Drainage

When there were vines or a mass of perennials, it may be advisable to erect a headway or frame, of lagging with an entrance at both ends, and to allow the water to drain into this through pipes. For any part of the part of the frame, and the area to which it is connected, the water should be drained away. All these should be made of wood and should be covered with a layer of soil. This will prevent the soil from drying out and will also
