Contract amended

ISAAC BABCOCK
OBSERVER STAFF

A volley of amendments to a SunRail funding contract has put the ball in Orange County’s court after a Monday meeting where the Winter Park City Commission voted to change its agreement for how and when it will pay into the commuter rail system. Now the city is waiting to see how the county will react.

But there was no consensus from the Commission on what parts of a deal between Winter Park and Orange County would need to be changed, ranging from whether the city should pay for funding beyond seven years and whether the city should be open to what some commissioners called a higher-than-proportionate level of liability for the city if there were to be an accident along the rail lines.

Winter Park Chamber of Commerce President Patrick Chapin said he thinks the Commission went too far in requesting some changes to the contract, despite optimism he felt after hearing suggestions by Commissioners Phil Ander-

Ditch dog-centered events?

Parks Commission proposes to move Doggie Art Festival, others off Park Avenue

JENNY ANDREASSON
OBSERVER STAFF

A Winter Park city board wants dog-centered events, such as the Pet Costume Contest and the Annual Spring Doggie Art Festival, moved off Park Avenue. The organizer of these events is fighting back, saying that it’s time for the city to embrace its canine culture.

The Parks and Recreation Commission on Wednesday was scheduled to discuss sending a letter to the City Commission asking it to prohibit special events permits being issued for “animal-centered events” on Park Avenue or a street near Central Park.

The Parks and Recreation Board can take no action on the ordinance, city spokeswoman Clarissa Howard said. The board only makes recommendations to the City Commission, which can choose to consider the change, or decide not to do anything.

The city’s existing ordinance bans animals from being in Central Park. It also bans them from “any street, right of way, or sidewalk adjacent to Central Park that is closed to vehicular traffic during any special event.” The Parks and Recreation Commission said this ordinance is being violated because of events such as the Costume Contest and Art Festival, both organized by The Doggie Door.

“The Parks Board is upset with the parks director and said, ‘you’re not following your own ordinance; you’re carving out exceptions for one business owner,’” Parks and Recreation Commissioner Bonnie Jackson said.

Brian Wettstein, co-owner of The Doggie Door, said he feels his business is being unfairly targeted for something it does twice a year. He said the ordinance was designed for the Winter Park Sidewalk Art Festival and has never kept him from getting permits for his events, which raise money for charities.

“I’ve been doing this event for 11 years in the downtown,” Wettstein said, “and all of the sudden there’s selective enforcement of the ban ordinance that the city can’t enforce because dog culture in Winter Park makes every day a dog-centered event.”

Central Park is currently the only park that doesn’t allow dogs, and Jackson said it’s because there are field trips and picnics held there.

Although the Doggie Door events are not held in Central Park, some dogs and their owners wander into Central Park or cross the park to and from the event. Many people coming to the events from out of town don’t even know the park is closed to dogs, Jackson said.

“You can’t invite hundreds of dogs down to Park [Avenue] for a dog event and not expect people to go into Central Park,” Jackson said.

Wettstein said dogs do wander near and in Central Park but they are always cleaned up after. He also said his business can apply for a waiver from the pet ban for an event, just as some events secure waivers to allow alcohol in the park.

“The good news is it’s just a recommendation from the Board and the City Commission has a final say on it. There are lots of people pouring in their e-mails not supporting this ban,” he said.

The Parks Commission also wants to change the ordinance to make an exception for dogs in and at parades, and dogs at boat launches boarding boats, such as Dinky Dock.

son and Tom McMacken.

“Orange County will turn this down without a doubt,” Chapin said. “There were many people who walked out of that meeting frustrated. They wanted to see an agreement that the county could possibly say yes to.”

One of the more contentious elements of the amendment — that the city be able to opt out of the contract on a yearly basis if it deemed necessary — drew the most fire from detractors in the Commission chambers.

“Frankly I think the city of Winter Park should reject any notion that says every year we should negotiate whether we’re going to pay for this or not,” Mayor Ken Bradley said.

But Commissioner Beth Dillaha railed against the idea of the city being on the hook to pay for a station and part of the system if dedicated funding for it were to disappear in the future.

“You cannot tell a future sitting commission that you have to pay for these things,” Dillaha said. “You can’t do it. It’s the law.”

Following the meeting Monday, she said that many of the supporters of the system and the current agreement were those who would benefit financially from SunRail, but not necessarily those who would pay for it.

“There were a lot more people speaking who would actually make money off commuter rail rather than riding it,” she said. “I represent the people who would pay for it and have to deal with it.”

Chapin said that even if Orange County rejects the amended agreement, the process will move forward. He said that ideas for compromise presented by Anderson and McMacken could help in the negotiation process if the county rejects Winter Park’s changes.

“We’re just going to start up a dialog when Orange County inevitably turns it down,” Chapin said. “This is just an intermission. I’d rather have an intermission than a curtain call.”

HELP PLAN MAITLAND'S NEW CITY HALL PUBLIC WORKSHOP SCHEDULED FOR JUNE 2

The City of Maitland invites all interested Maitland residents to participate in a public workshop at 6:00 p.m. on June 2nd, 2010 to discuss and provide design input for the new Maitland City Hall. The workshop will be held in the current City Hall Council Chambers located at 1776 Independence Lane.

The purpose of the workshop is to solicit ideas and input from the public as we work toward an optimum layout and design for the new City Hall and its relationship to the planned new Maitland Fire Station. Public input and ideas from the January workshop will be combined with architectural building design concepts that have been developed in the intervening period in order to establish a basis from which the project can move forward.

Two sports, one weekend of finales

Orangewood Christian School made it to the semifinals but fell to Westminster Christian

ISAAC BABCOCK
OBSERVER STAFF

Maitland's Orangewood Christian School took a playoff run all the way to the state semifinals before finally falling to Westminster Christian by a 13-5 score.

Much of that came on a devastating 9-run rally by Westminster that upended a 4-0 lead Orangewood had held through three innings.

That's when senior starter Luke Weber watched a no-hitter turn into a nightmare.

The defending state champion Westminster team took that explosive inning and turned it into an easy victory to secure a return trip to the state championship.

For the Orangewood Rams, who finish the season 22-8, an impressive playoff run is at an end.

Football

Winter Park was shocked by Freedom High School last Friday, as the Wildcats lost 14-7 in their spring football matchup.

Winter Park had finished last fall's football season 11-2 after taking a playoff run all the way to the regional championship game. Freedom, on the other hand, had won just three games on the way to a 3-7 overall record last fall.

Trinity Prep was trampled by The Villages on their own home field last Friday night, falling 31-7 in a spring football blowout.

Knights end season on high note

After a season of struggles against Conference USA teams, UCF beats Tulane in final weekend

ISAAC BABCOCK
OBSERVER STAFF

Chris Duffy ended his UCF career by blasting a grand slam into the late afternoon sky over New Orleans. And along the way, he helped the Knights (33-22, 10-14) to one of their most lopsided victories of the year.

The Knights trounced Tulane 17-6 in their final game of the regular season, ending on a high note after a year that had seen the Knights struggle against Conference USA opponents but still manage to post their best record yet.

A series victory over any C-USA team was hard to come by for the Knights this year. Taking two games of three from Tulane, the Knights pulled off only their second conference series win out of eight all season.

Duffy's bat helped a great deal in that cause, lending two UCF all-time records during his final season in a Knights' uniform. Duffy now holds the records for single-season home runs with 21, and career home runs with 43.

With the win, the Knights knocked Tulane out of playoff contention.

For the Knights, a tie for worst conference record didn't help their chances for a postseason run. Despite finishing the season with the second best overall record in the conference, the Knights will not be appearing in the conference tournament. Had they won two more conference games, they would have snagged a tie for third place in the C-USA.

Softball

Ashleigh Cole now owns the second best all-time record in nine pitching categories for UCF after finishing off her career at the NCAA regional championship in Gainesville Saturday night.

Unfortunately for the Knights (36-23, 16-7), their star pitcher's final outing came as Florida International University unloaded on them in a 7-0 rout to avenge an earlier loss in Gainesville and to end UCF's season.

Maitland City Talk BY DOUGLAS T. KINSON MAYOR

Quiet zone effort a success!

The passing of SunRail brings along with it many benefits to our community — increased property values, additional pedestrian-friendly development, increased shopping activity and much more. But to some, even though freight traffic will be reduced, there will be more frequent trips with SunRail trains. More frequent trips mean more noise to those who live within earshot of the passing trains.

to have a quiet zone, each intersection would need to be improved to make it safer for pedestrians and automobiles in the absence of a horn. Improvements that are necessary would include 'quad gates' which do not allow passage at all from either a pedestrian or automobile when a train is approaching.

What are the benefits of quiet zones?

Quiet zones, when implemented throughout a community, serve primarily to enhance the quality of life for each resident. Further, not all freight traffic will be eliminated with SunRail, but it will be more bearable, especially

What is a quiet zone?

A quiet zone is an area of a community that has a commuter rail station where the trains do not blow their horns. In order at night, if we don't have to deal with the constant blaring of their horns.

In addition to the obvious impact on our quality of life, quiet zones will all but eliminate vehicular accidents and deaths at improved quiet zone intersections. Fifty-five percent of accidents at intersections occur because of vehicles attempting to drive around the gates. Quad gates, which will have not two, but four interlocking arms, make it impossible for an automobile to drive around the gates, eliminating the risk of accident or death.

What is the cost and will the taxpayers have to pay?

The city of Maitland has nine intersections that would need to be improved in order to implement quiet zones in our community. Each intersection would cost about $400,000 in total, resulting in a total cost of $3.6 million. We, of course, do not have the capability in our city budget, which means that Maitland taxes will not be available, but because of the quality of life and safety benefits, there is a great deal of attention given to quiet zones at the national, state and local levels.

MAC Committee takes leadership role

Through my involvement as mayor in MetroPlan's Municipal Advisory Council (MAC), I have established a quiet zone subcommittee whose sole purpose is to do whatever possible to increase our chances of bringing quiet zones to communities throughout our area. Our committee is made up of representatives of cities throughout the tri-county area. Our hope is to find funding and have quiet zones implemented in major areas throughout Central Florida by the time SunRail is operational.

Recent quiet zone success!

The cities of Maitland and Winter Park have been pursuing quiet zones for many months. Recently, through the efforts of State Rep. Dean Cannon (R-Winter Park), the cities of Winter Park and DeLand have secured up to $3.5 million for the improvement of the intersections for quiet zones. The reason for these cities securing the funding is that they have less than 40,000 people and have an existing station.

What's next?

Central Florida needs to continue to keep quiet zones at the forefront of our state and national leaders. Winter Park's implementation of quiet zones does not mean as much if the surrounding communities such as Maitland and Orlando do not have a plan or funding in a similar manner.

This is why the efforts of groups such as the MAC subcommittee on quiet zones and the continued efforts of our cities and counties together are important. Let's all work together to make quiet zones a reality in our communities throughout Central Florida!

Landscape architect Bob Heath has planted roots in Winter Park that have transformed the city's landscape over the last three decades.

Man dedicates 30 years to growing Winter Park's landscape

CARMEN CARROQUINO
GUEST REPORTER

Kneeling in the fresh powdery soil with both hands gripping a sapling, Bob Heath is bringing color and life to his version of a blank canvas: an empty garden.

Thirty years ago, he sketched out a ring of bushes surrounding an oak tree in front of a white Colonial-style Winter Park home. Now standing atop a wide expanse of thick St. Augustine grass, he looks up at a vast canopy exploding into the sky 30 feet above him.

Heath has an eye for design. But the at-once muted and vibrant earth tones of this suburban Eden belie the complexity of their purpose. When Heath designs something, he has to think fourth-dimensionally. Time can be his friend or his enemy. His defense against disaster lies in the design.

His canvas is only blank for a moment. Beyond that, it evolves forever, as time turns saplings to treetops spiraling overhead, and tiny buds send tendrils of ivy crawling upward over the course of decades, turning a house's south wing into a mass of green.

These roots are Heath's foundation, sunk into the soil of a city he's called home for a working lifetime growing Winter Park's landscape.

Driving down the cobblestoned paved roads, past the antique charm of country-cottage homes and Spanish-style chalets, it's not a gamble to say that at one time or another, Heath had his hand in the landscape aesthetic of a few homes on most every street.

Given his great reputation, Rosemary Gillet, Winter Park resident, former client and longtime friend, said he isn't the type of man to put out a sign to promote his business or "toot his own horn."

She called him "a rare bird in this day and time" because of his quiet and reserved demeanor and way of doing business. "Some people are born with a sense of creating beauty — lasting beauty — and Bob Heath is one of them. He has that artistic eye that can't be learned."

That artistic eye and innate love of design stems back to Heath's youth, where he would help his grandmother tend to her garden. He said she was the one who encouraged and nurtured his love of horticulture.

Remembering times of mowing her lawn and watching her as she delicately pruned and purposefully placed her flowers, Heath said when it came time to decide what he wanted to do, he never looked further than his own yard.

Heath studied landscape architecture at the University of Florida and graduated in 1971, which combined his passion for architectural design and respect for living things.

"I graduated on Saturday and went to work on a Monday," he said.

He went to work with Burt Foster, whom Heath said was considered to be the first landscape architect in the area. Heath worked on mostly residential projects in the area with Foster's company called Foster Co-

Coaching students for college

A local assistance program takes the stress out of searching and enrolling for higher education

KRISTY VICKERY
GUEST REPORTER

As high school graduation grows near so do the stress levels in 18-year-old graduating senior Christine Prevel's home, as she prepares for the long-awaited college admission process.

"The college process was all very overwhelming," Prevel said. "It just seemed like my school just threw me out to an open sea of colleges, and I just had to find one that worked for me."

But with the help of Melissa Bishop, an expert college coach, Prevel was able to get the direction and guidance she needed during this stressful and confusing time.

As an expert college coach, Bishop offers a variety of assistive programs designed to troubleshoot and streamline the various aspects of the college application process, as well as a comprehensive coaching plan that guides each student from the beginning of the school year to college acceptance, beginning as early as seventh grade.

Prevel said that with the help of Bishop, she was done with the whole college admission process in just three months, and by November of her senior year she was at ease.

"Being done with everything by November was such a load off my back," Prevel said. "All my friends were still stressing like crazy when it came time for winter break, their Christmas holiday was basically spent writing essays, whereas I just got to relax."

Bishop's services are offered as either private in-home coaching or small group workshops that will be held July through August. She also offers online virtual counseling options.

"In addition to being an educator, I really want to help students with this difficult transition," Bishop said. "The whole focus is getting the college application from the beginning to the end finished within the scope of the program. I want to give students the strategy to get them where they want to go."

She also said she hopes that her services will help make Florida students just as qualified as students in the Northeast applying for admissions to Ivy League colleges across the nation.

"I know that Florida students really tend to be underrepresented in top-tier schools, and in the Northeast and on the West Coast there are people who do this kind of college coaching ... and so our students who are applying at places like this are up against many, many applicants who have had the strategic advantage of a college coach," Bishop said.

Perry Norflus, education program liaison for College Application Preparation Strategies (CAPS), starting working with Bishop after he realized they shared the same passion — to help Florida students have the same opportunities as kids in the Northeast.

"It's not fair that the kids in our state are being rejected... and are overlooked (from colleges), simply because the guidance counselors are overwhelmed," Norflus said. "It's not that these kids don't have the skills, they have the skills, but there's no one to give them the added edge that these kids in the Northeast are getting."

As Prevel gets ready to move to her newly found home at Wellesley College in Massachusetts, she hopes she can continue to represent Florida as an outstanding student in the vast ocean of students all competing for one thing — a good education.

"Students from Florida are just as capable, talented and special as anywhere else in the country," Bishop said. "But I think Florida's getting ignored, and Florida students should be on the playing field; I think they have a lot to offer."

LANDSCAPER | Heath often ends up working with more than just the landscape

nant and Associates, until Foster's health declined and he retired.

Since then, Heath has been working for himself. He started his own business in the early 90s, Garden Arts Design, where he continues his passion of transforming the landscape of residential homes in Winter Park.

Barbaranelle McClanahan, client and friend of Heath for over 30 years, said Heath is very important to her and necessary in her life.

"Are you kidding me?" she said. "I can't make a decision without him. He has marvelous ideas, and the fact that I couldn't do anything without him for 30 years should speak for itself."

Making each home unique, but at the same time fit right in with its next door neighbor, Heath has worked for the past 39 years to maintain what Winter Park is: quaint, refined and traditional — just like him.

Taking into account their wishes and the landscape as it is, he adds his own sense of practicality to the mix.

"The fact is that you're taking basically nothing and creating a setting that is beautiful, functional and useful to the owner," he said.

"I mean it all goes back to basic design principle. It's sort of like making a cake. You start out with the main ingredients. Flour is not that pretty to look at, but when you add the frosting, it turns into a beautiful creation."

In the McClanahan's case, Heath has been involved with several home renovations, designing not only the logistics of the plant material, but the patio and lighting, as well as multiple home expansion projects over the years.

"I often get involved with more than just the landscape," he said. "I'll do what I can to make a workable space in order to satisfy the client's wishes and needs. It's about keeping it functional to maintain and putting it all together to look at the final product as a whole."

Hesitant to work with exotic and tropical plants though, Heath said he prefers working with hardy plants that can withstand the elements and changing seasons.

"The palette of plant material that I use is classical in nature and well-proven to stand the test of time," he said. "It's the way I combine them that matches the traditional classicism of Winter Park."

Standing next to that tree he first planted more than 30 years ago in the McClanahan's yard, Heath is small in comparison. But the impact of his work stands tall.

Bringing big easy to O-Town

Preservation Hall Jazz Band
Long before they were tapped as “ambassadors” of the re-birth of New Orleans after the hurricane, the jazzmen who make up Preservation Hall Jazz Band traveled the world spreading the art form of New Orleans Jazz. From legendary performances at Carnegie Hall, for British Royalty or the King of Thailand, their music embodies all that is joyful and timeless about the spirit of that great city. Named for Preservation Hall, their home in the heart of New Orleans’ French Quarter, which to this day has no air conditioning or other accoutrements to welcome its guests. What it does have is one of the last pure music experiences left on Earth. This one-night-only performance will take place on June 1 at 8 p.m. at our own legendary Plaza Theatre at 425 N. Bumby Ave. in downtown Orlando. Call 407-228-1220 or visit theplazatheatre.com for more information.

Mad Cow to ‘rock the cradle’
“The Cradle Will Rock”, a musical created during the Great Depression, is an extraordinary chapter in the history of American theater. Originally directed by Orson Welles, the production was shut down due to “budget cuts” within the government-sponsored Federal Theatre Project. It was widely believed, however, that it was closed because of accusations that it was pro-communist. In the spirit of the freedom of expression, Welles, producer John Houseman and author Mark Blitzstein rented a larger theater and sang, played and read the entire musical to an audience of people invited off the street to attend for free. Welles encouraged cast members to say their lines from the audience, thus exercising their right of free speech. The revolutionary musical was the first American musical written from a working-class perspective. This production of “The Cradle Will Rock” is directed by Mad Cow Theatre Artistic Director Alan Bruun with musical direction by Robin Jensen. Appropriately, the musical will run through July 4 at Mad Cow Theatre, 105 S. Magnolia Ave. in downtown Orlando. For more details, call 407-297-8788 or visit madcowtheatre.com.

Iconic sights of old Orlando

The Orange County Regional History Center in Downtown Orlando is offering its summer visitors a “tour of familiar sights around the city” in an exhibit called “Orlando Landmarks: Photo Transfers by Barbara Ery”. On display through Aug. 8, fine art photographer Barbara Ery’s collection of photos highlights landmark buildings including the Plaza Theatre and the Kress Building, and iconic signs at Johnson’s Diner, McNamara Pontiac, and the Merita Bread bakery. Ery crafts original photo transfers using the Polaroid Transfer Process and develops the images on watercolor paper. For this exhibit, she produced the one-of-a-kind photo transfers of familiar Orlando landmarks to create a nostalgic effect reminiscent of browsing through an heirloom photo album. The Orange County Regional History Center is housed in the magnificently restored 1927 courthouse at 65 E. Central Blvd. in downtown Orlando. Call 407-836-8500 or visit www.thehistorycenter.org for more information.

Polasek Museum presents a 2-for-1
The oh-so-beautiful and always inventive Polasek Museum is running a pair of exhibits through June 30.

The first — “An Attraction to Abstraction: The Fluid Life of Bruce Gregory” presents a series of 1950s paintings by American artist Bruce Gregory. Gregory “liberated colors into broad areas, achieving dimensional contrasts of shape, color and form.” Gregory (1917-2002) is best known as the artist who painted Fernand Léger’s two abstract murals in the General Assembly Hall of the United Nations.

The second exhibit takes a look at the final years of 667 Osceola Ave., the tract of land adjacent to the museum’s eastern property line. Since 1873, the site has been owned by several of Winter Park’s ‘historical residents,’ only to become known as the ‘hippie house.’ “The Hippy House Revisited” shows paintings and photographs from the final years of the house, prior to the lot being purchased by the Museum in 2000. The Albin Polasek Museum and Sculpture Gardens is located at 633 Osceola Ave. in Winter Park. Call 407-647-6294 or visit www.polasek.org for more details.

I want to be a trophy wife!

I've been thinking of really great jobs I might want to someday give a try. And I just know this isn't going to be politically correct and all, but I think being a trophy wife would be simply swell. Peachy keen!

Before America got all snooty about equality and things a girl — OK, a woman — could or should not do, being a trophy wife was it! I look at "Vogue Magazine" and "Architectural Digest" and "Town & Country" and I wonder what do these women do to earn the baubles on their fingers or the third house in Costa Rica? And then shazam, it dawns on me, ta da!, trophy wife perks!! I want'um!

For years, one of my favorite things to spot on Winter Park's Park Avenue was the guy, oh, about 60 years old, pushing a pram that's holding a screaming snot-nosed, 1-year-old. Maybe he's clutching the hand of a tugging 2-year-old while his princess window-shops. I juuuuuust love it. He's got that proverbial deer-in-the-headlights look, and the misses, all decked out in heels, a short skirt, skimpy, frilly La Perla undies (you just know they are), with a rock the size of Rhode Island, is carrying bags. She's had the requisite "boob" job, maybe a chin implant and now she's oooooo-la-la purrfect. Uh, Daddy, pay the clerk. Now!

What better way to have it all than to have someone else pay for it. If, at the end of the day, you travel extensively, wear exquisite clothes, drink Dom Perignon Rose by the magnum, have a housekeeper, nanny and a boy toy of a personal trainer and, well, Daddy, pay the clerk. Now!

Let's ratchet this up a bit. Let's say you are Vogue-model beautiful. Long, forever long, lean legs. Long, lean abs. A New England pedigree.

A face that would, indeed, launch a thousand ships. A sultriness with a surly indifferent attitude. A blase ennui mixed with a first-rate intellectual curiosity. "I've seen it all, dahlin'." Throw in a four-year Yale degree in 19th century French literature and a stint at that Frick (or Morgan) in the backroom organizing esoteric shows on the coins of the Hapsburgs. Perhaps, an MA from the London School of Economics and a year or two at the World Bank doing pilot programs in Kenya, teaching women capitalism.

You're on the slopes of Aspen wondering what to do with the rest of your life. You're almost 30 for god's sake! And that incessant bell in your uterus won't quit clanging and up slides (on Dynastars no less) a graying, laughing bon vivant who has the raucous look of insatiable randy fun (and the money to pay for it). He just reeks of wealth. What's a goil to do?

And the next morning, after an exhausting night of nonstop athletic, mindboggling, I'm-in-heaven sex, you fly off for Bali in his private Bombardier Learjet 85.

He's sold his business for $600 million, unloaded his "troublesome" old-model wife two years earlier (and the offending bim-bette) and now wants a second chance at getting life right.

What's a girl to think?
Uh, Daddy, pay the clerk. Now!

Play On!

Sublime rhymetime

There's none alive can goad my spleen

Like people who repeat, "I mean."

I hope they'll all take like a hike,
Who don't know their "as" from a "like."

I wouldn't give the thinnest dime
For all who say "this point in time."

The Bible says that we shall reap
just as we sow,
But you'll not reap at all with me if you repeat "you know?"

My nerves get fidgetal

With too much "digital."

When I am king I'll have an exile isle for every minion

Who says that ev'ry person has a right to "their" opinion.

May Satan damn to everlasting tedia

Those miscreants who speak about "a media."

With brio would I like to dangle
ropefully

Those wantons who misuse the adverb "hopefully."

I'd rather say "goodbye" to a sublime dame

Than get myself entangled in her
"time frame."

With clods who add to nouns a
"wise,"

I'll never, ever socialize.

I do not wish to chew the fat
With those who don't know

"Where it's at."

I'm quite aloof and getting deaf
To those who ask me "What's your beef?"

T'wer my delight to set a poison menu on

The table of an oaf who says "continue on."

I do not give two dammeters
For things within "parameters."

I'd sooner hear a dolt who's curt yak,

Than listen to an egg-head say "revert back."

May hell's worst devils pick a mate

For tongue-tied folks who "indicate."

I steadfastly refuse to sup

With those who add to verbs an
"up."

I'll ruthlessly impeach
A kid who calls me, "Teach."

A mind works hazically
That dotes on "basically."

I'd not accept a lease signed
By agents saying, "these kind."

Your brain's begun to putrefy
If you can say "For you and I."

I'd never ever seek out
A lady who could "freak out."

A knee-jerk "yes!" and fie to you
Who ask me, "Would I lie to you?"

I'd rather pay a heavy fine
Than have to scan your "bottom line."

Let amputating scalpels rend a Tongue that speaks of "an" agenda.

With those who say "prioritize"
I shan't consort in any wise.

I'd trade my oxygen for argon
Just to dodge the latest jargon.

I'd rather have a bull to fight
Than suffer fools whose words are trite.

She cools my blood close to her lace

Who tells me we should "interface."

Chérie, please tell me — bring me joie —

If I stroke you, is that "patois?"
I'd turn down sexy Margo(t)

If she spoke only argo(t).
I'd sooner hear invective

Than thoughts on "cost-effective."
I warn you I'm going to be miffed

If you say that I'll get a "free" gift.
To ladies fat,

Here's where it's at:
What's linear,

Is skinnier,
But anorexia's

Not sexiea.
A guy that I once knew in college — Was short on charm, long on knowledge.

Fifty years later in life's weary game

— His knowledge was gone, his charm, the same.

I'd rather get choked on a macademia...

Than sit through a meeting of academia.

Letters to the Editor

Let dogs stay on Park

On Wednesday, May 26 at 5 p.m., the Parks and Recreation Department were scheduled to decide whether or not to recommend changing a city code to include prohibiting dog-centered events in the downtown. Parks and Recreation Commissioner Bonnie Jackson is leading this charge and to achieve this, has chosen to manipulate a current code designed to keep dogs out of the Winter Park Sidewalk Art Festival.

The Doggie Door has hosted popular and well-attended dog-related events in downtown Winter Park for nearly 11 years. These events are fundraisers for local non-profit adoption organizations and other local groups such as Friends of Fleet Peoples Park. Her actions clearly demonstrate discrimination and unfairly targeting a small business in the downtown for some unknown reason, gain or demise.

Jackson has chosen to exempt other events such as the seasonal parades with dog units and the pet-friendly Farmer's Market. All clearly violate the current and proposed ordinance, but somehow are exempt in her view. It is also problematic to enforce the code and prohibit or discourage dog-centered events when the city of Winter Park has set a 10-year precedent of seven city departments approving these kinds of events.

Above all else, the dog culture in Winter Park makes every day a dog-centered event in the downtown — in and around Central Park.

Residents walk their dogs in and around this area from sunrise to sunset. You can bring your dogs into most of the shops in the downtown and all the cafes have outside seating and permit dogs. The whole city is in constant violation of these unenforceable codes.

Targeting one small business that does so much good for the business community for selective enforcement of an unenforceable code is discrimination!

It is time for Ms. Jackson to stop creating divisiveness while pushing her personal agenda. This is what children on the playground do to one another. Ms. Jackson needs to learn to work with others to forge positive solutions for everyone in the community she has been appointed to serve, or step down and let someone else take her place.

Art, history good pairing

When art met history, it wasn't love at first sight. But exactly a year later, the Maitland Art Association and the Maitland Historical Society have made their union official.

Now they are a force to be reckoned with in the Central Florida cultural arena, with a combined budget of almost $1 million. While two wallets are better than one, the leaders of these organizations insist that they didn't marry for the money.

After a year of talks between the boards, facilitated by another Maitland organization, the United Arts of Central Florida, leaders concluded that the nonprofits want the same thing — to stimulate thought, spark the imagination, enrich the spirit and foster appreciation in art, historical studies and preservation. So why not achieve it together?

The new organization is the Maitland Art and History Association. Last week, they named Andrea Cox to run the show as executive director. Cox, the director of the Historical Society, has also worked for the Art Center, so she's ready to hit the ground running.

Just by entertaining a merger, the two organizations have shown that they are ready to do what it takes to preserve art and history in Maitland, as the city — their majority funding source — struggles with a continued decline in property tax revenue. Both the Art Center and Historical Society have seen a decrease in city funding over the last two years. Last year, they took a 5 percent hit. As a stronger organization, they hope to get grants that they could only dream of before the merge.

According to the Community Foundation of Central Florida, there are 17 Central Florida organizations in merger talks. Most of them are social service firms. But there's also a group in Orange County that is splitting off from another because their missions are no longer the same.

"If missions are so in alignment that a merger makes sense, than that's great," United Arts President Margot Knight said. "You can't force mergers on people. Nonprofits are lucky because boards volunteer to do it; there are no hostile takeovers."

The Art and History Association is setting a great example that will hopefully encourage other entities to look at the possibility of partnerships or full-out mergers to ensure survival in these tough times.

Knight said there's been a huge uptick in the number of nonprofits in the area, and that some seem to be better suited for programs, not full-fledged organizations. If a smaller entity partners with an established nonprofit, there's more support for the entity's programs and less money tied up in administrative costs.

"I watched a hospital in Raleigh pull in 13 organizations that had anything to do with breast cancer and urged them all to talk to each other," Knight said. "The hospital didn't want to fund all 13."

"The goal is to overlap and not duplicate."

And as Art and History Association Chairman Victor Diaz so eloquently put it, "In Maitland, art is history and history is art, and you just can't separate the two."

LETTERS | Cannon should revert back to original stance on oil drilling

Time to fire a Cannon

In listening to Rep. Dean Cannon's woefully tardy, highly evasive response to the oil drilling mess he has championed, I'm reminded of the scene in Billy Wilder's 1959 classic movie titled "Some Like It Hot."

In the lobby of the fictional Seminole Ritz Hotel in Florida, a Chicago gangster submits to a police frisking. When a revolver drops out of the hood's left pant leg, he exclaims, "It ain't loaded." Seconds later, the right pant leg reveals dozens of bullets that scatter all over the floor. It's hilarious on the screen, but decidedly less so in Florida politics.

I can almost hear Rep. Cannon's impassioned assertion that he used to oppose Florida coastal oil drilling, but changed his stance due to recent safety advances that would prevent oil spills. For the sake of analysis, let's give Rep. Cannon the benefit of the doubt on this and take him at his word.

Logically speaking, Rep. Cannon's oil drilling stance should have reverted back to his original position the minute he saw the catastrophic Deepwater Horizon oil spill drama unfold on CNN. Rather than admit the obvious, he stonewalled for days. Finally, press reports indicated that Rep. Cannon would revisit the oil drilling issue this summer after the oil spill cause had been determined. Shortly thereafter, the Observer quoted Rep. Dean Cannon saying "I don't see anything happening for the next two or three years." Wrong answer.

It should have been intuitively obvious to Rep. Cannon that Florida's hurricane-prone waters posed an oil-drilling safety threat that couldn't be fixed. No oil rig could withstand a Hurricane Andrew. Period. But, the special interests didn't pay him to think that way.

—Will Graves
 Founder, Friends of Florida's Coasts

Think about oil this Memorial Day Memorial Day is the day when we honor the sacrifices of servicemen and women, and it also marks the beginning of summer, when many Americans take to the roads for travel and vacations. This Memorial Day, we should strive to understand the connection between national security and our over-reliance on oil for much of our transportation needs.

We are seeing one of the most devastating consequences of this oil addiction in the Gulf of Mexico as the BP disaster worsens every day.

If we remain dependent on oil, it leaves us open to spills that destroy our local economies and environment. Improving fuel economy standards for all vehicles, electrifying vehicles of all types, investing in rail for freight and commuting, creating livable communities where transit, walking and biking are important — these are all real and oil-free choices.

The BP Gulf oil leak only reinforces and makes realize how important change is now, and that we must make alternative energy options available and easy to access without delay. The future is another oil spill, and more loss of land and wildlife. We can't afford to wait!

Thank you.
