Feds would pay to protect panthers

Federal wildlife officials want to pay landowners to maintain their property around panthers for endangend保护 schemes. The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission announced Thursday that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service would spend $5,000 a year to pay landowners to maintain property around panthers. The program, which must be approved by the federal government, would pay landowners $3,200 a year to install a new chain-link fence if a panther roams the Southeast, but they would have to follow certain land-management practices and get federal inspections. None of the panthers have roamed the Southeast, but now they’re confined to the state’s southern tip.

Professional pilot Dean O’Rourke of New Mexico introduced himself to agents in his family after what appeared to be a random search of the family plane about two years ago.

Lawyers represent about 50 pilots with concerns, Mead said. “That is not to say the pilots’ association says it has collected more than 50 cases in which members — despite never crossing a U.S. border — were searched by U.S. Customs and Border Protection agents or local law enforcement without probable cause or reasonable suspicion of illegal activity.”

Legislative session saw missed chances

As that costly, often-political utensil is drawn out, it could be useful, which is why bills aimed at improving it so many unprecedented assaults on the rights of state workers, poor people and the environment seemed downright tame.

As the lawmakers wound down the 2014 Florida Legislature, the budget debate swept up the old Dot Line, the illegal driving rate in a state, the climate goes from “not optimal” to “urgent.”

Monroe County’s DUI rate is 7 percent higher than the national average. What do you think that status means? Prohibition is not the answer. The local law enforcement agencies that are part of our culture consumption.

Keys hear one thing but see another. What did the licenses need to do? We must avoid criminalizing drinking. So what is the answer? Change the lifestyle of the Florida Keys.

But maybe we could change the popular attitude in favor of drinking to drive, and even then, drive that car.
Carnival plans to expand clean-air program

By HAMMAM SAMPSON

Carnival Corp., whose ships make regular port calls to Key West, will announce Thursday that it is expanding a clean-air program it launched last year, by doubling the number of ships that will use exhaust cleaning systems installed — as regrettably double the rate.

That means the Florida-based cruise giant will bring the “scrubbing” technology it has onboard at least 30 ships at a cost of up to $600 million. The dual filtration and scrubbing systems are to be installed on ships of all of the parent company’s brands over the next three years.

“Women are starting enough businesses and doing enough diverse and good things that we have a new number,” said Tom Dow, president of public affairs. “It’s given as many women confidence to say we want to roll this out even more broadly.”

Women owners aren’t part of the numbers, but the success of women in business is clear enough for Carnival to want to do more.

The original announcement covered ships in the Carnival Cruise Lines, Holland America Line, Costa Cruises, Red Cruise Line, and four� brands; the latest news includes more ships from those brands as well as AIDA Cruises and Costa Crociere International Maritime Organization regulations will limit large originating ships to fuel that contains a maximum of 0.1 percent sulfur in zones that extend up to 200 miles from North American shores by 2015. Carnival said it plans to install a system on the majority of its fleet.

In September, Carnival said it would spend more than $150 million on new technology that would clean exhaust from all of its ships in order to meet air-pollution standards for waters off the U.S. coast going into effect in 2015. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency had said it would be a standard fuel as a result under a version with less sulfur — while testing the equipment.

Already, the parent company has announced that its namesake brand Carnival Cruise Lines will bring ships back to Baltimore and Norfolk — home ports it had previously said it would leave because of the high cost of fuel oil with improved sulfur content.

The point where the rolling hurricane meets the fury of a hurricane’s winds may hold the keys to improving storm-forecasting models. But an abrupt change in temperature or wind speed during the hurricane’s dark places, where the atmosphere is thick and the air is very humid, can make it difficult for scientists to understand what makes some storms fizzle while others strengthen.

Conchs handle Keys Gate

By DICK WAGNER
Keynoter Contributor

With both its running and passing games clicking, the Conch West High football team defeated Keys Gate, 28-24, in the spring game Friday at Marathon High.

Quarterback Andrew Freeman and running backs Meliki Sargent, Dorian Cameron and Jeffrey Ambro scored touchdowns for the Conchs, and Jim Grovelin kicked four extra points. Keys Gate made a 28-20 lead on long drives on its first possession and led 12-7 at the half.

Key West had only two possessions in the first half.

In the second half, a holding penalty nullified a 7-yard TD run by Freeman, but the Conchs finally laid down.

"We moved the ball well," quarterback Mike Hughes said.

Playing against Conch sec-ond-teams, Keys Gate scored on a 99-yard drive to cut the

LITTLE WIND MEANS GOOD BITE

Little wind means good bite

Dolphin, tarpon are providing lots of action

Hear that? No, you don’t — because the wind has finally died down. It’s a good thing because there are plenty of dolpishes to be had. Snowmen, gaffers and slammers are getting plenty better winds and there are plenty of fish to go around.

The bite is improving on the wrecks and rough bottom. I’m really seeing quite a bit of activity on the reef. Most fish are in the 12- to 16-pound class, amberjack, which always produce a good fight and are excellent on the smoker.

There’s been a theory of African pompanos this past week in the Middle Keys. I know of at least three taken in the Marathon and Big Pine Keys area.

And if you’re anywhere from the Marathon and Big Pine Keys, you are providing lots of action.

Little wind means good bite

Marathon resident Bill Gilliland, owner of D.L. Gilliland Enterprises, said he hasn’t seen much activity in the Middle Keys, but there are plenty of fish to be had.

"We missed a lot in the Keys Gate in the season opener," the head coach said.

"We’re right where we need to be," said Hughes, who is eager to erase the memory of last season’s 1-1 record.

DOLPHIN, TARPON, Wahoo, amberjack, red snapper and sharks mixed in. And if you’re through anywhere from the Marathon and Big Pine Keys, you are providing lots of dolphin to be had. Slammers, gaffers and snowmen are getting plenty better winds and there are plenty of fish to go around.

Bourbon, maple syrup team up

Patience pays, as the two sauce sits for awhile

By J.M. HIRCH  Associated Press

Simply pour, but bourbon belongs at sauce

Bourbon, by definition (at least in the U.S.A.), is distilled from a grain mixture that must be at least 51 percent corn. And corn is naturally sweet. So, of course bourbon makes a wonderful base for a sweet and smoky barbecue sauce. It lends deep richness and combines wonderfully with so many of the sweet and bold flavors we associate with a great barbecue sauce.

So why was my motivation for this recipe—to create an amazing bourbon-based barbecue sauce? First, as I researched recipes, I was disappointed to find that few bourbon barbecue sauces play up the bourbon. Most add just a quarter of a cup or perhaps half a cup at most. I wanted more bourbon flavor, so I ramped up the bourbon.

For sweetness, I used equal parts pure maple syrup and brown sugar, both of which have the same rich, warm notes for which bourbon is known. Add some dry ingredients for richness, some cider vinegar for acid, and a bit of Frank’s Red Hot sauce for bite, and we’re off to a great start.

This sauce would be delicious on my grilled sweet-potato peacefully checked or ribs. But I decided to slather it on shrimp. The briny notes of the shrimp just bring out the delicious sweetness of the sauce. What you need:

• 2 cups water.
• 12 onions (Israeli preferable).
• One medium English cucumber, diced.
• Half a small red onion, minced.
• Two cloves garlic, minced.
• Three tablespoons chopped fresh cilantro.
• One tablespoon olive oil.
• Two teaspoons smoked paprika.
• Two tablespoons Frank’s Red hot sauce.
• Two teaspoons mustard powder.
• One teaspoon ground cumin.
• Two cups water.
• Half a cup maple syrup.
• Half a cup bourbon.
• One tablespoon worcestershire sauce.
• Six tablespoons yellow mustard.
• Two tablespoons honey.
• One teaspoon salt.
• One teaspoon mustard powder.

In a medium saucepan over medium-high, bring the water to a boil. Add the onions, cilantro and red onion to heat and reduce the heat to just maintain a simmer. Cook for about 10 minutes, or until the onions are translucent and tender and all of the water is absorbed. When the onions are done, transfer to a medium bowl. Set the refrigerate for about 15 minutes. Once the onions have cooled, add the cucumber, pepper, onion, garlic and cilantro. Toss well, then drizzle with the olive oil and lemon juice. Toss, season with salt, if needed, then divide into six serving plates.
