Greenert will be touring Kings Bay as well, seeing all the aspects of the base that impact a Sailor's life, including base housing and the Branch Health Clinic.

Greenert is a native of Butler, Pa. He graduated from the Naval Academy in 1975 and completed studies in nuclear power for service as a submarine officer.

His career as a submariner includes assignments aboard USS Flying Fish (SSN 673), USS Tautog (SSN 639), Submarine NR-1 and USS Michigan (SSBN 72) (Gold), culminating in command of USS Honolulu (SSN 718) from March 1991 to July 1993.

Subsequent fleet command assignments include Commander, Submarine Squadron 11; Commander, U.S. Naval Forces Marianas; Commander, U.S. 7th Fleet August 2004 to September 2006; and, Commander, U.S. Fleet Forces Command September 2007 to July 2009.

MA1 Brian Thomas' love of canines led to training service dogs for wounded warriors

By EM1 Mark Treen
Naval Submarine Base Kings Bay Public Affairs

When an over-seas service member is wounded, they make a sacrifice, whether physical or emotional or both.

Sometimes, it can be a huge sacrifice. What can anyone do to help that service member though?

One Sailor knows.

Master at Arms First Class Brian Thomas is investing 18 months to raise and train a dog that will be given to a wounded service member. It's a service dog that will accompany the warrior and help with their day-to-day needs.

He's raising Georgia, an 11-week-old Golden Retriever-Poodle mix.

He found raising the service dog a natural fit, much the same way he began his Navy career as a Military Working Dog handler.

"It found me," Thomas said.

The 32-year-old from Louisville, Ky. has been around dogs since childhood. About raising them, he said, "I was born with it in my blood."

Thomas is the leading petty officer at the kennel here on board Naval Submarine Base Kings Bay. His fondness for dogs helps explain some of his motivation for volunteering to raise Georgia.

But it's not all.

Thomas has done five tours in either Iraq or Afghanistan. He knows what it's like being deployed and what challenges are faced. He's seen a lot of his fellow service members returning with physical injuries or with post-traumatic stress disorder. Overseas he always worried about how that person was going to cope back in the states.

What help is offered? Listen to what returning Marine Gunnery Sgt. Jeffrey Callahan said about how his service dog helped

Obama, Hagel phone Russian counterparts regarding invasion

American Forces Press Service

President Barack Obama and Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel called their Russian counterparts March 1 to express their concerns over recent events in Ukraine, according to White House and Defense Department news releases issued today.

Obama spoke for 90 minutes this afternoon with Russian President Vladimir Putin about the situation in Ukraine, according to the White House release.

Obama expressed his deep concern over Russia's clear violation of Ukrainian sovereignty and territorial integrity, which is a breach of international law, including Russia's obligations under the U.N. Charter, and of its 1997 military basing agreement with Ukraine, and which is inconsistent with the 1994 Budapest Memorandum and

From The Atlantic Southeast Chapter of the Submarine League

Fred Teter, a Warren Lasch Conservation Center volunteer, will be guest speaker and share his experiences with the Hunley Project at the March 19 meeting of the The Atlantic Southeast Chapter of the Submarine League.

The meeting will be at 11:30 a.m. at the Goat Locker on board Naval Submarine Base Kings Bay. The normal business meeting will be short and precede Teter's presentation.

Changes at Kings Bay Pet Clinic

The Naval Submarine Base Kings Bay Veterinary Treatment Facility is under-going changes, with a new computer system, which makes your pets' records easily accessible to your new veterinarian when you move. But, your patience is asked for as staff works through the transition and the challenges of a new system. In addition, changes are being made to the prescription refill policy. Pet owners will now need to call to refill a medication, and it will take two business days to fill them. When you call, the following information is needed: last name, pet's name and name of medication. There will also be changes to some prices. This is controlled at the Public Health Command level, and anticipated changes are not drastic, but be aware some things may require more or less than you are used to.

TRICARE changes procedures

TRICARE military health plan service centers will end administrative walk-in services at Naval Branch Health Clinic Kings Bay April 1. Beneficiaries can accomplish any administrative task online or by phone. The change will not affect any TRICARE medical benefit or health care service. What it will do is allow is allow global savings throughout the Department of Defense because all TRICARE service centers are closing in all three branches. About half of the visits to the centers are for in- and out-processing and requests to change primary care providers. The rest involve billing-related questions. This type of customer service can be handled more efficiently by phone or online. TRICARE Web site has run tests to ensure the site and call center can handle the expected increase in volume. Beneficiaries can get more information and sign up for updates at www.tricare.mil/tsc.

Check on college accreditations

By Susan D. Henson

Center for Personal and Professional Development Public Affairs

Sailors working on completing a degree should ensure their school has the appropriate type of accreditation or it could cost them money later, said Center for Personal and Professional Development education professionals Feb. 24.

"Most students know the school they attend should have some sort of accreditation as a way of ensuring the quality of their education, but they don't understand how important the type of accreditation is in their school selection," said Ernest D'Antonio, director of Navy Voluntary Education at the Center for Personal and Professional Development. "I've seen way too many examples of service members using their tuition assistance or G.I. Bill education benefits to earn a degree at a school whose credits aren't transferrable to or recognized by other schools. And when a Sailor's benefit is spent, it's spent."

According to Raymond Sayre, director of the Navy College Office in San Diego, there are three kinds of accreditation.

One is regional, which is granted by an accrediting organization in one of six regions in the United States.

Center for PPD

"Regional accrediting organizations review educational institutions as a whole," he said. "Schools with regionally accredited programs focus on academic theory for a full range of degrees from accounting to zoology at all educational levels."

National accreditation is another type. Sayre said nationally accredited institutions fill a different educational need than those with regional accreditation.

"The real difference is that national accrediting bodies focus on operational/technical skills. These accreditors tend to focus on a particular discipline such as business or technical skills, or distance learning," he said.

The third kind is accreditation for specialized programs and single-purpose organizations. A specialized accreditation is typically granted for a particular section or discipline within a regionally accredited educational institution, such as for a school's law, medical or engineering program.

It's confusing because it's complicated, according to D'Antonio. "The key for Sailors is to understand how accreditation directly relates to their educational goals," he said. "This is part of why Navy College Program education professionals exist — to help Sailors make the best choice for them."

Sayre pointed out that one type of accreditation isn't necessarily better than the others; it is simply contingent on the student's objectives.

"It depends on what professional path Sailors are choosing," he said. "If they want a hands-on career in the vocational or technical world such as auto repair, electronics, nuclear technician, etc., they may benefit by choosing a school with national accreditation. If their choice is the academic world — teacher, law, business or doctor, for example — they ought to choose regional accreditation. Many nationally accredited schools offer advanced vocational or technical education and training programs that are excellent and meet the needs for which they were designed."

A handful of schools have both regional and national accreditation, but Sayre said it isn't common.

Gary Henwood, an educational services specialist at Navy College Office Whidbey Island, Wash., said it's important for Sailors to view their school choice in the broader spectrum of their current - and future — educational goals.

"When Sailors apply for commissioning programs such as Medical Enlisted Commissioning Program or Seaman-to-Admiral 21, the participating universities and colleges are regionally accredited and may not accept credits from nationally accredited schools."

For this reason, Henwood advises Sailors specifically trying for a commission to ensure they attend an accredited school whose credits are transferrable to other programs since it's up to each school what transfer credits it will accept.

Sailors not applying for a commissioning program should still carefully consider how they're using the Tuition Assistance program to complete classes toward their degree, or it could result in bad news.

Henwood gave an example of a Sailor he worked with last year who completed a Bachelor of Science in Business from a nationally accredited school, which he used Navy Tuition Assistance to complete. He then applied to a regionally accredited school's MBA program, but that school didn't honor his bachelor's degree.

"Because the Navy only pays for one bachelor's degree, he will have to go back and pay out-of-pocket for a regionally accredited degree program or return to the original school for its MBA, which limits his choices," Henwood said.

"Secretary Hagel expressed deep concern about Russia's military intervention in Ukraine," Kirby said in the DOD release. "He reminded Minister Shoygu that these activities ran counter to Russia's international treaty obligations and stated position that it would respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ukraine."

Following a Ukrainian pro-democracy coalition's recent ouster of Ukraine's pro-Russian government, the Russian military has been reported to be operating in and around the Crimea region in southeastern Ukraine, where the Russian Navy's Black Sea Fleet has its principal base in Sevastopol on the Black Sea. The Crimea region is home to an ethnic-Russian majority populace.

In the DOD release, Kirby noted that "Hagel stressed that, without a change on the ground, Russia risks further instability in the region, isolation in the international community and an escalation that would threaten European and international security."

The United States calls on Russia to de-escalate tensions by withdrawing its forces back to bases in Crimea and to refrain from any interference elsewhere in Ukraine, the White House release said.

"We have consistently said that we recognize Russia's deep historic and cultural ties to Ukraine and the need to protect the rights of ethnic Russian and minority populations within Ukraine," the White House release said. "The Ukrainian government has made clear its commitment to protect the rights of all Ukrainians and to abide by Ukraine's international commitments, and we will continue to urge them to do so."

Obama also told Putin today that if Russia has concerns about the treatment of ethnic Russian and minority populations in Ukraine, the appropriate way to address them is peacefully through direct engagement with the government of Ukraine and through the dispatch of international observers under the auspices of the United Nations Security Council or the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the White House release said.

As a member of both organizations, Russia would be able to participate, the White House release added.

Obama urged an immediate effort to initiate a dialogue between Russia and the Ukrainian government, the White House release said, with international facilitation, as appropriate. The United States is prepared to participate.

Obama made clear that Russia's continued violation of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity would negatively impact Russia's standing in the international community, the White House release said. In the coming hours and days, the release said, the United States will urgently consult with allies and partners in the U.N. Security Council, the North Atlantic Council, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Joint U.S.-Russian activities on hold

American Forces Press Service

The Defense Department has "put on hold" military-to-military activities with Russia, Pentagon Press Secretary Navy Rear Adm. John Kirby said March 3.

In a statement released to reporters, Kirby said the suspended activities include exercises, bilateral meetings, port visits and planning conferences.

Although the Defense Department finds value in the military-to-military relationship developed in recent years with the Russian Federation to increase transparency, build understanding and reduce the risk of military miscalculation, Kirby said, "we have, in light of recent events in Ukraine, put on hold all military-to-military engagements between the United States and Russia."

The Defense Department is closely monitoring the situation and remains in close contact with the State Department and other government agencies, as well as with allies, partners and NATO, the admiral said. "We call on Russia to de-escalate the crisis in Ukraine and for Russian forces in Crimea to return to their bases, as required under the agreements governing the Russia Black Sea Fleet," he added.

Though some media outlets are speculating on possible ship movements in the region, Kirby said, there has been no change to U.S. military posture in Europe or the Mediterranean Sea.

"Our Navy units continue to conduct routine, previously planned operations and exercises with allies and partners in the region," the press secretary said.

and with the signatories of the Budapest Memorandum.

The United States will suspend upcoming participation in preparatory meetings for the G-8, according to the White House release. Going forward, the release said, Russia's continued violation of international law will lead to greater political and economic isolation.

The people of Ukraine have the right to determine their own future, the White House release said, and Obama has directed his administration to continue working urgently with international partners to provide support for the Ukrainian government, including urgent technical and financial assistance.

"Going forward," the White House release said, "we will continue consulting closely with allies and partners, the Ukrainian government and the International Monetary Fund, to provide the new [Ukrainian] government with significant assistance to secure financial stability, to support needed reforms, to allow Ukraine to conduct successful elections, and to support Ukraine as it pursues a democratic future."

Also, Obama spoke separately today with President Francois Hollande of France and Prime Minister Stephen Harper of Canada, according to another White House release issued today. The leaders, that release said, agreed that Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity must be respected, and they expressed their grave concern over Russia's intervention in Ukraine.

him when he returned from Iraq.

"By having my service dog Belle, I have been able to get back into society. Before I got her I had been pretty much shut away from everything and everyone. Belle has gotten me back out there. I know when we're out she always has my back, whether it is letting me know someone is coming up behind me, making me stop and pet her when my anxiety is bad or by waking me up from my nightmares. I know she is always there to help me."

So with good reasons to raise a service dog, what is the cost to Thomas? Simply a lot of time and patience. The dog has to be taught to perform tasks like opening doors, helping a service member get up off the ground and to be social, while not seeking attention.

One teaching tool is having a young puppy play with keys. An older dog often will have an aversion to picking up metal objects in its mouth. What happens if a wounded warrior drops his keys?

Thomas' puppy already has been taught to pick up keys. It was one of Georgia's first lessons.

Then there's taking the puppy different places so it can become acclimated to surroundings. Georgia already has been to a memorial service, church and the zoo.

Often times, it can be hard to go into the convenience store to pick up milk when everyone wants to pet the cute puppy. That can take a lot of time, but it comes with its own rewards.

Now Thomas can take that worry he had for departing fellow warriors and help them. He can be a "warrior helping a warrior."

The organization that Thomas trains Georgia for is Patriot Service Dogs in Jacksonville, Fla. Patriot got Georgia from a breeder in North Georgia.

Georgia also has a sponsor through Patriot, the Blair family in St. Marys. They pay vet bills and other costs covering the dog. They picked Georgia's name and will be there for graduation, when the dog is matched with the service member.

When Thomas sees those injured now paired with a service dog he feels the most rewarded. He's finally able to do something to help them.

What can you do to help?

If you want to help, Patriot needs a permanent location to conduct training in Jacksonville at 7 p.m. on Thursdays. But the biggest need is for those willing to sponsor a service dog.

Money, power or love ... which is better?

You really can overthink this one. Like, I don't think power or money can really get you love. But, power may be able to get you money. It's like a dog chasing its tail. Anyway, when I was a kid and the Beatles were big, I bought into, "I don't care too much for money. Money can't buy me love." Now that I'm old

MCPON shines spotlight on personal integrity

Addresses recent rash of bad decisions by military members

From Navy Public Affairs Support Element East

Manslaughter, drunk driving, sexual assault, exam compromising and inappropriate relationships have one command theme — all have been recent headlines in the news in the past six months.

The Navy's top enlisted leader visited Hampton Roads chief petty officers Feb. 20 to discuss ethics and integrity within the CPO community and the Navy as a whole.

In the past 30 days, reports have broken in three of the services involving a wide range of questionable ethical behavior, and the CPO community has not been immune.

Results of Special and General Courts-Martials included nine CPOs. The charges ranged from fraternization to possession of a controlled substance.

"When you think about all of that, maybe one case doesn't raise too much of an alarm" said Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy Mike Stevens. "But when you put them all together, imagine yourself as the secretary of defense and all of these cases are coming across your desk. You will probably sit down and ask yourself if we have a problem and is that problem systemic.

There are approximately 323,000 Sailors around the fleet. Ninety-nine percent of those Sailors are living up to the Navy's

Defense secretary explains '15 budget request during base visits

By Cheryl Pellerin
 American Forces Press Service

In aircraft hangars at two different military bases in southeastern Virginia Feb. 25, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel stood before several hundred airmen and soldiers, highlighting priorities in the Defense Department's fiscal year 2015 budget request and taking questions.

The budget request — which Hagel and Army Gen. Martin E. Dempsey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, previewed Feb. 24 at the Pentagon — is the first in 13 years that doesn't reflect a defense enterprise engaged in a foreign war, and in some of those years, two wars.

With the defense budget poised to shrink by more than $75 billion over the next two years, the funding request recommends cuts in military spending in the coming year that include further reductions in troop strength and force structure in every military service.

Questions from the airmen at Langley Air Force Base and soldiers at Fort Eustis ranged from the plight of veterans, the future of the military retirement system and the lifespan of the current force reduction to problems that could arise from a pre-World-War-II-sized Army, and how DOD will be able to keep quality soldiers in such an austere fiscal environment.

Hagel told the service members he wanted to address the budget's pay, compensation and retirement issues, because they are on the minds of service members and their families. He began with retirement, saying department leaders decided not to recommend changes on retirement until a retirement commission empaneled by Congress reports back to Congress and the Defense Department.

On the issue of pay, he said, the department will continue to recommend pay increases.

"There will be a slight decrease in those increases, but it's a cost of growth in a growth-of-increase recommendation," he said, "so make sure you understand that."

On compensation and benefits, Hagel said, the Defense Department would not close commissaries.

Moving to the TRICARE health care plan, Hagel said the department is recommending consolidating its three systems into one system that will be more effective and efficient.

"This [will happen over a period of time and won't affect anything on base in health care]," he said. Nor would it limit preferred provider options or change health care quality, he added.

On health care co-pay increases, Hagel said, the budget request contains no recommended changes for active-duty service members. Family members and working-age retirees already have co-pay amounts, depending on their geographic locations and medical services, he noted.

Nimitz Sailors celebrate their namesake

USS Nimitz Public Affairs

The aircraft carrier USS Nimitz (CVN 68) celebrated the life of its namesake, Fleet Adm. Chester Nimitz, during the week of Feb. 24 to 28.

Chester Nimitz was born in Fredericksburg, Texas, Feb. 24, 1885.

After graduating from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1905, he served at a variety of various commands that led up to his selection to admiral.

He played a huge role in the success of the U.S. in the war in the Pacific during World War II when he consequently received his promotion to fleet admiral Dec. 19, 1944.

Adm. Nimitz would go on to act as the U.S. signatory to the Japanese surrender aboard USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay the following year.

During his long and successful career he developed an incomparable leadership style that continued long after the war ended.

He passed away Feb. 20, 1966, just days shy of his 81st birthday, and two years later the construction began of the first in a new class of super-carriers to bear his name.

"We are so proud to share a legacy with such an admirable leader," said Capt. Jeff Ruth, commanding officer of the aircraft carrier USS Nimitz. "While it sets the bar high, the ship and its crew continue to perform as leaders in the carrier community, honorably paving the way as the first in its class."

brated in a few ways including sharing various unique multimedia products with the world, a message over the ship's announcement system, and a cake-cutting on the mess decks.

Adm. Nimitz' grandson Chet Lay, son of Catherine Nimitz Lay, provided products and a noteworthy interview over the phone.

The fleet admiral's eldest daughter Catherine smashed the champagne bottle on the aircraft carrier's bow May 13, 1972 christening USS Nimitz. Since that day she has continued to share a special bond with the ship, one that she has passed down to her children as well.

"She wants to thank all of you for keeping the country so strong and so safe," Chet Lay said on behalf of his mother during the interview. "And she feels that Nimitz is her ship and always will be and she is very proud of all of you."

Other Sailors are just as eager to participate in the significant celebration.

"This is a great day in history," said Culinary Specialist 3rd Class Kendra Bellinger at the Feb. 24 cake-cutting ceremony. "It's the birth of one of the greatest admirals in history and we are celebrating his hard work and life today."

Feb. 24 the ship was ready to post a link to a set of never-before published photos of Adm. Nimitz with family and friends. All of the items were provided by Chet Lay.

Feb. 25 brought an audio interview, providing a unique look into Nimitz' personal life.

Feb. 26, viewers saw a photo album containing the rare photos along with caption information.

Feb. 27 the ship published a special edition of its weekly publication Nimitz News with a more in-depth history of Adm. Nimitz' leadership techniques and accomplishments.

Feb. 28, Nimitz posted the link to Fleet Adm. Nimitz' Gray Book, digitized and published by the Naval War College. The book, named simply for the color of its cover, is a collection of communications between Nimitz and other commanders during World War II.

The journal, originally classified as top secret, was declassified in 1972 and provides an in-depth look into U.S. strategies and actions during the war.

Nimitz Graybook goes digital online

From Naval War College Public Affairs

The Naval War College unveiled the public online digitization project of Fleet Adm. Chester Nimitz's 4,000 page operational diary, known as The Nimitz Graybook, during an evening lecture, Feb. 24 at NWC in Newport, R.I.

Nimitz

Covering activities and correspondence of the Pacific Command from Dec. 7, 1941 to Aug. 31, 1945, the Graybook is a historical record of operations and planning in the Pacific during World War II and serves as a window into Nimitz's decision making process during the war.

"We can trace the planning process, a lot of which was pioneered here at the Naval War College, for large-scale operations and watch the war unfold almost as if we were in the room," said Craig L. Symonds, U.S. Naval Academy professor emeritus of history, during the evening lecture.

Symonds said Nimitz proclaimed that "the war-gaming experience and education he received here at NWC were central to his success in the Pacific war."

"Chester Nimitz once declared that he never encountered an event in the entire war that had not been anticipated at some level during the war-gaming practices that they had here at the Naval War College, except the kamikaze," Symonds said.

Following the war, Nimitz's Graybook remained classified for 30 years and even after it was declassified in 1972, scholars had to travel great distances to what is now, the Naval History and Heritage Command at Washington Navy Yard, to access the document. Following the events of 9/11, scholars not associated with the Department of Defense now had to leap more barriers in security to gain access the source.

In 2009, thanks to the generosity of the American Naval Records Society, the Naval Order of the United States and the Naval War College Foundation, the Graybook contents were scanned so that a CD-ROM version became available.

This proved helpful but making copies of carbon paper proved imperfect.

"It was evident that a fully digitized version, the version we celebrate and welcome this evening, was

Kepler finds 715 planets

From the National Aeronautics and Space Administration

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Kepler mission announced Feb. 26 the discovery of 715 new planets.

These newly-verified worlds orbit 305 stars, revealing multiple-planet systems much like our own solar system.

Nearly 95 percent of these planets are smaller than Neptune, which is almost four times the size of Earth.

This discovery marks a significant increase in the number of known small-sized planets more akin to Earth than previously identified exoplanets, which are planets outside our solar system.

"The Kepler team continues to amaze and excite us with their planet hunting results," said John Grunsfeld, associate administrator for NASA's Science Mission Directorate in Washington. "That these new planets and solar systems look somewhat like our own, portends a great future when we have the James Webb Space Telescope in space to characterize the new worlds."

Since the discovery of the first planets outside our solar system roughly two decades ago, verification has been a laborious planet-by-planet process.

Now, scientists have a statistical technique that can be applied to many planets at once when they are found in systems that harbor more than one planet around the same star.

To verify this bounty of planets, a research team co-led by Jack Lissauer, planetary scientist at NASA's Ames Research Center in Moffett Field, Calif., analyzed stars with more than one potential planet, all of which were detected in the first two years of Kepler's observations — May 2009 to March 2011.

The research team used a technique called verification by multiplicity, which relies in part on the logic of probability.

Kepler observes 150,000 stars, and has found a few thousand of those to have planet candidates. If the candidates were randomly distributed among Kepler's stars, only a handful would have more than one planet candidate.

However, Kepler observed hundreds of stars that have multiple planet candidates. Through a careful study of this sample, these 715 new planets were verified.

This method can be likened to the behavior we know of lions and lionesses. In our imaginary savannah, the lions are the Kepler stars and the

The artist concept depicts multiple-transiting planet systems, which are stars with more than one planet. The planets eclipse or transit their host star from the vantage point of the observer. This angle is called edge-on.

far more desirable and essential," Symonds said.

During the evening lecture, on the anniversary of Nimitz's 129th birthday, Symonds provided insight to the contents of the Graybook, and Nimitz's leadership and decision making process.

"Reading it pulls aside the curtain of history," Symonds said. "What do we see when we part aside that curtain? It becomes evident that one essential key to Allied and American success in the Pacific was Nimitz's personal role as a theater commander and in particular, his calm and even temperament. Behind those cool blue eyes was the calculating mind of a man who weighed the odds and made plans accordingly."

Following the Battle of Coral Sea and Doolittle Raid, Nimitz had lost two of his four carriers in the Pacific.

In May 1942, Nimitz learned from his code breaking team that the Japanese were planning an assault of Midway Atoll. Nimitz was faced with a decision. Wait for repair of his carriers and preserve the only two carriers left in the Pacific, or lay a trap for the Japanese and risk the only thing standing between them and the west coast of the U.S.

"Was Midway, that outpost of coral and sand, worth risking the few carriers he had? Did Nimitz want to bet his career on an unlikely victory? Yes he did," Symonds said.

Nimitz believed he could repair the Yorktown quickly and use Midway's airstrip as an immobile fourth carrier that couldn't be sunk.

"Instead of being surprised by the Japanese as had happened at Pearl Harbor, Nimitz could surprise them and send some of their carriers, and as it turned out, all of their carriers to the bottom. It's hard today, aware of how this battle turned out, to appreciate what a bold decision that was. It seems like a gamble. But in Nimitz's mind, it was not a gamble. He did not throw the dice carelessly or thoughtlessly. Nimitz fully expected to win and of course he did, spectacularly.

"More than any other single individual, Chester Nimitz was the man who won the war in the Pacific for the Allies. Now, thanks to the public availability of the Graybook, we can see and understand how he did it."

The digitization of the collection is the product of collaboration between the NWC and NHHC, funded generously through the Naval War College Foundation.

"We see this as a pilot program," said Capt. Henry Hendrix, director of NHHC. "The method in which The Graybook was digitized and cross-referenced is going to give us a path forward in making documents together that are accessible to scholars and the American public."

Stevens

Anytime we have a Sailor who violates their core values, we have a problem."

The Bluejackets Manual dated 1917 has 60 pages dedicated to the Chief Petty Officer. Written is: Unless you recognize it is your duty to instruct your juniors and unless you do instruct them, and unless your endeavor to inculcate in them the knowledge of how things should be done; of how they should conduct themselves, you will have failed in your duties.

"Chief petty officers are in a position to impact the entire chain of command from the most junior Sailor to the most senior officer," Stevens said. "Our inaction can be interpreted as unspoken permission. We have to make up our minds to control what we own. I am convinced that we can put this issue of integrity to rest quickly and maintain a steady drum beat."

The Navy Ethos states, "Integrity is the foundation of our conduct; respect for others is fundamental to our character; decisive leadership is crucial to our success."

Stevens told the audience he is not perfect. He related his story of as a young aviation structural mechanic who took great pride in fixing a plane that had experienced a malfunction in flight.

It was a common practice for the aircrew team to keep certain consumable spare parts in their helmet bag because they would eventually need them. Stevens was no exception.

One day a warrant officer stopped him. "Stevens, I heard you got some 'stuff' in your helmet bag." He knew he shouldn't have the "extra" stuff in his helmet bag so he admitted he did.

This was the quality assurance warrant, and he told Stevens to stop by at the end of the day at which time Stevens received a counseling chit.

"Sometimes we wait too long to treat the symptoms and then it becomes a fatal disease," Stevens said. "All it might take is pulling a shipmate to the side and telling them to do the right thing. You might say 'hey I don't think it's a big deal, but I don't think it's the right thing to do and we really need to stop now.'"

"I'm asking you to take control within good order and discipline of what you own and help us put out this brush fire."

Coming to the Jacksonville Area!

We need your family for a confidential research study funded by the Department of Defense examining stress and resilience!

The Department of Psychology at the University of Central Florida (UCF) is conducting a clinical research study investigating how military deployment affects families. Active duty families with children between ages 7 and 17 can participate in this confidential research study. Families where a parent is currently deployed or not currently deployed are needed.

The study consists of a 2-3 hour initial assessment of mood, behavior, and resilience strategies. You and your child(ren) will then complete the study at home, spending less than 7 minutes a day for one week.

Up to $100 in compensation is available; $20.00 at the start of the study and $80.00 at study completion.

Old fire truck on comeback road

The Flying Leatherneck Aviation Museum acquired an International Harvester FFN-3 fire and crash crew engine in running condition, Nov. 13.

The museum's staff began researching the seven decades-old fire engine immediately and is beginning the restoration process in earnest at last.

This particular World War II-era engine was first used to fight fire aboard Marine Corps Air Station El Toro, Calif., during 1944, making it a piece of MCAS Miramar, Calif., and the community's history.

"This is part of [the air station's] heritage," said Steve "Smitty" Smith, curator with the Flying Leatherneck Aviation Museum. "There aren't a lot of these engines around anymore and for us to find one that used to serve aboard El Toro is just amazing; and how often does anyone get to see a vintage World War II fire engine?"

Firefighters with the Miramar Fire Department paid a visit to the museum to see a bit of that history firsthand and one firefighter couldn't contain his interest in the rusty, red engine.

"It's great that this truck could even be found, let alone in working condition," said Dan Regis, an engineer with Engine 60 at the Miramar Fire Department. "I like that you can find something that still has its originality; it hasn't been hacked to pieces or modified and this is just about as original as it gets. This will allow people to really see what state-of-the-art was back in this truck's day and what we have come to today."

The Marine Corps Mechanized Museum aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton, Calif., undertook this project to aid the aviation museum by providing parts and leads to where more needed parts for the fire engine can be found.

All that remains now is to find able-bodied volunteers to help in its restoration, and also more researchers to help document the markings and history of this particular vehicle.

"[We] aren't fire engine and crash crew specialists by any means," said Smith. "We aren't sure whether this truck was an [installation] asset or if they deployed with squadrons during WWII and Korea. We do know this truck is in rough shape, but is a part of our history, and we would love some help restoring it."

This project requires volunteers with experience in body work, brake-system repair or any other kind of vehicle maintenance or restoration to see to a timely conclusion for display in the San Diego County Fair in June.

"In the past two years at the fair, we've noticed the first weekend is about the fire departments," said Smith. "We really want to get this truck out there to share its history with the community and firefighters to pay homage not just to them, but to their past as firemen."

Volunteers who want to be a part of restoring history are encouraged to contact the Flying Leatherneck Aviation Museum for opportunities in not only this project, but many others.

Exit plan made for Afghanistan

American Forces Press Service

President Barack Obama Feb. 25 informed Afghan President Hamid Karzai that because the Afghan leader has demonstrated that it is unlikely that he will sign the bilateral security agreement on a U.S. military presence in Afghanistan beyond this year, he has asked the Pentagon to ensure that it has adequate plans in place to accomplish an orderly withdrawal by the end of the year should the United States not keep any troops in Afghanistan after 2014.

In a summary of the Obama-Karzai phone call released to reporters, White House officials said Obama is leaving open the possibility of concluding a bilateral security agreement with Afghanistan later this year.

"However, the longer we go without a BSA, the more challenging it will be to plan and execute any U.S. mission," they added. "Furthermore, the longer we go without a BSA, the more likely it will be that any post-2014 U.S. mission will be smaller in scale and ambition."

Soon after, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel released a statement expressing his "strong support" for the president's decision.

"This is a prudent step, given that President Karzai has demonstrated that it is unlikely that he will sign the bilateral security agreement, which would provide DOD personnel with critical protections and authorities after 2014," the secretary said.

He also commended the efforts of Marine Corps Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr., commander of U.S. forces and the NATO-led International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, and States works to determine the future of the U.S. presence in Afghanistan.

"As the United States military continues to move people and equipment out of the Afghan theater, our force posture over the next several months will provide various options for political leaders in the United States and NATO," Hagel said in his statement. "And during this time, DOD will still continue planning for U.S. participation in a NATO-led mission focused on training, advising, and assisting Afghan security forces, as well as a narrowly focused counterterrorism mission."

The United States will consult closely with NATO allies and ISAF partners in the months ahead, he added, noting that he looks forward to discussing U.S. planning with NATO and ISAF defense ministers in Brussels this week.

Diver course on internet

By Chief Warrant Officer 3 Randy Duncan
 Center for EOD and Diving Public Affairs

Following feedback from the fleet regarding the need for course updates, the Center for Explosive Ordnance and Diving in Panama City announced Feb. 25 the availability of the Navy Diver Salvage Course on Navy e-Learning.

Previously available as one 'master' course, the NDSC has been broken into four individual course modules: Navy Diver Salvage Fundamentals, Naval Architecture, Operations, and Scenarios.

Diving Advisory 14-02 announced the promulgation of the new course and transition date for personnel enrolled in the previous version. Completion of the NDSC course is a prerequisite for Master Diver evaluation and for Diving Warrant Officer applicants.

According to CENEODDIVE Learning Standards Officer Melanie Hinson, this course redesign enables Sailors to complete their online training in more manageable modules, and also provides just-in-time training for Sailors who may need refresher training on specific salvage topics.

The previous edition was one long course that contained 92 hours of training.

Accident claims two

From EOD Group 2 Public Affairs

Navy Diver 1st Class James Reyher, 28, of Caldwell, Ohio, and Navy Diver 2nd Class Ryan Harris, 23, of Gladstone, Mo., died while conducting dive operations at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Aberdeen, Md., Feb. 26.

Harris and Reyher were assigned to Mobile Diving and Salvage Unit (MDSU) 2, located at Joint Expeditionary Base Little Creek-Ft. Story.

EODGRU-2 is conducting an investigation into the deaths of the Sailors.

"The new modularized training empowers the learner to focus on related topics which result in greater understanding of the material and enhanced comprehension," Hinson said. "A primary emphasis of the revision dealt with making the mathematical computations easier to follow through the use of in-depth, step-by-step examples that provide a crawl, walk, run approach to the learning experience for our Sailors."

illustrates how the information in the other three course modules applies to real-world salvage operations.

"Course update project tasks were accomplished by Subject Matter Experts who performed this review and course upgrade in addition to their normal duties," CENEODDIVE Master Chief Navy Diver William Hargaray said. "Using SMEs current with down-range operations allowed the course fundamentals, graphics, training sequence, math calculations, assessments, and references to align with the needs of the fleet."

Capt. James Beene, commanding officer of CENEODDIVE noted that the updated courses are more than just a periodic review.
