Relief in sight for housing residents

Increased funding means more DEH service to living quarters

by Gaby Capriles
DEH Public Relations

COROZAL - New funding guidance for Fiscal Year 1995 promises some relief from last year's severe cutbacks in service calls for Army on-post family housing residents, according to Lt. Col. Patrick Staffieri, Director of Engineering and Housing.

The new funding for the operation and maintenance of Army family housing will allow full operation and maintenance service to resume in family housing quarters, as well as between-occupancy repairs, he said.

Work on major projects, however, will continue to be on hold until the outstanding backlog of service orders is eliminated.

Last year's $6 million dollar shortfall in the overall family housing budget caused critical reductions allowing only minimum essential operations through September. All new (FY94) upgrade projects were also deferred.

During this time, the Army's self-help program was aggressively promoted to customers as an alternate means of repairs. A systematic approach to self-help training was initiated at the PACE Improvement Center, the Army's self-help store, in order to make self-help a more viable approach. Self-help supplies were also restocked in greater quantities at the store.

"The DEH alone could not have survived the budget crunch without the support from the community in general. We asked for your assistance and participation through self-help measures and your enthusiastic response strongly contributed towards relieving the critical situation which affected the entire Army Family Housing population.

"By working together as a community, we again were able to pull through the hard times as we have done in the past," Staffieri said.

Despite the budget crunch, the DEH continued to respond.

"During Fiscal year 94, 25,380 service calls from family housing residents were received at the DEH Service Order Desk, about 2,115 calls per month," said Mr. Antonio Reina, chief of DEH Management Branch. "Ninety percent of family housing service orders that were called in were completed (22,800 jobs)."

"Our customer satisfaction surveys also continued to show our customers' support throughout the ordeal. Of 590 customers that were randomly surveyed from February through October, roughly 90 percent rated our overall service as excellent," Staffieri said.

"We may have won the battle but not the war. I would still ask family housing residents to continue to use self help as much as possible," Staffieri said. "I thank you for accepting the responsibility of being proud and prudent residents during last year's crisis and would urge you to continue taking advantage of our self-help program and store, especially the tailor-made training we have devised for our customers."

DEH offers an expanded series of self-help classes on a regular schedule that cover most aspects of self-help repairs.

Reenlistment program changes to affect junior enlisted soldiers

FORT CLAYTON (USARSO PAO) - Several changes to the reenlistment program will affect junior enlisted soldiers during 1995.

The changes came about because of the increased amount of soldiers in overstrength military occupational specialties.

The first change will allow specialists and below, serving in a balanced or overstrength MOS, who are within 12 months of their estimated time of separation to request reenlistment for retraining into the following critical MOSs: 11B, 11C, 11H, 11M, 12B, 13B, 13F, 13M, 16S, 19D, 19K, 77F, 92A, 96B, and 98G. They may also receive station of choice.

If otherwise qualified, soldiers may also have the 110 general technical score and new MOS Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery score waived, but must still meet the minimum ASVAB required for the requested MOS.

The second change is the addition of new MOSs to the Bonus Extension and Retraining Program. The MOSs are 11M, 13B, 13F and 19K.

The BEAR program permits eligible soldiers an opportunity to extend their enlistment for formal training in a shortage MOS that is in the Selection Reenlistment Bonus program. Upon completion, the soldier will be awarded with the new primary MOS, reenlist and receive an SRB in the new MOS.

Specialists and below who are outside the 12-month window who are in an overstrength or balanced MOS may also reclassify into one of the critical MOSs.

Soldiers outside their window should call their Personnel Action Center for information. Soldiers inside their 12-month window should call their unit retention NCO.

Navy, Marine housing to be inspected for lead, asbestos

RODMAN NS (Rodman NS PAO) - The Public Works Center from Pensacola, Fla., will conduct routine inspections of military family housing units here in mid November. The inspection's purpose is to determine if there are measurable amounts of lead and asbestos, local Navy housing officials said.

The Lead and Asbestos Assessment Program, which began in early 1993, will eventually include all Navy and Marine Corps housing units world-wide, officials said. They estimate these inspections will take about four years to complete.

The program's purpose is to identify the location of lead and asbestos and to determine what safety precautions can be taken. The program determines if maintenance or repairs are needed. Officials said the presence of lead or asbestos does not mean these substances present a health risk.

Inspections include sampling of suspect asbestos materials and sampling of dust and soil for lead and X-ray fluorescence of all painted components in the residence. The inspection time varies depending on the size of the house, but officials said most should take two to three hours.

The local Navy Housing Office will notify residents of inspection dates.

24th Wing kicks off '94 CFC Air Force hopes to raise $60,000

HOWARD AFB (24th Wing PA) - The Combined Federal Campaign sign—located on Andrews Boulevard near the commissary—reflects the 24th Wing's progress toward its 1994 goal of $60,000.

The CFC gives people the chance to contribute to any of literally hundreds of worthy organizations, with contributors deciding where their gift goes. The campaign began Oct. 17 and will run through Nov. 30.

Maj. Kevin Illsley, 24th Wing CFC project officer, emphasized that some contribution policies from last year have changed.

"Previously, a portion of all undesignated contributions people made to the CFC went to overseas family support and youth activities programs," he said. "This year, however, people wanting to support these programs must specify with the four-digit code "FSYP" on their pledge cards."

To find out more information about the '94 CFC, people may call the wing's assistant project officer, 2nd Lt. Rick Jones, at 284-4118/5850.

Galeta Island celebrates final Navy Birthday Ball

FORT DAVIS (USGA Galeta PAO) - The soldiers, sailors and Marines of the Naval Security Group Activity, Galeta Island, celebrated the command's final Navy Ball Oct. 13 at the community club here.

It was more than being the command's final ball that made it special, said Chief Warrant Officer Larry J. Galloway, event coordinator.

"Everything went smoothly from beginning to end," Galloway said. "The whole thing took a lot of planning and coordination, but it all boiled down to having a good time."

The ball's guest speaker, Rear Adm. James Blenn Perkins III, deputy commander in chief, U.S. Southern Command, spoke about pride and professionalism. He also touched on bits of the Navy's proud fighting history.

While the command is not technically a joint-service command, you wouldn't know it by looking around, Perkins said.

"I can honestly say that I've never seen so many Army uniforms at a Navy Day Ball before," said Perkins about the high attendance of Army personnel.

The live dinner music performed by local guitarist Amsecy Ross was appreciated.

"The guitarist was great—it was up-to-date music and everyone seemed to enjoy it," said Petty Officer 2nd Class David C. Anderson.

The traditional cake-cutting ceremony was done with a native flair. A stainless steel machete held by the youngest and oldest sailors in attendance, sliced effortlessly through the cake. The oldest sailor in attendance, Petty Officer 1st Class Peter J. Jez, passed a piece of cake to the youngest sailor, Seaman Apprentice Douglas E. England.

This tradition signifies the passing of wisdom from the oldest to the youngest sailor. In return, the youngest sailor is passing on his respect to the oldest sailor.

Military driving class teaches soldiers to be 'street-wise'

by Sgt. Eric Hortin
USARSO Public Affairs Office

ALBROOK AS - Driving in Panama. For some, that phrase brings a shiver and feelings of dread.

For those in the military who drive for a living, every day is a challenge. Driving the military vehicles on narrow streets, over the Bridge of the Americas and from one ocean to the other, soldiers are constantly faced with the hazards of driving in Panama.

Soldiers of Company B, 193rd Support Battalion went through a three-phase drivers training to help them become safer drivers during their tour overseas. Besides safety reasons, the unit's mission requires all soldiers to have the knowledge to operate several different vehicles.

"Our mission covers the Pacific to the Atlantic, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year," said 2nd Lt. Samuel Lopez-Santana, Maintenance Platoon leader and unit motor officer. "Our unit put more than 15,000 miles on vehicles last month. We have drivers in Suriname, Honduras and up in Fort Chaffee, Ark.

"The training we're conducting is training every soldier in Panama should have. It's important because you never know when you'll be pulled to drive a piece of equipment," he said.

The soldiers were trained on several vehicles, including the Humvee, two-and-a-half ton and five ton trucks. The training covered everything from performing operator maintenance, maintenance checks and services to familiarization with the vehicles and driving. The leaders believe this training will accomplish what is important...fewer accidents.

"If every unit in Panama had this type of training, the accident rate would be a lot less for soldiers and civilians," Lopez-Santana said. "We can't wait for an accident to start this training."

As well as training safer drivers, the unit is practicing for the upcoming truck rodeo and preparing for the judging for the Army Maintenance Excellence Award. The unit took third place in the Army last year for maintenance and are hoping to take the top spot this time around.

U.S. troops, Panamanians learn rescue techniques

by Sgt. James A. Rush
24th Wing Public Affairs

HOWARD AFB - The latest search and rescue techniques were taught to military members and local officials during a seminar Oct. 11-14 at the Zodiac Recreation Center here.

Local personnel from Joint Rescue Coordination Center, Army aviation and special operations made up half the class. The remaining students represented Panama's National Air Service, National Maritime Service, Civil Aeronautics Directorate, and the Paitilla Aero Club.

The course, taught by U.S. Coast Guard experts, is designed primarily for U.S. state and county law enforcement/emergency services and Civil Air Patrol students, according to Master Sgt. Rene Zapata of the Joint Rescue Coordination Center here. Instructors are based at the National Search and Rescue School, USCG Reserve Training Center, Yorktown, Va.

Panama is in the process of establishing independent search and rescue procedures in anticipation of the further drawdown of the U.S. military presence in the country, according to Zapata. The government is trying to build its program based on the United States model.

"This course will help them become independent. They'll be able to run rescue missions on their own rather than rely on SOUTHCOM (U.S. Southern Command) to assume the responsibility of providing SAR capability for the international aviation and maritime communities."

Topics discussed included "How Not to Conduct a Search," "Lost Subject Behavior," and "Legal Aspects of SAR." Attendees also learned about various high- and low-tech SAR equipment; from infrared vision, radar and sonar to dogs, pigeons, seals and dolphins.

The National SAR School offers 20 courses each year at its Yorktown facility. In addition, the five-day course is held at locations around the United States six times a year.

Safe Haven still needs donations

Mayors' Corner

Dear Mayors' Corner,

The Tropic Times had an article requesting donations of clothing, games, magazines, videos and toys for Operation Safe Haven.

Please provide the community with additional information for those wishing to make donations to both Operation Safe Haven and Operation Distant Haven.

Information Seeker

Dear Seeker,

I sent your letter to the non-commissioned officer in charge of the Safe Haven Family Support Center, Tech. Sgt. Annette Henry, who provided the following response.

Although Operation Safe Haven is up and running strong, we have not advertised for donations for the well-being of Haitian refugees at Operation Distant Haven. The camps never received Haitian migrants and Operation Distant Haven is now folding up, sending our troops home.

To volunteer for Operation Safe Haven, inquire about donation points, or for more information call 284-3153.

Dear Mayors' Corner,

I take exception to the 24th Air Postal Squadron spokesperson's statement about mail delivery to Panama in the July article, "Troops: Panama Mail On Slow Boat" in the Army Times. In the article, the spokesperson stated, "There is a perceived delay by the people in Panama." Perception? I can state in no uncertain terms that there is a problem with 2nd, 3rd and 4th class mail delivery from the continental United States.

After forwarding my fifth complaint citing specific examples of late delivery to the 24th Postal Squadron, I am writing to the Mayors' Corner, hoping for a response. The local postal clerks assure me the inquiries were forwarded to the 24th Air Postal Squadron Operation section for review.

I will cite a couple of my recent problems: Receiving a March issue of a magazine in July, a 4th class package that took 52 days to arrive from Colorado, but the replacement package took only six days.

I have done all that the 24th spokesperson initially told me to do in February: I checked with all magazine publishers to re-verify mailing addresses and informed the 24th about each instance of late delivery.

Christmas is almost upon us. What will the added strain of Christmas orders and packages do to an already ailing system?

What is being done about the problem? It has been at least 30 days since the 24th said they forwarded the problems to the U.S. Postal Service. What is the latest update? Was the problem found? When can we expect prompt mail delivery within the Postal Service's own 30-45 day delivery window. Until the problem is corrected, it would be a good idea if the 24th could update their APO customers from time to time through the Tropic Times.

Is It In The Mail?

Dear In The Mail,

Capt. Karen Jordan, 24th Air Postal Squadron commander wrote: I sincerely apologize for not answering your complaints; however, I cannot answer what I do not receive. Upon receiving your letter I contacted the postal clerk in question. She remembered "taking care" of two complaints.

Please let my clarify what was meant in the July article in the Army Times. The U.S. Postal Service sets standards of delivery for each class of mail based on point of origin and destination. For surface mail destined to Panama, the USPS standard is 45-60 days. While that is a long wait for customers, surface mail arriving within that time standard (usually large parcels) is considered acceptable by the USPS. If the delivery date exceeds 75 days, a claim can be filed by the originator for the value of the price it was insured, or for the cost of postage if it was not.

Recently the commander of the Joint Military Postal Activity-Atlantic and a USPS representative from the Bulk Mail Center in New Jersey visited the 24th Air Postal Squadron to discuss transportation issues. This was a result of the involvement of senior leadership from the 24th Wing and the U.S. Southern Command to help solve this problem. As a result, the port of departure for mail destined to Panama was shifted from Lake Charles, La. back to Port Everglades, Fla.. This should cut transit time by several days. JMPA is also working to reduce dead time in the transit cycle from the BMC to Port Everglades, and the possibility of using non-U.S. flag ships to carry the mail.

As for the 24th Air Postal Squadron, we will do a better job of keeping our customers updated on the status of these and other initiatives. To that end, we have assigned an individual as community relations non-commissioned officer, who will keep the community abreast of changes, and we will also post magazine advisories in all post offices when we are notified of late arrivals to the Bulk Mail Centers.

Editor's note: To submit questions to the Mayoral Congress, send letters to: Mayors' Corner, publicity chairperson, APO AA 34004 (MPS). Anonymity will be granted upon request. The Tropic Times reserves the right edit letters and responses for brevity.

Soldiers brawl in Howard NCO Club

Crime Scene

Club fight

Two soldiers were involved in a fight after one soldier threw a beer bottle at the other in the Howard NCO Club. The first bottle hurled missed, but the second bottle hit the soldier in the head, causing severe cuts. Another soldier was taken to Gorgas Army Community Hospital for reconstructive surgery to his hand.

Alcohol is the catalyst for many acts of violence. Know your limit and never drive under the influence of alcohol

Eye-struck

A servicemember reported he was struck in the eye by another servicemember at the My Place Bar in Panama City. The servicemember was taken to Gorgas Army Community Hospital and released after treatment.

Decal abuse

Because of the abuse of the current handicapped decals, the Fort Clayton Vehicle Registration Office will be issuing a handicap placard. According to U.S. Southern Command regulation 190-5, paragraph 6c, people authorized a handicapped decal are those who are permanently disabled by the loss of use of one or both legs or is unable to get around without a wheelchair or other mechanical device.

People who require a decal need to pick up the request from the Vehicle Registration Office, Building 849, Fort Clayton, and have it filled out by a medical officer and returned before Nov. 30. After that date, people without the new handicapped decal who park in handicapped slots will be cited with a DD Form 1408.

Recovered property

A bicycle was found in the Fort Kobbe area, while a cooler was recovered from the Curundu housing area between Sept. 23-28.

If you have any information about this property or are missing them and have not made a report, call the Fort Clayton Military Police Investigations Office at 287-3808/5252.

Stolen jewelry

While performing routine security at the main exchange, Army and Air Force Exchange Services security observed a family member take three necklaces from a display and put them in her front pocket. She left the store without paying and was stopped by security.

The military police remind shoppers that shoplifting is a crime which can result in Uniform Code of Military Justice action and the loss of shopping privileges in AAFES stores.

Child neglect

The military police want to remind parents not to leave young children unattended at any time. According to U.S. Army Garrison Regulation 210-1, children 9 years and younger, must be accompanied by an adult or supervised by a responsible person 13 years or older at all times. People caught violating this regulation will be cited for child neglect.

Bicycles stolen

A quarters at Fort Amador was broken into and two bicycles were stolen from a storeroom. The last time the occupant checked his storeroom was nine days before the theft.

Bruja speeding

Many citations have been issued for speeding and reckless driving on Bruja Road. Exceeding the posted speed limit by 25 mph is considered reckless driving and takes six points off a person's driver's license.

Letter

Dear Editor,

Quality child care comes from those who believe in each child as an individual who can and who will do.

A big thank you to the staff at the Howard Child Development Center.

Also a word of thanks to a very special lady who has taught me that a little tact and a lot of class will take a military wife far. I owe you one, Marie. I'll keep in touch from Fitzsimmons, Colo.

Pet dumping

Homes needed for stray animal population

by Staff Sgt. Jane Usero
USARSO Public Affairs

Those eyes. Those big, brown innocent eyes. They look up with hurt and fear as if to ask, "What have I done? I love you, I thought you loved me too." And as the car drives away, he runs a while trying to keep up, barking and crying as if screaming, "Why are you leaving me here? I'm scared. Please come back and take me home!"

As night comes and a light rain begins to fall, he crawls under a bush, shivering and whimpering quietly. Though he is hungry, he is afraid to leave this spot. His family might come back and he would miss them. Surely they were coming back. He had done nothing wrong.

He spent his two years of life with his family. Playing with the children in the yard, protecting his family's property when they were gone and loving them unconditionally.

But they don't come back that night—or ever. This little dog, who once lived well and secure in the warmth and love of a family he cherished, now spends his days dodging fast moving cars, fighting other dogs for what little food he can scrounge from garbage cans and running from people who want nothing but to hurt him.

He will never understand what happened to his family or why they hated him so much that they left him to live as he does now.

To be quite honest, I don't understand how people can do this either. To adopt a pet, whether a cat or a dog, love it and take care of it and then, just dump it somewhere and take off as if this is a normal part of life.

I have heard the excuses—I didn't have the heart to put him to sleep; I couldn't find a good home; I just couldn't take care of him anymore; I am going back to the states and can't afford to take him with me; It's better this way, at least he has a chance for life.

I'm here to tell you, these or any other excuses, are nothing but lame, inexcusable, fool-hearted and asinine bull...puckey.

Didn't they think before they took this living creature into their home that this was a lifetime deal? Didn't they think that one day they would be going back to the states? Didn't they think that dumping him off somewhere would make his life miserable and that he would suffer, be lonely and live a very short and painful life?

That's the problem. People who are cruel and uncaring enough to just dump a family pet off and drive away don't have the gray matter it takes to think. Whatever the reason, I personally think they are the scum of the Earth.

This tabby kitten is one of many pets available for adoption at the Corozal Veterinary Treatment Facility. For information, call 285-5866.

And for those who think that abandoned pets aren't a serious problem and that I shouldn't be wasting my or their time, I have done a little research.

According to the book, "Train Your Cat," by animal psychologist Terry Jester, approximately seven million cats were destroyed in the U.S. in 1989 at animal shelters and pounds. This number doesn't even come remotely close to the number of animals that are killed each year by starvation, disease or injury after being abandoned by their owners.

Closer to home, the numbers aren't nearly as ominous. But, comparing the population of the United States to that of the military stationed here, the numbers are just as painful.

The Corozal Veterinary Treatment Facility received 1,115 stray animals over the past 18 months. Of those, 163 were reclaimed by their owners and 433 were adopted—thankfully, but hopefully to homes where they won't end up back on the streets.

Still, this leaves 519 that either died of complications to illness or injury, or that had to be humanely destroyed. And these were the lucky ones. Many thousands more still roam the streets in search of food, shelter and maybe just a little kindness and love. Most never find anything but the wheels of a passing car and lay unmourned along the side of a busy road.

Cats and dogs are not wild animals, they are domesticated. Just because they are animals, it doesn't mean they can make it on their own. We domesticated them, it is our responsibility to care for them.

If you have a pet of your own, remember that for every pooch that lays at your feet and every purring fur-ball that curls up in your lap, there are thousands more that are laying in muddy ditches or curled up in damp holes. Make sure your family pet doesn't end up the same way.

For those who don't have pets but may one day want one, think it through BEFORE you take that cute and cuddly fur-ball home. It is a lifetime commitment that not everyone is ready for.

If you are absolutely positive you will be keeping this animal for the rest of its life, take him home and fill his life with love because that is what he will do for you. If you are not sure, do yourself and the animal a favor and don't take him.

If you do take the little fellow home, do him another favor and have him fixed as soon as he is old enough. A big contributor to the stray population is unwanted litters from both family pets and those animals who were so cruelly abandoned.

When you see an abandoned pet, report it to the military police or the nearest veterinary facility. If you see someone or know of someone who has or is planning to abandon a pet, report them as well.

Abandoning a pet is not only cruel, inhumane and coldhearted, but it is also against Army regulations and, if stateside, it is against the law. There are many avenues that can be taken if an emergency situation comes up and you can no longer care for your pet. Advertise for a good home, ask friends, ask the veterinary facility or even board them until the situation is resolved—just don't take them out and dump them.

If the reasons are actually lame excuses and you just don't feel like keeping your pet, you can seek the same avenues instead of abandoning them. Just because a human can't make a responsible, mature decision and stick to it, doesn't mean the animal should suffer for it.

So, the next time you feel like cursing out that skinny little cat that rummages through your garbage at 3 a.m. or you feel like throwing a stick at that scrawny little pooch that always tries to follow you home, remember—it isn't their fault. Curse out those uncaring individuals who dumped them and left them to fend for themselves.

Beneath the camouflage story and photos by Sgt. James Rush

24th Wing Public Affairs

Don't call them bluesuiters while they're in Panama. For the duration of their deployment in support of Operation Safe Haven, the Air Force members at Camp No. 2 will be dressed in green, black, and brown camouflage.

More than 150 people are deployed to operate the camp. The majority are Air Force members from all corners of the United States: from Nellis AFB, Nev., and Langley AFB, Va.; to Offutt AFB, Neb., and Barksdale AFB, La.

"We've got people from bases all over and they've gelled as a team quickly to meet our objectives," said Lt. Col. Mario A. Valadez, Camp No. 2 commander. Valadez is from Headquarters 12th Air Force, Davis-Monthan AFB, Ariz.

Valadez also gave credit to the airmen of the 24th Wing and soldiers from U.S. Southern Command and U.S. Army South who account for the rest of the Camp No. 2 crew. Together they have tackled what he calls a most unusual assignment.

"We are responsible for the humanitarian needs of more than 2,000 people. There is a unique and challenging mission here, but it's one we've been very successful at," Valadez said. "I often get stopped in the camp to be thanked (by Cubans) for three things: the facilities, the way we treat them and the food."

By Oct. 13, the camp's population had reached 2,156; however, up to 2,500 Cubans could eventually relocate here from Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

"We treat this like it is a small town," said Master Sgt. William A. Schmidt, the Non Commissioned Officer in Charge of camp's tactical operations center. "We have to care for their medical needs, give them food and provide shelter. We also lend the Cubans tools, concrete gravel and help them build things for themselves."

Schmidt, who is also the camp's signal officer, is from Tinker AFB, Okla., and sees this assignment as a change of pace for Air Force members. A former security policeman, the NCO was used to keeping people out of installations.

"On the other hand, the SPs (security police) here keep people in, but they have to handle it very carefully," he said.

More than 80 security police are deployed to the 20-acre site from units at Andrews AFB, Md., and Davis-Monthan. Despite not having a single bilingual person among them, the security police encourage the "protectors" image by conducting unarmed foot patrols within the fence and manning a 24-hour precinct house and information booth in the middle of the camp.

"We try to show that we're there for them," said Master Sgt. Steve Hersh, the SP day shift flight sergeant. "We stop and chit-chat, try to fit the image of a friend or older brother, and as a result I think the majority of the public trusts us."

Two-by-two, the foot patrols hike through the camp. For half of their 12-hour shift they walk, dodging mud puddles the blazing sun hasn't dried up, breaking up an occasional disturbance, but more often pausing to challenge the language barrier by swapping words. Their goal, according to Hersh, is to develop a "beat cop" atmosphere where community members are familiar with their law enforcement officials and see them as friends.

During one of its frequent stops at the precinct house to refill canteens, a patrol is just as likely to sit down with a Cuban as it is with an American. Tech. Sgt. Richard T. Kendall, of the 24th Security Police Squadron at Howard AFB, recruited five community members to act as liaisons by fielding questions and helping to man the desk.

Kendall speaks Spanish but admits his mastery of the language has "improved 100 percent" while teaching the liaisons English police phrases such as "this person wants to report a theft," "There is an injury," and "Here is a public address announcement."

"And they've picked it up very quickly," he said. "In fact, they've done so well, it's been OK'd to keep them on full-time."

On the outside, police keep vigil at several guardposts and patrol three-quarters of a mile of fence line on four-wheel all-terrain vehicles. To date, only two immigrants have successfully climbed the fence and both were stopped and returned to the camp within minutes.

"The first couple of weeks were tough. We weren't used to the heat and humidity," Hersh, who is from Andrews AFB, said. "We've got a good crew here though and they've come through well."

"We modeled our security after programs used at bases in the U.S. Once we assessed our weaknesses and our strengths, we built an operating instruction so that the next team can step right in," Hersh said.

While the security police work to ensure domestic tranquility at the camp, others provide for the needs of both the immigrants and military members assigned there. The team includes civil engineering NCOs on temporary duty here to offer guidance for camp construction projects, a 24th Medical Squadron dentist with two assistants, and chaplains who see to the spiritual welfare of Cubans and Americans alike.

Providing support for all of the camp's airmen and soldiers is the S-1 element that acts as a combined military personnel flight and orderly room. They track career issues like reenlistments and career-job-reservations, process emergency leave requests, and provide other administrative support such as relaying information from the joint task force headquarters.

Working in the field environment and trying to meet the needs of people from so many different bases has proven to be challenging for the personnel staff.

"When we got here, we had computers, but no electricity for them," Senior Airman Christine E. Harwood, an information manager from Nellis AFB, said. "Now we've been moved inside a building, but before we had to go to JTF headquarters or Howard for personnel jobs."

One key ally of Harwood and her co-workers has been the Personnel Support for Contingency Operations office here.

"Our customers are from various bases throughout CONUS (continental United States) and we have to communicate with our base counterparts at these locations," Staff Sgt. Dave Gordon, NCOIC of personnel, said. "To do this we go through PERSCO. They have played a significant role in helping with Camp 2 personnel jobs."

Personnel's labors aren't limited to military members. They've drawn the Cuban immigrants under their wings as well. The section is responsible for maintaining the Deployable Mass Population Identification and Tracking System, a computer program designed to monitor the names and other personal information of the Cubans occupying the camp.

"Each of us had to get trained on the system when we got here, but now it can tell us the occupation, age, marital status and more about any of the Cubans in the camp," Gordon, TDY from Barksdale AFB, La., said.

"It's a lot of work, but when you look out there and see all those faces, it makes you feel like you're doing something worthwhile. They are glad to be in a safe and better life."

More than one airman has picked up on this current of optimism that runs through the Cubans. Tech. Sgt. Carlos F. Ruiz of the 24th Services Squadron monitors the food contractor providing three meals a day to the immigrants.

Ruiz and other services specialists must ensure the food being served is of high quality and that proper sanitary standards are being met. Camp attendance is also taken at meal times as the Cubans file through the chow line before sitting down to eat.

The job is fast-paced and completed in military fashion. More than 2,000 people get their food, sit and eat quickly before surrendering their seat to another diner.

Yet Ruiz always makes time to talk to the many friends he has made during deployment. During his rounds of the seven 100-person tents in the seating area, the NCO is like that hometown bartender with a sympathetic ear.

"Being able to communicate with them, I can share my experiences and listen to their stories in turn," he said. "When you get to share with them, to know them, it's great. It gives them hope. There are doctors, lawyers and people of all classes here who are now neighbors and they've come together for one reason ... the dream of freedom."

Local AUSA liaison wins President's service medal

ARLINGTON, VA (AUSA) - William Hinkle, the liaison for the corporate membership of the Isthmian Chapter of the Association of the United States Army was awarded the President's Medal for exceptional service to AUSA Oct. 17 during the AUSA's 40th annual meeting in Washington, D.C.

Hinkle has served the U.S. Army and AUSA for more than a decade. He has established numerous programs that focused on military and civilian understanding and cooperation towards the U.S. Army. He has also championed causes that directly benefitted American soldiers, their families and the people of the Republic of Panama.

U.S. Army South set up a display of the USARSO mission at the Association of the U.S. Army Annual Convention in Washington D.C. Oct. 17-20.

He has also been instrumental in arranging social events such as the annual AUSA Open House Christmas Ball and the command Family Day program and picnic.

With Hinkle's help, the Isthmian chap-

Air Force people 'make a difference'

by Staff Sgt. Rian Clawson
24th Wing Public Affairs

HOWARD AFB - Active duty members, civilians and family members from several local military organizations baked cookies, clipped coupons, served meals, fingerprinted children, pounded nails and scraped and painted buildings, and even pricked fingers and blew air in people's eyes Saturday to try and "make a difference" in the local community.

This is the fourth year the annual "Make a Difference Day" event has been celebrated in the U.S.—and the second year it has been celebrated in the Panama community, said Laila Yeager, project manager for this year's activities.

"Many people would like to 'make a difference' every day, but with their jobs and their kids and all the things that are happening in their lives, they often simply run out of time," she explained.

"Others really don't believe they can make a significant difference by themselves."

"Make a Difference Day" addresses both issues, letting people set aside a specific day to work out their schedules and get together with others, to combine their efforts toward a common good.

Some of the people who pooled their efforts and those who benefited from them included:

◆People from the Family Support Center delivered home-baked cookies to unaccompanied airmen living in the dormitories, and also handed out coupons at the Howard and Corozal commissaries.

◆24th Security Police Squadron personnel registered bicycles and fingerprinted children for Project FIND at the Howard theater and the Albrook Shoppette area while the 24th Civil Engineer Squadron members performed bicycle safety inspections at the same locations.

◆Members of the 24th Operation Support Squadron worked to beautify Albrook AFS by planting young trees along the road leading from the back gate.

◆24th Medical Group optometry specialists performed glaucoma screening and collected used eyeglasses to "recycle" among people who have none, while health promotions specialists did cholesterol screening at the Howard commissary.

◆The 310th Airlift Squadron spearheaded a project to paint and renovate areas of the dormitory in Building 810 at Albrook AFS. Other dorm residents assigned to other organizations also participated in "sprucing up" the place in which they live.

◆The Howard/Albrook Enlisted Spouses' Club put on a dinner for more than 40 homeless men at the "Luz y Vida" Men's home in Casco Viejo, Panama.

◆People from the 24th Air Support Operations Squadron put on a used clothing drive, and the Howard and Albrook youth centers and AAFES collected both clothing and toys for donation to underprivileged children.

"A lot of people got together to work on our consolidated dorm," said Senior Airman Scott Reed, 24th Air Postal Squadron. "We did some cleaning and painting, we replaced broken fixtures, we hung some pictures and generally tried to make the dorm more livable. I expected dorm residents would participate, 'cause we live here, but it was great to see other people working on a project that didn't benefit them. They were just doing something nice for someone else—us."

"The bike registration program is a mandatory program which all community members must participate in," said Staff Sgt. Jacqueline Wheeler, installation crime prevention monitor. "Unfortunately, because of people's work schedules and other factors, it's sometimes difficult for them to come to us. We decided to 'make a difference' by setting up in a central location during non-duty hours and making it easier for them to find us."

As Make A Difference Day project manager, Yeager expressed her appreciation for the many volunteers' efforts, "especially those active-duty members who put in all those extra hours, in addition to the already heavy loads they're working."

"When communities get organized and pool their efforts, more people can benefit from those efforts," she said. "People really can take a single day and use it to make life better for others."

Soldier shares common bond with Cuban migrants

by Spc. Brian Thomas
USARSO Public Affairs Office

EMPIRE RANGE - Sgt. Danilo Delpino is magnetic. The attraction people have to him is undeniable.

As he walks through the compound of Community Camp No. 3 he draws people from all angles. Some have questions, some have complaints, others just want to say hello to their friend.

The Cubans at Camp No. 3 flock to Delpino because in him, they see one of their very own. And not just because he is Cuban.

Delpino, assigned to Bravo Company, 193rd Support Battalion, shares a special kinship with these people because 14 years ago, he was one of them. He not only shares a homeland with the Cuban population of Camp No. 3, he also shares an experience.

He too took to the waters of the Caribbean Sea in search of freedom. Delpino was part of the Mariel boatlift in 1980, and came to the United States on May 22 of that year.

Now, after becoming a U.S. citizen and spending nine years in the Army, Delpino is here to welcome this generation of freedom-seekers.

"I was dreaming about this," Delpino said. "When I saw what was happening in Cuba I thought maybe there would be another Mariel boatlift."

The key distinction between Delpino's experience and that of this new generation, however, is this: Delpino went right to the United States in 1980, these Cubans are in Panama.

Delpino spent 71 days at Fort Indian Town Gap in Pennsylvania, arriving there the day after the boat he and 11 others sailed in was towed to Key West by the U.S. Coast Guard.

On July 31, 1980, he was given a plane ticket to Miami, $10 in cash and paperwork showing that he was in the country legally. Four years later he became a U.S. citizen.

Since then, Delpino has been in the Army, spending the last three years in Panama. His current assignment appears to be one he was fated for.

His job at Camp No. 3 is critical to the Cubans: the issue and resupply of the essential items needed for daily life. Working in supply, he gave the Cubans their initial issue upon arrival at the camp: clothing, toiletries and other items needed by people who brought nothing with them when they fled their country.

As Camp No. 3 took on over 300 Cubans a day in early October, Delpino was there to greet them.

"When they arrived on the first day, I made a speech as a welcome," he said.

Delpino volunteered for this duty. He worked part time for awhile at Camp No. 1, and has worked full time at Camp No. 3.

"It is very, very exciting for me, and they are happy to see me here," he said. "They are glad to see a Cuban here."

Spc. Brian Thomas (U.S. Army)

Sgt. Danilo Delpino talks with Cubans at Camp No. 3. As a member of the Mariel boatlift in 1980, Delpino shares a bond with this new generation of migrants.

"They ask me a lot of questions. They ask, 'What do you think about us?' I tell them to have faith, patience and belief in God because they will have a better future."

Delpino said he made his voyage for political reasons.

"When I was 20 years old I had my mind already made up," Delpino said. "Tourists were allowed to come to Cuba and they opened my eyes. When I talked to foreigners, I saw the difference between the socialist and capitalist systems."

"In Cuba, there is no freedom of speech, there is no opposition in the government. You cannot express your feelings. There is no freedom of religion."

In 1980, before he sailed for the United States, Delpino said he jumped the fence to the Peruvian Embassy in Havana and received asylum to Peru.

"After I was granted asylum, the Cuban government offered for me to go to the United States," Delpino said. "I chose that because the United States is the best country in the world."

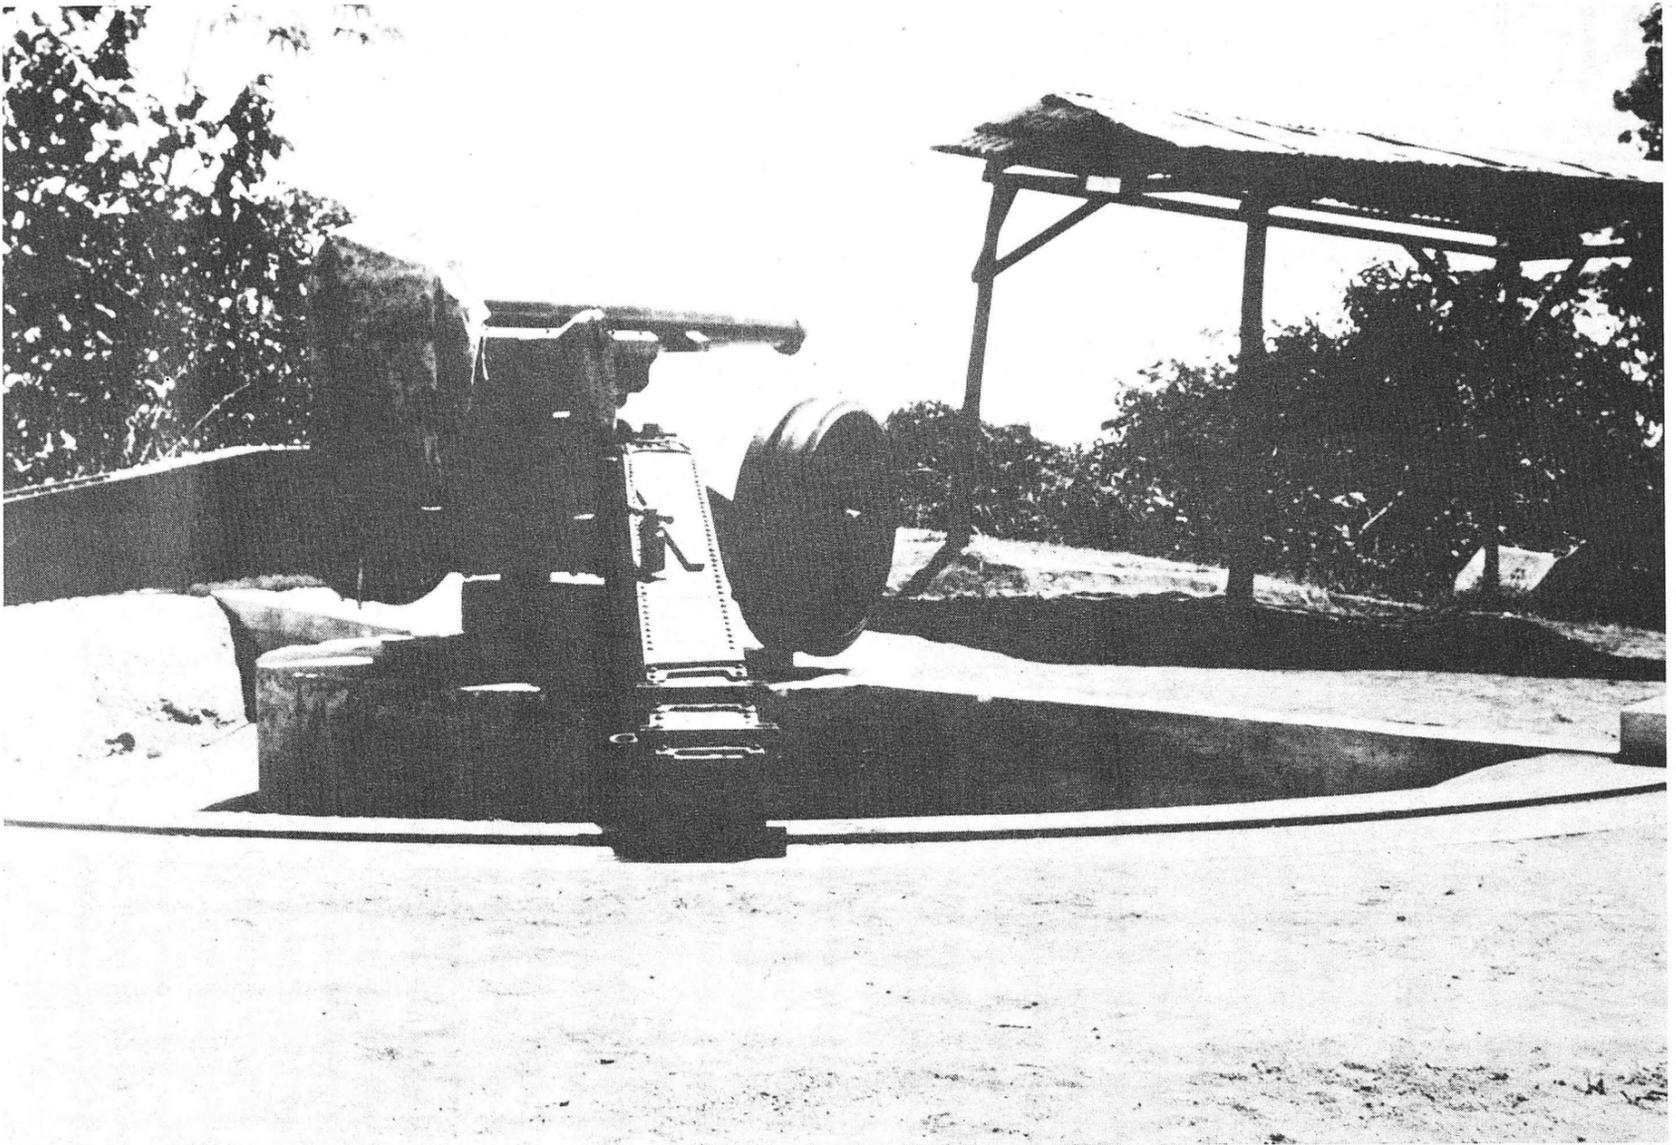

Now, as he watches a repeat of the effort that brought him his freedom, Delpino said he has had mixed feelings.

"I felt happy and sad at the same time," he said. "Happy because now they have freedom and make a new life. They have a better future. I was sad because I saw how they came, how they have nothing."

Delpino, who is married and has two children, left his parents and two sisters in Cuba in 1980. One sister, who now lives in Miami, also was a part of the Mariel Boatlift. He said his parents have visited Panama, but returned to Cuba.

"The reason they went back is because I have a nephew and niece and they would not be allowed to go," Delpino said. "I was expecting them in this group."

He said his remaining sisters and their children did not make the voyage, however. A cousin did, Delpino said, and is currently at Guantanamo Bay.

Fort Kobbe's Gun Emplacement No. 1, equipped with a 155mm Panama Mount artillery weapon, stands watch along the Panama Canal at Bruja Point Jan. 31, 1929.

Panama gun mount plays key role in WWII

by Dolores De Mena
U.S. Army South Historian

During World War I the French 155mm gun, a heavy tractor-drawn weapon, was put into production with slight modifications by the United States as the Model 1918. The Grande Puissance Filloux, more commonly in the American service as the GPF, was the most widely used of the mobile artillery pieces adopted for seacoast defense after WWI.

In the 1920's shortly after WWI, surplus 75mm guns (Models 1897 and 1917) and 155mm GPF guns (Model 1918) were assigned to the Canal Zone for beach defense use. Accordingly, 42 75mm and 46 155mm guns were sent to the Canal Zone. (This is notable since only 65 155mm guns had been produced prior to the attack against Pearl Harbor).

A project was prepared for their emplacement at key points to cover the beaches and for the construction of light magazines to serve them. Strategically located, the guns were intended to serve a threefold purpose: to provide close-in harbor defense, to deliver enfilading fire on landing craft, and to protect the major harbor defense fortifications. The weapons were emplaced in the vicinity of the harbor defense batteries and other key sites and were manned by Coast Artillery personnel.

The GPF was greatly improved between the two world wars, mainly to increase its mobility by providing it with modern wheels and pneumatic tires in place of the old cast-steel wheels. It was used throughout the 1920s and 1930s to train thousands of reserve and National Guard coast artillerymen, and after Pearl Harbor was rushed in large numbers to guard unfortified positions along both coasts of the United States, the Panama Canal and in the Pacific.

Although the carriage of the 155 allowed a wider scope of traverse than the average for guns designed for field use, the lateral movement was still insufficient for fire against moving targets.

An experimental permanent mount in a concrete emplacement for the 155mm guns was designed and built jointly by the District Engineer force and the Coast Artillery troops to increase the rate of fire and to facilitate traversing. By replacing the trails spades with small flanged wheels which ran on a permanently installed track encircling the gun, it was possible to swing the weapon in a 360 degree traverse with great rapidity.

The result was a simple and relatively inexpensive platform consisting essentially of a segment of curved rail embedded in concrete, along which the gun's twin trails could easily be moved.

Several of the batteries in the Panama Canal Zone were equipped with the circular track and a number with a semicircular adaptation which permitted a 180 degree traverse. Because this type of emplacement was initially developed and tested in the Panama Canal Zone, it came to be known as the "Panama Mount." However, in spite of the demonstrated usefulness of the Panama Mount, it was not until just before WWII that all the 155mm guns were so equipped.

These 155mm GPF guns were emplaced at Tortuguilla Point, Naranjitos Point, Fort Sherman, Fort Randolph, Palma Media Island, and Galeta Island on the Atlantic side and on Flamenco Island, Culebra Island, Taboguilla Island, Urava Island, Taboga Island, and Fort Kobbe on the Pacific side.

From the very start of WWII most ordnance officers were advocates of heavy artillery, a term that generally included weapons ranging from the 155mm gun (or the medium 155mm howitzer) to the 240mm howitzer.

By 1 December 1944, the U.S. Ordnance Department was directed to step up its production of light and medium artillery ammunition. The monthly rate of production for ammunition for the 155mm gun was to be increased by 50 percent, from four hundred thousand per month to six hundred thousand.

The 155mm proved to be particularly useful in the war zones and served as the principal coast defense weapon on a number of Pacific islands.

Grunts slam Air Force

by Senior Airman Joel Langton
Safe Haven Joint Information Bureau

HOWARD AFB - The dirty boots of infantry soldiers stomped all over the fly boys in the Panama Interservice Basketball Championship at Howard AFB last week.

The Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 5th Battalion 87th Infantry Regiment from Fort Davis whipped Howard's 24th Air Intelligence Squadron/Operational Support Squadron 60-49.

The grunts edged ahead by five points at the end of the second half. Three pointers by Jeffrey Deutch and Senordor Hines with a minute and a half left helped provide 5-87th the five-point cushion. A 13-point second-half scoring burst from Norris Davis gave it everything else it needed as their lead swelled to as much as 14-points.

Championships were nothing new to the Army five; they won the Fort Davis championship and the U.S. Army South championship before taking the interservice title. Deutch said the championships had given them plenty of confidence.

"We were never worried. We play together as a team and we knew that would make the difference," he said.

However, the 5-87th coach had high praise for their Air Force competitors from the Pacific side of the isthmus.

"I thought they were the best team in the tournament, other than us. They just didn't have enough horses," he said.

The Air Force "horse" that kept them in the game was guard Johnny Taylor, who managed to bomb the 5-87th for twenty-five points.

Taylor nailed 14 of his points in the first half. Taylor said when the grunt club tightened their defense in the second half, he was hobbled.

"Everywhere I went, I had two people with me. It was a lot harder. They forced us to make adjustments and then we couldn't keep up," he said.

That was the game plan, 5-87th head coach Lewis Fergerson said.

"We took him out of the game. They try to live and die by their three-point shot and we took that away from them," he said.

However, Air Force coach Glenn Richard called it a mere breakdown in execution.

"We took them out of their game in the first half but we had a breakdown in execution in the second half and they took advantage of it," he said.

A vital part of the Army game plan was 6-foot, 6-inch, 203 pound center Davis. The former junior college stand out blocked six shots in addition to his 18 points.

Davis and Fergerson said getting him the ball was part of the game plan.

"At first, we weren't in the game plan. In the first half, I wasn't getting the ball (2 blocks, 5 points). In the second half, they started getting me the ball and I started producing (4 blocks, 13 points)," Davis said.

The 5-87th players learned they didn't like losing early in the season. Their only loss was their season opener.

The Air Force club wasn't quite as dominating. They finished second in their base championship, but even then, Richard optimistically predicted their team would end up in the intraservice championship.

Despite the loss, Richard's confidence in his club hadn't wavered. "I still think we had the best team in the tournament. We just didn't play together."

Special Boat Unit 26 wins Navy three-event tourney

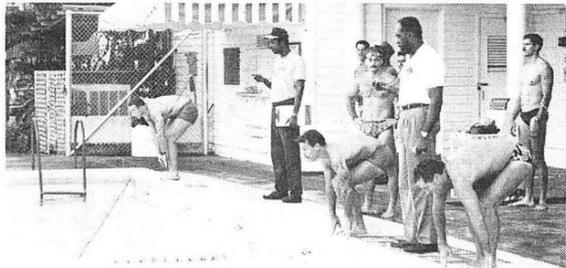

RODMAN NS (Rodman NS PAO) - Special Boat Unit 26 combined its efforts to best Naval Special Warfare Unit 8, compiling 110 points to NSWU's 81 in the Rodman Intramural Three-Event Competition here Oct. 19-21.

The units were tied after the first two events, the tug-o-war and the 50-meter swim. In the 5-kilometer run, SBU had the edge, 42 runners to NSWU's 22, and took the lead in points, 70 to NSWU's 41, to earn the win.

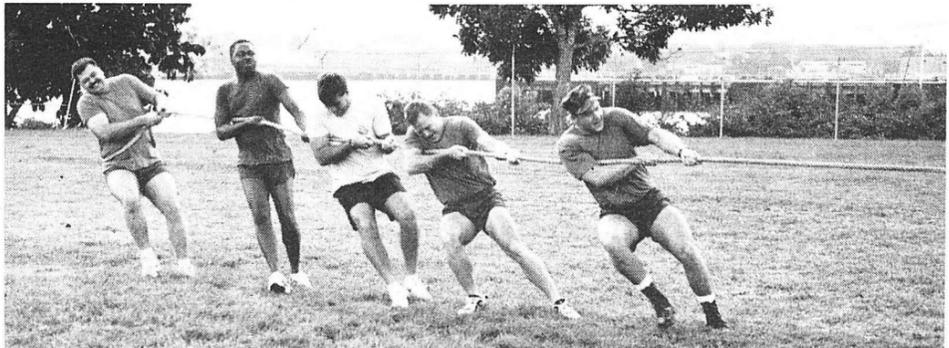

Event coordinator Morise Conerly was surprised at some of the athletes' mettle.

"Of the 150 people we had overall, a handful were competing in another triathlon at Howard the next day,"

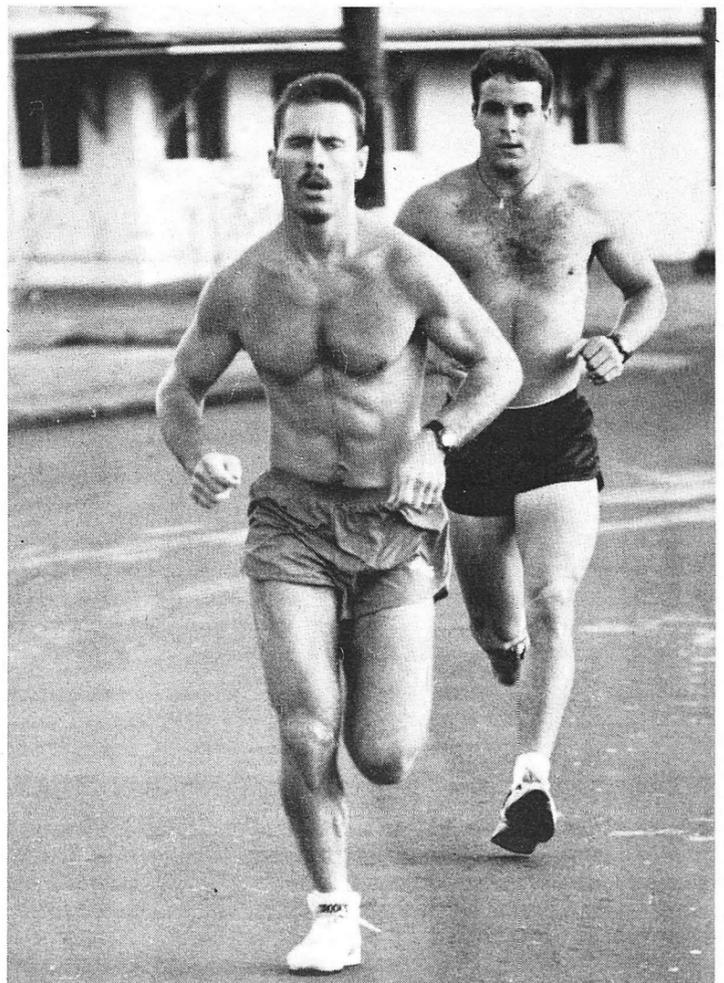

Conerly said. "I couldn't believe it...I guess some people can do stuff like that."

Tigers end Cougars' streak

by Sgt. Rick Emert
U.S. Army South Public Affairs-Atlantic

CRISTOBAL HIGH SCHOOL - The Curundu Cougars' "roll down victory lane" led them into Tiger Country Friday, and the Cougars hit a road block in the form of Jon Guerra and a fourth quarter 69-yard run into the end zone that put the Tigers over the top, 19-16.

The Tigers took an early lead in the first quarter with a 50-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Ricky Alvarez to Carlos Roman. Rob Bernhardt kicked in the extra point and it was 7-0.

The Cougars also scored in the first quarter off a one-yard punch into the end zone by Lance VonHollen. VonHollen took the ball in for the two-point conversion, putting the Cougars on top 8-7. That lead would take them into the second half.

The Cougars owned the ball in the third quarter. VonHollen charged into the end zone from the two-yard line for the Cougars' second touchdown. Another two-point conversion off a Buddy Martens three-yard pass to Frederik Adams took the score to 16-7, Cougars.

Just as it looked like the Cougars were home free, Ricky

Alvarez threw a six-yard pass into the endzone into the hands of Nick Frank. The kick was no good, but the Tigers had edged closer, 16-13.

The Cougars' next possession went nowhere, and they punted it into the end zone. The Tigers moved the ball 11 yards to the 31-yard line.

The Tigers had 69 yards between themselves and the upset victory of the season. Ricky Alvarez opted for his league-leading rusher and handed off to Jon Guerra who went the distance for another fourth-quarter touchdown, putting the Tigers in front, 19-16.

In their final possession, the Cougars drove the ball to the Tigers' 33-yard line, but their final play of the game was a pass intercepted by Alvarez.

Ironically, in their first year under coach Richard Elliott, the Tigers blemished an undefeated Cougars record in the final game of the season. In this, the Tigers last year, they did it again.

"It was thrilling," said Elliott. "To score two fourth quarter touchdowns to beat an undefeated team shows a lot of character. I can't remember, in 22 years of coaching, anything more thrilling than coming from behind in the fourth quarter and beating an undefeated team."

"I have to congratulate the Tigers' for their great preparation and for not giving up in the fourth quarter. They have a lot of good kids and it was a great win," said Cougar coach Fred Bales.

"I'm still proud of my kids, and I expect them to win. We just made some mistakes we don't usually make, but we'll bounce back strong," he said.

One thing the Tigers won't be doing is savoring the victory, Elliott said.

"These victories are short lived," he said. "Monday at practice we were at work on the (PCC) Green Devils. We can think back about how we felt Friday night later on, but for now we have to forget it."

And what's the Tigers' goal for the rest of the final season?

"To finish at 7-3 is our goal," Elliott said. "Before, I didn't want to think of it as the final season. Now, we're in the second half of the season and playing everyone for the final time. We're dedicating these last Tigers' games to the legacy of the past Tigers' players."

The Cougars, at 6-1, are tied for first place with the Devils, and the Tigers have edged up to a third place tie with the Balboa Bulldogs at 4-3.

Bulldogs break Red Machine, 20-7

by Sgt. Lori Davis
Tropic Times sports editor

BALBOA - The Machine's quest for a win remains unanswered after falling to the Bulldogs 20-7 Oct. 21.

The 4-3 Bulldogs maintained its third place tie with the Tigers, who also advanced to 4-3 with their 19-16 upset of the Cougars. The Machine owns sixth place, a half-game back from the Kolts. The Kolts owe it's sole win to the Machine.

Although the game stats show a team dead last in the league, the Machine put up a lively fight against the Bulldogs.

The Machine got some help from a foulmouthed Bulldog and advanced to the Bulldog 20-yard line following a cussing penalty.

After advancing to the five-yard line, the Machine opened the scoring with a touchdown by Jerry Smith. Donny Husted made good on the extra point kick, putting the Machine in the lead 7-0.

The Bulldogs failed to score on its next possession, but took advantage of a short punt and took over inside the Machine 20-yard line.

The Bulldogs moved to the Machine's goal line, where Adam Beach plowed in for a Bulldog touchdown. Beach nailed the extra point to tie the score 7-7.

The Bulldogs wrapped up the first half with a razzle-dazzle play when Beach connected with Julius Graham midfield. Graham snagged the ball and left the Machine in the dust on the a 60-yard play, dashing into the end zone.

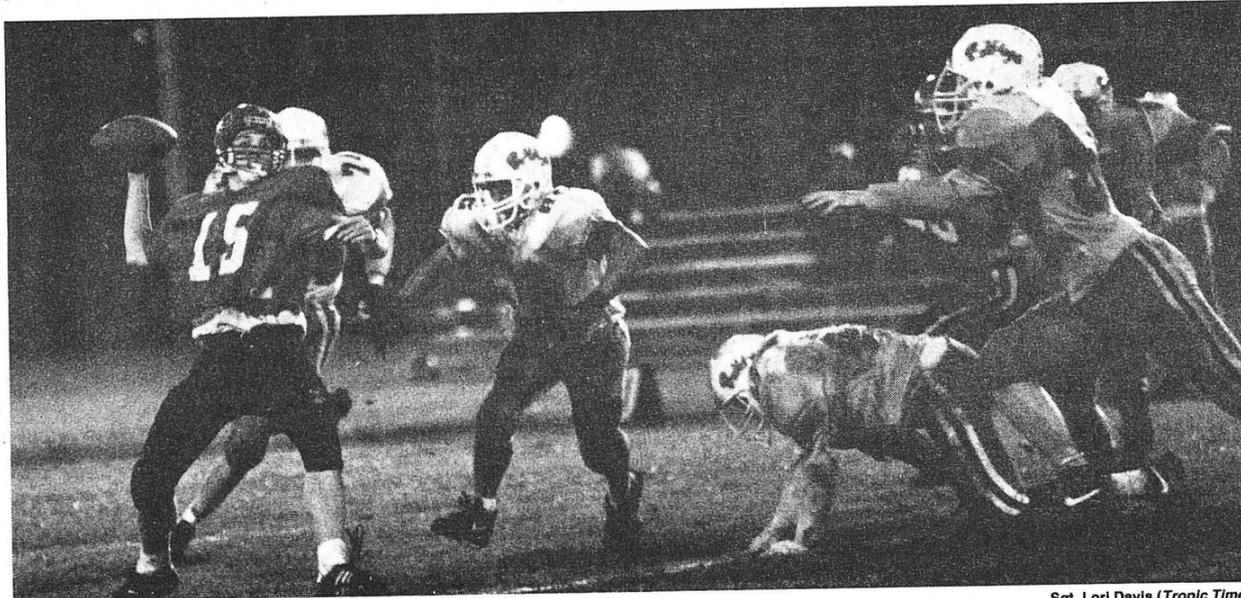

Beach hit the extra point, putting the Bulldogs ahead 14-7.

Both teams spent the third quarter grinding up and down the field, neither scoring but mangling each other in the process. The Bulldogs' Cardova Hall went down for a few minutes, but was able to return the game after a break.

The Machine's Roberto George turned into "the punisher," doling out hard-hitting tackles. George pegged Carlos Martinelli, sacked Beach and stuffed Hall all in the third quarter.

In the closing quarter of the game Hall came back to drive past George.

The Bulldogs moved the ball to the Machine's one-yard line where Hall went in for the final touchdown of the game. Beach scored on the extra point, making the final score 20-7.

Bailey's return shocks Saints

NFL week in review

by John Hall

Rodman NS Public Affairs Office

RODMAN NS - There was so much returning going on last Sunday in the NFL, it looked like the exchange window at the PX the day after Christmas. Not only did the Saints' Tyrone Hughes return two kicks for touchdowns, but he also set the NFL record for return yards in a game. In the same game, the Rams' Robert Bailey set another record with a freaky 103-yard punt return. Cleveland's Eric Metcalf did his usual deed, in the form of a 73-yard punt return.

Here are the week nine picks. Home teams are in CAPS. Bufs clock K.C. - The Bills and Chiefs split their games last year with K.C. winning the regular season game 23-7 and Buffalo taking the AFC Championship game 30-13. In the title game, the Bills held Joe Montana to nine completions for 125 yards. The Chiefs seem to be back in the saddle with back-to-back division wins. The Bills had a week to recover from their loss to the Dolts. With Miami battling New England, the Bills have first-place incentive and homefield-advantage. BILLS 26, Chiefs 16.

Fish fry at Foxboro - The Dolphins have revenge on the brain. In week 18 last year, the Patsies knocked the Fish out of the playoff race with a 33-27 overtime win at the Fox. That win was New England's first over Miami since 1988. The Pats would like a little revenge after they scored 35 points on opening day, but lost by four to the Fish. The Pats are continuing to play it close to the vest this season, with no final score separated by more than seven points. Look for the late October Foxboro chill to put the Fish on ice. PATS 30, Fish 26.

Bumbling Browns - The Broncos have taken the last three in their series with the Brownies, including a 29-14 win last year. John Elway riddled the Brownies' secondary with three scores in Cleveland. Denver may be due for a letdown after knocking the Bolts from the unbeaten ranks last week, but have homefield advantage. The Browns have not beaten a team with a winning record this year. Although the Broncos are 2-5, they're playing like a 5-2 team after losing a squeaker vs. K.C. and beating the Bolts. BRONCOS 23, Browns 16.

Not in the Cards - The Steelers travel to valley of the sun for their second of three straight road games. Although the boys of steel are 5-2, this is a must win. When the Steelers finally do get home, they play Buffalo and Miami back to back. After that, they play at the Raiders. Thank the league for that second-place schedule. The Cards gave the Cowpokes a scare last week after knocking Troy Aikman out early with a concussion. This inter-conference game was sandwiched in between two division foes (Dallas and Philly) for Arizona. That, and Steelers rookie running back Bam Morris, (140+ yards last week) will be too much. Steelers 16, CARDS 10.

Monday's Monsters of the Midway - The Packers have had entirely too much time to stew after a Thursday night loss to the Vikings. The Bears welcomed back Erik Kramer who responded for more than 300 yards in the loss to the Lions. Despite spotting Detroit a 14-0 lead, the Bears were in the game until the final seconds. After losing Neal Anderson (retirement) and Merril Hoge (career-ending injury) the Bears seem to have a running game to complement Kramer. Lewis Tillman and Raymont Harris give the Bears a one-two punch the Packers could only dream of. BEARS 24, Pack 13.

In other games: No matter who's Q, Cowpokes 30, BUNGALS 10; N.Y. makes it five straight, GIANTS 20, Lions 14; L.A. breaks losing streak to Houston, RAIDERS 21, Oilers 13; Tampa catches Minny napping, BUCS 16, Vikes 13; Faulk falters, Jets 19, COLTS 3; Gus, Heath, whoever, Eagles 27, REDSKINS 10; Bolts are back, CHARGERS 22, Seahawks 13.

There are open dates for Atlanta, New Orleans, San Francisco and the L.A. Rams.

Last week 10-2, season 63-38, Monday night 7-1.

Popular Panamanian singer performs for camp residents

EMPIRE RANGE (JTF - Safe Haven JIB) - Popular Panamanian singer Leoni Herrera and her group entertained Cubans at Community Camp No. 2 during an hour-long concert Sunday afternoon.

"It was great to be able to bring a little happiness to them through music," said Herrera, a native of the Darien Province.

However, according to Herrera, the Cubans weren't the only ones who benefited from the show that offered cumbia, salsa and boleros music.

"It was a very exciting moment in my life. I won't forget this experience as long as I live," Herrera said.

"It was very well-received by the camp residents," said Brig. Gen. James Wilson, Joint Task Force Safe Haven commander. "In fact, they loved her."

The female vocalist, who recently released a compact disc, was backed up by a set of bongos, an electric guitar, a bass guitar and a set of drums.

Despite inclement conditions throughout the afternoon, the majority of the camp residents turned out for the show.

"She was very good," said Air Force Maj. Beverly

Cubans file suit against U.S government

MIAMI (Reuters) - A group of prominent Cuban-American lawyers filed suit Monday against the U.S. government seeking an end to U.S. detention of Cuban migrants at Guantanamo Bay and Panama.

The attorneys, who included Xavier Suarez, a former mayor of Miami, said they were seeking due process for all migrants, an end to coerced repatriation back to Cuba, humane treatment for the migrants and an end to their indefinite detention.

There currently are about 32,000 Cubans, all of them migrants picked up at sea this summer, being held at U.S. military bases at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba and in Panama.

Though the Clinton administration has announced plans to allow some children and elderly Cuban migrants to enter the United States, the only options now for the others are to remain at the U.S. bases indefinitely or return to Cuba and apply there for some of the 20,000 visas per year the United States has agreed to grant Cuban migrants.

Gang violence

DoD, TRADOC conference will focus on teen issues

by Sgt. 1st Class Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

WASHINGTON D.C. - Gang violence, youth employment and teen activities will highlight discussions at the Department of Defense Youth Action Conference Monday through Nov. 4 in Tampa, Fla.

Hosted jointly by DoD and the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, conference participants will identify approaches that may help youngsters resist joining gangs, resist engaging in violence and avoid using drugs. DoD expects about 750 participants.

"This is really the first time we've zeroed in on adolescent issues," said Gail McGinn, DoD's family policy support and services director. She intends to review DoD policies during the conference, focusing on programs that will help teens become more active in communities.

McGinn said commanders are concerned about gang activity and gang violence. According to Army Col. Richard A. Pomager Jr., law enforcement and security director for the TRADOC, the problem of youth violence goes deeper than a social or an installation issue for the military.

"It is a readiness issue," he said. Pomager said military parents distracted because of family problems are less likely to be able to effectively perform their duties. "The perception that gangs are infiltrating installations is reinforced by the fact that there has been an increase in violence and crime among young family members."

Part of the problem is that "gang life" is intruding more on the military community. "In some areas, gangs are using our installations as neutral turf," Pomager said, "and sometimes their presence can lead to problems."

He explained one case involving a military youth who invited local kids to a party at his on-post home. Unknowingly, some kids he asked belonged to two rival gangs. When the two gangs met, a fight occurred prompting military police assistance.

The traditional military approach to dealing with "problem kids" on installations is to remove families from post housing. "That only relocates the problem, it does not solve it," said Pomager. "We have to help youths, parents and commanders to head off such crises."

Pomager added military youths face the same pressures as all youngsters, but frequent relocations may add to the problem of socialization and adjustment. "Kids who move frequently with their parents are probably more vulnerable to negative influences," he said.

To help combat the problem, McGinn plans to suggest commanders design more comprehensive youth programs for their installations. "Programs should involve a variety of installation programs and resources," she said. "The transition program should include informing kids on services and agencies available to them during their stay. Family member employment programs should provide job information for those wanting to work after school."

Commanders should design programs where community leaders, health officials, military police and family service centers listen to teen concerns. "We've spent a lot of our time and efforts with child development and family advocacy programs and haven't really focused on teen issues," said McGinn.

Listening to youngsters has been the keystone of an Army program in existence since 1991. Teen Discovery is an annual gathering of youngsters from Army installations who offer advice about intervention methods.

"We get realistic advice," said Lee Morrison, head of the Training and Doctrine Command's youth services and Teen Discovery manager. "Some of the kids who attend the conferences 'have been there.' They've been into scrapes on Army posts and are trying to help keep other kids from repeating their experiences."

Civilian communities and military installations have programs in existence that will be examples during the conference. One highlighted program is Fort Sill's Wings of Eagles in Oklahoma.

"We target sixth graders who are about to move into junior high school," said Army Maj. Randy Garibay, who runs the Fort Sill program. "We want to instill in them the confidence and independence to resist gang involvement, and to show them the benefits of getting a good education."

Pomager said each service has programs to help youths to develop their potential, self-esteem, independence and values. The conference will highlight these programs. "We want to identify possible solutions that commanders can use to immunize military kids against imitating the gang culture," he said.

Local pathologist visits Curundu Jr. High classes

CURUNDU (DoDDS) - "Wow, that was great. When can we do that again?"

This was asked by one of the 24 Curundu Junior High School students who attended a slide show presentation given by Dr. Richard Wahl, a pathologist from Gorgas Community Hospital.

The students, many of whom participate in the School Wide Enrichment Program, were entertained and educated by Wahl's presentation. He shared facts ranging from how one may become a pathologist, a scientist who studies diseases, to the analysis of microscopic organisms to determine the cause of disease or death or the treatment of disease.

"I felt the presentation was very educational because I want, someday, to be a forensic pathologist," Denise Holmes, an eighth grade student, said. "Doctor Wahl helped me to be better prepared for the work I will be doing."

The junior high students look forward to many more educational visits from trained professionals in the community.

DoDDS, ACS conduct 'Child Find Activities'

The Department of Defense Dependent Schools in Panama, along with Army Community Service, are conducting on-going "Child Find Activities" in an effort to locate all eligible family members with disabilities in need of special educational or medical services.

Newly arrived military and U.S. government-sponsored personnel with family members in need of special education and special medically related services should contact their local DoDDS school for program planning and enrollment.

People who know of a child with a disability in the community who is the family member of a U.S. government-sponsored or military person and is not receiving services, should encourage the family to contact any local DoDDS school. People can also call the Exceptional Family Member Program manager at 287-4921/5073 for assistance or for more information.

When Conrad's agent wants to retire from the music business, go back to school and start a family, he takes one more stab at raking in some cash. He encourages Conrad to venture to Sweet Apple, Ohio, where he will broadcast his final song, kiss an adoring fan, and stir up a ruckus before the megastar is drafted in the Army.

Albert Peterson, Conrad's agent, is portrayed by Richard Koechlein. His secretary and soon-to-be-wife is played by Linda Dahlstrom. Conrad is represented stупendously by Balboa High School senior Carlos Royo.

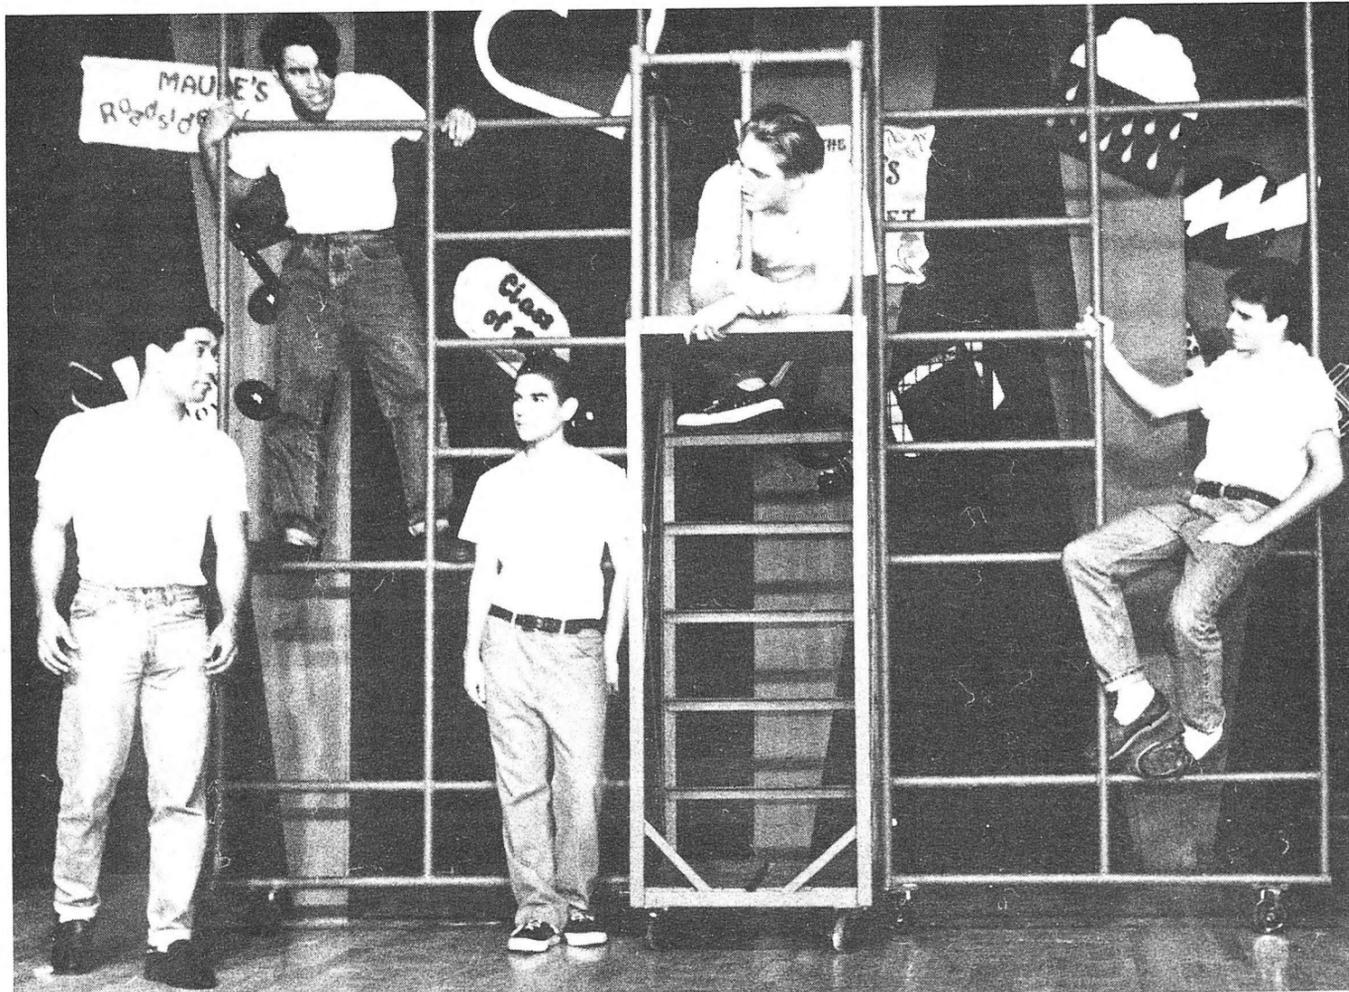

The cast also includes countless citizens, ranging from the Conrad Birdie fan club, to manipulative reporters, to a hoard of jealous teenage guys.

Panama, part 1: The early days

A history of a nation that helped shape the world

(Editor's note: Panama celebrates its independence from Colombia Thursday. This begins a five-part series on the history of Panama: Part 1: The Early Days; Part 2: Independence; Part 3: Canal Building; Part 4: The Canal Zone; and Part 5: A New Future. The history was adapted from an unpublished manuscript by Dr. Miguel Antonio Bernal and Thomas J. Hofer, Florida State University and David McCullough's Path Between the Seas.)

Since the discovery of America, the importance of the Panama isthmus and its economic potential as a collection point for the riches of South America has been a focal point in the history of this small strip of land.

Panama was "put on the map" because of its importance to the Spanish crown in the early 1500s. The sighting of the South Sea (Pacific Ocean) by Vasco Nunez de Balboa signalled the beginning of the Panamanian colonial era. On behalf of the Spanish kings, political power over the isthmus was exercised by the royal governor and his staff. The governors established royal courts (audiencias), with the Panamanian audiencia dating from 1563. Even when Panama was subordinated to Peru for administration matters, the isthmus retained its audiencia.

Beginning in the early 16th century, Nombre de Dios (Atlantic Coast, Panama); Veracruz (Mexico) and Cartagena (Colombia) were the only three authorized ports for trade with Spain. Indeed, Spain forbid the colonies from trading with other nations, which was to lead to periodic invasions from English and Dutch privateers. Annually, Spain sent a fleet loaded down with shipments of gold and precious metals from the mines of Peru and Bolivia to Panama City, where it was transferred across the isthmus to Nombre de Dios, reloaded and then convoyed to Spain. Panama's prosperity depended on the frequency and amount of these shipments.

Pirates and treaties

Panama suffered greatly from the English pirates under Sir Francis Drake and his colleagues. They began by raiding Nombre de Dios for its warehouses and riches, compelling the Spanish to move to a more defensible location at Portobelo.

The English establishment of colonies in the Caribbean allowed English commerce raiders to more easily prey on the Spanish trade and thus gave rise to English interests in this region. The culmination of the English effort was the destruction of Panama City in 1671 by the English raider Sir Henry Morgan. Thereafter piracy and commerce lost its importance as England came to adopt a mercantilist policy toward its own colonies.

Events in Europe were to shape the future of Panama as the Bourbon kings ascended the Spanish throne in 1713, following the Treaty of Utrecht. Although they espoused a policy of trade liberalization, this came too late for Panama.

As the eighteenth century wore on, a combination of Panamanian inadequacies in coastal defense and the actions of Peruvian merchants, tired of the corruption and venality of their Panamanian counterparts, sought to establish alternate trade routes for their merchandise. The final blow came with the destruction of Portobelo in 1739.

An idea for a canal

The idea for a canal spanning the isthmus originated with Spanish King Charles V in 1523.

He ordered that the Rio Bravo (Rio Grande) in Mexico and the Chagres (Panama) be explored to determine the feasibility of such a project. King Phillip II undertook another investigation, finally concluding that "Man should not frustrate the will of God. If He had wanted the two oceans to be joined, He would have done so." The project was revived again during the reign of King Phillip III. The Council of the Indies recommended against the idea, claiming that it would encourage attacks by other European nations, thus weakening Spain even more. Spain never undertook any serious efforts to explore the possibility of a canal project, being absorbed in its own domestic affairs.

In a break from its protective past, the Spanish crown permitted the German geographer and explorer Alexander von Humboldt to tour the Americas from 1799 to 1804 in the name of scientific progress.

Humboldt's "Political Essay on New Spain" rekindled interest in the Central American region and focused attention on Panama and Nicaragua. In his work, Humboldt called for the building a transoceanic canal. The dream was perhaps close to realization of uniting Asia with the Americas and Europe.

After the overthrow of Spanish dominion and the independence of the new Latin American states, promoters, engineers and dreamers, all with the idea of a transoceanic canal started to arrive in the capitals of Latin America.

Seeking autonomy or independence, Panama declared independence from Spain on Nov. 28, 1821. Almost immediately, Panama decided to affiliate itself with the province of New Granada, which would later be Colombia, and its charismatic leader Simon Bolivar.

To show its loyalty to the cause of independence, Panama sent 700 soldiers to assist Bolivar in securing independence from Spain. Panama's historical links to Colombia date from this period. And lacking any strong feelings of allegiance to Colombia, Panama would seek either autonomy or independence from Colombia several times during the next 80 years.

With the disappearance of Spain from the scene, the newly independent states lacked stability in their political institutions and sufficient will to undertake or protect a concessionaire in such a comprehensive project as building a canal through Central America.

Under such circumstances, it was clear that only one of the leading powers, France or Britain in Europe or the United States as the growing regional power, possessed the resources necessary to see a project of this magnitude through to completion.

In the 19th century, diplomatic treaty making was the essential ingredient in foreign policy making. As a result there was a variety of agreements reached between the leading powers and the Latin American states and even among the three leading powers to insure their interests were protected, even if they were only of marginal importance.

During the 1800s, the United States entered into two treaties that had a direct effect on Latin America:

◆The Bidlack-Mallarino Treaty: President Andrew Jackson sent Charles Biddle in the 1830s to investigate the feasibility of a canal in Nicaragua and Panama. Biddle negotiated with New Grenada (Colombia) over a private concession to the United States. In 1846, Benjamin A. Bidlack concluded a commercial treaty with M.M. Mallarino of New Grenada titled a "Treaty of Peace, Amity, Navigation and Commerce between the United States and New Grenada." The treaty provisions ran for 20 years and gave the United States the same privileges and immunities regarding commerce and navigation that citizens of New Grenada enjoyed. Furthermore, the United States guaranteed New Grenada's exercise of sovereignty in the isthmus and pledged to protect it.

◆The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty: This treaty was designed to reduce friction between the United States and Great Britain by forbidding either one from building a canal at Tehuantepec, Mexico, or Panama without the active cooperation of the other. Both nations also agreed to the concept that any proposed canal would be neutral and that both sides would respect its neutrality. The treaty was sufficiently open-ended to allow either side to abrogate the treaty after prior notification.

In the context of United States-British relations, the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was another in a series of treaties defusing United States and British rivalry in the Western Hemisphere.

The Panama Railroad

A group of New York financiers organized the Panama Railroad Company in 1847. The railroad was completed in 1855. Between 1848-1869, about 375,000 persons crossed the isthmus from Pacific to Atlantic; while about 255,000 crossed from Pacific side to Atlantic side.

Prices for food and services were greatly inflated, resulting in a resurgence of prosperity for Panama. Building the railroad created a new port and city on the Atlantic side. United States investors named the new city Aspinwall after one of the owners of the railroad. Panamanians named the town Colon. Gold miners heading to California continued to use the railroad to transit the isthmus until 1869, when the transcontinental railroad was completed in the United States.

For the use of the concession, Panama received a $25,000 annuity from Colombia from the royalties paid by the railroad. For a capital investment of $7 million dollars, American investors received nearly $38 million dollars in dividends between 1855 and 1903.

In the 1500s, Portobelo was an important port because it was easier to defend than others.

Blankman

Damon Wayans, David Alan Grier

Natural Born Killers

Woody Harrelson, Juliette Lewis
This is the saga of Mickey and Mallory Knox, two thrill-killers who truly enjoy their work. They live in an interesting zone: pillowtalk and ultra-violence; insanity and comedy; demons and heroes. R (violence, shocking images, language, sex) 2 hrs.
