Clinic awaiting inspectors

Kings Bay branch,
NH Jax on 3-year
TJC assessment

By Yan Kennon
Naval Hospital Jacksonville Senior Writer

Naval Hospital Jacksonville — its hospital and five branch health clinics — will undergo a Bureau of Medicine and Surgery Medical Inspector General inspection Jan. 24 to 30 and

The Joint Commission inspection Jan. 27 to 30 to assess its quality of health care and efficiency of administrative procedures.

The scheduled inspections, which are consistently passed every three years by the hospital and branch health clinics, were last completed in 2011.

TJC conducts periodic surveys of hospitals nationwide to evaluate the organization's compliance with nationally established Joint Commission standards.

The standards deal with organization quality, safety of care issues and the safety of the environment in which care is provided.

The MEDIG inspection is designed to assess the efficiency, effectiveness, readiness and capabilities of the hospital and branch health clinics in accordance with Bureau of Medicine and Surgery guidelines.

Surveys will be used to evaluate NH Jacksonville during these inspections. Valuable feedback, through a brief Web-based beneficiary survey, will allow NH Jacksonville to better serve customer and patient needs, and identify potential concerns.

Available through Friday, Jan. 24, the survey can be accessed at <https://apps.mhx.x.gov/survey/index.php?sid=69926&lang=en>, and only takes a few minutes.

No personal identifiers are included in this survey and all responses will remain anonymous. Patient input is valuable.

This survey is open to any NH Jacksonville patients whether care is received at the hospital or a branch health clinic.

If individuals have concerns about patient care and/or safety at NH Jacksonville, contact Patient Relations at nhjaxx-customerser-

Athlete, Captain's Cup to be awarded

Winners named
at Kings Bay sports
luncheon Feb. 12

By Bill Wesselhoff
The Periscope

The Military Male and Female Athletes of the Year, plus the Captain's Cup winner for Naval Submarine Base Kings Bay will be announced Feb. 12.

Eleven men and three women are vying for the individual honors.

"This is a great event to recognize some of the military personnel for their achievements on the field and off as well, for everything they do for their community and their command," said Tyler Cole, Kings Bay Morale, Welfare and Recreation sports director.

The finalists and winners will be introduced during a 4 p.m. dinner at Magnolia's.

Nominees for male athlete of the year and their commands are:

- MT1 Jason Baker, Trident Training Facility instructor
- LS1 Ian Clendening, Trident Refit Facility
- MM2 Jimmy Gee, TRF
- MASN Jonathan Gonzales, Marine Corps Security Force Battalion/Strategic Weapons Facility Atlantic
- EM1 Cody Guidry, Port Ops
- Lt. Seth Hooper, USS Florida (SSGN 728) weapons officer
- ET2 Eric Johnson, USCG Maritime Force Protection Unit
- MA2 Gerardo Oliver-Baez, Kings Bay Security Detachment, military police
- MM1 Anthony Prince, TRF
- MM2 Brian Tolbert, TRF ordnance handler
- MA1 Christopher Tyner, SUBSECDDET security LPO

The female nominees are:

- HS1 Amber Barrick, USCG Maritime Safety and Security Team emergency medical
- Lt. Laura Byrd, Kings Bay Chapel chaplain
- Army Capt. Lauren Seal, Public Health Command District veterinarian

Vying for the Kings Bay Captains Cup are the Marine Corps Security Force Battalion, Trident Training Facility and Trident Refit Facility.

The award recognizes one command for overall athletic excellence.

"This is our second year for the Athlete of the Year program," Cole said. "It started a while back, but didn't continue until [Command Master] Chief [Randy] Huckaba got it started again."

Navy remembers Rear Adm. Coleman

Honors rendered during funeral in Jacksonville

By MC1 Greg Johnson,
Navy Region Southeast Public Affairs

Sailors, family and friends gathered for a memorial service at Hardage-Giddens Funeral Home Jan. 19 to honor retired Rear Adm. Joseph "Joe" Lustrat Coleman, 91, who passed away at St. Vincent's Medical Center Jan. 14.

About 150 people attended the ceremony, including family members, former shipmates and Jacksonville community leaders.

"Admiral Coleman really set the standard when it comes to dedication to serving both your country and your community," said

Rear Adm. Rick Williamson, Commander, Navy Region Southeast. "His commitment to our Navy was nothing short of heroic, having spent a combat tour in World War II and three more in Vietnam. After his military career, he went on to have a tremendous impact here in the Jacksonville community. He will be missed not only by his family, but by everyone who knew him."

Coleman was born Sept. 10, 1922 in Atlanta.

He entered the Naval Aviation Cadet program in 1942 and earned his wings of gold and commission as an Ensign in 1943.

Throughout his naval career, Coleman logged 3,200 flight hours and performed 550 fixed-wing landings at sea.

In combat, he served aboard USS Swannee

(CVE 27) during World War II and served as commanding officer of USS Misplillion (AC 105) and USS Ranger (CVA 61) during the Vietnam War. Coleman retired in 1995 after 32 years of service.

In civilian life, Coleman was an active member of the Jacksonville community. He served as chairman of the Jacksonville Electric Authority and board member of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce, the Navy League of Jacksonville and Commodore's League of Jacksonville.

Additionally, he was a founder and former president of the Fleet Landing Retirement Community and a national trustee of the Association of Naval Aviation.

TRICARE changes procedures

TRICARE military health plan service centers will end administrative walk-in services at Naval Branch Health Clinic Kings Bay April 1. Beneficiaries can accomplish any administrative task online or by phone. The change will not affect any TRICARE medical benefit or health care service. What it will do is allow global savings throughout the Department of Defense because all TRICARE service centers are closing in all three branches. About half of the visits to the centers are for in- and out-processing and requests to change primary care providers. The rest involve billing-related questions. This type of customer service can be handled more efficiently by phone or online. TRICARE Web site has run tests to ensure the site and call center can handle the expected increase in volume. Beneficiaries can get more information and sign up for updates at www.tricare.mil/tsc.

Academy offers Summer Seminars

By Lt. Teng K. Ooi, PhD, and Capt. Linda J. Beltra MD
Naval Academy and USN Medical Corps

The United States Naval Academy's 2014 Summer Seminar Program invites a select group of young men and women to attend the Naval Academy Summer Seminar.

This fast-paced, six-day experience is designed to introduce the Naval Academy to rising high school seniors.

At the core of the NASS is the academic program involving 90-minute workshops designed to promote problem-solving skills using critical thinking, optimization, innovation, creativity, and team work.

Students choose eight workshops from a range of subjects to include:

- Information Technology
- Naval Architecture
- Mechanical Engineering
- Ocean Engineering
- Aerospace Flight Testing
- Systems Engineering

Naval Academy

- Microcomputer Design
- Ethics and Character Development
- Oceanography
- Mathematics
- History, Meteorology
- Literature
- Chemistry
- Political Science
- Language Studies
- Martial Arts
- Economics

Students participate in project-based modules applying hands-on, real-world approaches to solving design and analysis problems utilizing the Naval Academy's world-class laboratory facilities. These facilities provide a unique learning environment outside the traditional classroom.

The NASS teaches prospective applicants about the life of midshipmen at the Naval Academy, where academics, athletics, and professional training are key elements in developing our nation's leaders. Students live in the dormitory, eat in the dining hall and participate in academic and leadership workshops.

They also participate in daily physical training including group runs and conditioning exercises. Seamanship and navigation classes culminate in a cruise aboard a Navy Yard Patrol Craft.

The Summer Seminar Program helps educate, motivate and prepare selected students who are considering application for appointment to the Naval Academy.

If you think that you may be interested in pursuing an appointment to the Naval Academy and serving your country as an officer, you should seriously consider attending the Naval Academy's 2014 Summer Seminar.

Application are at www.usna.edu/admissions/nass.

Session dates include May 31 to June 5, June 7 to 12 and June 14 to 19.

DOD: Prepare now for tax season

By Terri Moon Cronk
American Forces Press Service

Tax season is approaching and service members should begin gathering documentation to file their 2013 taxes.

In an interview with American Forces Press Service and the Pentagon Channel, Barbara Thompson, the director of the Pentagon's office of family policy and children and youth, suggested visiting the Military OneSource Web site for tax filing resources, and to learn what will be necessary to file, such as W2 forms, Social Security numbers and receipts for deductions such as child care, education, medical expenses and donations, among other write-offs.

And tax preparers at Military OneSource will do short-form tax filing free of charge for service members and their families, Thompson said.

Relocations and deployments have tax implications, Thompson noted.

For example, deployed service members can receive an extension to file taxes after the normal April 15 filing date, she said.

"It's very helpful to have someone who is experienced to help you through the cumbersome issue of taxes and tax returns," she added.

The tax preparers at Military OneSource are up to date on changes in tax laws, and can answer military-specific questions, Thompson said.

Installations also offer volunteer income tax assistance to service members and their families, while certain banks and credit unions provide education and training on tax preparation, Thompson said.

She advised that service members organize their taxes by starting a file beginning each Jan. 1 for the following year's tax papers, such as receipts and other write-offs.

"You don't want to wait until the last minute," she said.

Service members and families who prepare long-form taxes with deductions such as mortgages and rental properties might want to consider hiring a tax expert to file for them, Thompson said.

Relocations and deployments have tax implications, Thompson noted.

For example, deployed service members can receive an extension to file taxes after the normal April 15 filing date, she said.

"It's very helpful to have someone who is experienced to help you through the cumbersome issue of taxes and tax returns," she added.

States' tax laws often vary, too, she said, and because of relocations, some service members have to file local taxes in more than one state.

"That's where [tax consultants] can really be of great value to make sure you know what the requirements are for states," Thompson said.

Filing federal and state tax returns usually results in either a tax refund or money owed back to the government. Expecting to receive a tax refund, but instead finding out that money is owed can be a shock, Thompson said.

Looking at W2s to determine how much money in taxes is being withheld is a good indicator of whether or not one will owe money, she suggested.

Service members who receive a tax refund face important decisions on what to do with the money, Thompson said.

"Do you use it to buy down debt, or put it in a savings account?" she asked, advising people to not blow their tax refunds in a spending frenzy of u

A tax refund also can be deposited into a retirement savings account, she added.

"It's important to think about what you're going to do with that money," she advised, "and how you can best utilize it for your financial well-being."

Meeting with a financial planner to learn the "lay of the land," and what tax deductions might apply to a service member's finances is a good idea, Thompson said.

"It's really important to be savvy about that," she added.

Nominations for awards sought

By MC1 Elliott Fabrizio
For Chief of Naval Personnel Public Affairs

Naval Academy

The deadline to submit nominations for the 2013 Spirit of Hope Award is March 14.

The Spirit of Hope Award is presented to individuals or organizations that embody the core values of Bob Hope: Duty, honor, courage, loyalty, commitment, integrity and selfless dedication.

This award is open to active duty and Reserve Sailors, veterans and civilian Navy employees or an organization.

Members of the civilian community or non-governmental organizations voluntarily supporting Sailors and embodying the Navy's core values are also eligible.

Nominations should describe extraordinary achievements and contributions above and beyond normal duties during 2013.

Commands can send nomination packages to the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations (Manpower, Personnel, Training and Education, N1).

Since 2005, the Navy has nominated one outstanding individual or support organization to receive the distinguished Spirit of Hope Award, inspired by Hope who gave generously to military men and women for five decades.

The recipient for 2012 was Laura Baxter, the publisher and general manager of Flagship Inc. and Military Newspapers of Virginia.

For six years, Baxter was instrumental in the production of five military community events and volunteered her time to support the quality of life of military members and their families.

Fisher Humanitarian Award

The deadline to submit nominations for the 2013 Annual Zachary and Elizabeth Fisher Distinguished Civilian Humanitarian Award is March 14.

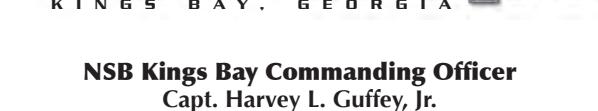

This award honors and recognizes a private-sector individual or organization that demonstrated exceptional patriotism and humanitarian concerns for members of the United States Armed Forces or their families.

Commands are can send nomination packages to the chief of naval personnel's 21st Century Sailor Office.

The Navy will select one nominee to compete with the nominees from each of the other services for the award.

The winner will receive the award and be honored in a ceremony during the fall, at the Pentagon.

In 1996, the award was established by the military departments in honor of Zachary and Elizabeth Fisher, who contributed extensively to the support and welfare of members of the armed forces.

no changes to the current retirement system and no cuts planned to base pay.

"It is a relief to have somebody of this authority take the time out to visit us directly," Yeoman 2nd Class Bryan Williams said. "It was a relief to hear from Adm. Moran about the upcoming budget. I was a little confused about what would happen to my BAH, and he really set the rumors straight."

Moran emphasized improvements in fleet manning, which lead to improved predictability in Sailors' deployment schedules.

"The Navy had about 12,000 gaps out at sea two years ago," he said. "We are at about half that today and we continue to make progress on getting the right Sailor into the right billet at the right time."

Moran used the end of his All Hands Call to let Sailors ask questions and encouraged their feedback and suggestions on all Navy issues. A hot topic for the audience was uniform updates.

"When you are out at sea, you will be in flame-resistant uniforms. You will not be in NWUs," Moran said. "Later this spring we are going to be testing a light-weight version of the NWUs, similar to the type three uniforms."

"Overall, the new improvements to the uniforms are looking optimistic," Master-at-Arms 3rd class Cortney Bates said. "I am excited to see how they turn out, and improve our comfort and safety in the work place."

Moran added that they are also working on changes to the E6 and below service dress blue uniform for both male and female Sailors.

The prototypes for the female uniforms will go through a thorough fit evaluation with those results determining the fleet introduction date.

The redesigned male uniform is scheduled to be available to Sailors at the same time as the female versions.

One of Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel's first acts upon taking office was to call the Bergdahl family about the situation.

Papp pays War College visit

From Naval War College Public Affairs

The commandant of the Coast Guard addressed staff, students and faculty of Naval War College in Newport, R.I., during a visit Jan. 9.

Adm. Robert J. Papp, a 1990 NWC graduate, received the NWC's Distinguished Graduate Leadership Award in 2010, the same year he received appointment as Commandant of the Coast Guard.

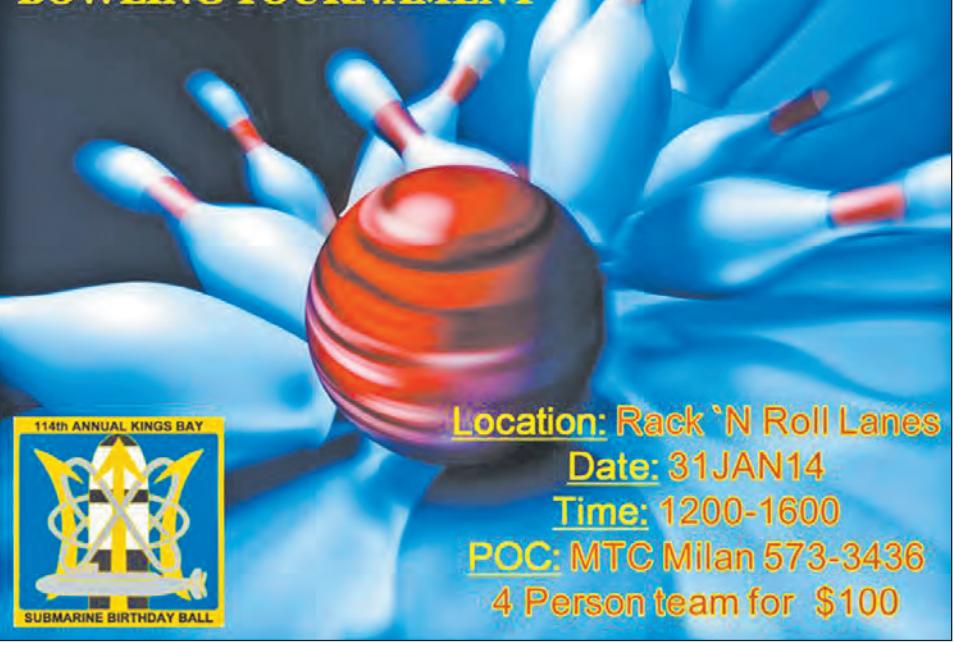

"More than any other institution, it's this institution that really made a difference in my career," the commandant said. "This institution opened my mind to the thought process, and I really feel like I thrived here. It reenergized me and I think it was one of those major inflection points in my career that made a major difference and ultimately led me to where I am today."

The commandant provided a history of the Coast Guard and described its maritime governance role.

"The Coast Guard protects those on the sea, protects Americans against threats delivered by the sea, and protects the sea itself," Papp said. "It's sort of a layman's explanation of our maritime strategy for safety, security and stewardship."

Obama reveals NSA data-collection reforms

By Cheryl Pellerin
American Forces Press Service

President Barack Obama on Jan. 17 announced a series of reforms for a controversial National Security Agency data-collection program that he said would give Americans confidence their privacy is being protected and allow U.S. intelligence and law enforcement agencies to continue safeguarding the nation.

The president delivered remarks at the Department of Justice, presenting results of the administration's review of U.S. signals intelligence programs, seven months after some of the NSA's most sensitive surveillance programs were leaked by former NSA contractor Edward Snowden.

In December, the president's Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies recommended more than 40 changes at the NSA in a wide-ranging report.

Obama also issued a presidential policy directive about U.S. SIGINT activities that he said will clearly prescribe what the United States does and does not do with respect to overseas surveillance.

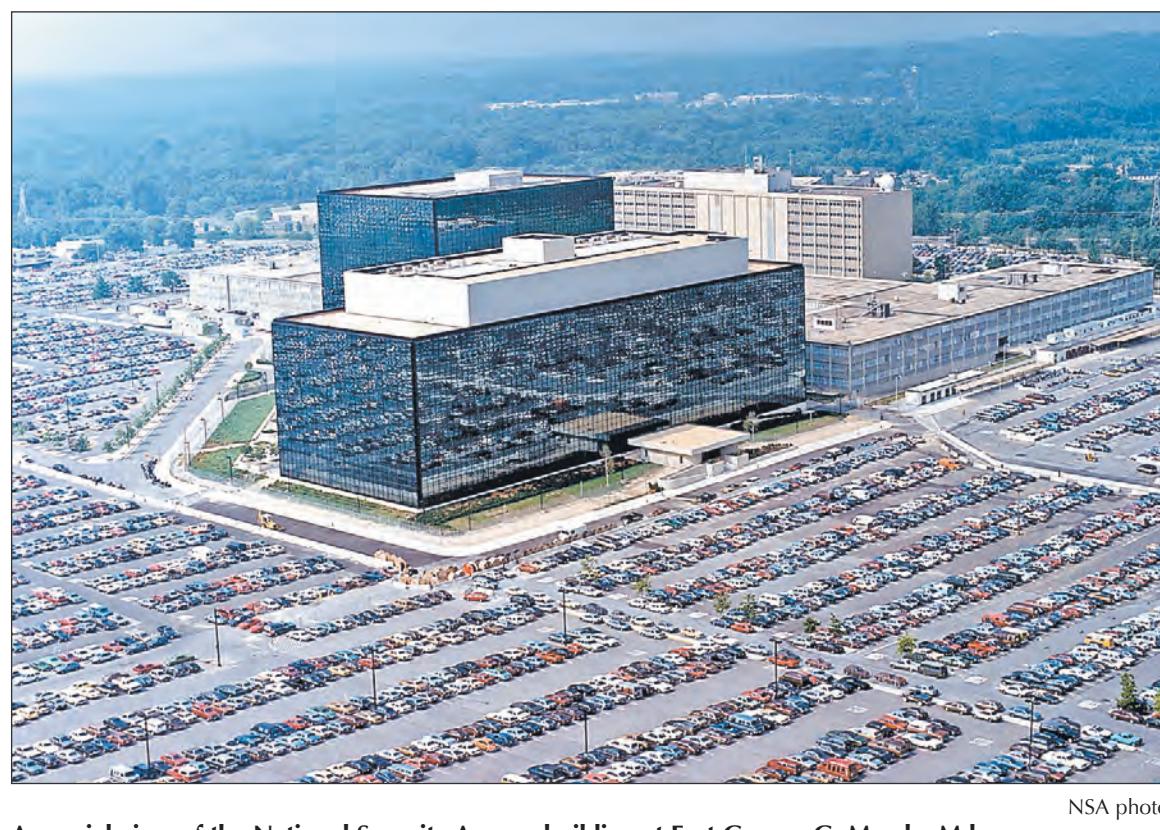

And he said he has made clear to the intelligence community that the United States will not monitor the communications of heads of state and government of its close friends and allies unless there is a compelling national security purpose.

"What's really at stake is how we remain true to who we are in a world that is remaking itself at dizzying speed," Obama said.

"Whether it's the ability of individuals to communicate ideas, to access information ... or to forge bonds with people on other sides of the globe," he added, "technology is remaking what is possible for individuals and for institutions, and for the international order."

Over the last six months the president said he has created the outside Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies to make recommendations for reform, consulted with the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board, listened to foreign partners, privacy advocates and industry leaders, and with those in his administration has considered how to approach intelligence that intelligence serves a vital role in confronting them. They also recognized that challenges to privacy do not come from government alone, the president said.

"Corporations of all shapes and sizes track what you buy, store and analyze our data, and use it for commercial purposes," Obama said. "That's how those targeted ads pop up on your computer and your smartphone periodically. But all of us understand that the standards for government surveillance must be higher."

Among the reforms, Obama approved a new presidential directive for SIGINT activities at home and abroad.

The guidance, he said, will strengthen executive branch oversight of intelligence activities and ensure that the United States takes into account security requirements and alliances, trade and investment relationships, and a commitment to privacy and basic liberties.

Every year the administration will review decisions about intelligence priorities and sensitive targets, the president said. The reforms will also provide greater transparency about surveillance activities and fortify safeguards that protect the privacy of U.S. persons.

"Since we began this review, including information being released today, we've declassified over 40 opinions and orders of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, which provides judicial review of some of our most sensitive intelligence acting the Director of National Intelligence, along with the attorney general, to annually review and when possible declassify future opinions of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court with broad privacy implications and report to the president and Congress on the efforts.

At the Pentagon, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel said he fully supports Obama's outlined reforms as the defense secretary and as former co-chair of the President's Intelligence Advisory Board and a former member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

"These programs must always balance the need to defend our national security with the responsibility to preserve America's individual liberties and the president's decisions and recommendations will do that," Hagel said.

"They will help restore the confidence of the American people and our allies and partners, they will preserve important capabilities that keep us safe," he added, "and they will help the men and women of America's military continue to accomplish their missions all over the world."

Obama also is calling on Congress to authorize the establishment of a panel of advocates from outside government to provide an independent voice in significant cases before the court.

And the administration will provide more protections for activities conducted under Section 702, which allows the gov-tigations on National Security Letters, which can require companies to provide information to the government without revealing the orders to the subject under investigation.

But in the interest of transparency, Obama said he has directed the attorney general to amend how the letters are used so such secrecy will terminate within a fixed time unless the government demonstrates a real need for further secrecy.

And the administration will let communications providers make public more information about the orders they receive to provide data to the government, Obama said.

Regarding reforms of Section 215, the bulk collection of telephone records, Obama repeated that the program does not involve the content of phone calls or the names of callers.

The program grew out of a desire to address a gap identified after 9/11 and was designed to map the communications of terrorists, the president said, and it consolidates the phone records into a database the government can query if it has a specific lead.

"The Review Group turned up no indication that this database has been intentionally abused and I believe it is important that the capability this program is designed to meet is preserved," Obama said, adding that he thinks critics are right to point out that without proper safeguards such a program could be used to give more information about private lives and open the door to more intrusive bulk-collection programs in the future.

"I am therefore ordering a transition that will end the Section 215 bulk-metadata program as it currently exists and establish a mechanism that preserves the capabilities we need without the government holding this bulk metadata," the president said.

Because more must be done to determine how a new system will work, Obama has ordered that the transition proceed in two steps:

1. Starting now, investigators will pursue only phone calls that are two steps removed, rather than three, from a number associated with a terrorist organization. Obama directed the attorney general to work with the FIS Court so during the transition the database can be queried only after a judicial finding or in the case of a true emergency.

2. Obama said he told the intelligence community and the attorney general to use this transition period to develop options for a new approach in which the government doesn't hold the metadata but that matches capabilities and fills the gaps the Section 215 program was designed to address.

Hagel offers support

American Forces Press Service

In a statement issued Jan. 17, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel said he fully supports the reforms to signals intelligence programs that President Barack Obama outlined.

The text of Hagel's statement reads as follows:

"I fully support the reforms to signals intelligence programs that President Obama outlined today — not only as Secretary of Defense, but as former co-chair of the President's Intelligence Advisory Board and a former member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. These programs must always balance the need to defend our national security with the responsibility to preserve America's individual liberties, and the President's decisions and recommendations will do that. They will help restore the confidence of the American people and our allies and partners. They will preserve important capabilities that keep us safe. And they will help the men and women of America's military continue to accomplish their missions all over the world."

The president said officials will report back to him with options before the program comes up for reauthorization on March 28, and meanwhile Obama will consult with congressional committees and then seek congressional authorization for the new program.

To make sure the reforms are put in place, Obama said he is making important changes to how the government is organized.

The State Department will designate a senior officer to coordinate diplomacy on technology and SIGINT issues, the White House will appoint a senior official to implement the new privacy safeguards, and the president will devote resources to centralize and improve the process used to handle foreign requests for legal assistance,

"keeping our high standards for privacy while helping foreign partners fight crime and terrorism," he said.

Obama also has asked his counselor, John Podesta, to lead a comprehensive review of privacy and big data, a term describing a massive volume of structured and unstructured data that is difficult to process using traditional database and software techniques.

"While the reforms that I have announced will point us in a new direction, I am mindful that more work will be needed in the future," Obama said. "One thing I'm certain of: this debate will make us stronger. And I also know that in this time of change, the United States of America will have to lead."

in an era of diffuse threats and technological revolution.

Everyone who examined the problems, Obama said, recognizes that the United States has real enemies and threats and activities, including the Section 702 program targeting foreign individuals overseas and the Section 215 telephone metadata program," Obama said.

The president said he is directing the government to intercept the communications of foreign targets overseas who have information that is important for U.S. national security.

Sexual assault reports drop at 2 academies

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Reports of sexual assault decreased in two of the three military academies in academic year 2012-13, officials of the Defense Department's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Office said Jan. 10.

The statistics came from DOD's Annual Report on Sexual Harassment and Violence at the Military Service Academies, which is being delivered to Congress today.

During the academic year, a total of 70 reports were made at the U.S. Military Academy, the U.S. Naval Academy or the U.S. Air Force Academy, officials said.

The number of sexual assaults reported declined at West Point and Colorado Springs, but rose at Annapolis.

A report of sexual assault means at least one military victim or subject, said Air Force Col. Alan Metzler, an official with the Pentagon's Sexual Assault Response and Prevention Office.

Of the 70 reports, 53 came from cadets and midshipmen for events they experienced in military service.

"We are getting reports from victims for events prior to their military service or prior to entering the service academies," Metzler said.

The report provides an assessment of the effectiveness of the service academies' policies and training to prevent sexual violence.

The assessment found the academies were compliant with their policies regarding sexual harassment and sexual assault during the academic year, which ran from June 2012 to May 2013.

"What we found was the academies instituted a lot

Navy's survey results compiled

By MC1 Peggy Trujillo

The Department of the Navy sexual assault survey for 2013 ended Jan. 6, and results are currently being compiled.

The Department of the Navy Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Office, which answers directly to Secretary of the Navy Ray Mabus, extended their appreciation for the participation of Sailors and Marines in the survey, which will help the office plan for future endeavors to fight sexual assault.

"We work very hard and use all available resources to prevent, and hopefully eliminate, this crime of sexual assault in our Navy and Marine Corps," said Jill Loftus, director of DoN SAPRO. "The success of this survey, just like our larger efforts to combat sexual assault, depends on the support and contribution of Sailors and Marines world-wide and we tremendously appreciate all our participants' honest inputs on this vital subject."

Rear Adm. Sean S. Buck, the director of N-17, the 21st Century Sailor and Marine Office, has spent much of his time visiting Sailors and Marines to get feedback about the Navy's efforts to combat sexual assault.

Staff and students at Training Support Center, Great Lakes grill steak for the Coalition of Sailors Against Destructive Decisions and Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Grill Crawl hosted by the CSADD Great Lakes Chapter and the Fleet and Family Support Center.

The survey's results will help him get a better idea of where the DoN stands.

"The intent of the survey is to show us where we stand with sexual assault prevention," said Buck. "This survey will update us as to whether we are closing the discrepancy between the numbers of Sailors who say in confidential surveys that they've been victims of some sort of unwanted sexual contact and the number of actual reports that we receive. We think our efforts to date have begun to make progress in understanding the magnitude of the problem in the Navy."

While the DoN will not publicly release the results of the survey, DoN SAPRO and N-17 will both use that information to shape programs and training to meet the needs of Sailors and Marines.

In the past, survey results have led to doubling the number of sexual assault investigators at NCIS, increasing the number of sexual assault response coordinators, full-time victim advocates who are civilians trained as counselors, the institution of a victim's legal counsel to help victims through the process and civilian resiliency counselors, who are also certified sexual assault response coordinators, on the big decks, said Loftus.

By taking part in the 10-minute surveys, Sailors and Marines have helped their senior leadership battle sexual assault from the deck plates.

"Thanks to all of you in the Fleet that voluntarily participated in the survey," said Buck. "By doing so, you've made yourself part of the solution to prevent sexual assault."

wrote the report, put the drop in reports in perspective. "We want to see more reports," he said. "This is an under-reported crime. The challenge we have this year is that without the prevalence number to understand the rate of sexual assault or unwanted sexual contact, it is hard to interpret this data."

The anonymous survey that provides an estimate of how often cadets and midshipmen experience unwanted sexual contact is only done every two years.

"We do want to continue to see reports of sexual assault go up — this is a historically underreported crime," Galbreath said. "More reports means we can provide victims they help they need, that we can independently investigate and hold offenders appropriately accountable. We are encouraging our superintendents to take some steps to increase victims' confidence."

Servicewide, the biggest news in the sexual assault prevention and response world is establishing special victims' counsels.

"We believe this is a game-changer," Galbreath said. "These lawyers are provided to victims of sexual assault, and whether they file a restricted or unrestricted report, they will be able to discuss the case with their own attorney and be able to discuss the pros and cons of going forward with their cases or leaving them restricted."

"That and other programs, we hope, will increase confidence in the process, and that seems to be the case," he added.

Your pick: New York, Los Angeles, Chicago?

Having grown up in Illinois, Chicago is no stranger to me. And, I've been to New York and Los Angeles. New York, with 8.3 million people, is the largest, followed by LA, with 3.9 million and Chicago with 2.7 million. Added together, only four states — New York, California, Texas and Florida — have more people than these three cities. Each is special in its own way too, representing the East and West coasts and the Midwest heartland. New York and Chicago have something LA doesn't, namely ice, snow and freezing temperatures in winter. That's why, given this choice, you could forward my mail to Los Angeles.

sometime late this week or early next week, Warren said.

The Cape Ray — crewed by a mix of 35 civilian mariners, about 64 chemical specialists from the U.S. Army Edgewood Chemical Biological Center in Maryland, a security team and representatives from U.S. European Command — is expected to be underway for about two weeks before arriving at its destination, Warren said.

Destruction of the chemical weapons is expected to take about 90 days.

The Field-Deployable Hydrolysis System was developed in response to a December 2012 request for U.S. assistance in destroying Syria's chemical weapons stockpile.

It achieves a 99.9 percent destruction efficiency and converts bulk amounts of chemical warfare agents into compounds not usable as weapons.

During the sea trials, the crew and the Field-Deployable Hydrolysis System operators are evaluating the ship and the system at various sea states, Warren said.

"The crew conducted several training drills and assessed all systems aboard," he said.

The ship is expected to return tomorrow for final outfitting before deploying to an as-yet undisclosed location in the Mediterranean Sea

Marines from 1st Battalion, 6th Marine Regiment patrol the city streets of Fallujah in 2009. The unit was deployed to conduct security and stability operations.

Setbacks eyed in Iraq

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is disappointed the Iraqis have not done more with the chance they have been given by the men and women of the U.S. military.

"The young men and women who went to Iraq won their fight. They did exactly what we asked them to do," Army Gen. Martin E. Dempsey said.

Dempsey told National Public Radio's Tom Bowman that the images of al-Qaida affiliates raising their flags over the embattled city of Fallujah triggers "the same thing that runs through any veterans' mind who served there, which is disappointment."

He is proud of what the U.S. military did, but said that Iraq has failed "to take advantage of what we gave them."

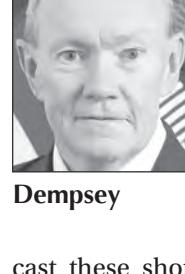

The chairman was the commander of the 1st Armored Division in Baghdad in 2003 and 2004. He also commanded the Multinational Security Transition Command-Iraq from 2005 to 2007.

The situation in Iraq has deteriorated since U.S. troops pulled out in December 2011. Suicide bombing have become more frequent and Iraqi government statistics indicate that about 8,000 Iraqis were killed in 2013.

Fighting in Anbar province intensified at the end of 2013, and the Islamic State of Iraq in the Levant, an al-Qaida affiliated group, took control of Fallujah and made inroads in Ramadi, the provincial capital.

"I wouldn't give up on Iraq yet though," the chairman said. "It's a little premature to declare that this conflict in Ramadi and Fallujah portends the collapse of the state of Iraq or an irreversible setback."

Iraqi security forces are credible, the general said. The government is divided, and the forces have had challenges with logistics and command and control, but the forces remain tough.

U.S. military officials, including the chairman, had forecast these shortcomings with the Iraqi forces. Given conditions in the country, Dempsey believes the government will be pressured to look for a political solution.

But he said, "The hard-core al-Qaida, the Islamic State of Iraq in the Levant, they are going to be a problem that will have to be rooted out by the Iraqi security forces."

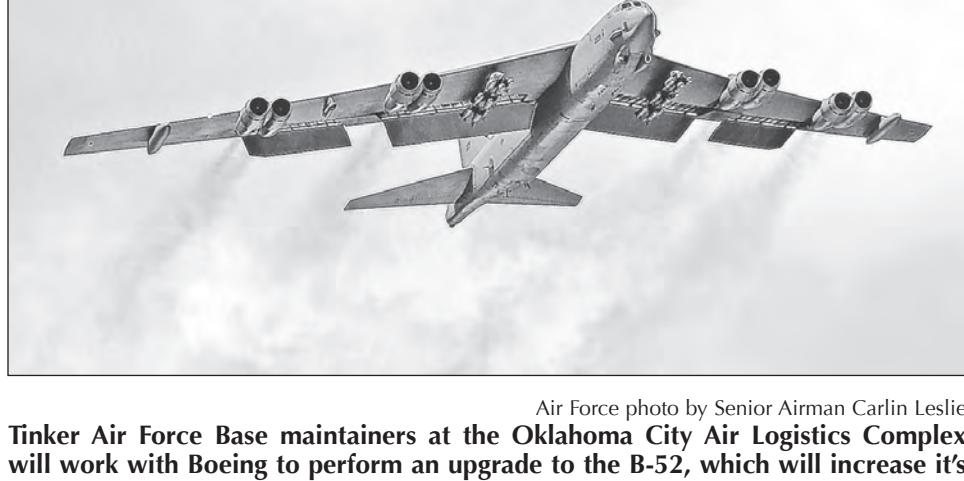

The civil war in Syria is spilling over into Iraq, reinforcing the chairman's contention that problems in the area are regional in scope. "I've talked for some time about the fact that the conflict in the region stretches from Beirut to Damascus to Baghdad," he said. "It is a regional conflict that has the religious undertone of Sunni and Shiia, but even that has been hijacked by the radical extremists on both sides, Lebanese Hezbollah on one side and ISIL on the other."

The United States is looking at how to help solve the problems of the region.

Dempsey said the U.S. military can help in planning and logistics.

"No one has asked, nor have we offered direct military involvement because of the underlying religious issues and extremist issues," he said.

If the countries of the region can address the problems without U.S. direct action, the process "is far more likely to produce a positive outcome," he said.

Tinker Air Force Base maintainers at the Oklahoma City Air Logistics Complex will work with Boeing to perform an upgrade to the B-52, which will increase its smart-weapon capabilities.

Tinker Air Force Base Airmen will update ground maintenance and mission planning software in support of a new Air Force contract that will increase the B-52 Stratofortress's "smart-weapons" capacity by 50 percent.

The $24.6 million agreement stipulates that Boeing will develop a modification to existing weapon launchers so the aircraft can carry smart weapons in the bomb bay, which will enable aircrews to use the B-52's entire weapons capacity.

"With this modification, we're converting the bomb bay from dropping just gravity-type bombs to releasing precision-guided weapons," said Jennifer Hogan of Boeing Communications.

"When you combine that ability with the B-52's unlimited range with air refueling, you have an efficient and versatile weapon system that is valuable to warfighters on the ground," said Scot Oathout, the Boeing's B-52 program director. "This weapons capacity expansion joins the Combat Network Communications Technology program, a comprehensive communication upgrade that's being installed on the aircraft, to give the warfighter even more flexibility."

Boeing will produce three prototype launchers for test and evaluation.

Initial capability is expected in March 2016, and potential follow-on efforts could add more weapons and allow a mixed load of different types of weapons.

Upon completion of the first phase of the upgrade, the B-52 will be able to carry two dozen 500-pound Joint Direct Attack Munitions or twenty 2,000-pound JDAMs.

Later phases will add the Joint Air-to-Surface Standoff Missile, or JASSM, and its extended-range variant, as well as the Miniature Air Launched Decoy, or MALD, and its jammer variant.

The bomb bay renovation will enable the B-52 to carry all of its weapons internally, thereby increasing fuel efficiency in flight.

The modernization work will use parts from existing Air Force rotary launchers repurposed for conventional missions, as well as hardware and software already developed for the wing pylons.

Engineers from the 76th Software Maintenance Group, 557th Software Maintenance Squadron, B-52 Software Avionics Flight at Tinker AFB, are modifying the 1760 Integrated Weapon Bay Upgrade, or IWBU Ground Maintenance Computer Program to test out the additional Integrated Weapon Interface Unit being added in the bay location on the B-52 in order to launch additional weapons from the weapons bay location.

The primary function of the Ground Maintenance Computer Program is to test the B-52 Offensive Avionics System Prime Mission Equipment that is capable

Training trenches remain

By Mike DiCicco
Marine Corps Base Quantico

In his memoir, 2nd Lt. W.B. Jackson describes a training exercise he and his company carried out at Marine Corps Base Quantico during the installation's earliest days, almost a century ago: The Marines dug holes a couple of hundred yards from lines of the company officers, and, "one pitch black night," they mixed concrete about a quarter mile off and brought it forward, as silently as possible, pouring it into the forms to create concrete pillbox machine-gun emplacements.

If the officers heard them, they blew whistles to represent enemy machine gun strafing.

"As I recall, our company only had one whistle blast all night," Jackson reported. "T'was different and fun."

If any remains of those pillboxes exist on the base, their whereabouts are unknown, but similar traces of Quantico's early days have been found in at least a couple of wooded locations.

"Quantico was established for the purpose of training Marines for World War I," said Catherine Roberts, the base archaeologist. "We didn't have enough officers to go to war."

The base still retains that purpose as the training ground for officers, at Officer Candidates School and The Basic School.

By the time the U.S. got involved in the war in 1917, the year Quantico was established, fighting had been raging for almost three years.

Advances in firepower that had not been accompanied by advances in mobility necessitated heavy reliance on trenches for protection. Thus, the French, Canadian and British officers who came from the battlefields to train U.S. forces made sure the officers knew how to lay out trenches, the enlisted men knew how to dig them, and everyone knew how to use them.

Just off the present-day golf course, a system of about 2,000 feet of ditches winds along a low area and up a knobby hill.

Some stretches are five feet deep or more, while others are much shallower.

"The way you're seeing it now is because the wood's rotted away," Roberts said.

When they were created, many of the trenches were likely deep enough to provide cover for a man standing at full height and were supported with wood planking and mesh.

In front of the trench, a parapet provided cover from enemy fire, while a parados behind protected from artillery blast-back.

They also employed a number of different patterns, or traces.

"Generally the trace should be as irregular as possible to prevent enfilade or destructive firing down a line of the trench," the report notes.

In front of the trench, a parapet provided cover from enemy fire, while a parados behind protected from artillery blast-back.

Local trenches were short and connected command, support and reserve areas to the main trench line.

The report concludes that the trenches in the Purvis Road area "show the most advantageous way to defend the terrain on which they are situated" and also follow the guidelines for trench design and positioning laid out in the 1918 United Marines occupy a trench somewhere in France during World War I.

These were generally kept low and wide to help them blend into the topography.

According to the report, the trenches in the Purvis Road area met these criteria: "When viewed from downslope, the trenches could not be seen during the walkover survey," it says. "The low parapet and parados provided an illusion of a continuous wooded natural slope."

The archaeologists also discovered remains of wire mesh and chain link reinforcements, or "revetments," in the interiors of some trenches.

They documented several types of trenches within the system.

Firing trenches, designed for shooting at the enemy, were generally deep and narrow and were not continuous.

Behind them were reserve trenches to shelter reserve troops, and these were connected to the firing trenches by approach trenches.

Local trenches were short and connected command, support and reserve areas to the main trench line.

The report concludes that the trenches in the Purvis Road area "show the most advantageous way to defend the terrain on which they are situated" and also follow the guidelines for trench design and positioning laid out in the 1918 United

Fleet & Family Support Center workshops

Parenting classes offered on Mondays

Are you frustrated with your children? Would you like suggestions on how to stop temper tantrums or how to get your teen to complete chores without asking them 14 times? We believe parents are the experts on their children. But, children don't come with a manual! So, sometimes you need help to figure out what to do with them. Meet with the parenting class from 9 to 11:30 a.m. on Monday, Jan. 27. Enrollment in this six-week class is ongoing. Attendees must complete all six weeks in order to receive a certificate. A minimum of six participants is needed in order for a new class to start. Registration required at 573-4512.

Anger management seminar Jan. 29

Anger is not an effective method for getting what you want and is often a smoke screen for other emotions. This workshop is slated for 8:30 a.m. to noon, Jan. 29. It can help you focus on identifying the feelings anger hides and explore behaviors helpful in resolving primary issues. Pre-registration is required. Call 573-4512 for details.

Credit reports and scores workshop upcoming

Credit has become a normal part of everyday personal financial management for most Americans. Used appropriately, it can be an excellent tool, but used the wrong way, it can bring the financial wheels of your life to a grinding halt for a long time. This two-hour workshop provides the importance of managing your credit. It will be at the Fleet and Family Support Center 2 to 4 p.m., Jan.

MCPON addresses force issue

By MC2 Sean Hurt

Defense Media Activity

Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy Mike Stevens outlined his key concerns about the future force of the Navy during a speech Jan. 16 at the 26th Annual Surface Navy Association National Symposium.

Stevens said the future force he envisions would be built upon strength through diversity, which includes opening more combat roles to women.

"We've made a lot of progress in that area," said Stevens. "The Navy's been working on this a long time. In 2016 we plan on putting [female] enlisted Sailors on our Virginia class submarines. This is an exciting time for women to serve in the Navy because of all the opportunities that are out there."

Stevens also talked about the drawdown in Afghanistan and the impact it would have on the individual augmentee program.

"In 2012, we had 6,812 Sailors in individual augmentee billets," said Stevens. "In 2013, that number dropped to 4,300. That's a 48-percent reduction over the last three years. Right now, the Navy as a force is 324,000 strong. The good news is there's no plan right now to draw the Navy down any smaller."

Stevens also spoke about suicide and its impact on the force.

"[Suicide] is a tragic event when it occurs. It impacts readiness, it impacts the morale of our units," said Stevens. "The good news is we're seeing the trends come down. We've seen our numbers drop from last year [2012] to this year [2013] by 18."

Not far from the present-day golf course, the remains of training trenches from the World War I era can still be found at Quantico, Va.

States Corps of Engineers training manual.

"The site dates to the initial occupation and deployment of Marine Base Quantico in WWI," it says as it makes the case that the trench network should be eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

"The site provides insight into the level of training and type of training practiced by the Marine Corps in preparation for sending troops to the western front."

In all, about 30,000 Marines deployed to the war after training at Quantico.

Reports have been written about training trenches found at three Army installations, but there are no studies in circulation about trenches at Marine Corps bases.

The report also points out that no written records of the training have been found that and it's possible the remains of the trenches may be the best way to learn how the Marines prepared for the war.

Roberts said that's the point of archaeology.

"What can I not get from the record?" she asked rhetorically. "You want to learn from archaeology what the history can't tell you."

The report recommends further investigation of the site off Purvis Road, as well as another probable trench line discovered to the north, in an area that would be tactically opposed to the documented site.

Roberts said archaeologists probably didn't know about the trenches by the golf course when the report was written.

She said she is still considering how to treat the trenches and plans to examine them further after the winter passes.

"My task at this point is to go out and do a further survey and see what I want to do with it and what I can do with it," she said.

of communicating with the Avionics Control Units via the MIL-STD-1553A data busses and the Fiber Channel.

The Ground Maintenance Computer Program will detect faults and aid in fault isolation of Prime Mission Equipment Line Replaceable Units on the aircraft. The GMCP software will execute within the Avionics Control Units and communicate with the Line Replaceable Units via the MIL-STD-1553A data busses and the Fiber Channel. Ground testing of this effort will occur in late 2014.

In addition, engineers from the 76th SMXG, 557th SMXS, B-52 Software Avionics Flight are transitioning mission-planning software from a unix-based Mission Planning System to a Windows-based Joint Mission Planning System. The B-52 J MPS Unique Program Component v1.0 software release will include conventional mission planning support for B-52 Software Blocks 04 and 05.

It also adds capability for all variants of JDAM, JASSM and MALD at the bay location to support capability added by the 1760 IWBU program.

Formal Qualification Testing will be accomplished by July 2014, and the software will fielded by July 2015.

The CONECT system

will enable Stratofortress aircrews to send and receive information via satellite links, which will enable them to change mission plans and retarget weapons while in flight; currently, mission information must be uploaded to a B-52 before a flight.

In addition, pilots will be able to interact better with other aircraft and with ground forces.

Other improvements will include a state-of-the-art computing network with workstations at each crew position and an integrated digital interphone with increased capacity that will allow crew members to talk to each other on headsets equipped with noise-canceling technology.

The $76 million CONECT upgrade installation will be performed during programmed depot maintenance by the 565th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron, while Boeing will provide the low-rate initial production of the first CONECT kits, along with spare parts and maintenance and service at Tinker AFB.

The B-52H was delivered to the Air Force in 1961-62. Those aircraft have been kept aloft through regular maintenance and periodic upgrades.

For example, GPS capabilities were incorporated into their navigation systems in the late 1980s. Citing engineering studies, Air Force officials have said the heavy bombers could keep flying for at least another quarter-century.

Sponsorship training for command reps

FFSC is offering Sponsorship training to all command representatives. The goal of the workshop is to ensure that designated command personnel have the necessary education and training to successfully fulfill the role of command sponsor. It presents an overview of the benefits of sponsorship, a list of sponsor duties and responsibilities, and a timeline to assist in streamlining the sponsorship process.

The workshop is scheduled on 1 to 2:30 p.m., Jan. 30. Registration is required as class is limited to 20 seats. For more information call 573-4513.

Veterans Affairs rep visits Kings Bay

A Department of Veterans Affairs representative for Kings Bay is in the office from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. Appointments are required. Service members wishing to participate in the Benefits Delivery at Discharge program should be within 60 to 180 days of discharge or retirement and be available for an exam by the VA. To set up an appointment, call Katherine Fernandez at 573-4506.

Fleet and Family offers classes on site

FFSC will take most of its regular workshops on the road if a unit can furnish a conference room or classroom and guarantee a minimum of five participants. Additionally, personnel will tailor presentations to cover a unit's General Military Training requirements when those requirements deal with human resources and social issues. Counselors also can create a presentation in response to a unit's area of special concerns. Personnel are available to participate within areas of expertise in the indoctrination of newly assigned personnel and family members of active duty personnel. All classes listed here are held at the Fleet and Family Support Center, unless otherwise noted. Hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays and 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Thursdays.

HOW TO RESPOND

WHEN AN ACTIVE SHOOTER IS IN YOUR VICINITY

1. EVALUATE

- Have an escape route and plan in mind
- Leave your belongings behind
- Keep your hands visible

2. HIDE OUT

- Hide in an area out of the shooter's view
- Block entry to your hiding place and lock the doors
- Silence your cell phone and/or pager

3. TAKE ACTION

- As a last resort and only when your life is in imminent danger
- Attempt to incapacitate the shooter
- Act with physical aggression and throw items at the active shooter
