Two 15-yr-olds are expected to make the British tennis team for the European Championships in Nuremberg. They are John Parlett and Bruce Harris.

A special visit was arranged for them at Northampton, Wiltshire, last week, when they were met by the coaching staff of the Northampton Young England Club. The boys were given a tour of the facilities available to them and were introduced to the stars of the club, who included John Parlett, 17, and Bruce Harris, 16.

John Parlett is a pupil at Northampton School for Boys, and Bruce Harris is a pupil at Northampton School for Girls. They have been playing tennis since they were children, and have been coached by John Parlett's father, Spence Harris, and by Bruce Harris's father, Oppenheimer Harris.

The boys have been training hard for the European Championships, which start next week. They have been given advice by John Parlett, who is a former world No. 1, and by Bruce Harris's father, who is a former top-ranked amateur.

The boys are expected to make the British team, and will be hoping to do well in the European Championships. They will be playing against the other top junior players from around Europe, and will be hoping to win medals.

The boys are both very experienced players, and have been playing tennis for many years. They have been training hard for the European Championships, and are confident of doing well.

The boys are both very popular with their peers, and have many friends who support them. They are both very talented players, and are expected to do well in the European Championships.
