General Tin Had Traveled Far

— And He'd Been to the Strangest Places —

By MAX TRELL

"NOW in my travels all around the world," General Tin the Tin Soldier, was saying to Knarf and Hanid, "I visited a number of countries that hardly anyone had ever visited before. In fact, you might say, that probably no one will ever visit them again. And the reason for that is that no one knows how to find them."

"Oh," said Hanid, who liked to show how much she knew, "I'm sure they'd be in all the geography books."

General Tin smiled and shook his head. "That's just where they wouldn't be, my dear. And that's what makes them so hard to find."

Knarf wanted to know what some of these strange countries were. "Well, sir, I'll tell you! There's the country of Miggiewump on the shores of Lake Fizzle in the Woolgi Mountains. Now the strange thing about the inhabitants of Miggiewump—the Miggiewumpers, as they are called—is that they live out part of the time on the shores of Lake Fizzle."

"Where do they live the rest of the time?" Hanid asked.

"In the Lake," General Tin replied, "they live in the lake. My goodness, how can they do that?"

"They manage quite well. They jump in the lake and hold their breath, meanwhile kicking with their long legs as they swim from place to place. Though more often they stay very contentedly at the bottom of the lake, resting comfortably on the soft mud. They always take great care not to talk to each other while they're at the bottom of the lake."

"Why don't they talk to each other?" Knarf inquired.

"For two very good reasons. The first reason is that if they talked to each other they would have to open their mouths. And if they opened their mouths, the water of the lake would pour into them and they would soon be drowned. The second reason is they have nothing to say."

"Hopping about and catching flies," replied General Tin.

Later, when Knarf and Hanid thought more about the curious inhabitants of Miggiewump, Hanid couldn't help saying that they reminded her a good deal of frogs.

But General Tin just smiled when Hanid asked him. He wouldn't tell.

General Tin told the shadows of his travels.

to say. This is one of the best reasons in the world for not talking."

"But they do talk to each other when they're on the shores of Lake Fizzle—I mean, when they're on dry land!" said Hanid.

Again General Tin shook his head. "The Miggiewumpers never talk. When they really have something to say, they gather together around the lake and sing."

Sweet Voices
"Sing!" exclaimed Knarf. "Yes, they sing. Though they haven't got very sweet voices. They make sounds that are more like croaks than like anything else. They usually sing, or croak, all night long, especially in the summertime."

Knarf and Hanid were puzzled about this. They asked General Tin why the Miggiewumpers choose the night to sing or croak.

"They're too busy in the day time."

"Too busy doing what?"

"Hopping about and catching flies," replied General Tin.

Later, when Knarf and Hanid thought more about the curious inhabitants of Miggiewump, Hanid couldn't help saying that they reminded her a good deal of frogs.

But General Tin just smiled when Hanid asked him. He wouldn't tell.

WIFE SAVERS

Keep Milk Cool And Fresh
If you run out of ice cream, this spells you will welcome this advice. If you haven't a refrigerator or ice-chest, you can still keep milk fresh and cool in hot weather. Place the bottle of milk in a deep basin of cold water, in which a heaped tablespoon of washing soda have been dissolved.

Use For Old Cushion
If you stand on an old cushion while ironing, you won't get nearly so tired.

To Join Carpet
If you are faced with the problem of joining strips of carpeting the modern way is to use a special adhesive, which is strong enough to hold the pieces together in a vice-like grip. This is much easier than laboriously sewing each strip together. To do it, you must place the carpet, pile side downwards, with the edges joined side by side. Run the blunt edge of a knife between the two edges to push the pile downwards away from the join. You may like to tack the pieces together very lightly to keep them in position. Apply a liberal coating of the adhesive, two inches wide along the edges to be joined. Now press a four-inch strip of webbing over the adhesive and hammer down firmly, making sure that the edges are well stuck. The adhesive takes about an hour to dry, and at the end of that time the join will be perfectly secure and invisible.

Ribbon For Jumper Seams
You may wonder how to preserve the shape of blouse-makers' necker jumpers and cardigans. You may wash and dry them most carefully in the approved method, and yet the shoulder seams sag and the front fastenings of the cardigan lose its smart appearance. The best idea is to try stitching a narrow silk corded ribbon along the shoulder and arm seams, and also down the button and buttonhole strip of the jacket.

Save Tangling
Here is a hint that will save your time and temper on wash days. When you're washing aprons and nappies, tie them together. They won't tangle then with other garments.

Crepe Soles Non-Slip Hint
If you wear crepe rubber-soled shoes and you find them slippery and risky on wet roads, polished floors or grass, here's a way to make them quite safe and easy to wear. Cut ridges in the soles and heels from side to side, making them half an inch from the outer edges. A razor-blade is a good cutter to use. Cut carefully, drawing your lines first with a pencil for straightness and making cuts about 1-16 of an inch in depth. Don't cut too deeply or you will weaken the rubber sole dry.

and heel. Not worth taking risks, is it?

Don't Waste Rhubarb Leaves
This hint only goes to show that there is a use for most things. When aluminium sauce-pans are stained inside, boil rhubarb leaves in them for a few minutes and they will be bright again.

Cheap Dish Cloth
Have you thought of this one for yourself? You can make a cheap dish cloth by knitting or crocheting ordinary string.

Veiling News
Now that veiling is all the rage again, keep favourite stiff and fresh by pressing with a hot iron under a sheet of wax paper.

Longer Life For Enamel Ware
Here's a hint worth practicing. When you buy new enamelware, place it in cold water and bring to a slow boil. You'll find it will remain free longer from cracks and chips.

Remember This
Here's a don't to remember. Never use soda on aluminium. Why? It turns the metal dark.

Salt Saves The Day
If hot grease is spilt on a table or any other woodwork, then get out the ever useful salt shaker. Cover the marks at once with coarse common salt, and this prevents the grease soaking into wood and make it easy to remove when he said, "C-c-certainly," and led the way. "Twas but the work of a moment to shove a lump of sugar coated with praxin into the nap's mouth. Then the strange horse snattered away whistling. "Tu ris, Mariette."

BY THE WAY... By Beachcomber

THROUGHPUT, downput, up-put, input, backput, output, output, crossput, postput, sidewaysput will all be affected if Charlie Suet's scheme for rationalising overall figures is adopted.

Briefly, Suet's idea is that by correlation and co-ordination any set of official figures can be read both ways, according to the standard average of adjustment procedure. It is a question of summarising the integral factors before reducing them to a common denominator, and thus narrowing the gulf between the actual returns at the moment of the residual margin left over after allowing for seasonal variations, in the ratio of five to three, statistically speaking. Industrialists are studying the proposal. So am I.

For Australian politicians
NOW that the Speaker has ruled that an Australian politician may no longer call a colleague in the House of Representatives, a blood-drinker, a lackanapes, a rat, or a porcupine, members will have to use their imagination. One good idea is to invent a word that sounds insulting. Call your colleague a monger or a polp. Puzzle the Speaker by shouting angrily: "Bloddle" or by referring to a previous orator as a "remoulded tobler." Interrupt with a yell of "Saskin!"

Don't you believe it!
"CONSUMMATE" daring is a sportman to tamper with a horse before a race. Sometimes a simple bit of audacity counts off. I knew two sailors who dressed up as a horse and went to the stables where a favourite was kept. The stable-hand on guard was so dumb-founded when the "horse" said, "Can I have a word with my cousin Hoofthud, my lad?" that he said, "C-c-certainly," and led the way. "Twas but the work of a moment to shove a lump of sugar coated with praxin into the nap's mouth. Then the strange horse snattered away whistling. "Tu ris, Mariette."

Fruhlingsrauchen
AN elephant travelling by train—he must have been a very unimportant elephant not to have had an attendant placed with the brakes and stopped the train. The explanation offered was that he was a piano-playing elephant on his way to perform in circus. He couldn't keep his paws still. The moral seems to be that no musical elephant should travel without an enormous piano to practice on. In Cirencester there is an elephant which plays the flute on top of a ladder, but that is another, and a taller, story.
