County ponders pay hike plans

On Tuesday, county commissioners again tabled a new set of rules that would govern county workers.

Concern over specifics on how job classifications would be instituted, and their immediate effect on the county budget, prompted commissioners to table discussion of the rules until they could study the estimated financial impact of the change over the next five years.

They plan to discuss the proposed work rules at their March 18 meeting. If the work rules eventually are passed, county employees would receive annual performance evaluations beginning this year.

On Tuesday afternoon, county legal advisor Lucille Turner of the Carson and Adkins law firm in Tallahassee, presented commissioners with a plan to formally classify county employees and set standardized wage increases based on seniority and performance.

Turner began work on the labor rules in October 2012. The wage classification plan would end across-the-board raises to county employees and require annual employee evaluations by department supervisors.

Turner developed a standardized form to simplify evaluations. Employee assessments would be completed every year on or before Sept. 1 so information on employee performance would be available to commissioners during annual budget hearings.

One of the first warm and sunny days of the season greeted the 11th annual African-American History Celebration on Saturday, as Franklin Square came alive with festivity.

Retired Chapman Elementary School teacher Lorine Banks served as grand marshal of the annual parade Saturday morning, a traditionally spirited, modest affair that precedes the Saturday morning ribbon cutting.

Clerk of Courts Marcia Johnson and Property Appraiser Rhonda Skipper represented county officials in the parade, which featured plenty of beads thrown from the cars and golf carts but less candy than typically is flung.

The mood was sweet and upbeat though, even when organizers had to "figuratively cut the ribbon" on the festival from the main stage at 11 a.m.

Covenant Word Pastor David Walker offered a blessing over the festival, followed by a collective rendition by a chorus of members of

A candidate for Florida governor campaigned at last weekend's African-American History celebration, but he wasn't your typical politician.

Kyle "KC" Gibson, 44, from Fort Lauderdale, is hoping to gather almost 120,000 signatures to get his name on the November ballot as a candidate without political affiliation.

The former elementary school teacher and now pastor of the Gibbs Chapel AME Church in North Miami Beach, Gibson said he has aspired since age 7 to run for governor. In January 2010, right after Gov. Scott stepped into office, Gibson said he filed to run for After much discussion, county commissioners Tuesday moved forward with investing in steps to finance a new hospital.

In the morning session, the commissioners balked at approving a $60,000 expenditure, requested by Weems Memorial Hospital CEO Ray Brownworth, to secure an opinion letter from BKD that would be needed to secure a loan for the new hospital.

"If we want to proceed forward with the project, we have to do this," said Brownworth, noting that this $60,000 expenditure was $15,000 less than it would have cost two years ago.

But Commissioner Pinki Jackel led opposition to moving forward with this expenditure, stressing that it was her understanding that the commissioners has recently agreed that a $50,000 expenditure for a feasibility study

Local law enforcement has blessed an effort to organize a neighborhood watch group in Apalachicola.

On Feb. 11, about 20 people met at Battery Park to discuss crime in Apalachicola. Jackie Itzkovitz chaired the meeting.

She said she became aware of a crime problem in the city after metal furniture and a golf cart charger were stolen from her yard. Itzkovitz read a list of crimes committed around town over the last three months.

"In 52 years I have not been robbed, and now it has happened, and I feel violated," Itzkovitz said.

She said she posted her concerns on Facebook and now has 360 followers. She said a watch group is in the works for Carrabelle, but she plans to concentrate on Apalachicola.

In attendance were Sgt. Ryan Sandoval, community liaison with

Realtor heads to prison for tax evasion

Special to the Times

William "Geri" Eaton, 60, was sentenced to 27 months in prison for tax evasion and for making false statements in a matter involving a health care benefit program.

Between 2004 and 2008, Eaton, a realtor, earned more than $1.18 million in taxable income. He failed to file his federal income tax returns as they became due and instead, in the fall of 2009, Eaton filed late returns for all four prior tax years. His total tax due, not counting interest and penalties, was more than $472,000. In early 2010, Eaton entered an agreement to pay his back-taxes in monthly installments of $1,000. He made six payments, and then stopped paying altogether.

On April 29, 2011, Eaton opened an account under a false Social Security number at a Tallahassee credit union.

One week later, he sold his beach house in St. Teresa for more than $1.3 million.

To conceal the money from the IRS, Eaton deposited the $727,437 in proceeds he received from the sale into his fraudulently-opened credit union account.

He later transferred a portion of this money to a Pensacola credit union account, which he had also opened under a false Social Security number.

Over the course of the next seven months, Eaton spent more than $125,000 of the sales proceeds, and made no payments on his taxes during this period.

In Sept. 2011, Eaton was treated for a heart attack at Sacred Heart Hospital in Pensacola.

In his application to the hospital for financial assistance in paying his bill, he falsely claimed that he had a single checking account with a balance of only $1,588, when, in fact, the balances in his accounts totaled well over $600,000.

In listing his assets on the application, Eaton also fraudulently omitted the fact that he had purchased two vehicles for $31,000 only a month before. In reliance on Eaton's false statements, Sacred Heart wrote off $79,622 in charges for Eaton's care.

In Nov. 2011, the IRS levied Eaton's fraudulently-opened credit union accounts and obtained approximately $610,000 as payments toward his tax liabilities.

In Nov. 2013, Eaton pleaded guilty to charges of tax evasion and making false statements in a matter involving a health care benefit program.

In addition to his prison sentence, Eaton was ordered to pay $99,126 in restitution to the IRS and to Sacred Heart Health System.

In announcing the sentence handed down by the court, United States Attorney Pamela C. Marsh expressed her deep gratitude for the work of the assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted the case, as well as the agents of IRS Criminal Investigations who investigated the case.

The case was prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Karen Rhew-Miller.

Pedrick always ready with Coast Guard career

By LOIS SWOBODA
653-1819 | @ApalachTimes
Lswoboda@starfl.com

One of Carrabelle's favorite sons is shining in his Coast Guard career.

Born here in 1982, he graduated from Carrabelle High School in 2000 and immediately enlisted in the Coast Guard. Since then his career has been meteoric.

In fall 2012, he was profiled in Coast Guard Magazine where he spoke proudly of his Franklin County roots.

"The Coast Guard Cutter Sea Hawk was the most exciting place I have been because of its location; my home town," Pedrick told his Coast Guard interviewer. "I come from a small town and graduated high school with only 32 students in my senior class, as a result, it's a very tight community and how many times in our career do we get to work in our hometown?"

"Getting to drive the Cutter Boat Medium and drop off boarding teams on boats that I used to work on as a young man is something we don't get to do every day in the Coast Guard," he said.

Today, Pedrick is an E6 boatswain mate first class on the Aids to Navigation team (ANT) at Kodiak, Alaska and executive petty officer for the unit.

ANTs are a vital element to the safety of life at sea for fishing vessel crews, commercial cargo vessels and other mariners when entering and departing through treacherous waters near ports and harbors.

It's the job of Coast Guardsmen at units like ANT Kodiak to maintain navigational aids so commercial mariners can safely deliver products and groceries throughout the communities of Alaska.

ANT Kodiak's primary mission is to maintain the aids to navigation from the entrance of the Prince William Sound in the east to the southwestern tip of Kodiak and ranging as far north as Point Hope in the Arctic.

When not occupied with maintaining beacons and buoys, ANT Kodiak provides a training vessel for the air station to hone and refine their skills for hoisting a basket or swimmer to a vessel from a helicopter to be ready for emergencies. They also simulate a vessel in distress for training exercises. This is done so when the aircrews have to respond to a maritime emergency they are ready to expertly place an emergency life raft or hoist basket on or near a vessel in distress.

Pedrick married a Carrabelle beauty, Ruth Murphy and has 8-year-old twins Bobbie and Joshua. Last August, Ruth gave birth to a baby boy Vance Eugene Pedrick.

Pedrick said his wife is his hero who "picks up from everything she knows and moves around the world" to support his career, all the while caring for three children alone while he is deployed.

Ruth and Vance Pedrick are active in scouting and enjoy the outdoors and visiting Carrabelle.

Vance's mother, Carrabelle resident Janice Pedrick, is very proud of her son and hopes he will be an example to Franklin County's youth.

"We want people to know kids in Carrabelle can go to this school, get a good education and go out into the world and be whatever they want to and be doctors and lawyers and anything else they can dream of," she said.

Vance Pedrick offers the following advice to students, "Set goals and push yourself to reach them, the world has lots to offer and you can be anything you want to be as long as you work hard."

Cigarette researcher monkeys around at schools

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN
653-8894 | @ApalachTimes
Dadlerstein@starfl.com

A prominent former researcher for the Phillip Morris cigarette company used a powerful delivery, a visual presentation and a freeze-dried monkey brain to drive home the message to schoolkids last week that all forms of nicotine addiction are bad news.

Victor DeNoble, PhD., who once worked in a secret research lab for the tobacco giant to develop a cigarette with reduced heart risk, spoke Feb. 13 to ABC School middle schoolers in the morning, to Franklin County fifth through 12th graders in the afternoon, and to the Franklin County School Board in the evening.

In it he shared his background as a researcher, in which he said his findings were suppressed by Philip Morris, he was eventually fired and his laboratory and data were seized. In 1994, after a decade of being silenced by a secrecy agreement, DeNoble became the first whistle-blower to testify before Congress about his research conducted within the tobacco industry, which showed nicotine has addictive properties similar to other drugs of addiction.

In talking with the students, he told of how

DAVID ADLERSTEIN | The Times
Dr. Victor DeNoble shares his monkey brain with the ABC students.

one of his monkeys had developed a craving for nicotine, and then passed around a preserved monkey brain for the young people to examine.

Before returning to his home in San Diego, Calif., DeNoble paid a visit to the school board.

"Your brain doesn't care where nicotine comes from," he said. "What kids don't understand is that everyone in this room is wired for drug addiction."

"Kids don't know that, they think they're immune," said DeNoble, accompanied by Gina Moore, Tobacco Prevention Specialist with the county health department. "We talked about electronic cigarettes. They're really going to be trouble for us. People are using them to maintain their addiction where they can't use tobacco products."

"We now know they contain at least five components that cause cancer," he said. "We're beginning to understand these vapors are just as toxic as the cigarette, and what's more disturbing is that young people can purchase e-cigarettes. Middle school kids are taking the empty cartridges and filling them with other drugs, like alcohol, nail polish and glue.

"E-cigarettes are probably something you guys are going to have to face soon," he told the board. "Having the ban on school grounds would really go a long way."

DeNoble also spoke to the SWAT executive council during his visit. "We were fortunate to get him," said Moore.

The $2,500 cost of DeNobles' visit came out of the tobacco prevention program's grant funding.

University of Florida reports fewer shark attacks in 2013

By Stephanie Livingston
Special to the Times

The world experienced the lowest number of shark attacks since 2009, although fatalities in 2013 were above average, according to the University of Florida's International Shark Attack File report released today.

The U.S. saw a decrease in attacks with 47, lower than the 2012 total of 54, which was the highest yearly total of the current century. There were 10 fatalities worldwide, which is higher than the 10-year average from 2003 to 2012.

Two localities, Western Australia (six deaths in past four years) and Reunion Island (five deaths in three years) in the southwest Indian Ocean, remained shark-attack hot spots, while places where shark activity is typically rare or nonexistent also experienced attacks, said George Burgess, curator of the file housed at the Florida Museum of Natural History on the UF campus.

"When sudden increases in shark attacks occur, usually human factors are involved that promote interactions between sharks and people," Burgess said. "Shark populations are not in a growth phase by any means, so a rise in the number of sharks is not to blame. However, we can predict with some reliability that shark attacks will concurrently rise with the growth of human populations, a trend we saw throughout the past century."

Seventy-two unprovoked attacks occurred worldwide, which was lower than 2012 and represents the lowest global total since 2009 when there were 67 attacks. In recent years, Burgess said, globalization, tourism and population growth worldwide have led to shark attacks in historically low-contact areas like Reunion Island, Papua New Guinea, Madagascar, Solomon Island and the small island Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean, which in 2013 saw its first recorded shark attack. As more people enter the water in these areas, they become equal opportunity locations for shark-human interaction, he said.

"Globalization of societies and the ease of modern travel means that we have access to places that have never been frequented by tourists before," Burgess said. "Remote destinations are not typically medically equipped to handle a serious shark attack. This situation is a key factor in the higher death rate this year. When a shark attack happens in a remote place, the results are going to be more dire than if it happened on a Florida beach, for instance."

Traditionally leading the world in shark attacks, North American waters saw 34 attacks in 2013 compared with 43 in 2012. Yearly fluctuations in attacks are normal because changes in ocean systems and economics, and human conditions affect the opportunities for humans to encounter sharks, Burgess said.

The 47 U.S. incidents include Hawaii, which is not recorded as occurring in North American waters by the International Shark Attack File database.

Florida led the country with 23, followed by Hawaii (13), South Carolina (6) and one each in Alabama, California, North Carolina, Oregon and Texas. The single U.S. fatality occurred in Hawaii.

Most incidents in Florida occurred in Volusia County (8), a historical hot spot that has experienced more than one-third of Florida's shark attacks, which is attributable to the heavy draw of surfers and tourists to its attractive beaches, Burgess said.

The 13 attacks recorded in Hawaii were higher than its recent average of 4.3. Burgess said spikes occurring over the past two years on the island of Maui could be due to an increase in area surfers, who globally encountered sharks most often in 2013 in 46 percent of reported cases, while swimmers were affected by 31 percent of attacks, followed by divers, with 14 percent. Although Australia experienced an average year with 10 attacks and two fatalities, international attention has been drawn to the country regarding incidents in Western Australia that resulted in the controversial reinstatement of government-sanctioned culling hunts for endangered white sharks in December.

"Even if one ignores that an endangered species is involved, the archaic reaction can only be characterized as 'revenge killings,'" Burgess said. "Although infrequent, shark attacks are high-profile events that excite the emotions of human beings and often impact a community. Killing 10 sharks after a death is not the answer as it does not result in reduced attacks. This problem has been faced in other locations around the world and addressed in more effective ways."

In addition to shark-culling activity in Australia and in Natal, South Africa, Burgess said shark populations are declining significantly as a result of over-fishing and habitat loss, with 30 million to 70 million sharks killed every year by fisheries. People, he said, pose a greater threat to sharks than sharks do to humans.

"Sharks have a lot more to fear from us than we do from them," Burgess said. "Statistically, shark attacks are extremely rare, especially considering the number of humans that enter the water each year."

Burgess said that as in any wilderness experience, it is humans' responsibility to avoid dangerous situations, or risk meeting a shark and potentially paying the consequences. He emphasized the role that scientific research can have in reducing shark attacks by creating a better understanding of the species.

Letters to the EDITOR

Transparency builds trust

Working together was a hot topic at the last Apalachicola city commissioner's meeting. It's easier to work together if we all feel fairly treated.

Fair treatment in city government (or in any governing body) requires good governance. A principle of good governance includes transparency. One way transparency can help folks work together is to make it very clear just how people are appointed to various boards, and how and by whom they are selected.

Apalachicola is a huge beneficiary of all the energy and talent provided by the many volunteers who make the city a better place to live, but Ms. A will not trust Mr. B if she believes he is only on that board to promote someone's special interest and that he is getting favors in return, favors that Ms. A doesn't get. In fact no one on any board should be getting favors, but that's another principle of good governance for another day.

The process by which board members are appointed should be available to anyone who wants to know, and the process by which any individual board member was selected should be available to anyone who wants to know. Transparency in how the board members are appointed is one step to fairness, trust, and the goal of working together.

Sincerely,
Ellen Stitt

Military training, where and how?

As a property owner in Franklin County, I was planning to build a home on a lot I own on the New River. I attended the December meeting in Apalachicola regarding the Air Force's interest in conducting military exercises in the area, known as GRASI. At the time I was undecided.

Not any more.

An exercise was conducted in January unrelated to the proposed GRASI exercises. An announcement of this was posted on the Franklin County Sheriff's Facebook page. I do not check this page on a daily basis. After talking to some neighbors, neither do they. I did not see it. I was told it stated an exercise was to be held in Franklin County. No location or time was given.

After reading various letters in the Times and talking to neighbors, I realized that numerous people were compensated for the exercises. That's fine. But what about compensating the families that were under aircraft that were flying at treetop level, at night, experiencing the noise and vibrations for four hours? What about the property owners whose property is being devalued due to the fact that they now own property that is underneath airspace that hosts military exercises? Do people want to build and expand the county tax base if their property is subject to these exercises? Is the lost tax base worth the compensation a few receive?

I contacted the FAA regarding the low altitude the aircraft were flying at. I was told that minimum flight altitude was 500 feet above the ground. The FAA contact asked what type of aircraft they were. When I told him multiple helicopters, he said the noise and vibrations must have been intense. Indeed! He also informed me that the FAA only regulates civilian aircraft and they have no jurisdiction over military aircraft. So while the contact did empathize with the situation, the FAA could not process a complaint.

It's interesting that if these aircraft were civilian, they would be in violation of flight rules. At any rate I got to thinking about why these exercises were being held in the first place. Then I realized the reason - practice. They were held so the participants could gain experience, i.e. skills which are derived from direct participation in these exercises. Which begs the following questions: How much experience do these participants have? How many hours experience do the pilots have flying at treetop level at night? What types of armaments are on these aircraft flying at night, at treetop level, over occupied residential areas? How much fuel do these aircraft carry flying at night, at treetop level, hundreds, thousands of gallons? What effect would a spill have on the river and bay if a crash would occur?

Yes, these participants need the practice, but at night, at treetop level, over occupied residential areas? How would the residents of Apalachicola or St. George Island react to helicopters flying at treetop level at night, with minimum notice?

Public input needed as Weems moves forward

I write in response to Mr. Allan J. Feifer's Feb. 13 letter to the editor ("Get on board with the board") in reference to the Weems Memorial Hospital board of directors' recent decision to limit public comment to three minutes per person (or five minutes in the case of three or less speakers from the public) at the beginning of board meetings.

Most of Mr. Feifer's concerns in his letter focused on the financial stability of our hospital. There are two very important facts that need to be considered by the public. First, the Weems balance sheet/profit and loss statement reflects ambulance service as costs to the hospital and those costs are reflected as a "subsidy" from the county to Weems. It is vital for the public to understand that the state of Florida mandates that each county provide ambulance services. If the costs were not on the Weems' financial statements as a "loss," they would appear on the Franklin County budget as a "loss." Therefore, those costs are not generally attributable to hospital operations.

Next, the hospital is making great strides in getting the financial reporting to the point that it actually reflects what I believe will be stronger than we expect, and which I am confident will grow stronger under the current leadership of the hospital. Finally, public input is not something I disregard or disdain. It is simply something that has a time and a place. Deliberative bodies all over the state of Florida structure their meetings with limitations on public comment.

Having said that, I appreciate Mr. Feifer's decision not to mention me by name in his letter; his addressing the concern he had about the Weems board's decision was gracious, and I believe it was done in order to help the public understand that this is not a personal issue between Mr. Feifer and me. I will say that I do not mind being identified personally when I have made a public comment, but I believe Mr. Feifer was being a gentleman. I appreciate that and hope at all times to reciprocate that attitude.

The reason I moved to limit public comment is the same reason that I have requested that the Weems board make an effort to follow parliamentary procedure in our meetings. We need to act as a deliberative body and use time efficiently. Following Roberts Rules of Order or some other similar parliamentary guide allows for focused, thorough and effective discussion; in fact, I am one of the most vocal members of the board of directors and parliamentary procedure can and should limit my own comments when necessary. I encourage the board's interim chair, Mr. Jim Bachrach, to make sure I am kept in line!

As to Mr. Feifer's desire to offer input to the Weems board during meetings, I believe his input is valuable and necessary in an environment where we are functioning as a county-owned facility. Every citizen, landowner and taxpayer in our county deserves the right to give input to the organizations that are responsible for directing government operations. Weems Memorial Hospital is such an organization, and I welcome public input.

On the other hand, as we move forward with the renovation and construction project that has already been mandated and partially funded by a vote of the citizens of Franklin County, there will be many decisions that will need to be made by the Weems board with the welcomed advice and consent of the Franklin County Board of Commissioners. These decisions will not be done in secret, and they will not be done without public input, but the decisions must be made, and they must be made in a timely manner.

Having explained my motives as to my motion to structure public input in board meetings, it is my intention to move at the next Weems' board meeting that we revoke the rule which we passed. I regret the impression that I did not want public input. It is a misapprehension of my views. I value public input.

At the same time, we are well past the time where we must make the decision whether or not to move forward with the taxpayer's mandate to develop a new hospital facility.

That decision has been made. Now, as a board of directors, we must, with the oversight of the county commissioners and with the help of the public, implement the directive we have received.

We must build a new hospital facility and renovate existing structures in order to meet the healthcare needs of our great county and her guests.

Very respectfully,
Homer I. McMillan, II, Esq.

the Franklin County Sheriff's Office, and Apalachicola police officers Ginger Creamer and Pam Lewis.

"This meeting is not meant to be a complaint session about the services these good people provide us on their limited budget," Itzkovitz said.

She said she wants to explore how the community can help the police to fight crime. Itzkovitz said she believed the primary role of a neighborhood watch group would be to provide information and quash rumors. They will not attempt to apprehend suspected criminals and will not be armed, she said.

Nighttime neighborhood patrols are planned as part of the service offered by volunteer crime fighters. "The sheriff has offered me a car and gas any night I wanted it, and I'm going to take him up on that," she said.

Itzkovitz invited the police officers to speak. Sandoval took the floor first. He said help from the public is needed to fight crime.

"A lot of people don't report the crimes they're supposed to be reporting," Sandoval said.

Lewis agreed. She said people who find stolen belongings frequently refuse to press charges when their things are returned.

Mayor Van Johnson said he had worked with an earlier neighborhood watch group that disbanded. "I remember some of the challenges we faced," he said. "People don't want to tell, don't want to be a snitch."

Sandoval said a strong volunteer base, training and a structured program are all part of an effective neighborhood watch group, such as what already exist in Lanark Village and on St. George Island.

"We need people who have lived here and know everybody to participate," Lewis said. "Something suspicious to somebody new in the neighborhood may not be suspicious to someone who has lived there for a while."

Creamer said safety was a major issue with crime fighting volunteers. "Never approach anybody," she said. "Try to get the tag number or a description of the clothing, but the main thing is just be safe."

Palmer Philyaw said he was a member of the police auxiliary for nine years. He stressed the importance of building a relationship with residents of patrol areas. "They need to learn the patrol car is not the enemy," he said.

"I want to be trained," Itzkovitz said.

Sandy Mitchem and Jim Kemp, organizers of the St. George Island Neighborhood Watch, attended. Mitchem said her group is anxious to help and offered to assist with training and take prospective Apalachicola watchers along on island night patrol.

She said members of the island watch receive uniforms and ID cards after completing a background check and training. "Educating the community comes first," she said. "Don't post on Facebook that you are going on vacation."

Franklin's Promise Director Joe Taylor said state attention is focused on Franklin County's crime problem. "A lot of resources are coming from the state, but it will take time," he said.

If you are interested in volunteering or want more information about Neighborhood Watch, call Itzkovitz at 370-1080.

them occur just before potential pay raises come up," she said. "If someone is not performing up to the standard we need, they will not get a pay raise until performance comes up to a satisfactory level."

She said all employees should be evaluated around the same time to allow easier comparison of their work habits. Qualities considered during evaluations will include quality of work, job knowledge, productivity, dependability, initiative, enthusiasm, cooperation and teamwork.

Turner said the form is simple and provides only three categories for performance: above average, satisfactory and needs improvement. Supervisors who rate an employee above average or needs improvement must provide an explanation of why the rating is deserved. Turner said this would help avoid overstated grades and provide commissioners and the employee with detailed information about the reasons for the rating.

Both the evaluator and employee must sign the completed evaluation. Employees can add their own comments to an evaluation.

Employees must receive an overall satisfactory rating to receive any pay raise including annual cost of living adjustments. Employees who have received an unsatisfactory rating in two or more areas of an evaluation will have three months in which to raise their rating to satisfactory. If they do so, they will be awarded the raise effective on the date of the successful evaluation. Anyone who does not improve in three months would be subject to disciplinary action up to and including termination.

Commissioner Pinki Jackel said at the Feb. 4 meeting the new system would help the county end discretionary pay raises and discourage favoritism. On Tuesday, in reviewing Turner's plan, she said she had not expected salaries to increase by regular increments under the new system. Turner said because the raises would be subject to a successful evaluation, they would not be across-the-board raises.

Under the new system, there are nine employee classifications based on seniority. Employees with fewer than six months of satisfactory service are "probationary trainees."

Grade I employees, those with less than two years on the job, receive the base salary, a minimum of $25,000, and higher depending on the job description. They are eligible for a 5 percent raise when they reach Grade II, after more than two years but fewer than five years of satisfactory performance.

At five years of employment, the individual would become eligible for a one-time 5 percent seniority raise, that could either be given in a lump or phased in at 1 percent over the five years. Commissioner Noah Lockley moved to approve the 1 percent annual raise format, but after Commissioner Smokey Parrish objected, noting that the financial impact was not fully clear, Lockley withdrew his motion.

Turner said adjustments could be made to the base salary annually depending on the county budget and based on the cost of living. The adjustment to the base salary would increase salaries on all levels. The amount of the annual increase would be based on the cost of living increase awarded by the state to county commissioners annually.

"I would like to see something plugged in there so it will be an automatic thing during the budget review. Then we wouldn't have the hassle of it," Commissioner Cheryl Sanders said Feb.

4. "Across the board raises is what people get up in arms about."

Commissioner Noah Lockley said, also at the Feb. 4 meeting, "In my opinion, if we don't have an automatic clause in there, we're just wasting time."

Turner's proposed rules also dealt with employees switching jobs and pay scale. Under the new rules, if an employee switches to a job with a lower pay rate, their salary will be reduced to the correct level for the new job.

"I like this because if you are making $40,000 in a job with a lot of responsibility and transfer to a job with less responsibility," Parrish said. "That's an option that you are going to have to look at that before they make that transfer."

Inmate supervisors would continue to receive extra compensation.

Emerald Warrior to stage from work camp

At Tuesday's county meeting, commissioners voted unanimously to rent the Bay City Work camp to Visual Awareness Technologies and Consulting, Inc. (VATC) of Tampa on a short-term basis.

VATC spokesperson Jeff Mason said VATC wants to stage a two-week training session the last two weeks in April from the work camp. In the past, participating troops have been quartered in the t-hangers at Apalachicola Regional Airport.

Mason said VATC has budgeted $2,500 daily for lodging for troops. He said $2,000 will go to the county for use of the camp and the other $500 will be spent with local caterers and cleaners.

He said the exercise will be largely aquatic, with fuel for boats used during the exercise will be purchased locally.

Mason said there is a possibility of an additional 10-day rental of the camp for exercises scheduled for May.

Auditions for 'On Golden Pond' next week

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. on Tuesday and Wednesday at the Eastpoint Firehouse for the Panhandle Players' spring production of "On Golden Pond" by Ernest Thompson.

The play is a classic American comedy/drama that is every bit as touching, warm and witty today as when it debuted on Broadway in 1979.

Retired couple Ethel and Norman Thayer spend every summer at their home on Golden Pond. This year, their adult daughter visits, bringing along her fiancé and his 13-year-old son. The turbulent relationship between father and daughter, the gap between three generations and the difficulties facing a couple in the twilight years of a long marriage, all combine to give this play a poignant insight into modern family relationships.

Director Pam Vest is seeking six players to portray four male and two female characters: 80-year-old retired college professor Norman Thayer Jr.; his 10-years-younger wife, Ethel; their early 40s daughter, Chelsea; the daughter's 40ish fiancé, Bill; Chelsea's longtime 40+ year-old admirer and Golden Pond mailman Charlie; and 13-year-old Billy Ray, son of Bill.

Players do not have to be the ages of the characters, just be able to portray the age level scripted.

Persons auditioning will be asked to do a cold read from the play's script. They also may perform a short monologue, recite or read something of their own choosing in order to demonstrate stage presence, voice projection and acting potential.

Three performances are scheduled for April 18, 19 and 20 at the Dixie Theatre in Apalachicola.

Contact Vest at 927-3183 for additional information or if you are interested in serving as a member of the crew, such as stage manager, makeup, props, costuming, set design and construction, scene painting, sound effects tech, lights tech or curtain tender.

Provocative Florida author in Apalach Feb. 27

Special to The Times

If you like your Florida history served up with a generous side of snark, plan to visit Downtown Books on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 27. That's when author and journalist T. D. Allman will be on hand with his provocative book "Finding Florida."

Subtitled "The True History of the Sunshine State," "Finding Florida" claims to wrestle the state's remarkable history from the clutches of the mythologizers, the apologists and the boosters, tracing its discovery, exploration and transformation from swampland to

"paradise."

Along the way, he takes gleeful potshots at "playboy segregationists," Disney, "newcomer oligarch opportunists," BP and even the state bird, "the Mockingbird, so called because of its habit of purporting to be what it is not."

Apalachicola squeaks by with a reference to Dr. John Gorrie, his ice machine and his modern-day legacy, the Slurpee, but considerable ink is devoted to the Negro Fort Massacre at Fort Gadsden.

Longlisted for the 2013 National Book Award and a Kirkus Reviews

Best Nonfiction Book of the Year, "Finding Florida" won praise from The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal but also got some pushback from reviewers who tut-tutted about his fulsome, take-no-prisoners approach. Allman is also the author of "Miami: City of the Future," which spent three years on the Miami Herald bestseller list.

Born in Florida, he is a former Peace Corps volunteer in Nepal and an Edward R. Murrow fellow at the Council of Foreign Relations. He will be in Apalachicola to sign his book from 1-3 p.m. Downtown Books is at 67 Commerce St. across from the post office. For more information, call 653-1290.

Special to The Times

As last week wined down, the students were getting excited about our long weekend. The excitement was short lived. The school informed us that we would be having school on Monday, Feb. 17, to make up for our "snow days." Many students decided not to attend in recognition of Presidents Day.

The rest of the week is looking fair. The weather seems to be looking up and it is definitely lightening the moods of the students and teachers. There is a small bug floating around that is grasping many students as the winter seems to be ending.

Senior pages are being ordered, and prom is underway. The year is almost over, and there is so much left to do.

by Adams Consulting Group was their last move in this regard.

"I can support this if this is not in addition to the prior funds we already approved," Jackel said. "Didn't we say we had paid once and for all?"

"I cannot support it because we said we were going to cap it," she said. "I was under the understanding that we were getting the feasibility study we needed at that time for the USDA."

By a 3-2 vote, with commissioners Noah Lockley and Smokey Parrish, the commissioners said no to approving the $60,000 expenditure at the morning meeting, asking that county officials research what had been OK'd earlier.

In the afternoon, Alan Pierce, director of administrative services, reported that the commissioners had been told earlier that the BKD expenditure would be forthcoming and had approved it. By unanimous vote, the commissioners voted Tuesday to release the money.

"They're gonna examine the data Adams came up with and tell us what we can build and what we can afford," Commissioner Smokey Parrish said. "They're going to analyze the data and tell us what we can build. Their company's reputation will be riding on this opinion letter they write for this board."

Despite the approval, the matter appeared to give commissioners the jitters.

"It's got me confused, it's got me nervous," Commissioner William Massey said.

"You don't know what nervous is. It has me concerned," Commissioner Cheryl Sanders said. "I don't think anything's gonna keep me from having some concerns over this hospital. I've been here a long time, and I've seen the ups and downs of the hospital. It's my gut feeling sitting here and looking at these numbers."

"It has me concerned. I don't think anything's gonna keep me from having some concerns over this hospital. I've been here a long time, and I've seen the ups and downs of the hospital. It's my gut feeling sitting here and looking at these numbers."

Brownworth said that in scaling down the hospital renovation project to $10.25 million, with about $6 million to $7 million in construction costs, Weems officials have been "prudent stewards" of sales tax funds that go to the hospital.

He said of the $67,000, on average, in monthly hospital capital outlay funds, about $10,000 goes to funds the clinics, and about 90 percent of the remaining $57,000 would be used to cover debt service for the new hospital, which could be built by mid to late 2016.

But Jackel questioned whether this funding stream would be suitable to cover the costs of funding a new hospital.

"That's not conservative," she said. "I want a new hospital built because I know that we need it, but we've got to be able to afford it."

Commissioner Cheryl Sanders questioned Brownworth about past due monies that are owed to Tallahassee Memorial Hospital, as well as the overall balance sheet.

"How do you plan on paying them?" she asked. "I'm not liking the numbers is what I'm telling you, Mr. Ray."

Brownworth said $54,000 of that debt was paid down to TMH over last year. "We are six months behind," he said. "They are willing to float that right now. We haven't been pushed by them to pay that off. It might take two years to get it down to 30 days, 60 days."

He said Weems was improving its bottom line. "We're making little steady progress towards building the assets and cash of the organization, and reducing the liabilities," Brownworth said.

Also at Tuesday's meeting, Brownworth announced that Weems had hired a new chief financial officer, John C. Graham. He is expected to start April 15 and will be paid $110,000 annually.

Currently the CFO at Barnwell County Hospital in Tifton, Ga., where he lives, Graham also has been working as CFO at Caverna Memorial Hospital, in Horse Cave, Ky.

Holder of a bachelor's degree in accounting from Murray State University, he has served for 15 years as a financial officer with Good Hope Hospital, in Erwin, North Carolina; Transitional Hospital Corporation, in Indianapolis, Ind.; Garrard County Memorial Hospital in Lancaster, Ky.; Fort Logan Hospital in Stanford, Ky.; and Phoebe Worth Medical Center, in Sylvester, Ga.

Painted buntings a beautiful native species

Painted buntings might be a species on the way out, but efforts are underway to save them.

Painted buntings are shy, secretive and often difficult to observe, except when they are busy at a bird feeder. Once they have discovered an easy source of food, over time they become less wary of activity nearby. Otherwise, this bird loves to hide in thickets making it difficult to spot.

This bird is considered by many to be the most beautiful in North America, and their behaviors are interesting to watch.

The male has a dark blue head, green back with red rump and underparts, which make it extremely easy to identify. The plumage of female and juvenile is green and yellow-green, one of the only truly green birds native to the United States. It is a member of the cardinal family.

During the spring, males sing from exposed perches. The song is sweet and variable. They also flutter around like a butterfly, fluff, bow and quiver their wings when seeking a mate.

Painted buntings feed on seed, snails, spiders and small insects. They often forage on the ground, hopping about nervously to avoid predators. They are largely monogamous and are most often seen alone or as a mated pair.

Breeding begins in late April and lasts through to early August. The nest is typically hidden in low, dense vegetation. Working alone, the female weaves it into the surrounding shrubs for strength. Each brood contains three or four gray-white eggs, often spotted with brown, which are incubated for about 10 days. About 30 days after the first eggs hatch, the female usually lays a second clutch.

ROD GASCHE | Special to The Times

Cowbirds frequently lay their eggs in the painted bunting's nest, pushing the bunting's eggs to the ground. Large snakes and hawks are common predators of eggs, young and brooding females. Males are especially at risk from raptors because of their bright plumage.

The painted bunting can live to more than 10 years of age, though most wild buntings probably live barely half that long.

The male painted bunting was once a popular caged bird, but its capture is now illegal. Populations are primarily declining because of habitat loss, especially in wetlands. Painting buntings, listed as near threatened by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, are protected by the U.S. Migratory Bird Act.

This beautiful, multicolored songbird can be found year-round in Florida as a migrant, a winter resident and occasionally as a local breeder.

The Painted Bunting Observation Team started in the spring of 2005 as a grassroots project to study these birds in coastal North Carolina. Dr. Jamie Rotenberg at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington enlisted the help of the members of Lower Cape Fear Bird Club to observe and report the number of painted buntings at their feeders. From these humble beginnings, PBOT has grown with the help of funding from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and partnerships with the North Carolina Museum of Natural Sciences, the South Carolina Department of Natural Resources, the USGS Patuxent Wildlife Research Center in Georgia, the North Carolina Wildlife Commission and many others.

PBOT has now expanded its research area to include Florida. To learn more about PBOT or to join, visit www.paintedbuntings.org.

Wait is on for 2014 eaglets

The wait is on to see whether the Apalachicola eagles successfully nested this winter. Rick LaFleur captured this image of a pair of possible parents scoping out the neighborhood just before Valentines Day.

Cassie Gary, who lives across the street from the nest, said this could mean the eggs have hatched and there are chicks. She said the eagles have used the nest at Avenue D and 12th Street for at least eight years and raised their first brood about five years ago.

Some mystery surrounds the pair of uptown eagles. Last year, an injured male eagle was found in wetlands adjacent to the bay, and it was theorized he was one of the eagles that nest in the historic district. He was taken to the Florida Wild Mammal Association for treatment and now permanently resides in Miami, having lost part of one wing. X-rays taken before his last surgery revealed that he had been shot.

RICK LAFLEUR | Special to The Times

Some observers maintain he could not be one of the Avenue D eagles because two eagles were seen at the nest after his rescue. The FWMA's Chris Beatty said a female eagle, left in a crisis situation with no mate and young to feed, will often recruit a stand in. We will never know whether this picture shows the same pair of raptors that nested on Ninth Street in 2012. The good news is the two eaglets that were hatched there last year both survived to fledge.

Fruit trees, oaks can enhance hunting

By LES HARRISON
Special to the Times

General gun season for deer is rapidly coming to a close in Zone D, which includes Franklin County. Many hunters and land managers are already assessing the effectiveness of game plots for attracting, nourishing and retaining deer.

A variety of annual crops have been successfully used for a number of years. One negative feature of this method is they require annual replenishment, which, depending on the circumstances, can be expensive.

There is a cost-effective alternative, fruit trees and oaks. Landowners can increase the survival and reproduction of many animal species by providing a steady supply of fruit and acorns.

The availability of fruit and acorns can reduce food stress and increase overall animal well-being. This potentially increases their resistance to disease and parasites.

Abundant food can reduce the amount of time animals need to search for food, which can decrease their vulnerability to predators. Ample supplies also can decrease the distance of daily animal movements and decrease the likelihood animals will embark on long distance movements away from specific locales.

Research has indicated the abundance of acorns one year can even affect the reproductive success of animals the following year.

An additional reason to consider planting fruit trees and oaks is to reduce foraging pressure on other plants. Attractive, safe and a consistent supply of food may reduce deer browsing or ornamental plants by providing animals with an acceptable alternative food source.

When selecting and managing oaks, it is important to recognize there are many differences existing among members of this species. First, oaks of different species produce acorns, which vary in nutritional quality.

White oaks have larger, heavier acorns and are produced annually, red oaks are on a biennial production schedule, smaller in size, but have more protein, fat, fiber and calories by weight than white oaks.

Additionally, oak species differ in the timing of acorn production. Acorns from trees in the white oak group tend to be available for shorter periods of time than acorns from the red oak group.

As a complement to the mix of oaks, persimmons, crabapples, sand pears and loquats may be established also. While the fruit is much more perishable than acorns, they produce at times which complement acorn production.

By maintaining a well-distributed and abundant food and cover sources throughout property, landowners allow animals to better meet their dietary needs within a relatively small space. These factors decrease the likelihood animals will move to adjacent properties that may not be available for hunting.

Choosing the correct oak species for a site is critical to success in establishing oaks. Some species will thrive in wet bottomland soils, such as overcup, swamp chestnut, diamond-leaf, cherrybark, shumard and willow oak.

Other oaks, blackjack, bluejack, Chapman, turkey and live oaks are suited to drier, upland soils. A few oaks like water, Southern red and post oaks are adapted to both bottomland and upland sites.

Planting seedlings is more likely to lead to successful establishment of new oaks than is sowing acorns. Use of containerized planting stock on dry upland sites will optimize establishment.

A key to obtaining good survival with oaks is to use seedlings with large stem diameters of one inch or larger. Also, plant the seedlings during winter when the soil is typically moist.

To learn more about the use of trees as a game plot alternative read "The Value of Oaks to Wildlife" (<http://edis.ifas.ufl.edu/UW292>) or contact your UF/IFAS Franklin County extension office at 653-9337.

FISH REPORT SPONSORED BY

Pier/Surf

As the sun comes out this week, our waters will start to warm. We all will get a feeling of spring, and hopefully so will the fish! Our local waters are still getting over the freezing colds from the past several weeks, but the fishing is actually pretty good in the ICW and East and West Bay for inshore species such as trout and redfish.

Inshore/Bay

St. Joe Bay is still sleepy for trout and reds, but good flounder reports are starting to come in daily. Live shrimp is getting more available now that the shrimpers can stand the weather. Conditions are improving this month.

Lady Seahawks open at 5-2

By DAVID ADLERSTEIN

The Lady Seahawks varsity softball team has opened with a 5-2 record, although they lost their district opener to Port St. Joe.

On Feb. 4, the team blacked Blountstown 10-0, with sophomore Krista Martina hurling a five-inning complete game, striking out six.

Freshman Scout Segree went 4/4 with two doubles and two RBIs. Senior Morgan Mock was 2/4 with a pair of doubles and two RBIs. Junior Madison Newell was 2/3 with a double and an RBI. Senior Ally Millender and freshman Vanessa Simmons had one hit each.

The Feb. 6 against Quincy Munroe was postponed until Feb. 25.

On Feb. 7, the team lost at Rutherford 8-7 after taking a 7-6 lead into the bottom of the seventh inning in the back-and-forth game. Rutherford tied the game on a one-out solo home run and then won it on an infield error.

Martina took the loss. Leadoff hitter Millender was 3/3 with two runs scored and two stolen bases. Mock was 3/5 with two doubles and three RBIs. Seventh grader Sophie Kirvin, freshman Allie Kirvin and Simmons had two hits each.

On Feb. 10, Franklin County shelled Blountstown 16-1. Freshman Megan Collins was the winning pitcher, throwing three innings, striking out three and giving up one run on four hits. Senior Ashley Carroll pitched the fourth inning and didn't allow a base runner.

Allie Kirvin was 3/3 with two stolen bases and three RBIs. Millender was 2/2 with two doubles, two stolen bases and two runs scored. Mock has two hits including a triple and three RBIs. Martina and seventh grader Melanie Collins each had a base hit and an RBI.

On Feb. 11, the team lost at home to Port St. Joe 10-0 in six innings. Martina was the losing pitcher, throwing a complete game and giving up seven hits and three walks, while striking out two. Mock had a triple and Sophie Kirvin added a double as the Lady Seahawks lost their first district game.

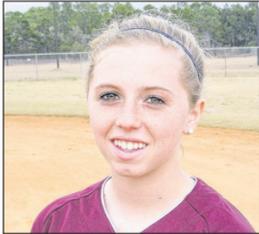

On Thursday, Feb. 13, the team picked up their fifth win of the season when they went to Altha and pounded out 21 hits, as they slugged their way to a victory over the Lady Wildcats 16-2. Carroll was the winning pitcher, throwing three complete innings and giving up one run on three hits, with no walks while striking out one. Megan Collins pitched the last two innings, also giving up one run on one hit, with no walks, and striking out six.

Mock had four hits, while Millender, Segree and Sophie Kirvin had three each. Junior Calli Westbrook, Simmons and Allie Kirvin had two apiece, while Newell and Martina both added one.

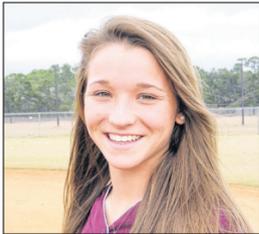

"The girls have great attitudes and continue to get better every day," said head coach Scott Collins.

The Lady Seahawks junior varsity softball team opened at 3-0, under the direction of coaches Brock Johnson and Kevin Newell.

On Feb. 7 at Rutherford, the team came away with a big 14-3 win against the 5A Lady Rams. Led by the strong fine-inning pitching of sixth grader Jaylin Charles, with three strikeouts and just two hits allowed, the team secured timely hitting from freshman Myranda McLeod, with three RBIs, sophomore Anna Riley, who went 2-4 with two RBIs, and freshman Adriana Butler, who scored three runs.

"Jaylin pitched a good game. She kept their hitters off balance with her pitches. She located her pitches where she wanted them to go, which is big when she is doing that," said Johnson.

On Feb. 11 against Port St. Joe, the bats continued to stay hot for the JV Seahawks as they downed their district rivals 15-9.

Offensively the Seahawks were led by freshman Kimmie Boone, who went 2-3 and scored two runs; Butler, who was 2-3 with three runs; Riley, who went 2-2, with three runs and two RBI; sophomore Savannah Alday, who scored two runs and knocked in three RBI; and McLeod, who was 1-3, with three runs and five RBI.

"The girls hit the ball extremely well today. We came up with big hits with runners in scoring position several times," said Johnson.

On Feb. 18 vs Liberty County, Charles hurled five innings, striking out five, allowing two hits and three runs, as she once again led the way on the mound by downing the visiting Bulldogs.

At the plate the Seahawks struggled in the early innings before getting hot like they have in the previous games. Leading the way offensively were Riley, who went 2-3 with two runs; McLeod, who was 3-3 with two RBI; Butler, who scored two runs and stole two bases; and Alday, who batted in three runs.

"We played probably our best all-around game yet. We started out real slow, offensively and defensively," said Johnson. "Then we played like we were capable of and turned it on from the third inning on. These girls are slowly but surely learning the potential that they are capable of having and it's starting to look pretty good."

Seahawks down Altha

The Seahawks varsity baseball team, under the direction of coach Aaron York won its home opener Feb. 11, downing Altha 7-6.

Franklin County rallied with six runs in the bottom of the seventh, scoring three runs after Corbin Rester's infield single and a throwing error with two outs.

Alex Causey had three hits, and James Newell added two hits and a 10-strikeout effort on the mound for the Seahawks (1-0).

On Feb. 13 at Maclay, the Seahawks fell 10-4. Leading hitters included Kirvin and Rester each with hits; Bobby John Curry pitched well but took the loss.

The team lost 12-5 to Munroe at home Feb. 13. Leading hitters included Causey, Logan McLeod, Kirvin and Newell, with Newell and Rester both taking the mound.

On Feb. 18, the team lost an away game 10-0 against John Paul II. The Hawks managed one hit by Kirvin, and committed six errors. Newell threw well in the loss.

February is American Heart Month

Heart disease is the leading cause of death for both men and women and it is often preventable and controllable. Every year, about 715,000 Americans have a heart attack. About 600,000 people die from heart disease in the United States each year (that's 1 out of every 4 deaths). Below are five major symptoms of a heart attack:

- Pain or discomfort in the jaw, neck, or back.
- Feeling weak, light-headed, or faint.
- Chest pain or discomfort.
- Pain or discomfort in the arms or shoulder.
- Shortness of breath.

If you think that you or someone you know is having a heart attack, call 911 immediately.

The term "heart disease" refers to several types of heart conditions. The most common type in the United States is coronary heart disease (also called coronary artery disease), which occurs when a substance called plaque builds up in the arteries that supply blood to the heart. Coronary heart disease can cause a heart attack, angina, heart failure, and arrhythmias.

Plan for Prevention

Some health conditions and lifestyle factors can put people at high risk for developing heart disease. You can help prevent heart disease by making healthy choices and managing all of your known medical conditions. Here are nine tips to help prevent heart disease:

- ♥ Eat a healthy diet - Be sure to eat plenty of fruits and vegetables and eat foods that are low in saturated/trans fats.
- ♥ Maintain a healthy weight - Being overweight or obese can increase your risk for heart disease.
- ♥ Exercise regularly - Physical activity can help you maintain a healthy weight and lower cholesterol and blood pressure.
- ♥ Monitor your blood pressure. - High blood pressure often has no symptoms so be sure to have it checked on a regular basis.
- ♥ Don't smoke - Cigarette smoking greatly increases your risk for heart disease.
- ♥ Limit alcohol use - Avoid drinking too much alcohol which can increase your blood pressure.
- ♥ Have your cholesterol checked - Your health care provider should test your cholesterol levels at least once every 5 years.
- ♥ Manage your diabetes - If you have diabetes, monitor your blood sugar levels closely and talk with your doctor about treatment options.
- ♥ Take your medicine - If you're taking medication to treat high blood pressure, high cholesterol, or diabetes follow your doctor's instructions carefully.

EXTENSION MAY MOVE TO SCIPIO CREEK

On Feb. 4, County Planner Alan Pierce told county commissioners he, Dr. Pete Vergot and other University of Florida personnel discussed on Jan. 30 the possible relocation and expansion of the UF Extension Office.

The current idea is to relocate the county extension office out of the Armory and into the old Apalachicola National Estuarine Research Reserve (ANERR) building at Scipio Creek. The University of Florida would also then locate a lab and other programs and services into that building. The lab would provide services associated with one of several oyster re-shelling programs that will soon be started in the Apalachicola Bay.

The city of Apalachicola owns the land, and there is a reverter clause that if the building ceases to be used by ANERR, the property will revert back to the city. Pierce said UF officials believe if the city allows the university to set up an educational program in the building, the federal government will let it revert back to the city.

GAS TAX PROVIDES $1.6 MILLION FOR CONSTRUCTION

At the Feb. 4 county commission meeting, County Planner Alan Pierce reported on funds available in the local gas tax fund.

He said there will be about $1.6 million in construction funds available, or approximately $325,000 per district by Sept. 30. He said milled asphalt from CW Roberts is currently $350 per truckload delivered to the county yard on State Route 65. A truckload is about 18 tons, or 18 cubic yards.

Quinn retiring as newspaper publisher

Special to The Times

Panama City News Herald Publisher Roger Quinn, a 48-year veteran of the newspaper business, announced Monday he is retiring at the end of the month.

ROGER QUINN

But he won't be going far. "We love Panama City," Quinn said. "We put down roots, and we're going to stay here."

Quinn, who joined The News Herald in August 2012, shortly after its purchase by Halifax Media Group, plans to focus more time on his civic activities like his work with the Salvation Army, where he serves on the board.

Halifax Media Group CEO Michael Redding, who was in Panama City for the announcement, thanked Quinn for his hard work and attitude and said a nationwide search for a new publisher would begin immediately.

"Roger has a distinguished newspaper career, and we are going to miss him," Redding said. "He is a great guy, as well as a friend, and we all wish him the best."

Quinn began his career in 1966 in Gadsden, Ala., beginning a path that would lead him to a position as a New York Times Regional Media Group publisher. There, he oversaw a group of papers in North and South Carolina that included properties in Spartanburg and Hendersonville before those newspapers were purchased by Halifax late in 2011.

After Halifax purchased The News Herald, the Apalachicola and Carrabelle Times and several other Freedom Communications newspapers in Florida and North Carolina in 2012, Quinn joined The News Herald as publisher but also served as regional publisher with responsibility over all the properties in Halifax's central region, which includes Northwest Florida, Alabama and Louisiana.

Halifax, headquartered in Daytona Beach, boasts a strong presence across the Southeast that includes newspapers in key Florida cities like Daytona Beach, Gainesville, Sarasota, Lakeland and Fort Walton Beach.

H'COLA of "Lift Evry Voice and Sing," considered the Negro National Anthem.

The nonprofit community action group H'COLA, which stands for Hillside Coalition of Laborers for Apalachicola, has been the force behind the festival for the past 11 years, held the third weekend in February, to celebrate the contributions to society made by both national and local black citizens.

Van Johnson, the city's first black mayor, offered a welcome that touched on the larger issues of civil rights in the nation's history.

"We gather to gauge how far we have come as a society since the institution of slavery, Jim Crow laws and racial imbalance marred the landscape of this great nation founded upon the principles of liberty and justice for all," he said. "We gather not to relive past hurts or injustices, but to determine for ourselves after 238 years since the signing of the Declaration of Independence whether this great nation, a melting pot of humanity, can justifiably call itself the sweet land of liberty."

"And we gather 151 years after President Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation to ensure that our children, and our children's children will be able to continue to sing 'Long may our land be bright with freedom's holy light; Protect us by Thy might, Great God, our King." Johnson said.

The Baby Boomers who form the heart of the event's organizers gathered Friday night at the Sixth Street Recreation Center for a '70s Bash, bringing back that era at a party that used to be the Friday before Labor Day.

"It was neat; we had a good turnout," said Elinor Mount-Simmons, who helped coordinate the festival. "A lot of folks came."

As the morning events commenced, Franklin County High School co-valedictorian Bria Walker and salutatorian Jathan Martin read President Obama's proclamation for Black History Month, and then Banks was introduced as grand marshal.

Also introduced was the Royal Court, which included Tiny Miss Hillside Aubriunna Davis and Tiny Mr. Hillside

Antrell O'Neal; Miss Hillside Alonna Brown; Hillside Princess Arryonna Cargill; and Hillside Queen Trianna Lockley.

As a basketball tournament energized the nearby courts, the event continued with plenty of food booths, including one serving curried and jerk chicken, and goat, as well as booths from Franklin's Promise Coalition, the Apalachicola library, the health department's anti-tobacco program, and FAMU Physics Professor Ronald Williams, who offered hands-on science demonstrations.

The Hillside Talent Showcase featured original music artist Courtney "C-bell" Bell, and there was the traditional ethnic fashion show, coordinated by Sherry O'Neal, plus this year line dancing led by Dan Savage and Asenath

Thomas. Also performing were the dance ministries of Hillside Dancers for Christ, a community-based troupe directed by Teresa Ann Martin, and True Love and Heavenly Angels, troupes from the Friendship Missionary Baptist Church.

Members of Tallahassee's Valentine Lodge No. 147 of the F&AM Masonic Order, were on hand to promote their hopes of reviving what once was a vibrant Masonic lodge on the Hill until the 1980s.

The musical group Sharper 5, from Valdosta, Ga., under the direction of Eric Sharper, got the crowd on its feet as evening rolled in.

The event closed at 8 p.m. Saturday, and Mount-Simmons said plans are to move the featured entertainment to earlier in the afternoon.

"It's still wintertime, and once the sun goes down, it gets cold," she said. "The gates now close at 8 p.m., which is a great time to end up."

A worship service at noon Sunday drew from almost all the churches on the Hill, with the featured speaker Roderick Robinson, the high school's guidance counselor. He spoke on a comparison of slavery of biblical days to slavery in the United States.

"We were pleased with this year's event," Mount-Simmons said. "We had gorgeous weather, and people were moving in all day long."

the office and has been at it ever since.

He said he's gathered about half the needed signatures and has made reform to education, and to the Florida Department of Corrections, his primary issues.

He said he would like to de-emphasize standardized testing. "I would like to focus on development of their education (in pre-kindergarten, kindergarten and first grade) versus the passing of a test," Gibson said.

He said close to 85 percent of inmates incarcerated in Florida lack a high school education, and this number could be improved by a greater emphasis on early childhood education.

Gibson isn't daunted by the huge amount of needed to compete for the governorship in Florida. "People just want integrity and openness, that your yes means yes and your no means no," he said. "They want a person that they're willing — even if they didn't vote for — to say 'that's the governor of my state.'"

His campaign will formally kick off in May with a two-week bicycle ride through all of the state's 67 counties, from Key West to Pensacola. Gibson said he won't ride the entire route, but much of it, with the longest leg 91 miles, from Fort Walton Beach to Pensacola, and many of the others ranging from 47 to 67 miles.

Eastpoint library closes temporarily

At Tuesday's county commission meeting, Library Director Anne Birchwell told commissioners she closed the Eastpoint branch of the Franklin County Public Library temporarily due to construction on the site.

Birchwell said that when she arrived at the library on Monday, Jason White Construction had removed the fencing surrounding the stormwater drainage ponds and was in the progress of repairing them. Birchwell said the work was ordered last April but has been postponed due to bad weather.

She said she was concerned both about the exposed ponds and the liability of having patrons visit the library while heavy equipment was in operation.

Commissioners asked Sheriff Mike Mock to put the county's portable road sign on the site, warning that the library was closed, and to place traffic cones at the entry.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Birchwell said the fences were being restored but it was unclear when the work would be complete. She said she believed the library would reopen by the end of the week.

She advised patrons to call the library at 670-4423 to be sure it was open before coming.
