LAND LOANS

It must now be apparent to everyone interested in the agricultural progress of this island that the Government has taken the necessary credit facilities to enable the small landholder to understand the need for economic development.

That such efficiency is imperative can be gauged from the fact that thousands of dollars' worth of vegetation and fruit are imported into this island annually.

At present there is an apparent slump in agricultural development in the Caribbean and it is feared that this may lead to an increased number of people without employment in the area.

From the time of the First World War, the view was expressed that these relics should not be allowed to stagnate but that they should be kept alive.

Alas, most of these meetings served to create a false impression during the war, but it is now very necessary to stabilise the economy and make better efforts in that direction as the possibilities of present credit facilities which would make available funds under certain conditions have not been used within the easy reach of the present class.

The Peugeot Loan Fund which matured with a capital of ten thousand pounds has rendered valuable service during the last few years, but with the increasing need for agricultural development there must be a corresponding need for a similar fund to put resources within the easy reach of the present class.

The Peugeot Loan Fund now being used to facilitate the repair or reconstruction of houses owned by people engaged in the sugar industry might be of greater advantage to lend one hundred dollars to cultivate this land or to lease land or who are in possession of lands even with controversial titles are not entitled.

It must be kept in mind that the question of the Loan Fund does not rest on the Bank of England, but on the Bankers Association of which the Bank is a member.

In such a case it is quite possible to help people who need the funds for the purpose of increasing their income, provided they are willing to take the risk of losing their money.

For the purpose of keeping the Loan Fund in operation, it would be advisable to take the risk of losing people's money in order to keep the economy going.

Goering's Last Ting

I have been reading about Goering recently and have been impressed by the way he has been leading Germany into war.

His leadership has been characterized by a combination of psychology and realism. He has been able to keep the German people on the war path even when the odds were against them.

Goering has the ability to inspire confidence in his followers, and this has been crucial to his success.

For example, when he took over the leadership of the Luftwaffe, Goering was able to rally the troops around him and lead them to victory in several key battles.

Winchester's Wife Was In On Everything

A U.S. General In Churchill's War Room

By MORLEY RICHARDS

GENERAL MAX. CROCKETT, Jr., the American liaison officer of Rome, who landed from a submarine in French North Africa to preside at a meeting of the Allied of Italy today described Winchester in the War Room where she was in on 'everything'.

"The greatest woman I have ever met," said the General, "is a woman of great personal charm, with a quick wit and an ability to think on her feet, and she has an understanding of the military situation."
