professional background as "modeling and acting, gracing international magazines and winning dance competitions."

He's a graduate of Key West High School and studied at Florida Keys Community College and Parsons The New School for Design in Manhattan, according to a resume.

The five-person Utility Board meets twice monthly and sets policy for the public power agency. Members are elected at large and serve four-year terms. Even though Keys Energy provides electricity from the Seven Mile Bridge south, only Key West residents are allowed to run for the board.

The only other filed candidate for the Utility Board is District 2 incumbent Peter Batty, a deacon at St. Mary's Star of the Sea Catholic Church.

Utility Board members earn about $12,000 annually.

The general election is set for Oct. 1 with a runoff, if needed, scheduled for Nov. 15.

CRIME

Men flee, busted

Two Miami-Dade men were jailed Monday night after they were caught driving a stolen car with drugs inside, says the Monroe County Sheriff's Office.

Luis Hernandez, 24, of Homestead and Reyes Cabezas, 27, of Hialeah face a variety of charges.

Deputy Becky Herrin said about 7:30 p.m. at mile marker 93, Deputy Pedro Garcia was on a traffic stop with Deputy Vaughn O'Keefe when a Honda Civic with Hernandez and Cabezas inside drove past with a loud exhaust. Garcia followed the car and attempted to stop it — but it sped up, fleeing.

Garcia ran a computer check on the tag, and found that the car had been stolen from Miami. It crashed into a business, Port Engineers near mile marker 102, and the two men got out and ran away.

Responding deputies were beginning to search for them when they were approached by someone who said two men were hiding behind a nearby van. Hernandez and Cabezas were found behind the van and were taken into custody.

When police searched the Honda, they found 1.5 ounces of marijuana in it. And Cabezas had $484 in small bills in a pocket, indicative of pot sales, Herrin said.

Additionally, the car showed signs that the ignition and steering column had been tampered with as it was being stolen. Tools that could do that were in the car.

Hernandez is charged with auto theft, fleeing and eluding police, driving with his license suspended, and possession of burglary tools, marijuana and drug paraphernalia.

Cabezas is charged with fleeing and eluding police, and possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia.

Boat builders are rebounding

The industry had seen rocky times of late

By MADELINE O'LEARY

Mark Fischer's at the wheel of the 399 Cabin, the new Deep Impact boat model.

Sleek white couches, sultry blue light and a suited bartender transformed the basic North Miami Beach showroom into an exclusive art gallery.

But on this recent summer's eve, the wine-sipping crowd wasn't waiting for the latest work by a contemporary art darling. When the black cloak was swept away, the cheers went up for the 339 Cabin, the newest $400,000-plus luxury powerboat from Miami-based Deep Impact Boats.

The tony event was a sure sign that for Florida's $2 billion boat manufacturing industry, the seas ahead look far smoother than those of the past few years, when marine sales for some plunged more than 30 percent.

The marine industry's recovery wave has been building. Attendance at the Miami International Boat Show jumped 6 percent this year over troubled 2009; the number of boats shown at the Fort Lauderdale Boat Show increased about 6 percent last November over 2009, too. Boat financers that were scarce just a few years ago are slipping back into lending. Nationally, recreational boat sales jumped 10 percent in 2012.

"Consumer confidence increased for the third consecutive month in June and is now at its highest level since January 2008, which mirrors boating industry sales," the National Marine Manufacturing Association said in a statement.

But buyers are still more cautious than in richer days. Many are trading down from 50-foot-plus boats with inboard engines to smaller models that cost less to maintain, said Jeff Johnson, president of Maritime Finance.

Still, the outlook is far rosier than it used to be for Florida's 172 boat builders, the most in any state.

In South Florida, companies like Deep Impact Boats and Cigarette Racing Team are capitalizing on demand for smaller, more social and cost-effective boats, while yacht giants like Bertram Yacht and Broward Shipyard are heading to the drawing boards.

The 399 Cabin has a 470-gallon fuel capacity, and the Mercury four-stroke outboard motors that typically outfit Deep Impact's boats burn about one mile per gallon, Deep Impact Marketing Director Mark Gianassi says.

"Boaters get a 400-mile range before needing to refuel," he said. Unlike inboard engines, outboard engines aren't sensitive to ethanol-infused fuel, making the outboards easier to maintain, said Randy Sweers, owner of Fastboats.com, a boat dealership and brokerage in Pompano Beach.

At Opa-locka-based Concept Boats, Susan Patterson, vice president of sales and marketing, can't keep up with calls from potential buyers looking for a more affordable price and a variety of sizes.

At Homestead-based Contender Boats Inc., marketing director Les Stewart remembers all too well the grim days of 2009. "We were lucky to sell 100 boats that year," he said.

In 2012, Contender sold 215 boats to avid anglers. This year, Stewart predicts the company could sell 260 boats — more than a 100 percent uptick from 2009. Contender employs about 150 people, a 30 percent increase from 2009, Stewart said.

The current bestseller of the Contender fleet is the 25-foot Bay boat starting at $73,963.

While "social" boats are selling like hotcakes, those too big for outboard engines — longer than 50 feet — are slower to emerge from the recession.

"A lot of people who owned a 60-foot boat stepped down to buy a 30-foot boat due the expenses of maintenance and having a crew," said Johnson of Maritime Finance.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Jones is tapped as quarter's best

Richard Jones of Key Largo has been named Mariners Hospital's employee of the quarter for exceeding the hospital's service standards.

JONES

Jones, a multimodality radiologic technologist, organized an Imaging Services initiative to send a needy child in the community to kayak camp. His enthusiasm for the project was contagious, and he raised enough money to send four children to the camp.

Hayes joins staff at realty company

Lynn Hayes has joined American Caribbean Real Estate-Middle and Lower Keys as a sales associate.

HAYES

Hayes started selling real estate at age 19. Since then, she obtained a general contractor's license and has worked as project manager for a local contractor, with the Monroe County Property Appraiser's Office, as a Federal Emergency Management Agency coordinator, a contractor inspector, a code inspector and a building inspector.

FKAA honors 3 for longevity

The Florida Keys Aqueduct Authority board honored three employees on July 24 for their longevity at the utility.

Martin Kaiser was recognized for 15 years of employment. He started his career with the FKAA on July 20, 1998, as a pipe fitter, was later promoted to maintenance mechanic and is now a welder/mechanic with the Middle Keys Operations Division.

Steven Blatt marked 10 years. He was hired July 7, 2003, as a pipe fitter and is now a Distribution System operator with the Middle Keys Operations Division.

Tom Pfiester also marked 10 years. He was hired the same day as Blatt as a contract field representative. He's now wastewater manager in the Operations Department.

BPW and others host discussion

The Upper Keys Century Business and Professional Women's Club is joining forces with the League of Women Voters and the National Organization for Women to celebrate Women's Equity Day and the anniversary of women getting the right to vote.

A panel discussion with Monroe County Supervisor of Elections Joyce Griffin, state Rep. Holly Raschein and others is planned for Aug. 21 at the Key Largo Holiday Inn, mile marker 100.

Topics to be covered are election changes, the Equal Rights Amendment, the Supreme Court's decision this year on the Voting Rights Act and the passage of the 19th Amendment.

Lunch is $20 for BPW, LWV and NOW members and $25 others. Networking starts at 11:30 a.m., with lunch at noon. For more information or to RSVP, call 853-0907, 393-4643 or 587-1085.

Optimism reigns supreme

of the world supply. Many fishermen in the Keys gave up on the season, but some gambled and kept their traps in the water with the lure of a strong demand in the Asian market driving prices up to $18 per pound from a season opening rate of just $4 per pound.

"Fortunately, we found the lobsters where they moved to, in real deep water and in the winter, when prices went to the highest I've ever seen," Nichols said.

But Kelly says that most of the fleet was not so fortunate and suffered a bad year.

Just before midnight last Thursday, Pastor Robby Davis of the Layton Community Baptist Church blessed the fleet over VH radio from the bridge of Nichols' boat. "I asked for God to watch over them" for a safe and prosperous season, Davis said.

Next began the back-breaking work of loading the traps — weighted up to 60 pounds with heavy cement to keep them on the sea floor — onto the boats. Once loaded, the captains motor slowly to their favorite dropping spots gleaned from years of trial and error.

It's hard work, displayed by all the sweat pouring off the faces of the four-man crew of the Key Largo-based boat, Hustler.

While many captains have enough crew to do the heavy lifting while they run the forklift to transport the traps to the edge of the dock, Greco did both. It's only his second year as owner and captain of Dirty Girl, after he spent nearly a decade working for others. "I worked my way up," he said. "Not bad for a high-school dropout."

Greco, 27, said he has invested about $150,000, which included $100 for each of his 450 trap tags. That doesn't include the traps, which he makes himself at about $20 each just for the materials.

"I'm the small guy," he said.

Greco says he is hoping the market will open at a minimum of $6 per pound and eventually see the likes of $18 per pound again.

"We're like the farmer who plants a crop and hopes there's enough rain and sun for a great harvest and then hopes there is a good market," said Gary Graves, owner of Keys Fisheries in Marathon. "We plant traps in the water and hope they fill up with lobster and there is a good market. It's a very, very hard, risky business."

Unlike other businesses that can raise prices when their expenses go up, the fishermen are at the mercy of the world market, which doesn't care if fuel prices rise or traps need to be replaced after a storm.

The crew of the 'Hustler' takes another load of traps out to sea during the so-called soak season, the days leading up to Tuesday, when the eight-month lobster season opened.

Large export

About 80 percent of the spiny lobster caught commercially in the Keys is exported. The Caribbean, Australia and South Africa also are big producers of spiny lobsters.

Graves says he sells to 15 countries. "I can say I want $30 for a lobster, but buyers would say no thank you and go somewhere else," Graves said. "It's all supply and demand. Mother Nature tells you how much you can catch and the world market tells you how much you can sell it for."

Since lobster is considered a luxury item, demand goes up and down dramatically. In the past few years, China's prosperity has led to increasing consumption of the tasty crustaceans, helping to drive up prices. Live lobsters there have retailed for $46, Kelly said.

But former lucrative foreign markets — France, Spain and Italy — have slumped horribly in recent years. "China's economy also has been slipping a little bit, so we could have issues there, too," Graves said. "You can't put a calculator to this business."

Graves also owns a restaurant that sells lobster directly to locals and tourists. "We always do better with good volume of product at a reasonable price than we do with little product at a high price," he said.

For the fishermen, fuel usually is the biggest expense, said Kelly, whose association helped successfully lobby for a new state sales tax exemption on dyed fuel used strictly in commercial fishing boats. It saves some fishermen 6 percent on filling up.

"We need to applaud the state legislature for passing some financial relief this year, Kelly said.

But fishermen face another problem where there is no immediate relief in sight. Since 2000, lobster landings in the Keys have been down by about 30 percent. Tom Matthews, a Marathon-based biologist with the Florida Fish and Wildlife Research Institute, said the believed culprit is the PaV1 virus, which is not harmful to humans.

The decreased number of landings is not because the fishermen aren't finding the lobsters. "It's a very intense fishery," Matthews said.

While lobsters can live up to 20 years, in the Keys, a whopping 84 percent are caught in their first year of life.

One longtime solution could be more protection, Matthews said: "In protected areas, we've got some very old lobsters. This allows them to reproduce much more effectively."

Trap robbers also are a big problem in the Keys, despite law enforcement efforts to catch and prosecute them. "I'd say I lose about 10 percent of my income to it," Greco said.

But Greco loves the job. He loves being on the water. He and his two-man crew, friends Fred Dillon and Doug Sipps, began loading traps at 4 a.m., when it was cool. By midday, they had finished loading Dirty Girl for another trip. They slowly motored down the canal that leads out to the Atlantic. Said Greco: "We want to be done today by Happy Hour."

Fins start practice

Trash cans double as offensive linemen as the defensive front practices gap assignments during Tuesday morning's Marathon High School football practice. The team is gearing up for its Aug. 22 Kickoff Classic against Hillel School in Boca Raton.

The fall prep sports season kicked off this week in the Middle Keys, as the Marathon High School football and volleyball teams began practice Monday.

The football Dolphins returned to the field for the first time since hosting a May 23 Spring Jamboree game against Keys rival Coral Shores High School and Miami-area Doral Academy.

The Dolphins played each team for one half, losing to the Hurricanes, 28-0, and Firebirds, 26-14, in the exhibition contest. They're looking to improve on a 1-9 season a year ago.

Marathon has just over two weeks to prepare for its Kickoff Classic preseason game against Hillel School in Boca Raton on Aug. 22. The Dolphins are scheduled to host Lawrence Charter School out of Florida City in the Aug. 30 home opener.

The volleyball squad is slated to begin its season by hosting a preseason tournament against Key West and Coral Shores high schools on Aug. 21.

The program was bumped up a class in April from District 16-2A to 16-3A and is coming off an 8-15 season. The Lady Dolphins are joined in the new district by Archbishop Carroll High School, Archimedean Academy, Greater Miami Academy, International Studies and Palmer Trinity, Westminster Christian and Westwood Christian schools.

The volleyball team's regular season and home opener is scheduled for 5 p.m. on Aug. 28 against Bishop McLaughlin High School. That school is in Spring Hill, just north of Tampa.

The Marathon High golf season is scheduled to open its season with a home match at 3 p.m. on Sept. 4 against Key West and Ransom Everglades School. The Dolphins play home matches at Florida Keys Country Club (formerly Sombrero Country Club) in Marathon.

The swim team, meanwhile, is slated to begin practice on Monday and open its regular season with a visit to Key West on Aug. 27 at 5 p.m.

The Dolphins cross-country team won't finalize its schedule until a district meeting called after each school year begins.

FISHING THE FLORIDA KEYS

Dolphin catches best in a.m.

The dolphin are exhibiting their typical August behavior by biting first in the morning and then disappearing.

Most captains report the bite slows considerably by 11 o'clock. Although we've had reports of fish up to 15 pounds, most are schoolie size. Trolling is working, but you'll definitely want to have live baits, such as pinfish, aboard to tempt those that don't bite well.

Captain's Column

Chris Johnson

The snapper bite on the reef has been excellent, with mangroves and yellowtails seemingly jumping in the boat. As typical for this time of year, avoid the midday heat and fish early morning, late afternoon or nighttime for best results.

The 35- to 70-foot depths are producing the best snapper action. Small live baits are best for the largest of the mangroves. Chunks and filleted pieces of ballyhoo as well as silversides are taking the yellowtails and smaller mangroves.

John Carter Cash and his son Jack, from Hendersonville, Tenn., had a fun half day on the reef with Capt. Chris Johnson and SeaSquared Charters. The two are the son and grandson, respectively, of county music legends Johnny and June Carter Cash.

The week's best

Islamorada's Capt. Greg Poland fished a pair of fathers and sons at the humps and caught dolphin and blackfin tuna. Poland reports the shallow patch reefs are full of fish these days and the bite is red hot. Among the catches, 9-year-old Trevor from Boca Raton got his first hogfish.

Capt. T.J. Yzenas of Island Lure Charters out of Captain Hook's Marina in Marathon reports the offshore tuna bite was spotty but the dolphin bite was good. Most of the fish were on the small size, although his group from North Carolina got a 30-pounder. The reef produced mangroves and yellowtails, including fish up to 27 inches.

Fishing out of Keys Fisheries in Marathon, Blue Magic Charters with Capt. Larry Bell and deckhand Willie O'Connell trolled offshore with the Billy Gonzales family from Naples, and they caught their limit of dolphin. Wayne Kostreba, from Sauk Center, Minn., caught a bunch of mangrove snapper during a half day on the reef.

Fishing on the Klimax for SeaSquared Charters, Capt. Chris Klimas had multiple reef trips, with great catches of yellowtail and mangrove snapper coming back to the dock along with a few bonus muttons.

The SeaSquared also fished many trips to the reef, with excellent snapper catches along with a few shallow-water shark adventures where our anglers caught and released anywhere from 10 to 17 lemon sharks.

Paul Ingrao, Rob Lee, and Bill and Jolene Saunders from Annapolis, Md., braved flat-calm seas, clear water and no tide on a hot summer morning, but Capt. Kevin Wilson, of Knee Deep Charters out of the Geiger Key Marina, really put them on the yellowtails.

Casting contest

Capt. Spider's Casting for Charity returns Thursday to the 7 Mile Marina/Salty's Waterfront Grill at mile marker 47 bayside in Marathon. The contest runs from 7 to 9 pm and will benefit Friends of Old Seven.

Capt. Chris Johnson is a member of the Yamaha National Fishing Team and specializes in offshore, gulf/bay, reef/wreck, shark and tarpon fishing with SeaSquared Charters out of Captain Pip's Marina and Hideaway Marathon. THE DINING TABLE

This shows three types of chicken dishes (from left), a sticky orange-cilantro smothered chicken, a spiced-rubbed chicken breast and miso-lime marinated chicken strips.

New takes on boneless breast

Little effort is needed for these dishes

By ALISON LADMAN
Associated Press

Boneless, skinless chicken breasts are literally THE white meat of the meat world. They are a great lean protein, quick and easy to prepare, freeze well, and take to just about any flavor or cuisine you care for. But they also can be rather dull. So we've come up with three ways to jazz up this weeknight staple.

First, we created a spice rub. It's as simple as it sounds - you stir together a few spices, rub it into the meat, then slap it on the grill or into a pan on the stove. It's a great option to use on a sandwich since the breasts are pounded out flat before cooking.

Our second choice was a marinade. In the morning, toss all the ingredients in a zip-close bag and pop the whole thing into the refrigerator. When you get home from work, you'll have a flavorful and moist dinner ready to cook. Consider throwing these tenders over a bed of rice or on top of a salad.

Our last option is smothered. Sometimes you want a gooey, sticky sauce to moisten things up. These breasts work especially well alongside roasted potato wedges and corn on the cob. Of course, if chicken breasts aren't on your menu tonight, any of these options would work equally as well on chicken thighs, pork, even salmon or steak.

Spice rubbed

- Two boneless, skinless chicken breasts (about 1 pound).
- One tablespoon olive oil.
- One tablespoon brown sugar.
- One teaspoon ground cumin.
- Half a teaspoon garlic powder.
- Half a teaspoon onion powder.
- Half a teaspoon sweet paprika.
- Half a teaspoon dried thyme.
- Half a teaspoon salt.
- Half a teaspoon ground black pepper.
- Quarter teaspoon ground allspice.

Set the chicken breasts on a cutting board and slice horizontally across the piece to create two thinner halves. One at a time, cover each half with plastic wrap, then use a meat mallet to pound to an even thickness. Drizzle the pounded halves with the olive oil and rub all over.

In a small bowl, combine the brown sugar, cumin, garlic powder, onion powder, paprika, thyme, salt, pepper and allspice. Rub the mixture over both sides of each of the 4 pieces of meat.

If cooking on the grill, heat to medium heat. Cook for two minutes per side. If cooking on the stovetop, in a large skillet heat one tablespoon of canola oil over medium-high. Cook for two to three minutes per side, or until the chicken reaches an internal temperature of 160 degrees. Let rest for five minutes.

Start to finish: 30 minutes. Servings: Four.

Misolime marinated

These marinated chicken strips are incredibly versatile. Prep them in the morning, then just cook off when you get home from work. They can be cooked on the grill, in a grill pan on the stove, or even on a rack in the oven.

- Two tablespoons white miso.
- Two tablespoons lime juice.
- Zest of one lime.
- One teaspoon ground black pepper.
- One tablespoon honey.
- One teaspoon chili-garlic paste.
- Two boneless, skinless

Lab-grown burger short on flavor

It's developed from stem cells

By MARIA CHENG
Associated Press

The food of the future could do with a pinch of seasoning — and maybe some cheese.

Two volunteers who took the first public bites of hamburger grown in a laboratory gave it good marks for texture but agreed there was something missing.

"I miss the salt and pepper," said Austrian nutritionist Hanni Ruetzler. U.S. journalist Josh Schonwald confessed to a difficulty in judging a burger "without ketchup or onions or jalapenos or bacon." Both tasters shunned the bun, lettuce and sliced tomatoes offered to them to concentrate on the flavor of the meat itself.

Mark Post, the Dutch scientist who led the team that grew the meat from cattle stem cells, regretted having served the patty without his favorite topping: Aged gouda cheese.

"That would have enhanced the whole experience tremendously," he said. Following the taste test in London, he said he's pleased with the reviews: "It's not perfect, but it's a good start."

Post, whose team at Maastricht University in the Netherlands developed the burger over five years, hopes that making meat in labs could eventually help feed the world and fight climate change — although that goal is probably a decade or two away, at best.

"The first [lab-made] meat products are going to be very exclusive," said Isha Datar, director of New Harvest, an international nonprofit that promotes meat alternatives. "These burgers won't be in Happy Meals before someone rich and famous is eating them."

Chef Richard McGeown cooks a burger Monday that's made from cultured beef grown in a laboratory from stem cells of cattle. Professor Mark Post of the Netherlands' Maastricht University developed it.

Sergey Brin, a co-founder of Google, announced that he funded the $330,000 project, saying he was motivated by a concern for animal welfare.

"We're trying to create the first cultured beef hamburger," he said in a videotaped message. "From there, I'm optimistic we can really scale up by leaps and bounds."

Scientists agreed that improving the flavor probably won't be hard.

"Taste is the least [important] problem since this could be controlled by letting some of the stem cells develop into fat cells," said Stig Omholt, director of biotechnology at the Norwegian University of Life Sciences.

Adding fat to the burgers this way would probably be healthier than getting it from naturally chunky cows, said Omholt, who was not involved in the project. He called Monday's tasting a publicity stunt — but not in a bad way. He said it was a smart way to draw public attention, and possibly investor funds, to efforts to develop lab-grown meat.

How it was done

Post's team made the meat from shoulder muscle cells of two organically raised cows. The cells were put into a nutrient solution to help them develop into muscle tissue, and they grew into small strands of meat.

It took nearly 20,000 strands to make a single 140-gram (5-ounce) patty, which for Monday's event was seasoned with salt, egg powder and breadcrumbs. Red beet juice and saffron were added to help the burger look more meat-like; Post said the lab-made patty had a yellowish tinge.

"I'm a vegetarian, but I would be first in line to try this," said Jonathan Garlick, a stem cell researcher at Tufts University School of Dental Medicine in Boston. He has used similar techniques to make human skin but wasn't involved in the burger research.

Experts say new ways of producing meat are needed to satisfy growing carnivorous appetites without exhausting resources. The animal rights group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals has thrown its support behind the lab-meat initiative.

"As long as there's anybody who's willing to kill a chicken, a cow or a pig to make their meal, we are all for this," said Ingrid Newkirk, PETA's president and co-founder. "Instead of the millions and billions [of animals] being slaughtered now, we could just clone a few cells to make burgers or chops," she said.

If the product is ever ready for market, national food authorities will likely require data proving the lab meat is safe; there is no precedent. Some experts said officials might regulate the process used to make such meat, similar to how they monitor beer and wine production.

Only one patty was cooked Monday, and the testers each took less than half of it. Post said he would take the leftovers home so his kids can have a taste.

Finish it off with grilling

From Chicken, 1B

chicken breasts (about a pound), cut into strips

In a zip-close plastic bag, combine the miso, lime juice, lime zest, black pepper, honey and chili-garlic paste. Squish around in the bag until well combined. Place the chicken strips into the bag and squeeze out any air. Refrigerate for six to eight hours.

When ready to cook, heat the oven to 450 or heat the grill to medium-high. If using the oven, place a wire rack over a baking sheet and mist with cooking spray.

Drain the chicken, discarding the marinade. Arrange the chicken strips over the rack-baking sheet or on the grates of the heated grill. Grill for two minutes or roast for four to five minutes, or until the chicken reaches an internal temperature of 160 degrees. Let rest for five minutes.

Start to finish: Six to eight hours (30 minutes active). Servings: Four.

Orange-cilantro

- Two boneless, skinless chicken breasts (about 1 pound), cut into 2-inch chunks.
- Half a cup low-sodium chicken broth.
- Half a cup orange marmalade.
- Two tablespoons brown sugar.
- Half a teaspoon red pepper flakes.
- Half a teaspoon salt.
- Half a teaspoon ground black pepper.
- Quarter cup chopped fresh cilantro.

Heat the oven to 400 degrees.

In a large, oven-safe skillet, mix together the chicken broth, marmalade, brown sugar, red pepper flakes, salt, black pepper and cilantro. Bring to a boil and cook until reduced by half. Add the chicken, turning to coat, then place the skillet in the oven and cook for 20 to 25 minutes, or until the chicken reaches 160.

TOASTMASTERS OF THE YEAR

Teresa Aguiar, incoming president of the Key West Toastmasters, presents the group's highest recognition, Toastmaster of the year, to Keith and Mary Ellen Lapp. Since moving to Key West and transferring their membership from Michigan, the Lapps have served in various officer roles for the public-speaking group.

LIVING BRIEFS

Wildlife rescuer speaks to group

Karen Detman, representing the Tavernier-based Ark Angels, a wildlife rescue organization, is scheduled to speak to the Key Largo Senior Group Aug. 12 at 10:30 a.m. in the community room of the Key Largo library, mile marker 101.4 oceanside.

The free program is open to the public. Refreshments will be served. For further information call Kathy Gong at 394-4006.

Group offering iPhoto information

The Upper Keys Mac User Group meets on Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Key Largo library for a program titled "Learn iPhoto the Easy Way!"

Speaker Karen Beal will show you where to find tutorials and how to use them. The library is in Trade Winds Plaza at mile marker 101.4 oceanside.

The Upper Keys Mac User Group is a nonprofit group promoting the use and enjoyment of computers by sharing information and providing educational networking. Its meeting are free to attend.

LIVING BRIEFS

Stargazers gather for meteor shower

Crane Point Museum and Nature Center, in conjunction with the Florida Keys Astronomy Club, has planned a meteor shower party starting at 8 p.m. Saturday and running until 2 a.m. Sunday.

There will be stargazing, games, giveaways and more. Cost is $6 per person. The event is weather-permitting.

Meet at the entrance to the Crane Point Museum, mile marker 50 bayside, no later than 8 p.m. Bring blankets or chairs and dress for an evening outdoors. Closed-toe shoes are best for walking the trail and bring a flashlight for the return trip.

In case of inclement weather, check the Crane Point Facebook page for details. For more information contact Libby Moore at 743-8889 or Loretta Geotis at 743-3900.

Smoking cessation program is offered

The Florida Keys Area Health Education Center in Tavernier is offering a free two-hour "Tools to Quit" tobacco cessation program on Aug. 17 at 10 a.m. at the Monroe County Health Department, 50 High Point Road, Tavernier.

Participants will receive two weeks of free nicotine replacement patches and counseling from a certified tobacco treatment specialist. To register, call 852-9551.

Book club takes up 'Aftershock'

The Key Largo Book Club meets Aug. 20 at 7 p.m. at the Key Largo library to discuss "Aftershock: Protect Yourself and Profit in the Next Global Financial Meltdown" (2nd edition) by David Wiedemer and co-authors.

"Aftershock" predicts severe and inevitable inflation, the result of prolonged enormous expansion of the money supply accompanied by slow economic growth. The authors analyze the predicted bursting of bubbles (housing, private debt, stock market, federal deficit and U.S. dollar) in a sluggish economy that the expansion of the money supply cannot indefinitely remedy.

The authors recommend investing in gold bullion to survive the predicted meltdown.

The library is in Trade Winds Plaza at mile marker 101.4 oceanside. For further information call Pat Cobey at 852-5756.

Wine, food event comes to Key West

The Sons and Daughters of Italy in Key West is hosting a wine and food-testing fest at 6:30 p.m. Aug. 14 at the Inn of Key West, 3420 N. Roosevelt Blvd.

Cost for the Lodge 2436 event is $25; tickets can be bought at the door.

Child-seat workers are being sought

The Florida Keys Healthy Start Coalition needs community members to become certified child passenger safety technicians.

Training will be held Aug. 26 through 29 at the Monroe County Sheriff's Office, 5525 College Road, Stock Island. It is free and open to the public but prior registration through the coalition is required.

The potentially life-saving skills learned are beneficial for any parent, teacher, social worker, child care provider or emergency services employee. Many local businesses also see this as an opportunity to give back to the community by encouraging their employees to enroll in this course without loss of wages.

The coalition holds monthly car-seat installation and inspections events rotating between the Lower, Middle and Upper Keys. Technicians will be asked but are not obligated to volunteer during these events in their area.

Fisher museum celebrates de Leon

Symposium set for the Westin this Saturday

The Mel Fisher Maritime Museum, in partnership with the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary, has its third annual Florida Keys Maritime Heritage Symposium on Saturday.

The event, free and open to the public, will be held at the Westin Key West Resort, 2:45 Front St., with presentations scheduled from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. It's part of the statewide celebration of the 500th anniversary of Ponce de Leon discovering Florida.

The symposium will focus on the Spanish Colonial period. Experts from across South Florida will share their research on topics that include Native American lifestyles, the 1622 fleet of sunken treasure ships, the stories behind the names of the individual keys, and the search and discovery of slave ships. A historical Spanish map exhibit will be on display.

Speakers include Michelle Williams (Florida Public Archaeology Network), Ray Blazevic (local history explorer), Corey Malcom (Mel Fisher Maritime Museum) and Jim Clupper (Florida Keys historian). The symposium concludes with a showing of WPBT's "Sunken Stories," which features the underwater archeological work of the Mel Fisher Maritime Museum.

For more information, contact Malcom at cmalcom@melfisher.org or 294-2633, Ext. 22.

TO YOUR HEALTH

No breakfast may raise heart attack risk

Eating later likely means more calories

Another reason to eat breakfast: Skipping it may increase your chances of a heart attack.

A study of older men found those who regularly skipped breakfast had a 27 percent higher risk of a heart attack than those who ate a morning meal. There's no reason why the results wouldn't apply to other people, too, the Harvard researchers said.

Other studies have suggested a link between breakfast and obesity, high blood pressure, diabetes and other health problems seen as precursors to heart problems.

"But no studies looked at long-term risk of heart attack," said Eric Rimm, one of the study authors at the Harvard School of Public Health.

Why would skipping breakfast be a heart attack risk?

Experts aren't certain, but here's what they think: People who don't eat breakfast are more likely to be hungrier later in the day and eat larger meals. Those meals mean the body must process a larger amount of calories in a shorter amount of time. That can spike sugar levels in the blood and perhaps lead to clogged arteries.

But is a stack of syrupy pancakes, greasy eggs and lots of bacon really better than eating nothing?

The researchers did not ask what the study participants ate for breakfast, and were not prepared to pass judgment on whether a fatty, sugary breakfast is better than no breakfast at all.

Other experts agreed that it's hard to say.

"We don't know whether it's the timing or content of breakfast that's important. It's probably both," said Andrew Odegaard, a University of Minnesota researcher who has studied a link between skipping breakfast and health problems like obesity and high blood pressure.

"Generally, people who eat breakfast tend to eat a healthier diet," he added.

The new research was released Monday by the journal Circulation. It was an observational study, so it's not designed to prove a cause and effect. But when done well, such studies can reveal important health risks.

The researchers surveyed nearly 27,000 men about their eating habits in 1992. About 13 percent of them said they regularly skipped breakfast. They all were educated health professionals — like dentists and veterinarians — and were at least 45.

Over the next 16 years, 1,527 suffered fatal or non-fatal heart attacks, including 171 who had said they regularly skipped breakfast.

In other words, over 7 percent of the men who skipped breakfast had heart attacks, compared to nearly 6 percent of those who ate breakfast.

The researchers calculated the increased risk at 27 percent, taking into account other factors like smoking, drinking, diet and health problems like high blood pressure and obesity.

As many as 18 percent of U.S. adults regularly skip breakfast, according to federal estimates. So the study could be important news for many, Rimm said.

"It's a really simple message," he said. "Breakfast is an important meal."

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT:

DEADLINE TO FILE BP CLAIM IS APRIL 22, 2014

Things you need to know about your rights under the BP Oil Spill Settlement:

- This is a Court authorized and Court supervised settlement which BP entered into voluntarily, that in part, limits BP's liability for past and future damages resulting from the spill.
- BP has agreed in Court documents that Monroe County was in fact affected by the spill and that there may be future effects of the spill felt in the Keys.
- BP has agreed that Monroe County residents do not need to prove that the spill caused any loss - it is presumed for businesses and individuals meeting the financial criteria.
- You are included as a member in this settlement unless you opted out or were specifically excluded; most Monroe County residents and businesses are included.
- As a member of the settlement, you must make your claim by April 22, 2014.
- You cannot simply "wait and see". If you do not make a claim by April 22, 2014, your claim will forever be lost and you will release BP from any claim you may have had for both past and future damages.
- There is no cost to you to determine if you are a member of the settlement and entitled to compensation. We do not charge upfront costs or fees and if you do not recover - you do not pay anything.
- If it is determined you are entitled to compensation - you may also be entitled to several times that amount to compensate you for future losses.
- You may be entitled to compensation under the settlement even if you were previously denied.

Scientists studying gulf whale sharks

Large groups found gathering in north end

By XERXES WILSON
Houma, La., Courier

Each June and July near the full moon, the northern Gulf of Mexico hosts a mysterious gathering of whale sharks.

Dozens of the hulking black sharks with white spots glide about with mouths agape as they skim the water's surface during a 12-hour tuna egg buffet of sorts.

A decade ago, records of these unusual gatherings existed only in fishermen's tales.

Scientists have spent the past decade piecing together an understanding of the fish's existence in the northern Gulf and tracking these gatherings that have also been reported in other parts of the world.

"In the past we were amazed just to see 16 animals.... Then look back to 2010, there were 16 to 20 of the animals everywhere you turned," said Eric Hoffmayer, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration research fisheries biologist. "Staying in the water with those guys, it was just a surreal experience."

Hoffmayer began researching the whale sharks' habits and habitat in the northern Gulf in 2002. Today, the project is a collaborative effort between scientists at the University of Southern Mississippi, NOAA and the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

The whale shark is the ocean's largest fish, growing more than 30 feet long and in some cases weighing 20 tons.

Louisiana state fisheries biologist Jennifer McKinney said these assemblies coincide with tuna spawning events and consistently occur near the Ewing Bank, about 100 miles from Cocodrie.

Researchers are investigating many aspects of the gatherings including whether they are the result of an "evolutionary memory" or the sharks opportunistically following spawning fish.

Hoffmayer recalled a research trip to the Ewing Bank in 2010 where on one day they spotted no sharks in the area. The next day, more than 100 converging around them.

"How do you go from zero to 100 animals? It is a 12- to 24-hour event. How are they finding this and where are they coming from?" Hoffmayer said. "We are starting to find out they may be staying with it. It may not be that they move far from it."

These boat passengers and crew aboard got a bit more than they bargained for during a charter out of the Hawks Cay Resort Marina a few years back — a large whale shark came to the surface nearby. Whale sharks are among the largest fish species in the world. A few years ago, one took up temporary residence in Vaca Cut in Marathon.

Researchers are also researching whether the shark population in the northern Gulf is resident or migratory.

"We find that is probably a mixture. We have some that go into the southern Gulf of Mexico. But we have had a few that appear to stay in the northern Gulf during the winter time," Hoffmayer said.

McKinney said their research includes determining the importance of underwater geographic features and artificial reef structures provided by production platforms in making the northern Gulf a hospitable habitat for the whale shark.

"The overall goal would be to learn more about these animals in our region and determine what connectivity the Gulf has to the rest of the ocean," Hoffmayer said. "In theory they can go wherever they want. Why is our area important to those guys? That is something in the future we can use to help protect them."

The sharks are typically observed near the continental shelf edge, around 100 miles out, making them expensive and difficult to observe, McKinney said.

Flyovers, the occasional tagging trip and citizen reports make up most of the data collection currently. In June, researchers encountered about two-dozen whale sharks in the northern Gulf and tagged 10 with trackers, McKinney said.

But those devices only report for six months, giving researchers only a small look at their movements, she said.

Research is also aided by citizen scientists. The University of Southern Mississippi hosts a survey accumulating reports of whale shark sightings. Hoffmayer said more than 600 reports have been received since the program began.

"It is very expensive to go offshore. We do not make that many trips. Everything that we have done is heavily influenced by the public's data they provide," Hoffmayer said.

Citizens efforts can be particularly insightful. A unique spot pattern on each whale shark serves a permanent identifier that is easily photographed, McKinney said.

"That is a natural tag that will last for the entire lifespan of the shark. So no matter where that shark goes worldwide that tag will persist. We will be able to see the connection between other areas," she said.

FRIEND FLIES OFF

Marathon Wild Bird Center volunteer Hunter McKee of Indialantic, near Melbourne, releases a recuperated brown pelican at Crane Point Hammock. McKee volunteered more than 30 hours over the summer to meet a school requirement. On his first day, he helped during surgery as Dr. Geraldine Diethelm of the Marathon Veterinary Hospital removed two treble hooks, a third fishhook, wire leader and monofilament fishing line that were embedded in the bird's stomach.
