lost in oblivion. My archaic heresy still swims in the Euphrates
as my collective existence haunts the banks of the Nile - footprints in the desert sands.
Marching onward, hunted like game with nets, clubs, rope; sometimes sold for petty trinkets or corals.
Packed like sardines sexes are annulled for here humanity is already deprived of her privacy.
Stench cries, lamentation - odour of filth and vomit seep through wooden cargo-boatfloors as more than a prayer to the heaven of a biased God. Realization of my ineptness to comprehend as a total this controversial situation arrest my coördination with the rhythmic music. I shuffl
