JOHANNES (Chick) ARRINDELL

Wealth poured from all corners of the globe into the coffers of the rulers and the rich of these countries; greater armies were outfitted, more destructive arms were made, larger ships were built.

Africa was devided like large cake, the better to be devoured; the Americas were cut up with the same satanic scal. Where the Indian resisted they were pacified. In the New World, as elsewhere, the wealth was for the taking; the discoverers needed extra hands to reap this great harvest, and since the Indian was either uncooperative or unfit, it was decided to transport black men and women from Africa to America. Some estimates of the amount of black people transported to America go as high as 30 million, with some 30% dying on the way of various illnesses and physical abuse.

In the New World the highly civilized, Christian Whiteman auctioned his human property. Families were split and sold separately into captivity, runaway slaves were hunted down like wild animals.

Christianity taught (teachers), that all men are children of one Father and made in the image of that Father, but this did not disturb the consciences of the vast majority of these pious men and women, for pious they were. These people found the defense of their evil system also in the Bible: "Black men were marked by God: they were the sons of Ham and beyond redemption, to them the gates of Heaven were closed anyhow." While men of goodwill both inside and outside the Church deplored slavery and condemned it as evil, it cannot be said that the Church had always been at the forefront in the battle against slavery, on the contrary it condoned it and often gave it its blessing and defended it: "the black people were heathens, who could only benefit from their bondage." It had been forbidden in many places to convert the slaves to Christianity and where they were taught Christianity, it was of a special brand, meant mainly to enslave the mind of an already enslaved body.
