Oystermen plead for help

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN
653-8894 | @ApalachTimes
dadlerstein@starfl.com

Beset by a dwindling harvest, oystermen this week appealed for steps to be taken to boost the supply of oysters in Apalachicola Bay.

At a standing-room-only meeting of the Franklin County Seafood Workers Association in the courthouse annex Monday afternoon, a majority of the membership backed two proposals that were then presented the next morning at the county commission meeting:

The FCSWA wants to create a locally owned hatchery at the county-owned Lombardi Seafood Park that would help with seeding the bay, and to make changes in the management plan for bay closures that would protect against overharvesting.

"We're the only fishing community in the world that doesn't have a hatchery," seafood industry activist Ricky Banks said.

Luther Hatfield, the FCSWA secretary, presented the hatchery plan to the county commission Tuesday morning, noting that it would produce more seed faster than any other method, including that of Mother Nature. He estimated it would cost about $70,000 to $80,000 to pipe water to the Lombardi's at Two Mile site from across the channel and to create other infrastructure.

The commissioners unanimously supported a motion to gather further information on how much such a hatchery would cost to construct and whether funding could be obtained.

One possible source could be the nonprofit Gulf Coast Marine Life Center, a collaborative partnership of experts from industry and academia who are now at work developing a Center of Excellence at Okaloosa Island, site, with other facilities planned along the Gulf Coast. The Okaloosa Island site will house a state-of-the-art marine finfish and shellfish hatchery, a coastal plant production facility, classrooms and teaching laboratories, and

WINDING WATER

CAPT. CHRIS ROBINSON | Special to the Times

This enormous waterspout was spotted from the launch ramp at Dr. Julian Bruce St. George Island State Park about 10:30 a.m. Monday. Park Manager Josh Hodson said the waterspout was far offshore and didn't pose a threat to the park, but that extensive rain caused scattered flooding in the campground.

Dog Island resident spared in plane crash

A Dog Island resident escaped serious injury after his small plane crashed en route to Jackson, Ga.

Claude C. Nardy, 59, who owns a home on Gulf Shores Drive on Dog Island, was piloting a 1941 Aeronca Chief when he crashed Monday afternoon outside Thomaston, Ga., authorities said.

The Aeronca Chief, which is registered to Nardy, was a side-by-side two-seater propeller plane popular as a touring aircraft and trainer. During World War II, the Army Air Corps used a version of it called the L-16.

Upson County, Ga., Sheriff Dan Kilgore said Nardy and Vera Allen, 39, of McDonough, Ga., went down just before 1 p.m. in a rural area near Logtown Road, 10 miles outside Thomaston.

The plane crashed into a stand of pine trees, and the couple was able to exit the plane. The sheriff described heavy damage to several areas of the single-engine plane, including a wing, the tail and propeller. He said the Upson 911 center was able to locate the crash site by using the cell phone signal from the victims' call for help.

Nardy was taken to Upson Regional Medical Center for treatment of what appeared to be minor injuries, Kilgore said. He said Allen was the only passenger on board and appeared to be unharmed in the crash.

Kilgore said the pair was headed to Seven Lakes Airport in Jackson, Ga., when the pilot reported running out of fuel. Federal Aviation Administration spokesperson Kathleen Bergen said the agency is investigating the crash.

Carrabelle city workers to get raises

Carrabelle's new budget keeps millage rates the same and grants pay raises to all city workers.

On Sept. 24, amid a room full of protesting citizens, city commissioners voted to give themselves a $200 a year raise and to grant pay raises ranging from 3 to 20 percent to city workers.

Olivia Massey, Carrabelle's newest city commissioner, championed the raises, insisting across-the-board raises would cost the city about $21,000, but some people disagree.

Only four citizens attended the first hearing Sept. 12 on Carrabelle's tentative budget.

BP settlement pays out $18 million in claims

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN

dadlerstein@starfl.com

The man who oversees the Deepwater Horizon claims process paid a visit last week to Apalachicola, rallying local staff as part of his tour of 19 claimant assistance centers from South Florida to Texas.

Patrick Juneau stopped by the claims office at the municipal complex at 194 14th St. on Sept. 24 to update the county on claims fulfilled and settlements still to come.

Nick Gagliano, who handles media relations for Juneau, said as of Sept. 23, 2,156 claims had been filed in Franklin County, with 631 of these determined to be eligible, for a total of $18.34 million paid to Franklin County residents and businesses.

"For the difference there may be some (claims) that have not been reviewed, some may be incomplete where we are waiting on documents, and some may have been denied," he said.

Hundreds flock to 2013 Estuary Day

The weather was perfect Friday afternoon, as the schools closed early and more than 700 people attended Estuary Day 2013, held at Marion Milender Park and the adjacent interpretive and research center for the Apalachicola National Estuarine Research Reserve.

In all, 73 people, 28 staff and 45 volunteers manned the exhibits.

Volunteers came from Franklin County High School and the ABC School, the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission, Dr. Julian Bruce St. George Island State Park, the Florida State University Coastal and Marine Lab and numerous other organizations.

New this year was an exhibit on honey staffed by local beekeepers George Watkins and Jimmy Moses.

Another first was a booth from the culinary students at the Franklin County School, which served up "sea shell salad," wraps and sweet treats for a very modest fee.

Organizer Lisa Bailey said the crowd was up by about 100 from last year.

Rumor has it that one young attendee failed to follow directions and wound up in one of the specimen tanks, but no name could be confirmed.

Bailey said the youngster was unharmed.

She said the fall was result of horseplay despite the fact that he was accompanied by a parent "Sounds like natural consequences to me!" she said.

2013 Franklin County Coastal Cleanup

Apalachicola Riverkeeper and its co-sponsors—Ocean Conservancy and the Franklin County Departments of Parks & Recreation and Solid Waste & Recycling—thank the 252 volunteers, including 23 site coordinators, who helped clean up our beaches, islands, bay, and river on September 21. According to the official weigh-in from the Department of Solid Waste & Recycling, volunteers collected 13.65 tons of trash: 267 bags of cans, bottles, cigarette butts, plastic, styrofoam, fishing gear, ropes, and other litter—as well as lumber, heavy construction materials, car parts, tires, crab traps, a lazy-boy recliner, jawbones, an inflatable shark, a coyote skeleton, a monster-truck tire, 2 fire extinguishers, a toy rifle, a sandbag from 2011, a refrigerator, a fiberglass boat hull, a 15' X 15' cargo net, a TV set, and a message in a bottle found buried in the sand: “Sent to sea April 6, 2013, 1 mile west of Pepperfish Key (near Steinhatchee).”

"THE ACT OF CLEANING A BEACH CHANGES YOU..." (PAM LONGOBARDI)

Letter to the EDITOR

Time to serve the needs of area seniors

Over the last seven weeks, a group of between 16 and 25 Franklin County seniors has been meeting weekly to express concern that the board of directors charged with running the Carrabelle Senior Center has not followed the policy and procedures as directed by the current 2008 Franklin County Senior Citizens Council by-laws, the code of ethics and 1975 charter of incorporation.

An annual council membership meeting in September at which you, the Franklin County 50 years old and over membership, can nominate board members and vote on the directors for the next year, as is stipulated by the Council by-laws, was not allowed to happen. Thus, your vote was denied.

It was then decided by council members that the next scheduled board meeting of the council board of directors, at 2 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 9, would be the official annual meeting of the Franklin County Senior Citizens Council at which the members can nominate and vote on new board members and voice suggestions for the use of the Carrabelle Senior Center building.

A plan on how to make the Carrabelle Senior Center return to serving the needs of the area seniors will be presented for your vote. Seniors, please attend this meeting and vote for your rights!

Students padding the FCS 'Nest' with feathers

Special to the Times

The Seahawks have been spotted preening colorful feathers; the Franklin County School's K-12 Positive Behavior Support program for the 2013-2014 school year has taken flight.

Under the school's guidelines for success, students observed being responsible, respectful and safe randomly receive colorful "feathers." Any faculty or staff member can award feathers to students following guideline behaviors throughout the school day. Students write their names on their awarded feathers before depositing them into classroom "nests" throughout the school week.

On Friday mornings, feathers are drawn from classroom nests around the campus; two from each middle and high school first period classes and two from each of the elementary classrooms. Winning feather recipients are awarded special treats and social time on Friday afternoons in a pre-designated location on the school's campus.

Each week, feathers are tallied, per grade level, in preparation for recognizing students receiving the most feathers in each nine week grading period. Special prizes will be awarded to students, at end-of-year grade level award recognition ceremonies, for receiving the most feathers throughout the school year. With the school's positive behavior support program in place, it pays to be a successful Seahawk. Students can count their feathers, and blessings: "Ain't it great to be a Hawk?"

If anyone would like to make a donation toward the FCS incentive program, contact Kris Bray, assistant principal, at 670-2800, ext. 3115 or kbray@franklin.k12.fl.us. Your support would be greatly appreciated. Go Seahawks!

WATER WARS

Congress must act now to protect river, bay

The problems that have devastated Apalachicola Bay are complicated, but the solution is simple: Congress must direct the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to release enough water to restore the health of the Apalachicola River, bay and estuary.

DAN TONSMEIRE
Special to the Times

The best way to implement this mandate is through the Water Resources Reform and Development Act of 2013. Anything short of a Congressional mandate that requires the Corps to act constitutes willful destruction of our highly productive, world-renowned fishery and the communities that depend on it for their livelihoods.

Earlier this summer, Florida Sens. Bill Nelson and Marco Rubio tried unsuccessfully to get language into the Senate's version of WRRDA. Their initial efforts were thwarted by Georgia's powerful and well-connected senior senators. Rubio and Nelson took their work on behalf of the bay to the next level by bringing a U.S. Senate Committee Field Hearing to Apalachicola in August. That hearing and the official federal declaration that Apalachicola Bay has suffered a commercial fisheries disaster brought national attention to the plight of our seafood workers. We are grateful for the senators' work.

Next, it was Rep. Steve Southerland's turn to try to convince his colleagues to put this language into the House version of the WRRDA bill. And try he did, with an impassioned plea to the House Transportation Committee on behalf of his Panhandle constituents. "Countless oystermen, coastal businesses and hardworking families have seen their way of life destroyed by decreased water flows into the Apalachicola River and

If Alabama, Florida and Georgia would work together to establish a foundation of collaboration and negotiation, a tri-state water-sharing compact could be developed that would help Florida. But after decades of waiting for the states to act and the announcement that Florida is going to seek a solution from the Supreme Court, a compact is not likely to happen.

Bay," Southerland said.

Steve Southerland knows that if the Apalachicola River does not get the freshwater flow it needs to survive, the economic productivity of Apalachicola Bay and the $5.6 billion recreational and commercial seafood industry in the eastern Gulf of Mexico it supports will be history. This destruction is all the more unthinkable because it can be prevented through immediate congressional intervention.

If Alabama, Florida and Georgia would work together to establish a foundation of collaboration and negotiation, a tri-state water-sharing compact could be developed that would help Florida. But after decades of waiting for the states to act and the announcement that Florida is going to seek a solution from the Supreme Court, a compact is not likely to happen. Even if the state's lawsuit is successful, it will be too late to save the Apalachicola River and Bay.

Congress must step in and act. Georgia has the water, and for the moment, Georgia has the power. Absent a congressional mandate to the Corps, Georgia has no incentive to negotiate.

It's now up to Southerland to lead the charge. He clearly understands the challenge ahead: "Make no mistake: there are no overnight fixes to this problem ... With countless lives and livelihoods at stake, I am committed to standing shoulder-to-shoulder with local leaders and the citizens who live along Apalachicola River and Bay to keep the water flowing."

Southerland did not leave empty-handed from his most recent efforts for the Apalachicola River and Bay. He has begun the process for an investigation of the Corps' management by the U.S. Government Accountability Office and he has received a commitment for another congressional hearing to closely examine the Corps' management of the river's flow.

But it is essential that Congress act now to protect our magnificent river and bay, a one-of-a-kind ecological-treasure. With the House of Representatives poised to vote on its version of WRRDA, we are counting on Southerland to overcome politics and ensure that the final WRRDA bill clearly directs the Corps of Engineers to send Florida the water it deserves and the water it needs. It won't be an easy lift, but it will be worth the effort.

Congress must act now. We cannot let the communities die that depend on these vital natural resources. We can't let the Apalachicola River and Bay die. Not on our watch.

Dan Tonsmeire has served as riverkeeper and executive director of the Apalachicola Riverkeeper since May 2010.

GOVERNOR:

Legal action against Georgia 'only way forward'

Special to the Times

On Tuesday, Gov. Rick Scott and Attorney General Pam Bondi announced Florida has filed suit against Georgia to stop its unchecked and growing consumption of water that continues to harm the families of Northwest Florida.

"Georgia has refused to fairly share the waters that flow between our two states, so to stop Georgia's unmitigated consumption of water, we have brought the matter before the U.S. Supreme Court," Scott said. "Georgia's over-consumption of water threatens the existence of Apalachicola Bay and the future economic development of the region."

"Generations of Florida families have relied upon these waters for their livelihood but now risk losing their way of life if Georgia's actions are not stopped. Through this historic legal action, we are fighting for the future of Apalachicola Bay and its families. After 20 years of failed negotiations with Georgia, this is our only way forward in securing the economic future of northwest Florida."

Bondi said, "I am proud to join Gov. Scott in this fight to protect Florida's fair share of water from Georgia's over-consumption, which is devastating Apalachicola Bay's ecosystem."

Florida and Alabama have sought relief from harm caused by reduced flows and increased Georgia consumption in the Apalachicola-Chattahoochee-Flint river basins over the past 20 years through legal challenges, without success. Florida now proposes to address the problem squarely — an Original Action filed with the U.S. Supreme Court seeking injunctive relief against Georgia's unmitigated and unsustainable upstream consumption of water from the Chattahoochee and Flint river basins.

Apalachicola River water levels are affected by withdrawals from the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers at all times. The Metro-Atlanta area primarily obtains its water from the Chattahoochee River, with withdrawals totaling 360 million gallons per day. Georgia's consumption is expected to nearly double to about 705 million gallons per day by 2040, as Atlanta's population and associated water withdrawals grow unchecked. That estimated daily consumption represents the approximate water volume of the entire Apalachicola Bay on an annual basis.

Historically low water levels brought about by Georgia's excessive consumption have caused oysters to die because of higher salinity, increased disease and predator intrusion in the Bay. Until recently, Apalachicola Bay accounted for about 10 percent of the nation's Eastern oyster supply. However, the oyster industry in Apalachicola collapsed in 2012 after years of reduced flows of freshwater into the Bay, leading Scott to seek and obtain a Commercial Fisheries Disaster Declaration from the U.S. Department of Commerce earlier this year.

The original budget draft did not contain the pay raises, but early in the meeting, Massey said raises were necessary and should be added in.

"There's money in the budget, and they haven't had raises in seven years," Massey said. "These men are working at poverty level, making $20,000 a year. Jared Mock is the only employee taking out inmates every day. He makes $25,000 a year."

She said Mock's work was hazardous and deserved greater compensation and that the cost of the raises was slight and would not raise taxes. She distributed a worksheet showing the current salaries of city employees, how much increase each worker would receive and the total cost, $21,500 for the city and the same amount for the water and sewer department.

Under the proposal, workers earning $40,000 or more received a $1,000 raise, those earning $30,000 to $39,000 received a $2,000 raise and those earning $20,000 to $29,000 received a $3,000 raise. Commissioners got a $200 annual pay increase. Mock, an employee since January 2011, got 20 percent, increasing his salary from $25,000 to $30,000.

City Clerk Keisha Messer said the proposed increase in water and sewer expense would be funded by reducing the contribution to the contingency fund.

"We had planned to contribute $70,000, and I reduced that to $50,000, which will give us $600,000 in that account," she said. "We try to keep a rolling balance of $400,000."

The $21,500 for city raises will be funded by adjusting the balance forward, Messer said.

One member of the audience asked if commissioners were concerned about public perception of the raises when so many people are struggling with a poor economy.

"They choose to be seafood workers. I've seen the bay in a lot worse shape than it is today back in 1985," Massey said. "How come them oystermen is making $1,000 a week and still drawing $900 in food stamps? They have the opportunity. They don't want to do nothing."

She said few seafood workers have taken advantage of Workforce Florida programs to get additional training to pursue new careers in the face of problems with the oyster harvest.

After discussion, the proposed raises passed unanimously.

After the vote, Commissioner Brenda La Paz said, "You know folks out there aren't going to understand about the raises, so is everybody ready to get chewed up about it?"

Massey replied, "Oh, I'm sure, but the same ones that'll be complaining is the same ones that will be complaining when their yard is full of water or a tree's fell in their yard, when we do have a disaster. Who they'll call first is the city employees."

About 25 people, many of whom spoke out against the raises, attended the final budget meeting Sept. 24. La Paz opened the meeting with a speech decrying the proposed raises.

She said she had reviewed the proposal in the interim since the first meeting and felt it was unreasonable.

"At this point, the city and water and sewer are spending more than they take in," she said. "At that rate, we won't have revenue available to pay salaries. The general fund reserve, water and sewer contingency are savings accounts and should not be used for repeating expenses. If we use from our reserve and contingencies to support significant salary increases this year, what will we do next year and the years after? The reserve and contingency accounts are sacred and need to be reserved for emergencies. Reimbursement from FEMA can take years."

Messer said La Paz did not understand the funding and that no money would be taken from contingency or reserve accounts.

"I'm terribly offended that the commissioners voted themselves raises unless those raises don't take effect until everybody in here is re-elected," said former finance commissioner Gathana Parmenas.

"I was finance commissioner for several years when the city had a lot of money," she said. "Tax revenue was rolling in from a lot of developments that are now ghost developments. Property values are declining every year, and so our millage rates are going up every year. We have no more people in this town than we did in the year 2000. Some people say we have fewer. If the census says we have more, it is because they're in the prison. It's not because they're tax-paying citizens on the outside."

"What's happening is if you compare what city government cost us to run in the year 2000 for the same number of people versus what it's costing us to run right now, one can see that we've got a really big elephant to feed here," Parmenas said. "I think everybody is reasonable about being concerned about whether we're dipping into money that was left over from those lush years in order to keep things rolling with no more people to pay the taxes and with declining property values. So what we want, Keisha, is reinsurance that the money coming in every year at least equals the money going out every year. When we hear words like contingency and reserves, it sounds to us like you're dipping into the rainy day funds."

"You haven't planned for any capital expenditures, and in the same meetings I hear about how terrible the roof is, how terrible the A/C and heating is and that it's going to cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. That needs to be in your budgeting process from the beginning," she said.

Other audience members complained adjustments for workers compensation insurance and other hidden benefits were improperly figured and that no city worker was below the poverty level.

"Evidently, you're not taking in the FICA or retirement income that's added to the person's income. If a base salary is $31,000 and you add FICA and retirement, he gets over $54,000," Randy Usher said. "Is that below poverty level? The lowest income guy on here makes over $30,000."

La Paz presented commissioners with a handout she said demonstrated the pay increases would actually cost the city more than $700,000 and water and sewer more than $600,000.

In an interview after the meeting, Messer said, she did not believe the figures on the sheet were correct and that adjustments to FICA and workman's compensation would not be made until the next fiscal year.

Usher and La Paz warned that a 20 percent pay raise for a single employee could upset coworkers.

Massey said Mock's job was dangerous, and he deserved a raise.

"I've been down there for a little over a year. I don't have any retirement. If I don't go to work, I don't get a paycheck," Shawn Oxendine said. "I want everybody to prosper and I want us to do good. I'm just asking y'all to run this thing like a business. If we don't run it like a business, we're going to run it into the ground."

Massey said money for the raises was available in the budget without increasing millage. La Paz said the decision to give raises should be delayed and a formal pay scale developed.

The millage rate of 8.77 passed unanimously, with Finance Commissioner Charlotte Schneider not in attendance. The budget passed 3-1 with La Paz opposed. As the meeting closed, La Paz announced she would not accept an increase in her salary.

The city of Carrabelle was the only taxing district to see an enlargement of its tax base, after having suffered a nearly 26 percent decline last year. Carrabelle's combined valuation this year will expand from $101.8 million to $102.7 million, an increase of $916,000, or almost 1 percent.

will serve as a resource to support Sea Grant outreach programs designed to transfer knowledge to the private sector.

Dr. Karl Havens, a University of Florida professor who has worked closely with local seafood industry leaders in the aftermath of the Deepwater Horizon oil spill in 2010, serves on the marine life center's advisory board, a collection of experts from around the world.

In addition to the hatchery idea, the FCSWA on Monday backed a proposal to ensure against over-harvesting by appealing to state officials to expand their closures in the event that too much rain, or too high of river levels, forces a closure of the bay. The seafood workers want to make sure that in the event too much water forces closure of Cat Point — which is frequently the case during the winter season because it is closest to the river — that such a closure also extends to the oyster bars on the Miles farther west.

"The Miles there ain't nothing," Hartsfield said Monday. "Is anyone here works the west end of the bay?"

When few hands were raised, he then asked, "Who's doing a little better on Cat Point? How long do you think Cat Point's going to hold up?" Banks asked the audience how many bags they were bringing in on average per day, and the consensus was that it was under three.

The majority of boats working Cat Point are catching under three bags a day," Banks said. "I hope to God it gets better around November and December."

Not everyone agreed times were that bad, with Kenny Reeder and Philip Vinson saying they were catching more than a dozen bags per day, provided they kept their boats moving.

"The sky's is not falling; the bay's coming back," Vinson said. "You can make a living out here."

Seafood dealer David Barber said he's paying oystermen the best prices he ever has, at about $42 per bag, but he's only buying about 60 to 80 bags "on a good day," about one-fifth of what he could buy in a robust year. He said his trucks are shipping out far fewer loads than usual. "Now I'm lucky to get a load of oysters a week out of Louisiana," he said, noting he expects production from south Texas to be pretty good heading into the winter months, when demand typically rises for the holidays.

Hartsfield did not spare state agencies from criticism, faulting the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services for spending more than $400,000 on research into aquaculture while not getting to the bottom of what's causing the drop-off in production at the oyster bars.

"That's what DOACS is doing for us," he said. "They want us to quit working our live bars and start farming oysters. They're wanting us to put ourselves out of work. Both groups (DO-ACS and FWC) are trying to destroy our bay."

Hartsfield said he learned at a meeting last week that aquaculture methods can yield production in 12-16 months' time, and that a grower can make between $12,000 and $16,000 a year, but it would cost between $15,000 and $20,000 in start-up costs, much more than a typical oysterman has on hand to invest.

He urged his fellow oystermen to avoid catching undersized oysters and to be sure to throw unsold oysters back in the bay.

"We keep on doing what we're doing, we're not going to catch nothing," Hartsfield said. "By Christmastime, there aren't going to be any left out there."

"We can't get any help and assistance with this bay with the bay running wide open," he said. "Without assistance, this bay is going to get worse. There's oysters still dying at the west end."

Jerry Williams said,

"Hagan's flat to the west, north spur, is just as clean as a sand dune. There's little on Cat Point, but to the west there's nothing."

He downplayed the likelihood that his fellow oystermen would be able to profit from aquaculture. "That's a sucker's game, but there's big money in managing programs like that," Williams said. "The people who make the money are those who supervise."

One bright spot that emerged was several oystermen who said they're beginning to see growth in the oysters they're catching, especially since the amount of freshwater coming down the river is increasing for the first time in years.

"I can take you and show you bars with new oysters, new growth on it," one man said.

Hartsfield urged the oystermen to take steps to organize a caravan to Tallahassee, for a chance to make their plea for assistance directly to legislators and the governor himself.

"We have to have at least 500 people load up and go, when the governor's there," he said. "How

Troy professor plans study of Apalachicola history

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN

dadlerstein@starfl.com

A professor of history at Troy University told members of the Apalachicola Area Historical Society on Saturday morning that he plans to write a social history of Apalachicola, focused on the theme of the community's ability to rebound despite adverse and changing conditions.

"There are thousands of Southern towns, suffering the vagaries of economic ups and downs. They're gone away; they're dead towns," said Robert Saunders, chairman of the history department at the Alabama university. "Apalachicola easily could have succumbed to yellow fever, to floods, to the fire of 1900. I want to find out what has historically driven the town to keep on," he said, "Apalachicolans have been knocked down many times, but they've always come back."

Saunders was guest speaker at the society's general meeting, held at the Raney House carriage house and attended by about 30 members of the society.

Saunders said he expected to work on the book for about two years and plans to begin after he completes the story of Wilber Wightman Gramling, a Leon County man who served in the Fifth Florida Infantry Regiment during the Civil War. He saw action at Antietam, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg; was sent to the prisoner-of-war camp at Elmira, N.Y.; and left behind one of the few surviving diaries written by a Florida soldier during the war, particularly rare in that it documents the experiences of a serviceman incarcerated in a Union prisoner-of-war camp.

Saunders is also doing work on the letters exchanged between Mary Todd Lincoln's half-sister, Elodie Todd, and her fiancé Nathaniel Henry Rhodes Dawson, a Selma, Ala., lawyer and politician, Confederate officer and United States commissioner of education.

The professor, a Baltimore, Md., native who moved to Selma as a boy when his father, an FBI agent, was reassigned there, has taught college for 26 years and is an interim associate dean at Troy. He earned his bachelor and master's degrees from Salisbury State University and a doctorate from Auburn University in 1994.

In his recounting of Apalachicola's economic history, Saunders described how the port city has been both geographically and socially isolated, but cosmopolitan in its sensibilities and diverse in its ethnic makeup.

He said a visit to Chestnut Cemetery quickly reveals that "this is a town of immigrants, a town of Northerners. The first thing that strikes you is they (the deceased) are from somewhere else."

Saunders said he plans to explore the history of Apalachicola's ethnic enclaves, and its spirit of survival, by drawing on the history of families from all walks on life, as opposed to focusing exclusively on high-profile families, such as the Ormans and the Raneyes, or famous individuals, such as Alvan Chapman or William Popham.

HAVE A PIECE OF HISTORY?

Professor Robert Saunders is hoping for assistance from area individuals in terms of providing him letters, family records, photos and other historical artifacts for his upcoming work. To reach him, email him at rsaunders@troy.edu.

SPECIAL TO THE TIMES

Dr. Robert Saunders, Troy University professor of history, addresses members of the Apalachicola Historical Society.

William Warren Rogers, a professor emeritus at FSU, whose 1986 work "Outposts on the Gulf" on the history of Franklin is considered the most definitive history of the area.

He said he admired Rogers' work but found it incomplete, in that it devoted lots of focus on individuals, such as real estate and confidence man William Popham, to the exclusion of a broad look at social and religious trends.

Saunders said he believes Rogers would welcome a successor to his work, especially from World War II to the present, but that he plans to conclude his narrative before the 1980s to ensure against bias.

"When I get close to the present, I start getting nervous," he said. "We know more about Charlemagne than we know of John Kennedy."

He also noted that while the rest of the county has a fascinating history, "I intend to focus on Apalachicola, because that's the area's anchor."

After Saunders presentation, the society had its annual general meeting and voted on a series of updates to their bylaws. In addition, they re-elected the current board, which includes President Tom Daly, Vice President David Adlerstein, Secretary Shirley Taylor and Treasurer Fran Edwards. In addition they re-elected Gene Smith to another term on the board of directors.

Main Street completes hand rail project

Special to the Times

Historic Apalachicola Main Street recently completed another downtown improvement project in Apalachicola.

Hand rails have been installed along the west block of U.S. 98 in the center of town, which encompasses several businesses including a restaurant, retail shops, and a law office.

The Main Street design committee chose this project for safety and aesthetics reason. Members of the board of directors held several meetings with building and shop owners along that block to discuss what could be done to the steps to make them more attractive and safer.

"From the discussions with the business owners, we initially thought of redesigning the steps," said Jim Bachrach, chair of the design committee. "However, the group eventually decided the steps are part of our history and rather than change what has been then for forever, we would install railings; keeping with our mission of preserving and enhancing the downtown area."

Main Street located a fabricator in Port St. Joe and they worked closely on the design and installation of the railings. "It seems to be accepted from the community as a good thing and it was a pleasure working with our shop owners on this project" said Bachrach.

The Apalachicola Area Historical Society has now asked Main Street to do the necessary leg work to have railings put in front of the Raney House.

Main Street, affiliated with the state and national Main Street organization, has the objective of taking on an aggressive, ongoing revitalization program for Apalachicola.

Main Street continues to work towards improving the overall look of the downtown area.

The settlement he oversees is separate from the portion of the case federal Judge Carl Barbier is now weighing, which is the amount of Clean Water Act fines that BP will be subject to. This could range from $1,100 for every barrel spilled through simple negligence to as much as $4,300 a barrel if the company is determined to have been grossly negligent.

The government is arguing that it was a matter of gross negligence and that 4.2 million barrels were spilled, which could mean fines of as much as $18 billion. BP contends simple negligence and that only 2.45 million barrels were spilled, making the total fines no more than $2.7 billion. The determined fee will be paid out through the RESTORE Act.

In an interview after his visit, Juneau outlined how the current claims process is intended to serve individuals and businesses who did not agree to a final settlement when the GCCF disbursed funds in the aftermath of the oil spill.

He said there is no cap on the amount of claims for the dozen categories of individuals and businesses that may be eligible, with the exception of those in the seafood industry. The cutoff date for those seafood-related claims, which have a cap of $2.3 billion, was December 2012, after which no new claimants can come forward.

Juneau said because the entire $2.3 billion cap was not exhausted in the first round of seafood industry payouts, there will be an upcoming second round of payouts to these same claimants until all this settlement money is spent.

He said there is no cap on the claims for other businesses, such as individual businesses and coastal rental units, which are eligible to submit claims until April 22, 2014.

"We have a lot of work left to do. It's a job, and we're going to fulfill the job. We've got a way to go. But the mission's never changed," he said.

Statewide, 63,851 claims have been filed and 16,167 eligibility notices issued, for a total of almost $1.08 billion. Overall, there have been 209,655 claims filed and 57,188 eligibility notices issued, totaling more than $4.76 billion, Gagliano said.

Writing spiders stuff of legends

Writing spiders are beautiful denizens of the roadside and garden.

These spiders are members of the genus Argiope, which includes rather large, brightly colored spiders found throughout the world. Most countries in tropical or temperate climates are home to one or more species. The name is from a Greek word meaning "silver-faced" because many Argiope spiders are silvery white around the eyes.

BUDS 'N' BUGS
Lois Swoboda

In North America, the most common member of the genus is Argiope aurantia commonly known as the black and yellow garden spider, zipper spider, corn spider or the writing spider, because it weaves a white pattern into its web.

The highly reflective white patterns are called stabilimentum. They play a role in attracting prey to the web, and may prevent its accidental destruction by large animals by rendering the otherwise transparent trap visible. The center of their large webs is two to three feet above the ground.

Writing spiders are active both day and night in our area. They often hunt during the day and construct or repair their webs after dark. Once a female finds a suitable site for her webs, she tends to stay there unless the web is frequently disturbed. Adult males roam in search of potential mates, but once they find a female they build small webs nearby and court her by plucking and vibrating her web.

After mating, the female lays her eggs, weaving her egg sac into the web. The sac contains between 400 and 1400 eggs. These eggs hatch in autumn, but the spiderlings overwinter in the sac and emerge during the spring. The egg sac is composed of multiple layers of silk and protects its contents from damage. Many species of insects and other spiders have been observed to parasitize the egg sacs.

Like almost all spiders, writing spiders are harmless to humans and handy in a garden since they eat insects. They are capable of consuming prey up to twice their size. They might bite if grabbed, but otherwise do not attack large animals. Their venom is not regarded as a serious medical problem for humans.

Legend has it that if you speak a name within their hearing, they will weave it into their web resulting in the death of the person named. In some areas, even looking at a writing spider is said to doom the observer. Another legend states that you will die if a writing spider looks at you long enough to "count your teeth."

"If you wish to thrive, let a spider stay alive," is a saying that refers to all spiders.

A popular Cherokee tale credits Grandmother Spider with bringing light to the world "in the early times when everything was dark and no one could see because the sun was on the other side of the world." The animals agreed that someone must go and steal some light. Possum and buzzard both tried and failed.

Finally, Grandmother Spider made a bowl of clay, rolled it to where the sun sat, weaving a web as she traveled across the sky. She placed the sun in the bowl, and rolled it home, following her web and traveling from east to west, bringing light with her as she came. The sun continued to follow that path daily from then on.

"Bigfoot Enigma" is an interesting read for a rainy afternoon

Have you ever wondered about Bigfoot? Scott Marlowe answers all your questions and raises a few more in his newest book to be released later this year.

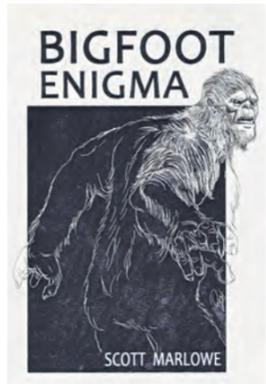

Marlowe, a frequent visitor to Franklin County, last month had a meet-and-greet at Downtown Books where he signed copies of his first publication "Cryptid Creatures of Florida."

Bookstore owner Dale Julian said the book is a big seller with the beach crowd.

In "Bigfoot Enigma," Marlowe summarizes sightings of "wild men" around the world. It seems they occur on every continent but Antarctica and many Pacific Islands. He points out that large apes and in particular man's ancestors, were and are relatively rare animals living in dispersed populations. He conjectures that scattered populations of an unknown ape or apes may still exist in wilderness areas.

Marlowe cites the Bili Ape, a population of unknown primates recently discovered in central Africa, to support his reasoning.

The volume includes quotes from the famed primate behavior specialist Dr. Jane Goodall

All you ever wondered about 'Bigfoot' acknowledging the possibility that Bigfoot may be real. "I'm a romantic. I always wanted them to exist," said Goodall.

Marlowe also outlines the latest research on DNA typing of hair believed to have come from unknown apes.

In addition, the book contains a broad collection of accounts of Bigfoot encounters throughout history. It is liberally illustrated with both photographs and artistic renderings of the elusive creature.

If you have an open mind and are in the mood for a little thought provoking speculation, then look for Bigfoot Enigma to be released around Christmas.

Lionfish derby offers real-life look at invader

By Amanda Nalley
Special to the Times

Before August 2013, I had talked a lot about lionfish, but other than seeing them in tanks, I had never put my hands on one and never had one for dinner.

Lionfish is a hot topic right now. The population of this invasive, nonnative species has boomed exponentially in the past few years, and recent scientific studies indicate that this species may be negatively impacting our marine resources. Today, we are seeing them in places we've never seen them before, and there are no signs of them going away anytime soon.

The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission (FWC) has taken notice and is moving forward with actions to help control the population, from changing regulations to hosting a Lionfish Summit on Oct. 22-24 in an effort to identify research and management solutions to the lionfish issue. The summit will be in Cocoa Beach. Visit FWCLionfish.Eventbrite.com to learn more.

As the public information specialist for the FWC's Division of Marine Fisheries Management, it is my job to reach out to the media and sometimes the public with lionfish information. I often get asked questions like, "Can you eat them? What do they taste like? How do you filet them without getting stuck by one of their venomous spines?" While I knew the answer to the questions, firsthand knowledge often trumps what you've read any day.

In August, I got plenty of firsthand knowledge as I attended the first ever Northeast Florida Lionfish Rodeo in Jacksonville. As the boats began to come in, I, with the help of coworker Alan Pierce, helped filet lionfish and, later, got to eat some. I admit, I was nervous as I began filleting my first one. Should I wear gloves? What if I get poked? What is the best way to get the meat off the fish?

The best thing I learned that day? It's not as scary as it looks.

Lionfish have up to 18 spines that have venom. To be clear here, the spines are not hollow like a snake's fangs. Instead, they are more like clear to opaque toothpicks with grooves. If you were to stick yourself, the skin covering the spine would push back, releasing the venom encapsulated in grooves along the spine. The venom is not in the meat of the fish. It is also susceptible to heat, so cooking the fish neutralizes it. The stings are painful, but can be treated with hot, but not scalding, water.

When filleting a lionfish, you have quite a few options to keep your hands and fingers safe.

My personal favorite was a needle-resistant glove. Using it on my left hand only to hold the fish down, I used my ungloved hand to filet. Others chose to go gloveless and hold the spines down. Another option that I tried but didn't quite get comfortable with is clipping the spines with scissors. It was an effective method, but we had a lot of lionfish to filet and it felt time-consuming. For the most part, once you figure out the spine issue, filleting the fish is easy. It is just like filleting any other fish you catch.

While there wasn't much meat on the smaller ones, the effort was worth the return: a delicious, flaky white delicacy. It is not "fishy" in taste and has a nice consistency. I tried lionfish three ways that night: in a ceviche, fried whole and filets cooked in a light panko and served with rice and a mango reduction. All three were delicious. More restaurants are starting to serve up lionfish, which can be harvested and sold commercially.

But the most rewarding part of being there was getting to talk to the public as they oohed and aahed over the colorful fish. Some had never seen a lionfish. Many did not even know they were a problem in Florida's waters.

The rodeo was a success, with more than 400 lionfish removed from the waters near Jacksonville. The largest was 17 inches and the smallest, a mere 3.5 inches. With the current best method of control being removal via nets or spearing devices, these grassroots efforts are one of the best means of limiting the population. In 2012, in an effort to encourage the public to participate in lionfish-control efforts, the FWC removed the requirement to have a recreational license when using specific gear to target lionfish, including hand-held nets, pole spears, Hawaiian slings and any device geared specifically for lionfish. The FWC also removed any and all bag limits on lionfish.

Improving Seahawks fall to Wewahitchka

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN
653-8894 | @ApalachTimes
Dadlerstein@starfl.com

Franklin County was able to move the ball Friday night at Wewahitchka, but too many turnovers and the blazing speed of the Gators quarterback proved too much for the Seahawks.

The Gators (1-4) rushed for more than 250 yards and dominated the winless Seahawks in a 40-14 contest decided by halftime. But the Seahawks managed 247 yards on the ground, and threw for 71 more to keep pace.

"We had critical turnovers at critical points in the game," said coach Aaron York. "We had a very good first quarter. I thought all the coaches did well with time management. We did a real good job of running the ball."

Wewa's Jonathan Palmer rushed for 45 yards in the first quarter to stake the Gators to an early 6-0 lead.

Wewahitchka had the ball for only seven offensive plays in the opening half, but the lead bulged in the second period as Javar Hill scored on a run of 15 and 25 yards and Willie Hill put the icing on the first-half cake by scooping up a fumble at the Seahawks 35 and running in for the touchdown. After posting a 26-0 halftime lead, Wewa quarterback Rashard Ranie, who rushed for 111 yards, continued the onslaught when he dashed 54 yards for a third-quarter touchdown and Shannon Jones, getting some varsity playing time, covered 16 yards on the ground for the Gators' final score.

"Defensively we did not contain very well at all. Rashard Ranie hit the sideline on us three times and it was a foot race and we couldn't catch him," said York.

The Seahawks managed to make it a game in the third quarter with two TDs, as sophomore fullback Trenton Lee scored on a 7-yard run, and senior quarterback Logan McLeod on a 4-yard run, to make it 33-14. Sophomore Walker DeVaughn kicked both extra points.

Lee was the game's leading rusher with 25 carries for 116 yards. Junior Cole Wheeler tallied 15 rushes for 85 yards, while McLeod was 4-for-11 from the air, with three interceptions. He also had one interception as a defensive back.

"One thing I was very happy about we did a very good job with special teams. We ran for over 120 yards on kickoff returns," said York.

Senior Alex Causey had four returns for 72 yards, while Wheeler had three returns for 50 yards.

"We look back between the last time we played Wewa in August and we've made tremendous strides. We judge each week if we got better or not and this ought to tell you we're getting better," he said.

The team travels to Port St. Joe Friday to take on their rivals to the west.

"My guys will be ready," said York. "The kids are practicing hard every day. There's no quit in these kids. It's every day that they come out. They're working hard in the weight room. We have 23 kids out there; I couldn't ask for a better group."

Volleyballers down West Gadsden, Rickards, FAMU

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN
653-8894 | @ApalachTimes
Dadlerstein@starfl.com

The Lady Seahawks varsity volleyball team continued its winning ways last week, triumphing twice over West Gadsden, once over Rickards and FAMU, and losing to South Walton.

The week got underway at West Gadsden Sept. 19, when the varsity swept both games of a double header, each in three straight games. The team won 25-5, 25-15 and 25-16, and then in the nightcap, won 25-11, 25-9 and 25-12.

"With this team being our easiest competition, we were able to try some different combinations and let the girls try different position," said coach Tara Klink, who shares coaching duties with Hilary Stanton. "It was fun to explore different possibilities! Morgan Mock led the team with eight aces in a single game, followed closely by Scout Segree with seven."

In a district game at South Walton on Sept. 24, both the junior varsity and varsity squads were unable to win a game.

The JV fell 11-25 and 20-25, while the varsity lost 16-25, 12-25 and 19-25. "South Walton has proven to be our toughest competition in our district for both JV and varsity," said Klink.

At Rickards on Sept. 25, the JV lost a close one, falling 20-25 and then coming back to win 25-21 before losing the rubber game, 13-15.

"This was a hard loss for us in overtime, especially when we were capable of getting the win," said Klink. "We will definitely work harder to be ready for the next time we meet."

The varsity emerged victorious in a hard-fought contest, losing 25-27 and then winning 25-21. The Lady Seahawks then fell 17-25 but came back to win 25-16. Franklin County walked away with a slim 18-16 win in the fifth and deciding game.

"We hung tight with this team when we should have had an easier win," said Klink. "I'm glad we were still able to pull out a win on an off night."

The young ladies wrapped up a busy week with two wins at home on Sept. 26 against FAMU. The JV won after falling in the opener 15-25 and coming back to post 25-17 and 16-14 victories.

"This was such an exciting game to watch as we won in overtime," said Klink. "I was very proud of the girls for coming back after such a slow start."

The varsity girls lost their opening game, 19-25, but came back to win three straight, 25-22, 25-16 and 25-20.

"I was so proud of the girls for not giving up during this match," said Klink. "The first game was a little rough for us, but they fought through to get the win. It was quite impressive when their whole team was a good foot taller than any of our girls. It was a really fun game to watch!"

The teams travel to Liberty County today, Oct. 3 for a district match, and then are at home Friday against Altha.

On Tuesday, they travel to Port St. Joe for a district match, and then return home Oct. 10 to face Rickards on "Think Pink" night to promote the battle against breast cancer.

DIXIE DEBS

LOIS SWOBODA | The Times

County honors Dixie Debs

On Tuesday, softball coaches Kevin Newell and Matt Kelley presented the county commission with a trophy to add to the showcase in the courthouse annex. Franklin County's Dixie Debs, for girls age 18 and under, brought home the first-place trophy from the Dixie League 2013 state softball tournament. The Debs, who swept through the state tournament in Brooksville without a loss, were voted number one for sportsmanship.

"This was one of my most fun years since I've been coaching," Newell said, "Winning the sportsmanship award was just icing. We want to start a tradition sort of what Spring Hill was, a powerhouse."

The team included Brittany King, Morgan Newell, Morgan Kelley, Christina Collins, Shannon Pridgeon, Ally Millender, Gracyn Kirvin, Maddie Newell, Ashley

Carroll, Marlyn Lee, and Hannah Winkler. Coaches included Newell, Kelley and Allen Millender.

"These girls have brought softball a long way in Franklin County over the last several years," Parks and Recreation Director Nikki Millender said.

Outdoors BRIEFS

Gulf red snapper season opens Oct. 1

The recreational harvest of red snapper opened Oct. 1 in state and federal waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

In state waters, which are from shore to nine nautical miles in the Gulf, the season will remain open through Oct. 21, closing on Oct. 22.

In federal waters, which are from 9 nautical miles out to 200 nautical miles, the season will remain open through Oct. 14, closing on Oct. 15.

These supplemental recreational red snapper seasons are for 2013 only. The minimum size limit in state and federal waters is 16 inches, and the daily bag limit is two per harvester, per day. There is a zero daily bag and possession limit for captain and crew on for-hire vessels.

Anglers are required to use circle hooks and dehooking devices when fishing for any reef species, including red snapper, in Gulf of Mexico state and federal waters. The requirement to use venting tools in federal waters was removed on Sept. 3. The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission will consider adopting similar changes at a future meeting. The intent of these rules is to help conserve fishery resources by increasing the chances for a fish to survive after being caught and released.

Don't text and drive; it's the law

Special to the Times

Texting and driving is no longer legal in Florida. Florida becomes the 41st state to ban texting while driving. The new law took effect at midnight, Oct. 1.

Distracted drivers are becoming one of the greatest threats on our roads today. More than 3,400 crashes occurred last year in Florida in which the driver was distracted by an "electronic device," such as a cell phone, which resulted in 24 fatalities.

The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration estimates that a driver who texts and drives is 23 times more likely to be involved in a crash. The problem is of particular concern among teenage drivers.

Eleven teens are killed each day in the U.S. as the result of a crash in which texting and driving was to blame.

How much of a distraction can texting be to a driver? Sending or receiving a text distracts a driver for an average of nearly five seconds.

Traveling at a speed of 55 miles per hour, that's the equivalent of driving the length of a football field with your eyes closed.

"Teenagers are particularly vulnerable to distracted driving crashes due to their lack of experience behind the wheel," said Julie L. Jones, executive director of the Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles (DHSMV). "Teens have the highest crash rate of any age group with more than 22,000 teen drivers involved in crashes last year and 41 of them killed."

Col. David Brierton, director of the Florida Highway Patrol, said it is important to enforce and educate all drivers about the dangers of texting and driving. "There are three things to remember to keep you safe while driving: keep your hands on the wheel, your eyes on the road and your mind on driving," he said.

The Florida law makes texting while driving a secondary offense meaning the driver must first have committed a primary offense such as reckless or careless driving, speeding or failing to wear a seat belt in order to be cited.

The DHSMV and the Florida Highway Patrol, working with safety and law enforcement partners across the state, are using this day to make motorists aware of the new law and to educate drivers on the dangers of distracted driving.

"The Florida Police Chiefs Association (FPCA) is pleased to see the implementation of the anti-texting while driving legislation. This type of law can only make our roads safer and save lives," said FPCA President, Chief Philip Thorne, Springfield PD.

"Educating the public, specifically our youth, on the dangers of distracted driving is crucial in our efforts to protect those traveling the roadways in our state."

Steve Casey, executive director of the Florida Sheriffs Association, said that during the 2013 legislative session, the association fully supported anti-texting legislation. "We are happy to have this new law put into effect today," he said.

"FSA has continually supported safe driving through our youth program, the Teen Driver Challenge, and will remain active in educating and promoting safe driving among all drivers."

The DHSMV has created public service announcements for teen drivers. For more information, visit <http://www.flhsmv.gov/fhp/DistractedDriving/>.

FWC REPORT

Officer Gore was conducting surveillance on a boat landing and while watching vessels return to the landing, one vessel operator caught his attention. The operator was having difficulty docking the boat and backing his trailer into the water to load his boat. The operator showed several signs of impairment. As the operator attempted to load his boat, he fell into the water.

At this point, Gore intervened and identified himself as an FWC officer. Again, the operator showed signs of impairment during a boating safety inspection and did poorly on field sobriety tasks. The subject was placed under arrest for boating under the influence and transported to the Franklin County Jail. While at the jail, the vessel operator submitted to a breath test, which revealed his breath alcohol content was 0.15 and 0.14.

Gore was conducting surveillance on individuals fishing at a local fishing spot, when two individuals pulled up beside him and parked in two separate vehicles next to him. One of the operators exited his vehicle and approached the window of the other vehicle. After a brief conversation, the subject produced a large sum of cash and handed it through the window to the subject in the car. He then walked around and got into the passenger seat of that car.

Gore maintained surveillance on the subjects and made contact with Franklin County Sheriff's Office and reported the suspicious activity. The K-9 Unit arrived on scene and conducted a consensual search of the vehicle and the two suspects. A large amount of cash was recovered along with a large amount of prescription pills (Percocet). Neither of the subjects had prescriptions for the controlled substance and both were arrested by sheriff's deputies.
